difficulty which otherwise would perplex us in interpreting this passage. For, if the λόγοs here mentioned is only the written or spoken word, or Gospel preached, it can hardly be said to be innate in us, nor even if we adopt the other rendering, sometimes given to empuros, and say that it here signifies engrafted, or implanted, or sown, can it be explained how we are to receive what is already inserted in us; or what is already sown in another soil.

By not confining the sense of abyos to the word spoken, but by enlarging and elevating its signification, and by applying it to Christ, the difficulty is removed.

For while it is true that Christ by His Incarnation is properly said to be ἔμφντος, innate, born in us, and to be indeed Emmanuel, God with us, God manifest in our flesh, God dwelling for ever in the nature of us all; or, if we adopt the other sense of ξμφυτος, while it is true, that Christ is indeed grafted in us as our Netser or Branch (see on Matt. ii. 23), yet will not this avail for our Salvation, unless we receive Him by faith. We must be planted in Him, and He in us by Baptism (Gal. iii. 27), and we must dwell in Him and He in us, by actual and habitual Communion with Him in the Holy Eucharist, and we must abide and bring forth fruit in Him, by lively faith, fervent love, and hearty obedience. Christ, Who is the Branch (Zech. vi. 12), is engrafted on the stock of our Nature; but a scion grafted on a tree will not grow unless it is received and take root in the stock; into our hearts, and drink in the sap of His grace, and transfuse the life-blood of our wills into Him, and grow and coalesce with Him, and bring forth fruit in Him.

Compare the remarks of A Lapide here, who observes that in a primary sense, this precept is to be interpreted of reception of Christ the Incarnate Word, but may be adapted also to the reception of the Inspired Word of God. See also Bp. Andrewes (i. 16), who says that we must apprehend Christ, that is, with St. James, we must lay hold of, or receive insitum Verbum, the Word which is daily grafted into us. For "the Word" He is, and in the Word He is received by us.

Compare also the note above on Acts xx. 32, " I commend you to God, and to the Word of His grace, which (Word) is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among those who are sanctified." The expressions there,  $\tau \hat{\varphi} \lambda \delta \gamma \varphi \tau \hat{\varphi} \delta v$ ναμένφ κ.τ.λ., are very similar to these words here, τον λόγον τον δυνάμενον σῶσαι, see also note above on v. 19, and on Heb. iv. 13, and below on 1 Pet. i. 23-25.

In all these passages, the sense doubtless includes the word written or preached, but may not be limited and restricted to it. without violence to the context, and loss of its meaning; and ought to be extended to the Incarnate Word: see on v. 18.

St. James here,—as the other Apostles do (see Heb. iv. 12, 13),—takes advantage of the double sense of the word Λόγος, 12, 13),—takes advantage of the dollar sense of the word happens and passes by a natural transition from the one sense to the other.

22. γίνεσθε δὲ ποιηπαὶ λόγου] but become ye doers of the word, and not hearers only; for, says St. Paul, Rom. ii. 13, "not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of it shall be justified." Cp. below, iv. 17, where St. James says, that "to him who knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, there is sin," and thus the two Apostles unite in censuring the notion prevalent among many of the Jews, who relied on their descent from Abraham (Matt. iii. 8, 9), and imagined that the knowledge of the law, apart from the practice of it, would secure their acceptance with God, and procure them the rewards of heaven; see further above, Rom. ii. 27-29. This was specially the case with the zealots of that age; see Josephus, B. J. vii. 30, and above, Introduction, p. 2.

On this text see the sermon of Bp. Andrewes, v. p. 195. "As S. Augustine saith, accedat ad verbum, unto the word that we hear let there be joined the element of the work, that is, some real elemental deed; et sic fit magnum sacramentum pietatis, and so shall you have 'the great mystery,' or sacrament 'of godliness.' For indeed godliness is as a sacrament; hath not only the mystery to be known, but the exercise to be done; not the word to be heard, but the work also to be performed. Which very sacrament of godliness is the manifesting of the Word in the flesh; which itself is livelily expressed by us when we are doers of the word; as it is well gathered out of our Saviour Christ's speech to them which interrupted Him in His sermon and told Him, 'His mother was without.' 'Who is my mother?' saith He (Matt. xii. 50). These here that hear and do My word are My mother, they 'travail' of Me till I am fashioned in them (Gal. iv. 19). Hearing they receive the immortal seed of the word (1 Pet. i. 23); by a firm purpose of doing they conceive; by a longing desire they quicken, by an earnest endeavour they travail with it; and when the work is wrought, verbun caro factum est, they have incarnate the Word (John i. 14). Therefore to the woman's acclamation, 'Blessed be the womb that bare Thee' (Luke xi. 27), True, saith Christ, but that blessing can extend only to one and no more. | I will tell you how you may be blessed too; blessed are they that so incarnate the written word by doing it, as the blessed Virgin gave flesh to the eternal Word by bearing it." See also Bp. Sanderson, iii. p. 360.

23, 24. 371 et 715] for if a man be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like a man who considers his natural face in a glass (or mirror); for he considered himself, and is gone away (perfect tense, and he remains absent), and straightway he forgat what manner of man he was, as reflected in the glass.

On the use of the aorists here, see above, v. 11, and Winer, p. 249, and on the word έσοπτρον, a mirror, see above, on 1 Cor. xiii. 12. The perfect ἀπελήλυθεν is introduced between the two aorists to denote that the absence is continual.

The Apostle has been insisting on the duty of hearing (v. 19), and now he guards against the notion that it is enough to hear. Hearing is necessary; but it is not enough. To hear and not to do, is self-deceit. He who hears the Word is like a man who considers his natural face in a mirror. For the Word of God is the mirror of the soul. It shows us to ourselves as we D 2 are. Especially does it show our πρόσωπον γενεσεωs, our natura: face; our faciem nativitatis (Vulg.). It, and it alone, reveals to us what we are by nature in the first Adam, and what we become by grace in the Second Adam. Cp. Augustine in Ps. 118; and on the genitive, see v. 25, and ii. 4.

So far he does well. But the Word of God is something more than a mirror to be looked into, it is a perfect Law (v. 25) to be obeyed. And whosoever hears it and does not obey it, treats it only as a mirror, and looks at himself in it; and goes forth from hearing the Scripture or the Sermon in the Church, and mingles with the world; or passes from reading the Bible to other books and to other pursuits; and forgets what manner of man he is; how frail and sinful in God's sight; he forgets his need of repentance, and of pardon, and of grace; and the warnings of Death and Judgment that he has heard in the Sermon, or read in the Bible; and the promises of heavenly glory, and the threats of future punishment, pass away from his mind and disappear from his memory, like evanescent reflexions from a glass.

25. δ δε παρακύψας] but he who turneth aside from all earthly contemplations, and bends his eyes downward and rivets them on the Word of God,-not like one who looks at the reflexion of his face in a glass; but who knows it to be the rule of his life, and the perfect law, the law of liberty, and who abideth therein, and doth not become a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, he shall be blessed in his doing. On this meaning of the word παρακύψας see 1 Pet. i. 12, and Welstein i. p. 823, and the use of the word έγκύπτειν, applied to studying the Scriptures, by S. Clement, i. 40, and i. 53, and by S. Polycarp, Phil. 3. The sense of παρά in παρακύψας is explained by παρά in παραμείνας. It indicates also that the law of God is a fixed object; like a book or chart, which lies before his eyes, and below them, and on which he rivets them. "O Lord, how I love Thy law! all the day long is my study in it." Ps. cxix. 97. Cp. Ps. i. 2. Josh. i. 8.

- νόμον τέλειον τὸν τῆς έλευθερίας] the perfect law—that of liberty. Christ has redeemed us by His blood from the slavery of sin and Satan into the glorious Liberty of the Sons of God. See on Gal. v. 1-13. Rom. viii. 21. He has redeemed us from the curse of the Law (Gal. iii. 13), and purchased us to Himself (1 Cor. vi. 20; vii. 23), and has thus made us free (John viii. 36), and has conveyed to us these blessings effected by the operation of the Holy Ghost, which is therefore called God's free Spirit (Ps. li. 12. 2 Cor. iii. 17); and has revealed to us these things in the preaching of the Gospel, which is the perfect Law of Liberty, the Law of emancipation from evil, and of obedience to God, whose service is perfect freedom, and has bound us to obey the Law of Love, and to serve one another thereby (Gal. v. 13) as faith, we must all serve by love. And let him take heed to obey this law of liberty, for by it he will be judged (ii. 12). See below on 1 Pet. ii. 16, and Theophylact here, and Bp. Sanderson, Serm. iii. 276.

He who binds himself to study and to observe this Law, and does not become a hearer of forgetfulness, that is, a hearer who is not characterized by obeying, but by forgetting what he hears on this use of the Genitive, see below, ii. 6, and above on 1 Thess. ii. 13, and on Matt. xxi. 11. Luke xviii. 6. Acts ix. 12), but a doer of the work, is blessed in his doing. There seems to be a reference to our Lord's own speech, Matt. xii. 46—48. Luke xi. 27, 28, and cp. the close of the Sermon on the Mount,

26. εί τις δοκεί θρησκος είναι] if any one deemeth himself to be religious, or devout; or "would be holden" for such, as Bp. Andrewes renders it (iii. 216). On this sense of boxes, putates (Vulg.), see Mark x. 42. Luke xxii. 24. 1 Cor. x. 12. Winer,

θρησκος is applied specially to external acts of religious worship, and public exercises of devotion (see Acts xxvi. 5. Col. ii. 18), and is, therefore, explained by εὐσεβης, and even by δεισιδαίμων, by Hesychius. See Trench, Synonyms N. T. xlviii., and below, note on v. 27.

 $-\mu \eta$  χαλιναγωγῶν] not bridling his tongue; a moral duty of primary necessity in God's sight, without which all professions of piety and devotion are odious to Him. On this text see Bp Butler, Sermon iv., and Dr. Barrow, Serm. xiii. vol. i. p. 283.

On the metaphor ep. Ps. xxxi. 1, and Philo ap. Loesner, p. 459, and below, iii. 2, 3.

27. θρησκεία καθαρά] worship that is pure and undefiled before God (whatever it may seem in the sight of men) . . . is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction. ἐπισκέπτεσθαι, to visit, is the word specially applied to visiting the sick and needy. See Matt. xxv. 36. 43

St. James uses the word θρησκεία, repeated from θρησκος in v. 26, to show that no external acts of worship are of any avail without Charity, and that mercy and charity itself are the devotion and the worship which God most loves. See Matt. ix. 13; xii. 7, and on Luke xvii. 15. Compare Isa. lviii. 6, 7, "Is not

This declaration of the Apostle may suggest guidance to Christian Pastors, for such a regulation of the frequency of the public services of religion in their Parishes, conformably with the Laws of the Church, as will leave sufficient and ample time for the visitation of the sick and needy in their flocks. Compare the precept below, v. 14, and S. Polycarp there cited using the word  $\hat{\epsilon}\pi\iota\sigma\kappa\hat{\epsilon}\pi\tau\epsilon\sigma\theta\alpha\iota$  in the same relation as St. James does here.

By the words  $\pi \alpha \rho \tilde{\alpha} \ \tau \hat{\varphi} \ \Theta \epsilon \hat{\varphi}$ , before God, St. James intimates, that, however fair may be the appearance of devotion separate from Charity, in the sight of men, it is unclean in the eyes of God; and he designates God here as the Father, because God is God of the widow, and Father of the fatherless, Ps. lxviii. 5; cxlvi. 9. Further, St. James thus teaches the important lesson that works of benevolence-such as concern Orphans and Widows -are not profitable unless they are done as acts of worship; i. e. for the love of God. Otherwise, they are dead works. Heb. ix.

The exhortation of St. James concerning widows and orphans was rendered specially appropriate by the circumstances of the Jewish Christians at this time. See Acts ii. 44; vi. l. καθαρὰ—ἀμίαντος—ἄσπιλον] pure—undefiled—unspotted. St. James, by using these words, studiously indicates the duty of the true θρησκεία or worship, as distinguished, in its purity and holiness, from that of those who relied on external acts of purification in ceremonial washings and cleansings, as the Jews did (Mark vii. 4. 8. Heb. ix. 10), who made long prayers, and devoured widows' houses (Matt. xxiii. 25, 26), and laid much stress on other ritual observances in the eyes of men, and cared little for the holiness of heart in the sight of God, and whose lives were fair externally like whited sepulchres, but within were full of uncleanness (Matt. xxiii. 27).

- άσπιλον έαυτον τηρείν] to keep himself unspotted. There is no καl prefixed to this clause. St. James (like the Hebrew Prophets, c. g. Isaiah i. 18, "Wash ye, make you clean," &c.) loves asyndeta. See v. 6. "Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; purify your hearts, ye double-minded" (iv. 8). See Theophylact here.

He also here delivers a protest against that hypocritical religion of formal and speculative professions of knowledge, which characterized some of those to whom he is writing, and who are thus described by one of the Apostolic Fathers: "They have no care for the widow, nor for the orphan, nor for the afflicted, nor for the hungry and thirsty." S. Ignatius, ad Smyrn. 6. S. Polycarp ad Phil. 6, exhorts the Clergy to be faithful, in "visiting the sick, not neglecting the widow or the fatherless."

Cπ. II. 1. 'Αδελφοί μου] My brethren. He begins with a memento of brotherhood, in order to correct their infractions of its laws. On these verses, 1-10, see S. Augustine's Epistle to

Him, and of which He is the object, Who took the nature of us all, and Who, although He is the Lord of glory, vouchsafed to become poor for your sakes; and in Whom there is neither rich nor poor, and Who will judge all without respect of persons, and Who has made you all brethren in Himself, and Who will reward with heavenly glory works of love done to the least of His brethren in love to Him (Matt. xxv. 40), -hold not ye that faith in respectings of persons, so as to distinguish one brother, and fellow-member of Christ, from another, in spiritual matters, in His sight; and thus to contravene the primary principles of communion and fellowship in the body of Christ.

Be not ye guilty of such inconsistency as this. Mark the contrast between faith and respect of persons; similar to that in Rom. i. 18, "holding the truth in unrighteousness;" and so S. Polycarp (Phil. 6), "bearing the name of the Lord in hypocrisy."

This partiality, of which St. James speaks, is similar to that censured by St. Paul (1 Cor. xi. 21) in regard to personal distinctions in spiritual matters. We are commanded to render honour to those to whom honour is due. (Rom. xiii. 7.) Differences are fitly made between man and man in regard to social order and degree, but not in spiritual respects, such as the administration of the Lord's Supper, of which St. Paul is speaking, and in Christian differences are differences between brother and brother in the very condition of Christian brotherhood. See Bp. Sanderson's remarks, i. 78, and compare those of S. Augustine, Epist. 167 (cited by Red and Invited Str.) (cited by Bede and Lapide), censuring the preferment of personal friends and relatives, as such, to ecclesiastical dignities.

Observe, της δόξης, of glory, placed emphatically at the end of the sentence; and so translated by the Vulgate, Arabic, and Æthiopic Versions. The words τοῦ Κυρίου may be so extended as to apply to της δόξης, the Lord Jesus Christ of glory.

This separation of the genitive,  $\tau \hat{\eta} s \delta \delta \xi \eta s$ , from the word on which it depends, Kuplov, by a trajection, need not create any difficulty; and it adds force to the sentence. The words 'of Glory,' are purposely reserved for the end, for the sake of the argument which they contain; and they follow Kuplov, as  $\partial \rho \gamma \hat{\eta} s$  follows  $\tau \epsilon \kappa \nu \alpha$  in Eph. ii. 3. Cp. the collocation of the words in Phil. ii. 10. 2 Pet. iii. 2; and Wiesinger here; and Winer, p. 172; and Acts vii. 2, δ Θεδς δόξης, the God of Glory.

Contemplate the Lord of Glory (1 Cor. ii. 8), who humbled Himself, and took the poor man's nature, and joined all in Himself, and promises glory to humility. (Luke xiv. 11. James iv. 10.)

This consideration is the groundwork of the Apostle's argument and exhortation. This is the glory which Christ Himself offers to you, -not the vain glory of this world, which ye seek by preferring the rich to the poor, and by having men's persons in admiration for the sake of advantage to yourselves. (Jude 16.)

2. εἶs τὴν συναγωγὴν ὑμῶν] into your place of assembly; the assembly of you who are all brethren, and which is held for the purpose of manifesting your brotherhood in Christ. St. James uses the word συναγωγή, synagogue, to show that he is speaking of a place of assembly which was to them Christians, what the Jewish synagogue was to the Jews, a place for religious worship. Cp. Huther, p. 92. This word is very appropriate here, as showing to the Jewish and Jewish-Christian readers of this Epistle, that the Christian religion is not contrary to the Mosaic Law, and that the worship of the Church is the legitimate expansion of that of the Synagogue. Compare the word ἐπισυναγωγή (Heb. x. 25), applied to the assembling together of Christians for religious exercises. There were synagogues of various nations at Jerusalem (see Acts vi. 9), and at the time when this Epistle was written, the Christians had not wholly severed themselves, as a distinct religious body, from the Jews. The Christians, in a spirit of charity and wisdom, did all in their power to retain unbroken the unity and the continuity of the Church of God-the Church of Abraham, Moses, and the Prophets. Evidence of this desire is seen in the conduct of St. Paul, always resorting to, and preaching in, the synagogue of the great cities which he visited; and in his language to the Jews at Jerusalem (Acts xxii. 5); and in this expression of St. James applying the word synagogue to a Christian Church. The Christian places of worship at Jerusalem were "synagogues of Christians." The word συναγωγή passed from the mouth of Jews into that of Christians. See Suicer, in v. Συναγωγαί means religious meetings of Christians in Ignatius, ad

Some Expositors suppose that συναγωγή here means a civil assembly; but in civil assemblies personal distinctions are fit and necessary (see above on v. 1), and such an interpretation is inconsistent with the Apostle's argument here.

- χρυσοδακτύλιος] literally, golden-ringed; making an ostentatious display of golden rings on his hands, as the rich and effeminate did; "digiti omnes onerantur annulis," says Pliny, II. N. xxxiii. 6; and "per digitos currit levis annulus omnes, Martial, v. 11; and cp. Juvenal, vii. 140.

3. κάθου] sit thou; for κάθησο, Matt. xxii. 44. Luke xx. 42. Acts ii. 34; not found in classical Greek. Winer, § 14, p. 75.

4. και οὐ διεκρίθητε ἐν ἐαυτοιs] and were ye not contentious among yourselves? did ye not thus become litigants among yourselves? The καl is not in A, nor in X, nor in B**, C, but, if genuine, it is here used with an abrupt burst of vehement indignation. And, while ye were making, by your practice, such an invidious and uncharitable distinction between the poor man and the rich, in your religious assemblies, what was it that you were doing all the while? did you not thus constitute yourselves virtually into parties in a suit?

The agrist here has a special fitness, as marking a thing done already, while another action was going on. While ye were making these distinctions ye made yourselves to become like disputants in a law-suit.

This agrist  $(\delta\iota\epsilon\kappa\rho\ell\theta\eta\tau\epsilon)$  of the passive form has a middle sense, as ἀπεκρίθην in the New Testament, and numerous other words; indeed, διεκρίθην itself, Matt. xxi. 21. Mark xi. 23. Rom. iv. 20; see Lobeck, Phrynich. p. 108; Winer, § 39, p. 233, and διακρίνομαι has this sense of litigation in the LXX, Jer. xv. 10, ἄνδρα διακρινόμενον, a disputatious person; and so διακριθήσομαι, I will contend. Ezek. xvii. 20. Joel iii. 2. Cp. Ezek. xx. 36, διεκρίθην πρός τους πατέρας ύμων.

The sense therefore is, By such partiality as this, did ye not convert the Christian Church—where all are brethren—into a court of assize? and did ye not abdicate your character of brotherhood for that of litigants with those who are your brethren, and thus wage an intestine warfare among yourselves?

Some interpreters suppose that οὐ διεκρίθητε ἐν ἐαυτοῖς signifies, and did ye not, by such inconsistent conduct as this, put yourselves at variance with yourselves? but the former exposition is more consistent with the usual meaning of διακρίνομαι, and with the context.

There are two distinct grounds of censure-

(1) That by this partiality they become like disputants in a law-suit (cp. 1 Cor. vi. 6, ἀδελφὸς μετὰ ἀδελφοῦ κρίνεται), instead of being brethren: this is the rebuke in this clause.

(2) That they thus constitute themselves into Judges; this is developed in what follows.

- καὶ ἐγένεσθε κριταὶ δ. π.;] and did ye not become judgesnot acting calmly on principles of equity, but swayed passionately by the party-bias of evil surmises and contentious cogitations?

The genitive διαλογισμών is the genitive of the quality. See above, i. 25; and compare Luke xvi. 18, τον οἰκονόμον της άδικίας; and xviii. 6, δ κριτής της άδικίας. The sense of the word διαλογισμοί is best illustrated by St. Paul's use of it, Rom. xiv. 1, where see note.

5. ἀκούσατε, ἀδελφοί μου ἀγαπητοί] Hearken, my beloved brethren. After a vehement rebuke, St. James changes his tone, and reasons with them. These contrasts, frequent in this Epistle, impart to it the liveliness of a spoken address, and place be-fore our eyes the sacred writer in a clear light. Cp. below, on v. 6, 7.

The same may be said of the rapid succession of short questions (see here v. 6, 7), and brief apophthegms (see iv. 7-9), and sharp reproofs (see v. 5, 6), and the introduction of other parties speaking, as in a dramatic dialogue (see ii. 15-18); all these h ch 1, 25.

The dative κόσμω is in A*, B, C*, N, and Vulg., and may be compared with its use in Acts vii. 20, ἀστείος τῷ Θεφ, and 2 Cor. x. 4, δυνατὰ τῷ Θεφ, and so mihi in Horal. (1 Ep. xvi. 66), "liber mihi non crit unquam." Elz. has the getive τοῦ κόσμου τούτου. Cp. 1 Cor. i. 27.

6. ύμεις δε ητιμάσατε τον πτωχόν] but ye dishonoured the poor man: τὸν πτωχόν, the poor man, as such, ye dishonoured him for his poverty. Cp. δ πλούσιος, i. 11; "pauperem exhonorâstis." (Vulg.) ἀτιμάζω is more forcible than despise: it is to degrade from the condition of honour, which he has as a member of Christ, Who vouchsafed to wear the garb of poverty (2 Cor. viii. 9). Christ Himself is the poor man of the Psalms; see above on Ps. xxii. 24. Ye, Jews, dishonoured the poor One, "ye killed the Just One." Cp. v. 6.

- οὐχὶ οἱ πλούσιοι] Do not the rich drag you into courts of Do they not do this on account of your Christian profession, as if you were disturbers of the public peace? as the Jews did to St. Stephen at Jerusalem (Acts vii. 12); and to St. Paul at Thessalonica (Acts xvii. 5), and at Corinth (xviii. 12). Cp. Justin Martyr, Apol. i. c. 31.

7. βλασφημοῦσι] they blaspheme that Name; especially in their synagogues. Cp. Acts xxvi. 11, and note above on 1 Cor. xii. 3; and Justin Martyr, c. Tryph. c. 16, with Otto's note,

- το καλον δνομα the glorious Name which was invoked over you; especially when ye were baptized into it (Matt. xxviii. 29); and which is invoked in all the benedictions which are pronounced over you in the holy offices of those religious assemblies, which you desecrate by unchristian partialities. Cp. Acts ix. 14. 21. Rom. x. 12. I Cor. i. 2. I Pet. i. 17. Clemens R. i. 58, πάση ψυχῆ ἐπικεκλημένη τὸ ἄγιον ὄνομα αὐτοῦ. "The Name" is emphatically the Name of Christ, see 3 John 7.

Some read ἐπικληθὲν ὕνομα ἐφ' ὑμᾶς, the name by which ye are called, and this sense is authorized by Hebrew use, Gen. xlviii. 16. 2 Sam. vi. 12. 1 Kings viii. 43; but the words ἐπικαλείσθαι ὄνομα are often used in the sense of invoking a name in the LXX, and this sense seems preferable; and so Bede renders the words in his note on v. 5, "Nonne blasphemant bonum nomen quod invocatum est super vos?" Indeed, there appears to be a contrast between the blasphemy of that Name in the Jewish synagogues on the one side (1 Cor. xii. 3), and the invocation of it on the other, in the Christian συναγωγαί; and this sense is sanctioned by the sacred language of the Christian Church, applying the word ἐπίκλησις to the act of solemn invocation of the Most Holy Name in her Liturgies. (Matt. xxii. 39, 40. Rom. xiii. 8-10.) Cp. Bp. Andrewes, iii. p. 111. Bp. Sanderson, ii. 276; iv. 153.

κατά την γραφήν] according to the Scripture. Lev. xix. 18. Matt. xxii. 39.

10. δστις γὰρ ὅλον τὸν νόμον τηρήση] for whosoever shall have kept the whole law (if this were possible), but have offended in one precept, has become guilty of all.

Almighty God declared in the Levitical Law, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the Law to do them." (Deut. xxvii. 26. Gal. iii. 10.) And though the rigour of this curse is now taken away by Christ, yet the obligation to obedience remains. See notes above on Gal. iii. 12; and on 2 Cor. v. 4.

Whosoever, therefore, willingly and wilfully allows himself in the indulgence of any sin, which is the breach of God's law (Rom. iv. 15), is guilty of breaking the whole law of God.

Although men may be diligent therefore in the observance of many portions of God's service, yet if they knowingly and deliberately neglect any other part of it, they virtually observe no part. The same God who gave one commandment, gave all; and whosoever breaks one wilfully, keeps none truly. Whoever allows himself in the breach of one part of the law, convicts himself of loving and serving himself, more than the Lawgiver. Whoever loves and prizes one of God's commandments, will love and prize all; for real obedience is grounded in love to Him Whom we obey; and whoever disobeys Him wilfully and habitually in one respect, proves that he does not really love God; and therefore his observance of other parts of God's Law is not grounded on a right foundation, it is not true obedience, and so he is guilty of all, and therefore cannot expect a reward from God for obedience, Who will give a crown of glory to them, and them only, who love Him (i. 12), and who prove their love by obedience. John xiv. 15.

On this text the reader may compare S. Augustine's Epistle above quoted (who understands the word évi, one, as applicable to the one law, that of love) with the remarks of Bp. Bull, Harmon. Apostol. Diss. ii. ch. vii., and Dean Jackson on the Creed, bk. iv. ch. v., and bk. xi. ch. xxx. and ch. xxxiii.

The connexion of the Apostle's reasoning is this: he had blamed them for partiality with regard to God's children, their own brethren, in their acts of religion; he had shown them that such acts of partiality were inconsistent with the royal law of brotherly love, and he now censures them for partiality with respect to God's precepts, and warns them, that however careful they might be in their own devotional exercises in those public religious assemblies (cp. i. 27), and however scrupulous they might be in the observance of other parts of Christian duty, yet by such acts of partiality they are guilty of sin, and are convicted by the law as transgressors (v. 9), and vitiate all their other works, and show that those works are built on a wrong foundation, and not on love to God; and that they violate the whole law by this wilful violation of one part, especially so fundamental a part as that of love.

This declaration would have had a peculiar pertinency for the Jewish Christians, who were in danger of being led astray by the errors of Pharisaic teachers, who were accustomed to inquire, "Which is the great commandment in the Law?" and who imagined that if a man took pains to observe some portion, especially the ceremonial portion of the Law, he might safely indulge himself in the neglect of others, and in the commission of acts contrary to the spirit and letter of the Law. See above on Matt. xii. 23. 36, and xxiii. 13, and cp. Bp. Bull (Harm. Apost. Diss. ii. chap. xvi.), and Dr. Pococke (on Hosea xiv. 2), who recite the rabbinical saying, that "God gave so many commandments, in order that by doing any of them they might be saved," in opposition to what St. Largest colors that he will be saved," sition to what St. James teaches, that by wilfully breaking any of them, they are guilty of the breach of all.

12. οὕτω λαλεῖτε] so speak ye, and so do ye, as being to be judged by the law of liberty; which has made you all dear children and brethren in Christ (i. 25), and therefore by love serve one another (Gal. v. 13), and prove, by obedience, your love to Him Who redeemed you by His own blood, from bondage into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. (Rom. viii. 21.)

13.  $\dot{\eta}$   $\gamma \dot{\alpha} \rho$   $\kappa \rho(\sigma)$  for the judgment (observe the article  $\dot{\eta}$ ), i. e. the future judgment, will be without mercy to him who did not show mercy; mercy glorieth against judgment; triumphs over it. "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy" (Matt. v. 7). See iii. 14, and the Parable of the Heavenly King, Who, when His servant had nothing wherewith to pay, freely forgave the debt of the 10,000 talents, and thus set an example to His servants how they are to deal with their fellow-servants, namely, in such a spirit, that mercy may triumph over sternness and severity; and also gave a warning of the woe which will overtake them if they are not merciful to others, as He has been merciful to them. (Matt. xviii. 23—35). Elz. has καl before κατακαυχᾶται, but it is not in B, C, G, H. Cp. i. 27.

Some Expositors understand this sentence as declaring that mercy shown on man's side to his brother man, has power to triumph over, and disarm, the justice of God. See Augustine in Ps. exliii., and so Chrysostom in an eloquent passage cited here in the Catena, p. 13: "Mercy is dear to God, and intercedes for the sinner, and breaks his chains, and dissipates the darkness, and quenches the fire of hell, and destroys the worm, and rescues from the gnashing of teeth. To her the gates of heaven are opened. She is the queen of virtues, and makes men like to God, for it is written, 'Be ye merciful as your Father also is merciful' (Luke vi. 36). She has silver wings like the dove, and feathers of gold, and soars aloft, and is clothed with divine glory, and stands by the throne of God; when we are in danger of being condemned, she rises up and pleads for us, and covers us with her defence, and enfolds us in her wings. God loves mercy more than sacrifice." (Matt. ix. 13.)

The lines of Shakspeare on the quality of Mercy (Merchant of Venice, act iv. sc. 1) may have been suggested by this passage of St. James. Cp. Bp. Andrewes, iii. 152; v. 3.

These words ή γὸρ κρίσις—ἔλεος are quoted by S. Hippolytus de Consummatione Sæculi, c. 47.

14. τί τὸ ὄφελος] What is the profit, my brethren, if a man say that he has faith, but have not works? can his faith (ἡ πίστις) save him? Can a mere speculative belief, apart from the good works which are the natural fruit of faith, save him?

St. James had been showing above, that external acts of worship (θρησκεία), unaccompanied with works of charity, are of no avail; and that love and holiness constitute the religion which God requires (i. 27), and that acts of partiality toward the rich, for the sake of worldly advantage to ourselves, and of disdain of our poorer brethren, especially in religious respects, are infractions of God's Law, as a whole, and cannot be compensated by any obedience to single precepts of it.

He now proceeds to show that professions of faith, distinguished from religious practice, are null; and thus he counteracts Jewish Christians, that they might be justified in God's sight by superiority of religious knowledge and theoretic belief.

The error, with which St. James had to contend, is thus described by Tertullian (de Pænit. c. 5): "Some persons imagine that they have God, if they receive Him in heart and mind, and do little for Him in act; and that therefore they may commit sin, without doing violence to faith and fear; or, in other words, that they may commit adulteries, and yet be chaste, and may poison their parents, and yet be pious! At the same rate they who commit sin and yet are godly, may also be cast into hell and yet be pardoned! But such minds as these are offshoots from the root of hypocrisy, and are sworn friends of the Evil One." Cp. S. Jerome (in Michæam iii. 5) inveighing against those who said, "If you have faith, it matters little what your life is."

St. James in this Epistle is censuring those religionists who relied on faith, not bringing forth the fruit of good works. St. Paul in his Epistles to the Galatians and Romans, had corrected those who supposed that they could obtain justification from God by their own works, done by their own strength, irrespectively of the meritorious obedience and sufferings of Christ and the grace procured by Him, and independently of faith in His death as the sole efficient cause of man's justification with God. By a consideration of the different designs of these two Apostles, all difficulties in their respective statements may easily be cleared away. See above, Introduction to this Epistle, pp. 1-3, and to the Epistle to the Romans, pp. 298-303.

17. οὕτω καὶ ἡ πίστις] so also faith, if it have not works, is dead by itself; it is dead, not only as regards the signs of external fruitfulness, but it is dead in itself. A tree in winter may not have signs of life, but is not dead in itself; it will put forth shoots and leaves in the spring. But faith has no winter: if it has not works, it has no life in it, and ought not to be called Faith, for (as Didymus says here) dead faith is no faith. without works is dead; and works without faith are dead also.

S. Cyril (in Conc. Ephes. p. 3, c. 43).

There is opus fidei (says Bp. Andrewes, i. p. 194), the work of faith; fides quæ operatur, faith that worketh; that is St. Paul's faith (1 Thess. i. 3. Gal. v. 6); and faith that can show itself by working; that is St. James's faith (ii. 18). And without works it is but a dead faith, the carcase of faith; there is no spirit in it. No spirit, if no work; spectrum est, non spiritus: a flying shadow it is, a spirit it is not, if work it do not. Having wherewith to do good, if you do it not, talk not of faith, for you have no faith in you, if you have wherewith to show it and show it not. (Bp. Andrewes, v. 36.)

19. σὸ πιστεύεις] thou believest that God is one: thou hast more light and knowledge than the Heathen, who worship gods many and lords many (1 Cor. viii. 5), thou doest well, but this is not enough, for even the devils (even those false goods themselves which the heathen worship, 1 Cor. x. 20), they believe this, and show their belief by fearing Him; they believe and tremble They said to Christ, "Art thou come to torment us before the time?" "I adjure Thee that Thou torment me not." "I know Thee who Thou art, the Holy One of God. Thou art Christ the Son of God" (Matt. viii. 29. Mark i. 24. 34; v. 7. Luke iv. 41), and thus they showed their fear and their belief. But (as Augustine well says in Joann. Tract. 29, and in Psalm. 130), "Aliud est credere Illi, aliud credere Illum, aliud credere in Illum. Credere Illi est credere verum esse quod loquitur; credere Illum est credere quod Ipse sit Deus; sed credere in Illum est diligere Illum. Credere Ipsum esse Deum, hoc et dæmones potuerunt;" but to believe in God, this is what is done only by those who love God, and who are not only Christians in name, but in deed, and in life. See above on Matt. xviii. 6.

For without love, faith is void. The only true faith is the faith which worketh by love (Gal. v. 6). The faith that is joined with love is the faith of Christians, but the faith that is without love is the faith of decile. love is the faith of devils. An infidel who does not believe in Christ is not so far advanced in knowledge as the devils are. And they who believe Christ, but do not love Him, they fear the s Josh. 2. 1. & 6. 23. Heb. 11. 31.

- κενέ] vacue; rain; for thy faith is only a hollow profession; a mere void without solidity.

- χωρίς τῶν ἔργων] apart from the works (observe the article

Faith is the root which turns the rain of grace into fruit. (Cp. Augustine in Ps. 139.) Faith cleaves to the soil of the soul, as a root which has received the shower of divine grace, in order that when it is tilled it may shoot forth branches and bear the fruit of good works. The root of righteousness does not grow from works; but the fruit of works grows from the root of righteousness, that is to say, from that root of righteousness whereby God ness, that is to say, from that root of righteousness whereby God accepts righteousness without work, namely, from Faith; see Origen in Rom. vol. iv. p. 523, cited by Bp. Beveridge (on Article xii. "of Good Works"), who says, "Though it be for our faith only, and not for our works that God accepts us, yet our works as well as faith are acceptable unto God, yea, and they necessarily spring out from a true and lively faith, so that it is as impossible there should be true faith without good works, as that there should be good works without true faith; for as without faith our works are bad, so without works our faith is dead. And therefore a true faith may be as evidently known by its works, as a tree is clearly discerned by its fruit. If I see fruit growing upon a tree, I know what tree it is, upon which such fruit grows. And so if I see how a man lives, I know how he believes. If his faith be good, his works cannot but be good too; and if his works be bad, his faith cannot but be bad too. For wheresoever there is a justifying faith there are also good works; and wheresoever there are no good works there is no justifying faith."

This last statement needs some qualification. For suppose the case of a person who has been baptized, and has a lively faith and earnest resolve to serve God, and that he is suddenly taken away from this life, without having time to show his faith by his works. Or suppose the case of an infant dying after baptism. Then Faith saves. No man can do good works without Faith; but Faith without works saves a man, if God thinks fit to remove him out of this life, without giving him time for working, and if God knows that he would have worked, if he had had time for working. Indeed in such a case, Faith itself is work; according to our Lord's saying, This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He sent (John vi. 28, 29).

21. 'Aβραάμ] Abraham our father, was not he justified by works, when he offered Isaac his son at the altar? On έδικαιώθη, twas justified, see note above, Rom. iii. 26. Abraham, the Father of the faithful, united in his own person those qualities which were necessary to be commended both by St. James and by St. Paul (Rom. iv. 2-16).

Abraham is cited by St. James as an example of practical faith, in opposition to the hollow conceits of those who imagined that knowledge would suffice, without the fruits of obedience.

Abraham is also appealed to by St. Paul, as showing that faith in God, as the sole spring of all good, and firm reliance on His word, and entire self-devotion to His will, in contradistinction to any conceit of any thing in himself as enabling him to work, and entitling him to reward, is on man's side the cause of justification with God.

The example of Abraham therefore stands forth in the Epistle of St. James, as a warning against a barren speculative faith; and is adduced by St. Paul as a protest against proud and presumptuous self-righteousness.

This example of the Father of the Faithful is displayed by both these Apostles as an encouragement to that genuine Faith, which, forgetting and sacrificing self, and building on the foundation of God's Power, and Love, and Truth, and cleaving and clinging to that, rises up in the goodly superstructure of Obedience, in a sober, righteous, and religious life, dedicated to His glory and service. "Abraham believed in God, and it was counted to him for righteousness," but he proved his faith by his obedience when, having been commanded by God to slay his son, he offered him (aνήνεγκεν) at the altar. See Heb. xi. 17.

It has been said by some modern interpreters that ἀνενέγκας enl το θ. does not mean having offered up at the altar, but simply having led up, brought up, to the altar; but such an interpre-tation weakens the sense; and the usage of the word in the N.T. (Heb. vii. 27; xiii. 15. 1 Pet. ii. 5), and the authority of the Ancient Versions,—Syriac, Vulgale, Æthiopic, and Arabic, confirm the interpretation adopted above, which is that of our

22.  $\hat{\eta} \ \pi [\sigma \tau \iota s \ \sigma \upsilon \nu \hat{\eta} \rho \gamma \epsilon \iota] \ faith \ was \ working \ together \ with \ his \ works: his faith \ was itself a fellow-worker with his \ works. Faith$ is a worker and a work. John vi. 28, 29. Cp. Irenæus iv. 16. 2, citing these words to show that Justification is not to be had by observance of the ceremonial law.

24.  $\xi\xi \ \epsilon\rho\gamma\omega\nu$ ] Justification, pardon, acceptance with God spring out of works ( $\xi\xi \ \epsilon\rho\gamma\omega\nu$ ). But these works themselves are  $\epsilon\kappa$   $\pi(\sigma\tau\epsilon\omega s$ , they spring out of faith; as branches spring from their root; and as a stream springs out of its source.

St. James does not deny that a man is justified by failh  $(\delta i \hat{\alpha} \ \pi l \sigma \tau \epsilon \omega s)$ , which is St. Paul's assertion (Rom. iii. 22), and which is never contrarened in the least degree by St. James. But he asserts that a man is not justified ἐκ πίστεως μόνον, from out of faith only; that is, he affirms that Justification does not grow out of that kind of faith which does not work when it has the means of working, and which therefore does not deserve the name of faith,—being dead, v. 20. 26. See above, Introduction, pp. 1-3.

25. δμοίως δε και 'Paάβ] in like manner even Rahab, the harlot. was not she justified from out of works? In her case did not Justification grow out of works? Yes, certainly: because they grew out of a lively faith in God, working by love to man, for she said, "I know that the Lord hath given you this land ... there-fore swear unto me that ye will save alive my father and my mother, and my brethren, and my sisters, and all that they have, and deliver our lives from death." Josh. ii. 9-13.

The word πόρνη is applied to Rahab, as an "argumentum ad verecundiam." See above on Heb. xi. 31. To such religionists as those who are censured by St. James, the words of our Lord apply; Matt. xxi. 31, 32.

St. James cites an example from Rahab a proselyte, such as were many in the dispersions to which he wrote. (Wetstein.) Rahab received the spies, who were sent before Joshua, the type of Jesus, and who were types of the Apostles of Christ, and she hearkened to their message, and sent them forth in speed (¿κβαλοῦσα) by a cord, by another way (other than that by which they had come), viz., by the window, from which she tied the scarlet cord by which they were let down (Josh. ii. 15-18), and thus obtained deliverance for herself and family by her faith, when her city was destroyed. Thus she was an example very applicable to those whom St. James addressed, who, by receiving the Gospel preached by the Apostles, might escape the woes impending on Jerusalem, as she escaped those which fell upon Jericho (cp. Heb. xi. 31), and who would be overwhelmed in that destruction, if they neglected so great salvation. (Heb. ii. 3.)

The Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews refers to and corroborates the teaching of St. James the Bishop of Jerusalem; compare what is said of Abraham in Heb. xi. 17-19 with what is here said, v. 21, concerning the offering up of Isaac. Cp. below, iii. 18, on Rahab's typical character. See above on Josh. ii. and vi.

In many respects, the Epistle to the Hebrews illustrates and confirms this Epistle, and displays the unity of the teaching of its Author, and of St. James. Cp. Introduction, p. 3.

CH. III. 1. μη πολλοί διδάσκαλοι] Become not ye many teachers: set not up yourselves for Teachers, without due call and mission. Such assumption of authority was a prevalent vice among the Jews, who loved to be called Rabbi, Rabbi (Matt. xxiii. 7), and affected to be teachers of the Law (1 Tim. i. 7), and were confident of their ability to be guides to the blind. (Rom. ii. 19.) Thence the contagion passed into the Church, and many, especially of the Jewish Christians, distracted the Church by diversity of psalms and doctrines (1 Cor. xiv. 26), and rent it into parties, which called themselves by names of different leaders. (1 Cor. i. 12.) See Bp. Bull's Sermon (VI. vol. i. 137) on this text.

Such were those whom St. James had consured at the Council of Jerusalem (Acts xv. 24), and who seem to have given out that they came from him, when they went down to Antioch and troubled the Church there. (Gal. ii. 12.)

St. James in like manner, at the close of his Epistle, inculcates the obligation of maintaining a due respect for the office and persons of those who are regularly ordained to the work of the Christian Ministry, and of not intruding into their office, or of encouraging any who usurp it. "Is any one sick among you? let him send for the Elders of the Church," v. 14. On the necessity of a due mission, see Acts xix. 15. Rom. x. 15. Heb.

— μείζον κρίμα ληψόμεθα] we shall receive greater condemnation, by setting ourselves up for Teachers. He says "we shall receive;" and again he says, "in many things we offend all," thus condescending to the infirmities of the weak, giving an example of that meekness and mildness of language which he commends (v. 2. 17, 18). So St. Paul; see on 1 Cor. vi. 12.

2. πολλά γάρ πταίομεν ἄπαντες] for in many things we offend all. This around does not in any way invalidate the writer's claim to Inspiration. Moses "spake unadvisedly with his lips" at the waters of strife. (Ps. cvi. 33.) St. Paul was betrayed into a hasty speech before the Sanhedrim. (Acts xxiii. 5.) St. Peter was condemned at Antioch because he walked not uprightly. (Gal. ii. 11-14.) But notwithstanding these human infirmities in the persons of those who were employed by God as instruments in writing the books of the Bible, there is no flaw or blemish in those Scriptures which the Holy Ghost wrote by their instrumentality, and which have been received by the Church of God as the Word, not of man, but of God. They had this treasure of Inspiration in earthen vessels, "in order that the excellency of the power of the Gospel might be seen to be not of man, but of God." 2 Cor. iv. 7. See above on Acts xv. 38; and on Gal. ii., note at end of chapter, sect. vi.

- εἴ τις ἐν λόγω] if any man offend not in word he is a perfect man,—במם (tamim).

These words (says Dr. Barrow in an excellent sermon on this text) assert that man, who offends not in speech, to be perfect, and they imply that we should strive to avoid offending therein; for to be perfect, and to go on to perfection, are precepts the observance whereof is incumbent on us. (Deut. xviii. 13. Matt. v. 48; xix. 21. Luke vi. 40. 2 Cor. xiii. 11. Heb. vi. 1.)

To offend originally signifies to infringe, to stumble upon somewhat lying across our way, so as thereby to be cast down, or at least to be disordered in our posture, and stopped in our progress: whence it is well transferred to our being through any down, or bowed from his upright state, and interrupted from prosecuting a steady course of piety and virtue. By an apposite manner of speaking (Ps. xxxvii. 23, 24), our tenor of life is called Val. II.—Part IV. a way, our conversation walking, our actions steps, our observing good laws uprightness, our transgression of them tripping, faltering, falling. By not offending in word, we may then conceive to be understood such a constant restraint and such a careful guidance of our tongue, that it doth not transgress the rules prescribed by Divine law, or by good reason; that it thwarteth not the natural ends and proper uses for which it was framed, to which it is fitted; such as chiefly are promoting God's glory, our neighbour's benefit, and our own true welfare.

By a perfect man is meant a person accomplished and complete, one of singular worth and integrity, who, as to the con-tinual tenor of his life, is free from all notorious defects and heinous faults (Acts xiii. 22); like David, fulfilling all God's will, and having respect to all God's commandments (Ps. exix. 6); like Zachary and Elizabeth, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless. (Luke i. 6.) Thus was Noah (Gen. vi. 9), thus was Abraham, thus was Job perfect. (Job i. 1.) This is the notion of perfection in Holy Scripture: not an absolute exemption of all blemish of soul, or blame in life; for such a perfection is inconsistent with the nature and state of man here, where none with modesty or truth can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin (Prov. xx. 9); where every man must confess with Job, If I justify myself, mine own mouth shall condemn me; If I say I am perfect, it shall prove me perverse. (Job ix. 20.) For there is not, as the preacher assures us, a just man upon earth, that doeth good, and sinneth not (Eccles. vii. 20); and, In many things we offend all. that is, there is no man absolutely perfect: but if any man offend not in word (that is, if a man constantly govern his tongue well), that man is perfect; perfect in such a kind and degree as human frailty doth admit; he is eminently good; he may be reasonably presumed upright and blameless in all the course of his practice; able, as it follows, to bridle the whole body, that is, qualified to order all his actions justly and wisely. So that in effect the words import this: that a constant governance of our speech according to duty and reason, is a high instance and a special argument of a thoroughly sincere and solid goodness. Dr. Barrow.

3. εὶ δέ] But if. So A, B, G, K, and Lach., Tisch., Alf., Winer, p. 528. C has τδε. Elz. has ίδου, behold.

St. James follows up the metaphor of the preceding verse with an argument à fortiori. If we put bits into horses' mouths, we turn, not only their mouths, but also their whole body. We can rule irrational animals with a bit; how much more ought we to be able to govern ourselves! And if we rule our tonques. we do in fact govern the whole man; for the tongue is to man what a bit is to horses, and a rudder is to ships; it rules the whole; let it therefore be governed aright.

 δ. ἰδοὐ ἡλίκον πῦρ] behold, what a great forest (ὕλην, materiam) what a little fire makes to blaze!
 For ἡλίκον C**, G, K have ὀλίγον, a little; but ἡλίκον is in R, A**, B, C*, and Vuly., and is received by Lach., Tisch., and Alford, and so De Wette, Huther, and others. Cp. Theocrit. iv. 5, ὕσσιχόν ἐστι τὸ τύμμα, καὶ ἀλίκον ἄνδρα δαμάσδει, and Seneca (Controv. v. 5), "quàm lenibus initiis quanta incendia oriantur." The word 'matter' in the English Version here, is only an adaptation of the Latin materies (ὕλη), wood, considered as fuel. The Vulgate has silvam. Cp. the use of the word 'matter' in Ecclus. xxviii. 10.

The conflagration of a large forest even by a casual spark was not a rare event in the countries where the readers of this Epistle lived. See Wetstein, p. 670, citing Homer, Il. xi. 115. Plutarch, Sympos. viii. p. 730. Pindar, Pyth. iii. 66; to which may be added the poetical description in Virgil, Georgic ii. 303:

" Nam sæpe incautis pastoribus excidit ignis, Qui furtim pingui primum sub cortice tectus άδικίας ή γλώσσα καθίσταται ἐν τοῖς μέλεσιν ἡμῶν ἡ σπιλοῦσα ὅλον τὸ σῶμα, καὶ φλογίζουσα τὸν τροχὸν τῆς γενέσεως, καὶ φλογιζομένη ὑπὸ τῆς γεέννης.

7 Πασα γαρ φύσις θηρίων τε καὶ πετεινών, έρπετών τε καὶ ἐναλίων, δαμάζεται καὶ δεδάμασται τῆ φύσει τῆ ἀνθρωπίνη 8 τὴν δὲ γλῶσσαν οὐδεὶς δύναται άνθρώπων δαμάσαι άκατάστατον κακὸν, μεστὴ ἰοῦ θανατηφόρου. αὐτῆ εὐλογοῦμεν τὸν Θεὸν καὶ Πατέρα, καὶ ἐν αὐτῆ καταρώμεθα τοὺς ἀνθρώ-

This description, mutatis mutandis, displays a lively picture of the incendiary ravages produced in human society by the

 δ κόσμος της ἀδικίας] that world of iniquity, that universe of mischief, as containing within it the elements of all mischief; as the World contains within itself mineral combustibles, and volcanic fires, and electric fluid, which may blaze forth into a

After àδικίαs Elz. has ουτως, thus: and this is sanctioned by the Syriac and Arabic Versions and by some Cursives; but it is not in A, B, C, K, and is rejected by Lach., Tisch., and Alford.

The sense is as follows :-

- ή γλώσσα καθίσταται] the tongue makes itself in our members (acting in them as in an intestine war) the polluter of the whole body. The Apostle is reprobating, with holy indignation, the sin of those who abuse the tongue, "the best member that they have" (Ps. cviii. 1), and make it to be the worst, so as even to defile all a "Corruptio optimi fit pessima."

The word καθίσταται (as Huther observes) is used here as in iv. 4,  $\epsilon_{\chi}\theta\rho\delta$ s  $\tau\sigma\tilde{\nu}$   $\Theta\epsilon\sigma\tilde{\nu}$  καθίσταται, makes himself an enemy of God. So the Tongue, by acting in the members, makes itself to be the defiler of the whole body. And this confusion takes place  $\ell\nu$   $\tau\sigma is$   $\mu\ell\lambda\epsilon\sigma\nu$   $\mu\ell\lambda\epsilon\sigma\nu$   $\mu\ell\lambda\epsilon\sigma\nu$ , which, as their name  $(\mu\ell\lambda\sigma)$  intimates, ought to move in harmonious melody and concert with each other; and so glorify their Maker. But the Tongue mars their music by its discord. It is even like an intestine Volcano: and sends forth a dark stream of lava, and a murky cloud of smoke, and a shower of ashes, and is thus a cause of pollution, sullying and staining, as with foul blots (σπιλοῦσα), the beauty of all around it; and also, like a Volcano, it emits a flood of fire. See next φλογίζουσα τὸν τροχὸν τῆς γενέσεως] setting on fire the wheel of nature. On the accent of τροχὸς see Winer, p. 51.

The τροχὸς γενέσεως is the wheel of nature, the orbis terrarum, the world itself, in its various revolutions; in which one generation follows another, and one season succeeds another; and so τροχδς γενέσεως is used by Simplicius in Epictet. p. 94, and other like expressions in authors quoted here by Wetstein,

p. 670. Cp. πρόσωπον γενέσεως, i. 22.

In a secondary sense, this τροχδς γενέσεως is the wheel of human nature, of human life, of human society, which is compared to a wheel by Solomon (Eccl. xii. 6); and so Greg. Nazianz. (in Sentent. ap. A Lapide), and Silius Ital. iii. 6, "rota volvitur avi," and Boethius (de Consol. ii. pr. 1), "hac nostra vita est; rotam volubili orbe versamus." This wheel is ever rolling round, ever turning apace, whirling about, never continuing in one stay, seeking rest and finding none. So these words of the Apostle are expounded by Ecumen., Bede, and Bishop Andrewes, i. 361; ii. 294. 319.

The functions of a wheel, set on fire by the internal friction of its own axis, are deranged; and so the organization of human Society is disturbed and destroyed by the intestine fire of the human Tongue; a fire which diffuses itself from the centre, and radiates forth to the circumference by all the spokes of slander and detraction, and involves the social framework in combustion and conflagration.

This inner fire consumes every thing, and is itself kindled from hell—the lake of fire. And its punishment is accordingly. "What reward shall be given unto thee, O thou false tongue? Sharp arrows of the mighty, with hot burning coals" (coals of rethem. Ps. cxx. 2).

The Rich Man in torment desires that "Lazarus may dip his finger in water and cool his tongue;" for he is tormented in a flame (Luke xvi. 24); and St. James says that the tongue is set on fire of hell. At the tables of the rich, men are often tempted to sins of the tongue, and tongues there set on fire of hell, may bereafter be scorched, and have no water to cool them.

By the faculty of speech man is distinguished from the rest of creation: by it his thoughts are borne, as upon eagles' wings, to the remotest shores, and are carried to distant ages; by it they are endued with the attributes of omnipresence and immortality by it men are reclaimed from savage ignorance; cities are built and peopled, laws promulgated, alliances formed, leagues made by it men are excited to deeds of heroic valour, and to prefer eternity to time, and the good of their country to their own; through it the affairs of the world are transacted; it negotiates the traffic of commerce, and exchanges the produce of one soil and climate for that of another; it pleads the cause of the innocent, and checks the course of the oppressor; it gives vent to the tenderest emotions; it cheers the dreariness of life. By it virtuous deeds of men are proclaimed to the world with a trumpet's voice; by it the memory of the dead is kept alive in families. It is the teacher of arts and sciences, the interpreter of poetic visions, and of subtle theories of philosophy; it is the rudder and helm by which the state of the world is steered; it is the instrument by which the Gospel of Christ is preached to all nations, and the Scriptures sound in the ears of the Church, and the world unites in prayer and praise to the Giver of all good, and the chorus of Saints and Angels pours forth hallelujahs before

Such being the prerogatives of speech, it is a heinous sin to pervert the heavenly faculty, to insult the name of the Giver Himself, or to injure man, made in the image of God. The true Christian will put away profane and impure language, calumny, and slander, injurious to God's honour, the welfare of society, and his own eternal salvation. He will abhor it worse than a pestilence; and will pray to Him from whom are the preparations of the heart, and who maketh the dumb and the deaf, the seeing and the blind, who quickened the slow speech of His servant Moses, and put words of fire into his mouth, and whose Spirit on the Day of Pentecost descended in tongues of fire on the Apostles, and filled them with holy eloquence, so to direct his thoughts and words, that both now and hereafter they may ever sing His praise.

7. πασα φύσις - δαμάζεται καλ δεδάμασται Every nature of wild beasts, &c., is being tamed, and hath been tamed, by the nature of man; the work of taming is being repeated often, and has been completed successfully. Cp. Sophocles, Antig. 332—350.

On the dative of the agent, τη φύσει τη ανθρωπίνη, sec Winer, p. 196. Cp. below, v. 18, σπείρεται τοῖς ποιούσιν εἰρήνην.

Observe the contrast between the φύσις of beasts and the φύσις of man. The one is made subordinate to the other by

God. (Gen. i. 26. 28.)

8, την δε γλώσσαν οὐδεις δύναται ανθρώπων δαμάσαι] but the tongue can no man tame. No one among men can tame his own tongue; to do this work we require the grace of God (Augustine and Catena, p. 22); but St. James does not therefore excuse those who do not tame their tongues, for he says, "these things ought not so to be" (v. 10).

Or the sense may be; Men can tame savage animals, but no one can tame the tongue of the slanderer, liar, and blasphemer; it is more furious than the wild beasts; they may be subdued and pacified, but not it; it is an evil which cannot be controlled (Petr. Damian. Epist. ii. 18), being full of deadly poison. The slanderer and liar "have sharpened their tongues like a serpent; adders' poison is under their lips." (Ps. cxl. 3.) Such was the tongue of Doeg the Edomite, of which the Psalmist speaks in that Psalm and in Ps. cxx. Cp. 1 Sam. xxii. 9-19.

This interpretation (as Estius has observed) seems to offer the best solution of the Pelagian objections examined by Augustine, De Nat. et Grat. c. 15.

Both the above interpretations are specified by ancient Expositors, e.g. Bede, p. 184.

- ἀκατάστατον] not to be quieted, or composed. So A, N, and

B, and Lach., Tisch., Alf. Elz. has ἀκατάσχετον, uncontrollable.

9. ἐν αὐτῆ] The whole course of nature is contravened and disturbed by sins of the Tongue. With the tongue we bless our Lord and Father: and this is the proper office of the Tongue, to praise God; and with it we curse men who have been made after the image of God. This unnatural inconsistency is censured Ps. 1. 16-20, "What hast thou to do to declare My statutes; whereas thou givest thy mouth to evil; thou sittest and speakest against thy brother? Whoso offereth Me praise, he glorifieth Me; and to him that ordereth his conversation right will I show the salvation of God." Thus the Psalmist offers the clue to the connexion of the reasoning of St. James here, and in what follows (v. 13), "Let him show from his good conversation (i. e. behaviour) his works with meekness of wisdom."

From this sentence it is clear, that though the image of God in man was marred by the Fall, it was not destroyed. See also Gen. ix. 6, where murder is forbidden after the flood, on the ground that man was made in the image of God. And the divine image, defaced in Adam, has been restored in Christ. (Col. iii.

10. Eph. iv. 24.)

Man's intellectual nature presents an image of God; and from a consideration of that image, as seen in man, we may derive some clear and cogent evidences of the Being and Attributes of God,—a proposition excellently proved in Dr. Barrow's Serm. vii. on Gen. i. 27, vol. iv. p. 163.

11.  $\partial \pi \hat{\eta} s$  The  $\partial \pi \hat{\eta}$  of a fountain is its eye, and the word itself is connected with δψ, ὅπτομαι, to see, and so the word Ænon (the place of springs) is derived from the Hebrew pr (ayin), an eye. (John iii. 33.)

12. οὕτε άλυκὸν γλυκύ] nor can water that is salt produce what is sweet. So A, B, C, and Lach., Tisch., Alf.—Elz. has ούτως οὐδεμία πηγή άλυκον και γλυκύ.

13-15. τίς σοφός και ἐπιστήμων ἐν ὑμῖν] who is wise and knowing among you? Many among you lay claim to wisdom and knowledge; let such prove the justice of their claim by their good conversation in meckness of wisdom; for where meekness is spirit (see on Gal. v. 20; cp. 2 Cor. xii. 20. Rom. ii. 8, and on Phil. i. 17) in your heart (whatever pretence there may be to knowledge in the intellect), boast ye not, and lie not against the truth, which is the only genuine end and object of wisdom. This is not the wisdom that is coming down from above (see i. 17), but is earthly, carnal, devilish; it is earthly and allures the eye; it is carnal, not spiritual (see 1 Cor. ii. 14. Jude 19), and stimulates the lust of the flesh; and it is devilish, and ministers to pride. See the threefold division 1 John ii. 16.

On the difference between ἐπιστήμη, knowledge, natural or acquired, of facts, and σοφία, the higher faculty of using knowledge in wise and virtuous practice, see Acts xix. 15; below, iv.

14. Eph. i. 8. Col. i. 9.

16. δπου γὰρ (γῆλος] for where envy and party-spirit is, there is perturbation, disorder, disorganization, disruption of all that is constituted and settled in society, ecclesiastical and civil. See 1 Cor. xiv. 33. 2 Cor. xii. 20. Phil. ii. 3. Strife and party-spirit would destroy Sion, and can build up nothing but Babel. Cp. Bp. Sanderson, i. pp. 214. 350, and see Clemens R. i. capp.

17. ἡ δὲ ἀνωθεν σοφία] but the wisdom that is from above, is first pure ('sancta,' holy, free from taint, and hallowed to God), then peaceable, equitable (see on 1 Tim. iii. 3), compliant (Xenophon, Mem. iii. 4. 8), full of mercy and good fruits, not partial, not censorious, not taking upon itself the office of judging (Matt. vii. 1); and perhaps the meaning may also be, not contentious, not disputatious (see on ii. 4). And it is not hypocritical: neither making any pretensions to what it is not, nor disguising what it is; without semblance and without dissimulation. Being ἀδιάκριτος, it does not spy out motes in a brother's eye, and being ἀνυπόκριτος, it does not hide the beam in its own. Cp. Luke vi. 42, where partiality and hypocrisy are coupled together.

On the active sense of such adjectives as αδιάκριτος see

18. καρπὸς δικαιοσύνης] the fruit of righteousness is sown by them who make peace. The fruit of righteousness; the genitive of apposition, as κόκκος σινάπεως, σίτου (Matt. xiii. 31. John xii. 24. 1 Cor. xv. 37), and καρπός δικαιοσύνης, Phil. i. 11, and Heb. xii. 11, a chapter in which St. Paul appears to be inculcating the lessons taught in this Epistle by St. James. Cp. above, on ii. 25. This fruit is sown by them who make peace. The fruit is, as it were, contained in the seed; and they who sow the seed enjoy the fruit. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." (Gal. vi. 7.) The dative is the dative of the agent, as in v. 7. Compare the beatitude in Matt. v. 9. This beautiful picture of true Wisdom may be placed side by side with that of Charity portrayed by St. Paul (1 Cor. xiii.).

CH. IV. 1.  $\pi \theta \theta \epsilon \nu \pi \delta \lambda \epsilon \mu \omega 1$ ] whence are wars and whence are fightings among you? Whence are wars? from lusts, warring in you; warring against the soul (1 Pet. ii. 11). He refers to the feuds and factions, prevalent among the Jews and Jewish proselytes at that time; and a main cause of the Fall of Jerusalem. See above, note on Matt. xxiv. 15, and the authorities from Josephus there quoted. This passage seems to be imitated by S. Clement, Rom. i. 46, ໃνα τί έρεις . . . πόλεμός τε έν υμίν.

2. φονεύετε] ye commit murder: which was specially true of those bands of λησταl, sicarii, robbers and assassins, who, under the name of zealots, infested Jewish society at this time, and at last made the Temple itself a den of assassins. See Matt. xxi. 13. Evidences of the blood-thirsty spirit of rage, which now like a fiend possessed the heart of large numbers of the people, may be seen in the murderous plots and violent and frequent outbreaks at this period, mentioned in Josephus (cp. Whitby here) and in the Gospels and Acts, such as that of Barabbas (Matt. xxvii. 16. John xviii. 40), and of Judas of Galilee, and Theudas (Acts v. 36, where see the notes), and the Egyptian (Acts xxi. 38), and the conspiracy against St. Paul (Acts xxiii. 12—14). There may also be a reference here to the cry of the multitude assembled from all parts of the Jewish dispersions at the Passover, "Crucify Him" (Mark xv. 13, 14). See below, v. 6, ἐφονεύσατε τὸν δίκαιον.

The writer himself of this Epistle, St. James, fell a victim to this murdarous spirit.

Ine writer himself of this Epistle, St. James, left a victim to this murderous spirit. See below, v. 6.

It is observed by Dr. Hammond, that the Epistle of St. James, the Bishop of Jerusalem, and especially the latter part of it, was designed for the use of Jews as well as of Christians. St. James was revered by the Jews (as appears from the passage of Hegesippus in Euseb. ii. 23); his censures of sins, and his warnings of coming calamities were specially applicable to them; and after his death, when his prophetic denunciations had been fulfilled in the destruction of Jerusalem, his words would be carefully noted, and a fresh argument would thence arise in behalf of the cause of the Gospel which he preached.

4. μοιχαλίδες] Ye adulteresses. A bold figure, used with vehement indignation, characteristic of this Epistle, in which St. yelement indignation, characteristic of this Epistle, in which St. James speaks in the δεινότης and stern language of a Hebrew Prophet in denouncing sin. Ye were espoused to God: "Thy Maker is thy husband" (Isa. liv. 5), but where is the love of thine espousals? (Jer. ii. 2.) Ye are as a wife that committeth adultery (Ezek. xvi. 32). Ye are an adulterous generation (γενεὰ μοιχαλίs) (Matt. xii. 39; xvi. 4. Mark viii. 38).

Some MSS., K, L, and many Cursives, have μοιχοί και μοιχαλίδεs, and so Elz. But the feminine μοιχαλίδεs placed alone (which is the reading of A, B, and X, and is received by Lach., (which is the reading of A, B, and K, and is received by Lach., Tisch., Alf.), is more expressive, as describing the conjugal relation of the soul to God: cp. St. Paul's language 2 Cor. xi. 2, I have espoused you as a chaste Virgin to Christ; and the feminine does not present a bolder figure here than in the passage of St. Peter, δφθαλμοὺς ἔχουτες μεστοὺς μοιχαλίδος (2 Pet. ii. 14), which affords the best illustration of this text.

Accordingly, the words are expounded in a spiritual sense by Augustine, Serm. 15, and Serm. 162, and are applied to souls lured by earthly love from loyalty and fealty to God, which are guilty of spiritual harlotry and adultery; see Matt. xii. 39, and Ps. lxxiii. 26, Thou hast destroyed all them that commit fornication against Thee. Cp. Rev. ii. 20—22; xvii. 1.5.15; and so Theophylact and Bede.

The censure of St. James is also to be applied to Communities which break their troth to God. Cp. Wiesinger and Huther. 4-9.] Observe in these verses, the rapid succession of questions, and of short pungent sentences, like arrows drawn forth from a quiver, and discharged in a thick volley from the bow, by the hand of the spiritual archer.

After the vehement and indignant emission of this sacred artillery against the enemies of the truth, the Apostle changes his tone, and in calm and gentle accents, made more touching by the contrast, he exhorts and encourages the faithful. Compare the contrast, he exhorts and encourages the faithful. Compare the similar strain in v. 1-6, 7-19, with which he concludes.

- οὐκ οἴδατε] Know ye not? Ye who profess knowledge, and rely on that. See ii. 20; iv. 17; v. 20.

5. ἡ δοκεῖτε] Do ye imagine that the Scripture speaketh in vain? Ye boast that ye have the Scripture committed to you. That is your highest privilege (see Rom. iii. 2). Do ye imagine that the words of the Scripture are mere idle illusions? Hath God spoken, and shall He not do it? (Numb. xxiii. 19. 1 Sam. xv. 29.) He has said that ye shall not follow after other gods, but serve the Lord only. (Dout. x. 20. I Sam. vii. 3.) He has condemned the love of this world; He has said that "ye cannot serve two masters, God and Mammon." He has said that "the love of the world is enmity with God;" and He has declared that "all his enemies shall feel His hand, and be made His foot-stool." Do ye suppose that such declarations as these, uttered by God Himself in Holy Scripture (see Ps. lxxiii. 27. Matt. vi. 24. Ps. xxi. 8; xcii. 9), are mere empty sounds, uttered in vain? This cannot be.

For examples of λέγω, to speak, without any special recital of the words spoken, see Rom. iii. 5; xi. 13. 1 Cor. x. 15; xv.

2 Cor. vi. 13; vii. 3; viii. 8; xi. 21.

This is the first question. Next follows a second; - πρὸς φθόνον ἐπιποθεῖ] Doth the Spirit, which took up His abode in you, lust to envy? Ye have been made Temples of the Holy Ghost. Ye are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit (1 Cor. iii. 16; vi. 19. 2 Cor. vi. 16). Doth that good Spirit, with "which ye were sealed unto the day of redemption" (Eph. iv. 30), yearn toward envy? No: surely the Spirit of God is a loving, peaceable Spirit: it longs for the good of others, it teaches you to seek their benefit, and to edify them in love (1 Cor. x. 24. 33; xiii. 5. Phil. ii. 4), and to lay down your lives for the brethren (1 John iii. 16). Ye say, that ye have the Spirit. Prove the truth of your vauntings by bringing forth the fruits of rrove the truth of your vauntings by bringing forth the Jruits of the Spirit, "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, goodness, gentleness" (Gal. v. 22). Or if the Spirit that took up his abode in you, does lust unto envy, then be assured it is not the Spirit of God; but it is the spirit of the Devil who "was a murderer from the beginning" (John viii. 44. 1 John iii. 15).

Some MSS. (A, B) have κατψκισεν; but κατψκησεν seems to be preferable, with the sense came and took up his abode in your. See Enh iii 17

The punctuation of these two clauses, as two distinct questions of the punctuation of these two clauses, as two distinct questions. tions, removes all the difficulty, which some have found in this verse; and such a punctuation had already been suggested by earlier interpreters, e. g. But if the graces of the Spirit, which are peaceable, amiable, and gentle, are not seen in your actions, and if on the contrary ye bring forth the works of the flesh, which are adultery, hatred, variance, wrath, strife, envyings (Gal. v. 19—21), then ye convict yourselves of not having the Spirit, and prove that all your professions are

8. δίψυχοι] ye double-minded; ye two-minded men. The word is here used in a larger sense than above, i. 8. A man with two minds is one who prays to God, and yet has a secret yearning for some darling sin, which he will not leave; and therefore has an inward sense that his prayers are vain, and does not pray with faith. A man with two minds is one who desires to rejoice with the world now, and to reign hereafter with God. A man with two minds is one, who in doing good to men looks not to the glory of God, but to the praise of the world. This text is important as a caution against the sin of those who usurp the prerogative of God, and assume a dominion over the Conscience.

This is done by many in the following ways,
(1) by enacting laws as of force to bind the Conscience by their own proper vigour;

(2) by dispensing with any of the Divine Laws;

(3) by enacting any thing contrary to the Law of Him Who is the Supreme Legislator, and Who alone has power to kill and to destroy.

This divine declaration is therefore condemnatory-

(1) Of sundry assumptions of the Papacy. See Matt. xv. 9. 2 Thess. ii. 2. 1 Tim. iv. 3. Rev. xiii. 5.

(2) Of all enactments of civil powers, contravening the Law of God. See Matt. v. 32.

(3) Of all theories of policy and government which represent human societies of men as sources of power. Such theories contradict the affirmation of St. James, and disparage the Supremacy of God, and encourage usurpations of His prerogatives.

Human laws, which are not contrary to God's Law, and which are enacted by competent lawful authority, do not oblige the conscience by any thing inherent in themselves, but they oblige the conscience by reason of the power which lawful authority derives from God, "the only Legislator who is able to save and to destroy." See above on Rom. xiii. 1-3; and the Lecture of Bp. Sanderson on this text, de Consc. Prælect. iv., vol. iv. § 9, p. 65; and Præl. v. § 23, p. 109.

The words of St. James (he says) assert, that there is but one Lawgiver—not one selected out of many, nor one above all the rest, but one exclusively; that is, one, and but one alone, who is able to save and destroy.

What was usually applied to the prerogatives of Kings, may be justly said of the Conscience of every man, that it is subject to none but God, and knows no superior upon earth. Memorable is the observation of the Emperor Maximilian, To offer to domineer over the conscience, is to assault the citadel of Heaven. That man is a plunderer of the Divine glory, and an invader of the authority that belongs to God, whosoever he be, that claims a Right over the consciences of men, or usurps upon them. Let the Popes of Rome, and the train of Canonists, Jesuits, and Sycophants, that flatter and fawn upon them, clear themselves, if they can, of this sacrilege; and let such as submit their Consciences to the power of any creature, which only ought to be subject to God, be careful lest by transferring the honour of that service that belongs to God, to any creature upon earth, they make a God of that creature, and so, in effect, become guilty of idolatry.

From this first conclusion thus proved, follows this remarkable inference, that the proper rule of the Conscience is that which God, the Supreme Lawgiver, hath prescribed to it; and besides that, there is no other that ought to be admitted.

Yet this hinders not, that there may be other Lawgivers of an inferior order, who by authority derived to them from the Supreme Power, may have a just right to make laws, and consequently to bind the Conscience to obedience. We do not say that God has committed to the Magistrate a power to oblige the Consciences of his people by Laws, but rather (to speak with more care and propriety) that God has given to the Magis-trate a jurisdiction to make Laws, which by virtue alone of the Divine authority, do oblige the Consciences of the subject; for properly speaking, the Magistrate does not oblige the Conscience to obey the Law, but God obliges the Conscience to obey the Magistrate. Bp. Sanderson.

14. ἀτμις γάρ ἐστε] for ye are a vapour. Elz. has ἐστι, it is (i. e. your life is) a vapour: but the reading eare, ye are, authorized by many MSS., and received by Lach., Tisch., Huther, is more expressive. Not only your life, but ye yourselves are a vapour. Cp. i. 10. B has  $\epsilon\sigma \epsilon$ ; and A, K have  $\epsilon\sigma \tau a$ , which is probably the same reading as ἐστε (αι and ε being often confused in MSS.), and either ἐστε or ἔσται are in numerous MSS. and some Versions. 17. είδότι οὖν] to him therefore who knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, there is sin.

This conclusion of St. James is added as the summing-up of the argument, in the same manner as the aphorism with which St. Paul closes his reasonings concerning a doubting conscience, where he says, "Whatsoever is not of faith, is sin;" that is, whenever a man does any thing without being persuaded in his mind that he may lawfully do it, he is guilty of sin. Rom. xiv. 23.

St. James appears to have his eye here on this statement of St. James adds to it another maxim of general import, viz. that whensoever a man omits to do any thing which he is persnaded in his own mind that he ought to do, he is guilty of sin.

Thus these two Apostolic verdicts, delivered in a similar manner, constitute two fundamental rules of human action, as to what men are bound to forbear doing, and as to what they are bound to do.

Those persons whom St. Paul addressed, were tempted to do many things, which they did not, in their consciences, approve; and the Apostle warns them, that if they do any thing against their conscience, they commit sin.

They to whom St. James wrote, were vainglorious of their religious knowledge; but they were not careful to show forth their religious knowledge by religious practice; and the Apostle teaches them that their knowledge will only increase their guilt, unless they do what they know to be right.

Hence, while it is a sin to shun knowledge, and there is some sin of ignorance (cp. Augustine, vi. 661), and it is a sin to shut the cars to instruction; and it is a duty to get knowledge, to increase in knowledge, to abound in knowledge, we must beware not to rest in knowledge. We must add to our knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, charity. Without these knowledge is unprofitable; nay, will only increase our condemnation. See Bp. Sanderson, iii. p. 232—4. Cp. Luke xii. 47. John ix. 41; xv. 22; and see the woes pronounced on Chorazin and Capernaum, Matt. xi. 21.

of the Epistle is not to be restricted to them; see v. 6. St. James, like a Christian Jeremiah, is uttering a divine prophecy, of the woes that are coming on Jerusalem and on the Jews through-

2. δ πλοῦτος ὑμῶν] your wealth is mouldering in corruption, and your garments (stored up in vain superfluity in your wardrobes) are become moth-eaten. Although they may still glitter brightly in your eyes, and may dazzle men by their brilliance when ye walk the streets, or sit in the high places of this world; yet they are in fact already cankered. (Observe the perfect tenses here.) God has breathed upon them and blighted them; they are already withered and blasted, as being doomed to speedy destruction: for ye lived delicately on the earth (see v. 5), and have not laid up treasure in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt (Matt. vi. 20).

- δ χρυσός] your gold and your silver are eaten up with rust. The sentence is figurative, and is shown to be such by this expression. Literally gold does not contract rust (see Theognis, 451. Pliny, N. H. xxxiii. 19, and other authorities in Wetstein, p. 678): but those precious metals, which naturally are incapable of rust, do, by being abused, or not rightly used, morally and spiritually contract rust; and not only so, but are, as St. James says, eaten up with rust. Even while shining in your coffers, they are, in God's eye, sullied and corroded, and they will not profit you in the day of trial, but be consumed by His indignation; and the rust they have contracted by lying idle as κτήματα, and not having been used as χρήματα, will be a witness against you at the Great Day; and will pass from you by a plague-like contagion, and devour your flesh as fire.

3, 4. ἐθησαυρίσατε ] ye laid up treasure in the last days. Ye did this when the Judge was at hand to consume it and you.

Such is the divine language of prophecy. The Holy Spirit, speaking by St. James, utters a voice as it were from the Divine Throne and from the Day of Judgment.

The judicial sentence is pronounced, and is as good as executed, in the eye of God. A sublime and awful picture. God is seated on His throne. The wages of the poor, defrauded by their proud and wealthy oppressor, have cried aloud, and their cries have entered into the ears of God, styled here by His awful and majestic title in authentic Hebrew words, to make it more striking to the Jews,—The Lord of Sabaoth; the Lord of Hosts of Angels, with which He cometh to execute judgment.

St. James here takes up the prophetic warnings of Malachi (iii. 5), where God declares that He will "come near to them to judgment, and that He will be a swift witness against the adulterers and false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages"  $(\tau \circ v) \circ \lambda \pi \circ \sigma \tau \in \rho \circ \hat{v} \tau \sigma \circ \mu \iota \sigma \theta \delta \nu \mu \iota \sigma \theta \omega \tau \circ \hat{v}$ cp. Ecclus. xxxiii. 27), the widow and the fatherless (see above, i. 27), and "that fear not Me, saith The Lord of Hosts." "For I am the Lord, I change not" (see above, i. 17). And now we call the proud happy! (Mal. iii. 15.)

On this use of ἀπὸ, on your part, by you, after the passive verb ἀπεστερημένος, see above, i. 13, ἀπὸ Θεοῦ πειράζομαι, Winer,

p. 332, note, and above on Luke vi. 18. Some expositors connect which it is detained; but this seems to be a forced interpretation, and not authorized by any Ancient Version.

5. ἐτρυφήσατε ἐπὶ τῆs γῆs] ye revelled upon carth. Ye nave not had your treasure in heaven. Ye have not found delight in spiritual things, such as God's sabbaths (Isa. lviii. 13), and in the pleasures of His house (Ps. cxxii. 1; lxv. 4), and in doing His statutes (Ps. cxix. 72. 97), but in what is earthly and perishable: ye have had your good things in this life, and therefore ye will suffer loss and torment in the life to come. Luke xvi. 25.

ἐσπαταλήσατε] instead of devoting your worldly wealthwhich was God's gift-to God's service, ye lavished it in luxury and riot, and indulgence on yourselves.

On the word  $\sigma\pi\alpha\tau\alpha\lambda\hat{\omega}$ , from  $\sigma\pi\acute{a}\omega$ , distraho,  $\sigma\pi\alpha\theta\hat{\omega}$ , dissipo, cp. 1 Tim. v. 6. Prov. xxix. 21. Amos vi. 4, and Wetstein, ii. p. 340.

- ἐν ἡμέρᾳ σφαγῆς] in a day of slaughter. A striking contrast. Ye feasted jovially as in a day of sacrifice, when abundance of flesh of the sacrificed animals is on the table at the sacrificial Ye ought to have offered yourselves a reasonable sacrifice to God (Rom. xii. 1), but ye sought not His glory, but your own gratification; Ye ought to have ruled the people gently and mildly; but ye "have fed yourselves and not the flock," ye nou-rished your own hearts and not those of your people; ye have sacrificed and devoured them like sheep or calves of the stall fatted for the pampering of your own appetites. Cp. Ezek. xxxiv. 1-10. Cyril, in Caten. p. 33.

Therefore your sacrifices are offensive to God; and ye yourselves are like victims appointed to be sacrificed in the day of the Lord's vengeance, which is often compared by Hebrew prophets to a sacrifice; see below on Rev. xix. 17. And see above on Isaiah xxxiv. 6; and on Jer. xlvi. 10; and on Zeph. i. 7.

This was signally verified by the event. The Jews from all parts of the world came together to the sacrifice of the Passover, A.D. 70, and they themselves were then slain as victims to God's offended justice, especially in the Temple. See above on Matt. xxiv. 1. 15; and particularly the rich among them, as recorded by Josephus in B. J. vi. passim. Their wealth excited the cupidity and provoked the fury of the factious zealots against them, and they fell victims in a day of slaughter to their own love of mammon; what was left of their substance was consumed by the flames which burnt the city. Josephus vii. 29. 32. 37.

Elz. inserts  $\omega s$ , as, before  $\partial v \hat{\eta} \mu \delta \rho \alpha$ , but  $\omega s$  is not in A, B, and is rejected by Lach., Tisch., Alf.

6. κατεδικάσατε] ye condemned, ye murdered the Just One; Christ (Cassiodor., Œcumen., Bede, Bengel): this was your crowning sin, the cause of your coming woe: and after many years of long-suffering on God's part, ye have not been brought to repentance; "ye denied the Holy One and the Just, and killed the Prince of Life." (Acts iii. 14, 15.) Ye have also slain His faithful witness St. Stephen (Acts vii. 59), and St. James the brother of John (Acts xii. 2), and thus ye prove yourselves the children of your fathers who slew the prophets, who "preannounced to you the coming of the Just One (τοῦ Δικαΐου) of whom ye became the betrayers and murderers" (φονεῖs, Acts vii. 52), as was said to the Jewish Sanhedrim by the first Martyr, St. Stephen, in the speech which seems to have been in the mind of St. James when he wrote these words.

It has been alleged by way of objection to this interpretation, that the Jews of the age in which this Epistle was written, could not be charged with having condemned and killed Christ, who had been crucified about thirty years before. But this objection is of little weight. Our Lord asserts that they who persecuted Him had even killed Zacharias the son of Barachias, slain many centuries before (Matt. xxiii. 35).

Those words, like many other sayings of Christ, especially these recorded in the Gospel of St. Matthew, seem to have been in the mind of St. James when be wrote this Epistle. The just blood of the just Abel, and of all the other just men slain from the beginning, were drops in their cup of guilt, which overflowed at the shedding of the blood of the JUST ONE, typified by Abel, and by all the Martyrs to the days of Zacharias; see the note on that passage; ὅπως ἔλθη ἐφ' ὑμᾶς πᾶν αΐμα δίκαιον ἀπὸ τοῦ αίματος 'Αβέλ τοῦ δικαίου, εως τοῦ αίματος Ζαχαρίου νίοῦ Βαραχίου δν έφονεύσατε, whom ye slew. By clinging to the sins of their fathers the Jews indentified themselves with them; they committed the sews intentified themselves with them; they committed their sins. They who persecuted the Christians after the Ascension persecuted Christ (Acts ix. 4, 5). Hence Justin Martyr, writing a century after St. James, says to the Jews, "Ye killed the Just One and His prophets before Him." Dialog. c.

Observe the eloquent vehemence (δεινότης) of this grand appeal, made more forcible by the omission of all connecting particles; an example of asyndeton well deserving the notice of any Christian Longinus, who may write a treatise "on the sub-lime" (περl ὕψους), as displayed in Holy Writ, Ye nourished your hearts in a day of sacrifice; ye condemned, ye murdered the JUST ONE; He doth not resist you. Cp. above, vv. 4—9. He doth not resist you. His long-suffering is exhausted, He no longer strives with you. He lets you alone (Hos. iv. 17). This is the worst punishment of all; He leaves you to yourselves. Your house (no longer His house) is left to you desolate (Matt. xxiii. 38). He chooses your delusions (Isa. lxvi. 4), and chastises you by your own devices (Jer. ii. 19), and gives you over to a reprobate mind (Rom. i. 28), and your cup of guilt and punishment has now brimmed over, and all the righteous blood shed by your fathers will be required of this generation (Luke xi. 50, 51). A warning and prophecy rendered more striking by the fact that he who uttered it was called by the Jews "James the Just," and was murdered by them at Jerusalem at a time of sacrifice, as a victim at the Passover (as his Master was before him), when great multitudes came up to Jerusalem (A.D. 62).

Eight years after that murder, and also at a Passover,

Jerusalem itself was destroyed. Hegesippus, ap. Euseb. ii. 23. Cp. Euseb. iii. 7, where he speaks of God's long-suffering toward the Jews for forty years after the death of Christ, and of His mercy to the Jews in allowing holy men to remain at Jerusalem, especially James, the first bishop of Jerusalem, the Lord's brother, who was to the city like a very strong bulwark (ερκος έχυρώτατον. Cp. his name Oblias, see above, Introduction, p. 5), while God's providence was still bearing long (μακροθυμούσης) with them if haply they would repent. By killing St. James they stripped themselves of that strong defence, and provoked the overflowing of God's wrath upon them.

The words of Eusebius (ii. 23), quoting the narrative of Hegesippus, concerning the death of St. James, deserve to be cited at large; they are thus rendered by Lardner, History of the Apostles (ch. xvi. vol. iii. p. 36), "When Paul had appealed to Cuesar, and Festus had sent him to Rome, the Jews being disappointed in their design against him, turned their rage against James, the Lord's brother, to whom the Apostles had assigned the episcopal chair of Jerusalem. And in this manner they proceeded against him. Having laid hold of him, they required him in the presence of all the people to renounce his faith in Christ. But he with freedom and boldness beyond expectation, before all the multitude, declared our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ to be the Son of God. They not enduring the testimony of a man, who was in high esteem for his piety, laid hold of the opportunity when the Country was without a Governor, to put him to death. For Festus having died about that time in Judea, the province had in it no Procurator. The manner of the death of James was shown before in the words of Clement, who said that he was thrown off from the pediment of the temple (see on Matt. iv. 5. Luke iv. 9), and then beat to death with a club. But no one has so accurately related this transaction as Hegesippus, a man in the first age after the Apostles, in the fifth book of his commentaries, whose words are to this purpose,-James the brother of our Lord, undertook together with the Apostles the government of the Church. He has been called the Just by all from the time of our Saviour to ours. Some of the seven sects, which there were among the Jews, asked him, Which is the Door of Jesus: or, What is the Door of salvation? And he said: Jesus is the Saviour, or the way of salvation. Some of them therefore believed that Jesus is the Christ. . . . And when many of the chief men also believed, there was a disturbance among the Jews and among the Scribes and Pharisees, who said that there was danger, lest all the people should think Jesus to be the Christ. They came therefore to James and said: We beseech thee, restrain the errour of the people. We entreat thee to persuade all that come hither at the time of Passover to think rightly concerning Jesus. For all the people, and all of us put confidence in thee. .... Stand therefore upon the pediment of the temple, in order that, being placed on high, thou mayest be conspicuous, and thy words may be easily heard by all the people. For because of the Passover, all the tribes are come hither and many Gentiles. Therefore the Scribes and Pharisees before named placed James upon the pediment of the temple, and cried out to him, and said: O just man, whom we ought all to believe, since the people are in an errour following Jesus who was crucified, tell us what is the door of Jesus? And he answered with a loud voice: Why do you ask me concerning the Son of Man? He Himself sitteth in heaven at the right hand of the great power, and will come upon the clouds of heaven. And many were fully satisfied, and praised God for the testimony of James, saying, Hosanna to the Son of David. But the Scribes and Pharisees said to one another: We have done wrong in procuring such a testimony to Jesus. us go up and throw him down, that the people being terrified may not give credit to him. . . . . They went up presently and cast him down, and said, Let us stone James the Just. And they began to stone him, because he was not killed with the fall. But he turning himself kneeled down, saying: I entreat thee, O Lord God the Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do. As they were stoning him one said, Cease, What do ye? the just man prayeth for you. And one of them, a fuller, took a club with which he was used to beat clothes, and struck him on the head. Thus he suffered martyrdom. And they buried him in that place, and his monument still remains near the temple. This James was a true witness to Jews and Gentiles that Jesus is the Christ. Soon after this Judea was invaded by Vespasian." So writes Hegesippus at large, says Eusebius, agreeably to Clement. James was so excellent a man, and so much esteemed by many for his virtue: that thoughtful men among the Jews were of opinion, that his death was the cause of the siege of Jerusalem which followed soon after his martyrdom. These are the things which are related of James, whose is the first of the epistles called catholic. (Eusebius, ii. 23.)

The narrative in Josephus (xx. 9. 1) contains several things at variance with this account, but it may admit of a doubt whether the words τον ἀδελφὸν Ἰησοῦ τοῦ λεγομένου Χριστοῦ, Ἰάκωβος δνομα αὐτοῦ are not interpolated. Cp. Lardner, c, xvi. They are enclosed in brackets in Richter's edition, Lips. 1826.

7. μακροθυμήσατε οὖν, ἀδελφοί] be ye patient, therefore, brethren. Remember what the Lord suffered, and how He was made perfect through suffering; and that He will soon come to

St. James here turns himself from the Jews to the Christians; and preaches to them patience: an exhortation requisite in their circumstances; compare the similar language of St. Paul, Heb. xii. 1-28, which is like an enlargement of this admonition of St. James: and see also Heb. vi. 7. 11, 12, where St. Paul compares the hearts of the faithful to good soil which drinketh in the rain, and produceth herbage meet for the use of those for whom it is tilled (γεωργείται), and receives blessing from God; and exhorts them to show earnestness for the full assurance of hope unto the end; in order that they may be imitators of them who "through faith and patience (μακροθυμία) inherit the promise." Observe the repetition here of the word μακροθυμία, v. 8, and μακροθυμία, v. 10, as if the Apostle would leave this admonition to long-suffering and patience as a parting bequest to the faithful.

Probably St. Paul had St. James in his mind, and thought of his martyrdom, when he wrote to the Hebrews, -in the interval between the death of St. James and the destruction of Jerusalem, "Remember your spiritual Guides, who spoke to you the word of God; whose faith follow ye  $(\mu\iota\mu\epsilon i\sigma\theta\epsilon)$ , contemplating the end of their conversation." execute vengeance on the guilty city of Jerusalem for her sins (Œcumen.). This saying: The Judge standeth at the Door, suggests a reference to the remarkable incident recorded by Hegesippus (see on v. 6), that the religious sects at Jerusalem were accustomed to ask St. James "which is the Door of Jesus?" and that at a Passover (that of A.D. 62) they placed him on a lofty eminence of the temple and cried out, The people are gone wild after Jesus who has been crucified, tell us, which is the Door of

This question was doubtless put in bitter irony and malignant mockery: as is proved by the murder of St. James perpetrated by those who uttered it. The saying is an enigmatical one. Perhaps this passage in this Epistle may explain it.

This latter portion of the Epistle contains a solemn prophecy of the woes coming on the Jews for the murder of the Just One; and denounces their sins and predicts their punishment (see vv, 1-6). It then proceeds to announce that the presence of the Lord is at hand, and that, behold, the Judge standeth at the Door.

This Epistle, published abroad throughout the world, and thus pre-announcing the doom impending on Jerusalem for the sin of its Rulers in crucifying Jesus, would be as offensive to Jews, especially the great and wealthy among them, as the prophetic roll of Jeremiah was to the King and Princes of Jerusalem (Jer. xxxvi. 10-32). And the language of this chapter may serve to explain their malignant menaces and blood-thirsty rage against the Apostle. It was to them what the speech of St. Stephen had been to the Sanhedrim; and probably St. James, as well as St. Stephen, was a victim of the wrath excited by his courageous rebukes of their sins, and by the constancy of his testimony to Jesus.

The words of St. James, "Behold! the Judge standeth at the door," perhaps became current among them. Perhaps those words may have also excited the question put in a tone of derision, "which is the Door of Jesus?" at what Door is He standing? By what Door will He come? show Him to us and we will go out to meet Him.

This supposition is confirmed by the reply of St. James, "Why do ye ask me concerning the Son of Man? He sitteth in heaven; and will come in the clouds of heaven." There is His Door. The words of the murderous flatterers to St. James, as There is His recorded by Hegesippus, seem to contain another similar ironical reference to the rebukes of this Epistle, "Thou art no respecter of persons" (πρόσωπον οὐ λαμβάνεις). No, forsooth! thou hast preached to the world to make no difference between rich and poor, and to show no respect to persons (see above, ii. 1-9). Therefore doubtless thou wilt speak the truth.

Other interpretations of that saying, "Which is the Door of Jesus?" may be seen in Bp. Pearson on S. Ignatius, ad Philadelph. 9, αὐτὸς ὧν θύρα τοῦ πατρὸς, with reference to John x. 7 — 9. 11. 'I&B] Job, the patriarch of the ancient Church, not of the stock of Abraham. Thus all unite—Prophets, Patriarchs, and Apostles—in teaching the duty of Patience. The Patriarch Job is propounded here as an example by the Apostle St. James. Hence we may conclude that the book of Job is not (as some have supposed) an allegory, but a true history, and this is further evident from the words of Ezekiel, combining Job with two other historical personages, Noah and Daniel. Ezek xiv. 14. 20.

The connexion of this precept with the preceding may be stated in the words of Bp. Sanderson (Lectures on Oaths, vii. 11). "Set the examples of antient Prophets, and holy men before your eyes. If ye suffer adversity, imitate their patience. If in all things you cannot attain to that perfection, yet thus far at least, except ye be very negligent, you may go with ease; above all things, take heed lest too impatient of your grief, or too much transported with your joy, ye break forth into rash oaths, to the dishonour of God, and shame of Christian conversation. But rather contain yourselves, whether troubled or rejoicing, within the bounds of Modesty: mingle not Heaven and earth, let not all things be filled with your oaths and clamours; if you affirm a thing, let it be with calmness, and a mere affirmation or negation. But if either of these passions be more impetuous, and strive to overflow the narrow channels of your bosoms, it will be your wisdom to let it forth unto the glory of God. Do you demand by what means? I will tell you: Is any amongst you afflicted? Let not his impatience break forth into Oaths and Blasphemies, the Flood-gates of wrath; but rather let him pray; and humbly implore God that he would vouchsafe him Patience, till His heavy hand be removed. Is any merry? Let him not bellow it forth in Oaths, like a Bacchanalian, but rather sing it in Hymns and Psalms unto the Praise of God; who hath made his cup to overflow, and crowned him with happy days." Bp. Sanderson.

In these words St. James doth not mean universally to interdict the use of oaths: for that in some cases is not only lawful, but very expedient, yea needful, and required from us as a duty; but that swearing which our Lord had expressly prohibited to His disciples, and which thence, questionless, the brethren to whom St. James did write, did well understand themselves to forbear, having learnt so in the first catechisms of Christian institution; that is, needless and heedless swearing in ordinary conversation, a practice then frequent in the world, both among Jews and Gentiles; the invoking of God's name, appealing to His testimony, and provoking His judgment, upon any slight occasion, in common talk, with vain incogitancy, or profane boldness. From such practice the holy Apostle dehorteth in terms importing his great concernedness, and implying the matter to be of highest importance: for, Before all things, my brethren, do not swear; as if he did apprehend this sin of all other to be one of the most heinous and pernicious. Could he have said more? would he have said so much, if he had not conceived the matter to be of exceeding weight and consequence? Dr. Barrow, Serm. xv. vol. i. p. 329.

12. μήτε τὸν οὐρανόν] neither by heaven, nor by earth, lest ye give to the creature the honour due only to the Creator, see Caten. p. 36, for an oath is an act of worship to be paid only to God. Cp. Matt. v. 34.

14. προσκαλεσάσθω τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους τῆς ἐκκλησίας] Let him call to himself the Elders of the Church, and let them pray over him. Observe the plural "Elders;" let him call for them, in order that by united prayer they may prevail (Matt. xviii. 19), and that they may be witnesses of the effects of prayer.

Our Lord sent forth His twelve Apostles and His seventy Disciples two and two (Mark vi. 7. Luke x. 1), and St. James prescribes that the sick should send for the Elders of the Church.

Where, however, only one Elder can answer the call, this precept enjoins that he should be sent for; and it can hardly be supposed that in some cases the Elders would be summoned in a body to a sick room; but the precept is general, and the applica-tion of it in particular circumstances is left to be determined by the wisdom and piety of the faithful.

Here is remarkable evidence of the diffusion of the Gospel and extension of the Church, and of the existence of the order and Ministry of the Christian Priesthood in divers parts of the world in that early age. This Epistle was written before A.D.

ευξάσθωσαν ἐπ' αὐτὸν, ἀλείψαντες αὐτὸν ἐλαίφ ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι τοῦ Κυρίου ο Isa. 33. 24. 15 ο καὶ ἡ εὐχὴ τῆς πίστεως σώσει τὸν κάμνοντα, καὶ ἐγερεῖ αὐτὸν ὁ Κύριος Prov. 15. 29 καν άμαρτίας ή πεποιηκώς, άφεθήσεται αὐτῷ.

62, when St. James died; it was addressed to the twelve tribes dispersed throughout the world (i. 1), and it gives them this precept,—"Is any sick among you? Let him send for the Elders of the Church."

This admonition would not have been given, if it could not be complied with. In the Acts of the Apostles we see St. James the Bishop of Jerusalem surrounded by, and presiding over, his Presbyters, or Elders, there (xxi. 18), and we may infer from his words in this place that Apostles and Apostolic men had now gone forth into a great part of the world (cp. Titus i. 5, and note before 1 Tim. iii.), and had ordained Presbyters in the principal cities.

In the Apocalypse we see in each case, one Person at their head (see on Rev. ii. 1); as their Angel, or Bishop.

The sick are enjoined to send for the Presbyters of the Church. It follows, therefore, that it is a necessary part of the Priest's duty to visit the sick. St. James had before asserted, not without reference to this duty, that "pure worship in the sight of God is to visit the orphans and widows in their affliction" (i. 27), and he here enjoins the sick to send for the Presbyters of the Church, and comforts the faithful with the assurance that the ministry of God's Priests, in prayer and other offices of religion, will be conducive to their comfort in soul and body.

Hence the Church of England prescribes, that "when any person is sick, notice shall be given thereof to the Minister of the Parish" (Order for the Visitation of the Sick); and she specifies it as part of "the Office of a Deacon, to search for the sick, &c., and to intimate their names unto the Curate." (Form, &c., of

S. Polycarp, the Bishop of Smyrna, a disciple of St. John, and martyr, referring, it would seem, to the words of St. James, gives this ministerial direction (ad Philipp. c. 5), "Let the Presbyters be tender-hearted, merciful to all, converting the erring (see below, v. 19), visiting all who are sick (ἐπισκεπτόμενοι πάντας ἀσθενεῖς); not neglecting the widow or orphan or needy (see above, i. 27), and providing always what is good in the sight of God, abstaining from all respect of persons (see above, ii. 1.9), not sharp in judgment, knowing that we are all sinners" (see above, iii. 2). These words of S. Polycarp show that he was familiar with this Epistle of St. James.

— προσευξάσθωσαν ἐπ' αὐτόν] let them (the Presbyters) pray over him, the sick man. There is therefore a special efficacy in the prayers of those whom God has set spart for that office

Every Priest being taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God (Heb. v. 1), that he may offer prayers; the prayers he offereth he offereth out of his office, and so, even in that respect there is, cateris paribus, a more force and energy in them, as coming from him whose calling it is to offer them, than in those that come from another whose calling it is not so to do. Bp. Andrewes, Sermons, v. 230, 231.

The authority of the Priest's calling is a furtherance, because if God have so far received him into favour as to impose upon him by the hands of man that office of blessing the people in His Name, and making intercession to Him in theirs, which office He hath sanctified with His own most gracious promise, and ratified that promise by manifest actual performance thereof, when others before in like place have done the same; is not his very Ordination a seal, as it were, to us, that the self-same Divine Love that hath chosen the Instrument to work with, will by that Instrument effect the thing whereto He ordained it, in blessing His people, and accepting the prayers which His servant offereth up unto God for them? Hooker, V. xxv. 3.

A question here arises;

Why the Church of England has not retained the practice of Anointing the Sick, as here prescribed by St. James?

And if the Early Church discontinued doing so, when and powers of Healing bestowed on them by Christ.

St. Mark says of the Apostles (vi. 13), "They cast out devils, and anointed with oit many that were sick, and healed them."

From a comparison of this passage with the parallel places in St. Matthew (x. 1-8) and St. Luke (ix. 1-6), it appears that they did this in the exercise of the extraordinary and miraculous

The application of oil to the body of the Sick was a visible proof that they who applied it (viz. the Apostles) were Instruments employed by God for the conveyance of those benefits which accompanied its application.

It was a manifest evidence that Miracles of Healing were VOL. II .- PART IV.

wrought by God through their agency; it was like a credential to their mission; and it served to call attention to the Doctrine taught by them, as coming from God.

The miraculous powers of Healing given to the Apostles were for some time continued in the Church.

Thus St. Paul says (1 Cor. xii. 8, 9), "To one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing; to another prophecy; to another tongues;" and again (1 Cor. xii. 28), "God hath set some in the Church, first Apostles, secondarily healing. . . . Have all the gifts of healing? Do all speak with tongues?"

Our Lord Himself promised this gift to His disciples (Mark xvi. 18): "They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." This was done by the Apostles in the time of our Lord's ministry (says @cumenius here): they anointed the sick with oil and healed them.

It appears that St. James is speaking with reference to this miraculous power of healing then existing in the Church, when he says (v. 14), "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the Church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up, and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him." That is to say, If any one is sick, let him avail himself of the gifts which God has bestowed upon His Church; let him send for the Presbyters of the Church, and let them pray over him; and the prayer of faith (i. e. the faithful prayer made in full trust that God will do what is best for the sick) will (if it be God's good pleasure) save the sick, and God will raise him up, and restore him to health; and if he has committed sins, and if he is penitent for his sins, and has faith in Christ, they shall be forgiven him.

Whatever was instituted by Christ or by His Apostles, under His guidance and that of the Holy Ghost, for the purpose of conveying grace to the soul, and for the attainment of everlasting glory, is of perpetual and universal obligation; for all men need grace, and all men desire glory. Such things are the Two Sacraments and Confirmation. See on Acts viii. 16, 17.

But things which were practised and prescribed by Christ Himself and His Apostles are not of perpetual obligation, unless they are conducive to an end which is of perpetual necessity, namely, to the bestowal of spiritual grace to the soul, and to its everlasting salvation. If such is not their character, they are mutable, and may be omitted or foregone by the Christian Church, according to the wisdom and discretion with which God has endued her. See this proved at large by Hooker, I. xv., and III.

This is evident from the non-use of feet-washing, a thing done and enjoined by Christ Himself (see on John xiii. 14), and from the discontinuance of the holy kiss prescribed by His Apostles. (1 Thess. v. 26. Rom. xvi. 16. 1 Pet. v. 14.)

There is no evidence that anointing with oil was ever used in primitive times as a sacrament for the conveyance of spiritual grace to the sick in danger of death.

For a considerable time the Church retained the gift of healing (Irenæus, v. 6. Tertullian, de Bapt. c. 10. Euseb. v. 7. S. Jerome, vit. Sulp. Sever. vit. Martini, c. 15), and the practice of anointing with oil, with a view to recovery from sickness, was continued in the Eastern and Western Churches. Indeed (as may be seen in the Greek Euchologium), it is continued in the Eastern Church to this day for this purpose; see Dr. Covel on the Greek Church, 308. 340.

The Latin Church has adopted a different course.

She perceived in course of time that the effect mentioned by St. James ("the Lord shall raise up the sick") did not ordinarily ensue from the anointing with oil; she saw that the miraculous and extraordinary powers of healing granted by Christ to the Apostles and other primitive disciples in the Apostolic ages, had gradually been withdrawn, as was the case with those other miraculous gifts, coupled with that of healing by St. Paul (1 Cor. xii. 28), viz., the gift of tongues.

But she would not lay aside the practice of anointing the sick. She retained the practice, but she abandoned the design for which the practice had been instituted.

At length, in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, the Latin Church had diverted the practice into a direction quite contrary to the purpose for which it was originally prescribed.

The Apostle St. James had enjoined the practice with a view to the recovery of the sick; as Cardinal Catelanus allows, in his note on the passage, where he says, "Hæc verba non loquuntur de Sacramentali unctione extremæ unctionis;" but the Church of Rome prescribes, in the Councils of Florence (A.D. 1438) and Trent (A.D. 1551), that the anointing should not take place except where recovery is not to be looked for (Council of Trent, Sess. xiv., "qui tam periculose decumbunt ut in exitu vitæ constituti videantur"), and therefore she calls this anointing "extreme unction," and "sacramentum exeuntium," and she regards it as a Sacrament for conveying grace to the soul.

16 Έξομολογείσθε άλλήλοις τὰ παραπτώματα, καὶ εὖχεσθε ὑπὲρ άλλήλων, όπως ιαθήτε πολύ ισχύει δέησις δικαίου ένεργουμένη. 17 ρ' Ηλίας ανθρωπος ήν όμοιοπαθής ήμιν, καὶ προσευχή προσηύξατο τοῦ μὴ βρέξαι καὶ οὐκ ἔβρεξεν Acts 14, 15.  $\frac{q}{4}$  Kings  $\frac{18}{4}$  41, έπὶ τῆς γῆς ἐνιαυτοὺς τρεῖς καὶ μῆνας ἔξ.  $\frac{18}{6}$   $\frac{q}{6}$  καὶ πάλιν προσηύξατο, καὶ ὁ οὐρανὸς ὑετὸν ἔδωκε, καὶ ἡ γῆ ἐβλάστησε τὸν καρπὸν αὐτῆς.

Thus, on the one hand, the Greek Church is a witness by her present practice, that the Anointing was designed with a view to bodily recovery; and the Roman Church, on the other hand, is a witness, that the miraculous effects on the body, which were wrought in primitive times by God through the instrumentality of those who anointed the sick, and which accompanied that unction,

In the first Prayer Book of King Edward VIth, the Church of England (in her Office for the Visitation of the Sick) provided that "if the sick man desired it," he might be anointed with a view to his recovery. But on further consideration of the matter, and reflecting (it may be supposed) that the anointing of the sick implied something of a claim to the exercise of miraculous powers of healing, and might be chargeable with presumption, and with ignorance of God's dispensations in regard to miraculous powers, and might tempt men to rely for grace and pardon on an outward ceremony administered to them in a state of insensibility; she has thought fit to lay aside the sign, now that the thing signified has ceased, and to limit herself soberly and wisely to what is certain and indisputable, and what is the main thing for the sick man to consider, viz., that if he avails himself, as he ought to do in his sickness, of the ministry of his spiritual Guide, the prayer of faith will save the sick, and (if it be most expedient for him) God will raise him up; and if he has committed sins, they will, on his faith and repentance, be forgiven him, and that he will receive pardon, and grace, and peace, through the merits of Christ, and by the love and mercy of God, especially as conveyed, dispensed, and applied in the reception of the blessed and most comfortable Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, which

She enjoins, in a special Office, to be ministered to the sick.

Compare Dr. Hammond here and Dean Comber's remarks in his "Companion to the Temple," in the Introduction to the Office of Visitation of the Sick.

16. ἐξομολογεῖσθε ἀλλήλοις] Confess your transgressions one to another. Observe the word παραπτώματα, offences, breaches of law: here particularly the law of love: and ἀλλήλοις, one to another, as friends and brethren; and compare our Lord's precept, " If thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him, and if he repent forgive him, and if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again unto thee saying, I repent, thou shalt forgive him" (Luke xvii. 3, 4).

The doctrine of private confession preparatory to the reception of the Holy Communion, and as a part of the discipline of Repentance, cannot rightly be grounded on this text.

Public confession of sins to Almighty God has ever been a necessary part of Christian religion and worship; but private confession to a Minister of the Church was never enforced in the earliest ages of the Church. The Church of England gives her advice to the penitent, in certain cases, and under certain circumstances, "to open his grief to some discreet and learned Minister of God's Word" (not indiscriminately to any one who may claim a right to hear confession, without due qualification for the difficult work of guiding the conscience aright), "that by the ministry of God's Holy Word he may receive the benefit of Absolution, together with ghostly counsel and advice, to the quieting of his conscience and avoiding of all scruple and doubtfulness." See Hooker, VI. iv. 4, and VI. iv. 6.

— ὅπως ἰαθῆτε] that ye may be healed in body and soul, Matt. xiii. 15. Luke iv. 18; ix. 2. Heb. xii. 13, where St. Paul seems to refer to this precept.

Observe the connexion of this sentence with what goes before. "The greatest thing that made men forward and willing to confess their sins, and in no wise to be withheld from this confession by any fear of disgrace or contempt which might ensue, was their fervent desire to be helped with the prayers of God's faithful people, wherein as St. James doth exhort unto mutual confession, alleging this for a reason, that just men's devout prayers are of great avail with God, so it hath been heretofore the use of penitents for that intent to unburthen their minds even to private persons and to crave their prayers." Hooker, VI. iv. 7, referring to Tertullian de Pœnit. c. 10, and S. Ambrose de Pœnit. ii. 10.

- πολύ ἐσχύει ] Great is the efficacy of the prayer of a righteous man working inwardly. Do not imagine, as many do, that prayer will avail without holiness of life. Some make long prayers and devour widows' houses (Matt. xxiii. 14), and therefore shall receive greater damnation (Luke xx. 47). The sacrifice of the wicked is abomination (Prov. xv. 8; xxi. 27), but the prayer of the righteous availeth much.

Again, some may suppose, that the prayers of the lips will avail, without the inner working of the heart. They draw night to God with their lips, but their heart is far from Him (Matt. xv. 8). "They use vain repetitions in prayer, and think that they will be heard for their much speaking." (Matt. vi. 7. Cp. Ecclus. vii. 14.) But ye shall not be so. It is the inner working of the heart, moved by a spirit of love, that prevails with God. The wrestlings of Jacob in prayer, the yearnings of Hannah's heart, these gain a blessing from Him. "Hear vis Deo grata est." Ter-

On the word ἐνεργουμένη, inwardly energizing in devotion and love to God, so as to produce external effects in obedience; see 1 Thess. ii. 13. Gal. v. 6. 2 Cor. i. 6. Col. i. 29. Eph. iii. 20; and see the note of Maximus here (in Catena, p. 37), where he says the "power of prayer is not in words when it comes forth from the tongue in an empty sound of the voice;" such a prayer is  $\mathring{a}\rho\gamma\mathring{\eta}$  kal  $\mathring{a}\nu\nu\pi\delta\sigma\tau\alpha\tau\sigma$ , but a prevailing prayer is that which is  $\check{\epsilon}\nu\epsilon\rho\gamma\sigma$  kal  $(\mathring{a}\sigma\alpha$ , energetic and living, animating obe-

Observe, therefore, how happily the two emphatic words δικαίου and ἐνεργουμένη are reserved for the end of the sentence, to give weight and force to the whole; and to make it sink into the ears and hearts of hearers and readers of the Epistle; and to teach the faithful of every age, that it is holiness of life and devotion of heart which give efficacy to Prayer.

The martyrdom of St. James himself affords a beautiful comment on these words (see Euseb. ii. 23, quoted above on v. 6), especially where it is related that after St. James had been cast down by his enemies from the pediment of the Temple, and they were stoning him, he fell on his knees and prayed for them, and some, who stood by, said, adopting the very words of this Epistle,

"Hold, what do yo? εὕχεται ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν ὁ δίκαιος," "the just man is praying for you."

17. Hλίας άνθρωπος ην όμ. η.] Elias was a man of like passions with us; and once his patience failed him (1 Kings xix. 4. 10. 14), yet God heard his prayer; and gave him power to shut and open heaven (1 Kings xvii. 1; xviii. 42. 45. Cp. Rev. xi. 6). It is not indeed expressly affirmed in the Holy Scriptures of the Old Testament, that Elijah's prayers were the cause of the drought for three years and a half, and of the rain at their close; but his own declaration that there should not be rain but according to his word (1 Kings xvii.), and also his actions on Mount Carmel (xviii. 42), first praying to God for the acceptance of his sacrifice, and then casting himself down upon the earth, putting his face between his knees, though they might not lead an uninspired Expositor to the inference drawn here by the inspired Apostle St. James, yet they find a very apt exposition in that inference which we may thankfully accept at his hand.

When the prophet Elias said, that the gift of rain should depend on his word, he could not mean the word of command, but the word of prayer. Be not ye therefore disheartened. Serve God and Pray earnestly; and He will protect you.

- προσευχή προσηύξατο] he prayed with prayer, there was true  $\ell\nu\epsilon\rho\gamma\epsilon\iota\alpha$  in his prayer. This is marked by the Hebraistic addition of the substantive to the verb. Cp. on Acts iv. 17, and on 2 Pet. iii. 3.

- τοῦ μη βρέξαι] that it should not rain. On the infinitive see on Acts xxvii. 1, and on Rev. xii. 7, and on the word βρέχω, to rain, Matt. vii. 25. 27.

— ένιαυτούς τοεῖς καὶ μῆνας ἔξ] three years and six months; equal to 42 months, or 1260 days,—a chronological period of suffering. See above on Luke iv. 25, and below on Rev. xi., note at the end of the chapter $^{19}$   $^{r}$  Aδελφοὶ, ἐάν τις ἐν ὑμῖν πλανηθ $\hat{\eta}$  ἀπὸ τ $\hat{\eta}$ ς ἀληθείας, καὶ ἐπιστρέψη τὶς  $^{r}$  Matt. 18. 15. αὐτὸν, 20 8 γινωσκέτω ὅτι ὁ ἐπιστρέψας ἁμαρτωλὸν ἐκ πλάνης ὁδοῦ αὐτοῦ, σώσει 8 Rom. 11. 14. ψυχὴν ἐκ θανάτου, καὶ καλύψει πλῆθος ἁμαρτιῶν.

19, 20. ἀδελφοι-άμαρτιῶν] Brethren, if any man amony you shall have strayed from the truth, and any one shall have converted him, -brought him back to the way of the truth from which he had gone astray, -let him know, that he who hath turned a sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death,

20. γινωσκέτω] let him know. This is genuine γνῶσις, or knowledge, that by imitating Christ's love, we are made partakers in His work, and in His glory. By doing the work of Christ in seeking to save that which is lost (Matt. xviii. 11. Luke xix. 10), the Christian will be admitted to be a sharer in the dignity and office of Christ; he will save a soul from death. So Timothy is said by St. Paul to save those who hear him, i. e. by applying the means instituted by Christ for their salvation (1 Tim. iv. 16. Cp. Rom. xi. 14. 1 Cor. vii. 16; ix. 22. Jude 23). And so Christ Himself gave His own title to His ministers when He said "Ye are the Light of the world" (Matt. v. 14. Cp. John ix. 5). Therefore he who has turned a sinner from the error of his way will have a saving office and dignity, because he will have applied those means which God has instituted for the salvation of sinners. Cp. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. ii. p. 139.

Nor is this all; he will cover a multitude of sins, and in this respect also will be admitted to be a fellow-worker with Christ; and have a share in another of His glorious titles. Christ alone is the true Propitiatory, or Mercy Seat; He is the Covering of the Ark on which God sits (Ps. lxxx. 1), as on a Throne of Grace, to which we must flee for mercy (Heb. iv. 16; cp. Mather on the Types, pp. 407, 408. 411), and which covers the sins of the whole world. Christ, and Christ alone, in that primary sense, covers a multitude of sins; see Heb. ix. 5, and on Rom. iii. 21—26, and Rom. iv. 7; which afford the best exposition of this text. "Blessed is the man whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered; blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not

The contrast is in the words of Nehemiah, iv. 5, "O God, cover not their iniquity, and let not their sin be blotted out from

That man, therefore, who has reclaimed a sinner from the error of his way, and has brought him back to Christ, and to the use of those means which God has instituted in the Church for his salvation in Christ, may be justly said to cover a multitude of sins by means of the Saviour's righteousness; and he who has thus done the work of Christ, according to the command of Christ, will hear the joyful speech at the great Day, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." (Matt. xxv. 21.)

This covering of a multitude of sins by Christ, and the ministerial application of the means instituted by Him for the casting of this covering of Christ's righteousness over a multitude of sins, is a different work from that of saving the sinner, specified in the former clause.

For, if we suppose the sinner to be pardoned and saved, and yet the remembrance and record of his sins to be not covered, but to be ever visible to his own eyes, and to the eyes of men and Angels, and of God, in Eternity, this consideration would much abate his happiness in another world.

But the comfort which is administered by the words of the Psalmist, "Blessed is the man whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered" (Ps. xxxii. 1, 2), and again (Ps. lxxxv. 2), "Lord, thou hast forgiven the offence of thy people, and covered all their sins," and which is here proffered in God's name by St. James, is this—that by reclaiming an erring brother from the ways of sin, and by bringing him to Christ, we may not only save an immortal soul from eternal death, but may be instrumental in casting over his sins-however great their multitude, and however foul their stains-the spotless robe of Christ's righteousness, so that they may be covered for ever, and be hidden from the sight even of God's Omniscience, by the mantle of Christ's

Here is one of the strongest motives to the work of Christian love, in endeavouring to convert the sinner from the error of his

With this precept St. James ends his Epistle; and in the practice of it he ended his life, when, according to the example, and in the words of his Saviour, dying on the cross for the salvation of the souls of all men, and for the covering of their sins from the wrath of God, St. James prayed for his murderers, "1 pray Thee, Lord, God and Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." (Euseb. ii. 23. See above on v. 6.)

There are no salutations nor benedictions at the close of this

Epistle for the reason stated above on i. 1.

INTRODUCTION

THE FIRST EPISTLE GENERAL OF ST. PETER.

I. On the place from which the Epistle was written: and on St. Peter's history and Apostolic acts.

When the Holy Ghost came down from heaven, on the Day of Pentecost, St. Peter stood up with the Eleven, and preached to the Jews and Proselytes, who had come from all parts of the civilized world to Jerusalem for that Festival.

They whom he addressed are enumerated by the Historian of the Acts of the Apostles in the following order:

1. Parthians, Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judæa.

2. Cappadocia, Pontus and Asia, Phrygia and Pamphylia.

3. Egypt, the parts of Libya towards Cyrene; and strangers of Rome, Jews and Proselytes, Cretes and Arabians.

These Three Classes of persons, as has been shown in another place ', represent the principal Dispersions, as they were called, of the Jews, scattered abroad in the countries to the East, North, West, and South of Jerusalem.

St. Peter was their Apostle, the Apostle of the Circumcision 2, as St. Paul was of the Gentiles. And as St. Paul performed the office of Apostle to the Gentiles, by preaching in person, and also by writing Epistles to the Gentile Churches, and by appointing others, such as Timothy and Titus,his "own sons in the faith,"—to be Pastors and Bishops in their Cities, so St. Peter did to those of the Circumcision.

He did that work in regular order.

The Commission which had been given by Christ to His Apostles had specified certain stages of missionary progress; "ye shall be witnesses unto Me in Jerusalem," this was the first stage; "and in all Judaa," this was the second; "and in Samaria," this was the third; and, lastly, "unto the uttermost part of the Earth 3."

The Apostle St. Peter had received from Christ a solemnly repeated charge, "Feed My sheep "." He discharged the duties of the pastoral office entrusted to him, and he performed them according to the order prescribed by Him who gave the charge.

He bore witness to Christ, first, in Jerusalem, and in Judwa; next, "in Samaria 5;" and, lastly, he bore witness to Christ unto the uttermost part of the Earth.

This final and extended witness, to the uttermost part of the Earth, is that which is presented to us in his Epistles, and in his Martyrdom.

He preached the Gospel and wrote his first Epistle in the eastern territory of the Roman world; and his Martyrdom took place in the West. This Epistle was written from the Eastern Babylon; and he bore witness to Christ by dying for Him in the Western Babylon,-Rome 6.

Justin Martyr (Apol. ii. c. 26) asserts that Simon Magus came to Rome in the time of Claudius; and after Justin Martyr it is said in the Chronicon of Eusebius, ad A.D. 42, that he was encountered there by St. Peter; and so Euseb. ii. 14. Cp. Euseb. ii. 15-17.

But the silence of Holy Scripture, and especially the absence of any reference to St. Peter in St. Paul's Epistles written to

Thus he completed his testimony to Christ, "in Jerusalem, and in all Juda, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the Earth." (Acts i. 8.)

II. The place from which this Epistle is dated is Babylon 1.

Reasons will be assigned hereafter for adherence to the opinion, that the literal interpretation of that word is the true one; and that this Epistle was written from the site of the Assyrian City, on the river Euphrates; the city celebrated of old in the history of the Jewish nation.

Reserving the further details of the evidence on this point for the note on that passage, we may here content ourselves with observing that the Historian of the Acts places the Parthians, Medes, and Elamites, and dwellers in Mesopotamia as the first in order among those strangers scattered abroad, who had come up to Jerusalem for the Feast of Pentecost, and who were then addressed by St. Peter. No less a number than three thousand of them received his word and were baptized 2; being the first-fruits of many similar spiritual Harvests which would be gathered in by St. Peter and others on many like occasions at Jerusalem, at the Jewish Festivals in succeeding years.

It might reasonably be anticipated that St. Peter, the Apostle of the Circumcision, would go in person and visit those to whom he had preached, and whom he had converted by his preaching,

Among all the cities in the region of the Parthians, Medes, and Elamites, and dwellers in Mesopotamia, none had been so renowned as Babylon.

III. An announcement from St. Peter, that the Cross of Christ had been planted in Babylon, and that there was an Elect 4 Church,—a Christian Sion,—in that place, which had been the cause of so many woes to Jerusalem, would indeed be joyous tidings to the faithful Israelites throughout the world. "The land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali, Galilee of the Gentiles," which had been the first to endure the calamitics inflicted by the Assyrian invasion, were the first to enjoy the blessings of the Gospel, and the gracious presence of the Messiah; and "the people which sat in darkness saw a great light" in the glorious Advent of Him Who is the Light of the world 5. And if now it could be said, that by the preaching of St. Peter, a Galilean fisherman, Babylon, the land of the captivity of Judah, had heard the sound of an Evangelical Jubilee, this intelligence would be hailed with gladness by all faithful Israelites; and would impart consolation to them for the distresses which their forefathers had endured at Babylon; and would be like the opening of a door of hope, that all their brethren, wheresoever scattered abroad over the face of the earth, would find a home in the Gospel, and a Jerusalem in the Church of God; and it would be an earnest and a pledge of future victories to be achieved by the Cross of Christ over all the Babylons of this world.

There is a beautiful analogy in this respect between St. Peter and the Hebrew Prophet, from whose book St. Peter adopts his form of benediction in both Epistles (see on i. 2)—the prophet Daniel. Daniel wrote at Babylon, when the City and Temple of Jerusalem were in ruins, and the Jews were captives and exiles in Babylon, and in the neighbouring regions. He comforts them in their distress, with prophecies of Christ, of His first Advent, and finally of His Second Coming in Glory, and of the full and final establishment of Christ's kingdom,—the only kingdom that will never be destroyed. This blessed work of prophetic consolation commenced by the Hebrew Prophet

Rome and from Rome, and the scantiness and ambiguity of other testimony on that subject, render it at least very doubtful, whether St. Peter was at Rome before his last visit in the reign of Nero, which ended in his martyrdom there. Cp. Basnage, Annales ad

It is probable that he encountered Simon Magus at that time; Nicephorus (Chronog, in Scaliger. Thesaurus Temp. p. 308) assigns two years to St. Peter's Episcopate at Rome, and those two years are, in all likelihood, coincident with St. Peter's visit to Rome at the close of Nero's reign, when St. Paul was also at Rome; and this opinion is confirmed by the testimony of some authors, S. Cyril. Cateches. 6. Sulpic. Sever. ii. p. 369, who represent that Simon Magus was encountered at Rome by St. Paul as well as St. Peter. See Ittig, Hæres. p. 28, and the testimony in the recently-discovered work of S. Hippolytus, which is of more importance from the author's connexion with Rome, p. 178. "This Simon," says he, "bewitched many in Samaria with his sorceries, and afterwards came as far as Rome, and entered into conflict with the Apostles; and Peter greatly resisted him when he was seducing many by his magical arts."
Cp. Basnage, Ann. A.D. 64, vol. i. p. 731, and the authorities in Viner, R. W. B. ii. p. 238. Davidson, Intr. iii. pp. 352 -362.

The obscurity in which the history of St. Peter is involved after his delivery from his imprisonment in A.D. 44 (Acts xii. 17) is very remarkable. It seems providential. It may be ascribable to the same causes as the silence of Holy Scripture with regard to the Blessed Virgin Mary. It is like a prophetic protest against the errors which grew up afterwards in the Church, and fastened themselves with a semblance of reverence on his venerable name; like ivy, which injures the tree which it dresses up with its foliage. If St. Peter had been the Supreme head of the Church of Christ, and had possessed sovereign authority over all the Apostles, it is not at all probable that his personal movements for a period of twenty years would have been involved in obscurity as they are. How much would the advocate of Papal Supremacy have made of the Acts of the Apostles, if the person who is there brought most prominently forward had been St. Peter, instead of St. Paul! If we knew as much of St. Peter's history as we do of St. Paul's, how many arguments would thence have been derived in favour of that Supremacy! There is therefore, it is probable, an eloquent significance in this silence.

Daniel at Babylon, would be continued with peculiar force and propriety by the Christian Apostle, St. Peter, in the same City.

These and other considerations, which will be stated in the proper place <sup>1</sup>, lead us to adopt the literal interpretation of St. Peter's words, and to believe that he was at Babylon when he wrote this Epistle.

IV. This interpretation, it will be found, imparts clearness and beauty to its contents.

To specify some particulars;

The Epistle itself is sometimes cited by ancient Authors, as "Epistola ad Ponticos<sup>2</sup>," an Epistle to those of Pontus. The reason is, that among the regions specified by the Apostle at the beginning of this Epistle, the first place is assigned to Pontus.

Pontus was the most eastern region of Asia Minor. This circumstance confirms the opinion above stated, that the place in which the Epistle was written, did not lie to the west of Asia Minor, —and therefore was not Rome, as some have supposed,—but lay to the east of Asia Minor.

Still further, on examining the order in which the Asiatic regions are arranged in the commencement of this Epistle, we find that they are placed in such a geographical series as that in which they would present themselves naturally to the mind of a person writing from the east of Asia Minor; and thus also we were confirmed in the opinion that the word Babylon at the close of the Epistle is to be received in its natural sense, and means the celebrated Assyrian City bearing that name.

V. If, again, we refer to the recital in the Acts of the Apostles concerning the preaching of St. Peter, on the day of Pentecost, to the Jewish strangers who had flocked to Jerusalem for that Festival, we find that after the mention of those who had come from Parthia and its neighbourhood, namely, from Babylonia and the regions about it, those who are next specified are the dwellers

St. Peter went forth from Jerusalem and preached in Judwa. Suppose him now to be at Babylon, which was then under the sway of the Parthians , and to have confirmed in the faith of Christ those believing Jews who were scattered in Media, Elam, that is Persia, and Mesopotamia. It was very reasonable that he should next turn his eyes and his thoughts toward those who formed the second group of the dispersed Israelites; namely, to those of Pontus, Cappadocia, and Asia, who were an offshoot of the Babylonish dispersion, and are placed next to it by St. Luke in the Acts of the Apostles.

What more natural, therefore, than that, being at Babylon, he should write an Epistle to those of Pontus and Asia?

He had received a charge to show his love to the Good Shepherd, Who had laid down His life for His sheep; and the manner in which that love was to be proved was by feeding His sheep. "The lost sheep of the house of Israel" were committed to his special charge. They were scattered abroad throughout the world as sheep without a shepherd. But they were gathered together from time to time as in a sheepfold at Jerusalem at the three great annual Festivals. St. Peter had fed them there.

But he must also go forth to feed them.

It was ordered, providentially, that though the sheep of the house of Israel were scattered upon the mountains of the world, yet, if we may venture so to speak, there were certain great spiritual sheep-walks in which they ranged, like the nomad and migratory flocks of the Patriarchs in Arabia, stretching themselves in their pastoral encampments far and wide over the hills, and along the valleys. And when Christian folds had been formed in these great spiritual sheep-walks, ready means were afforded of spiritual communication among them; and they might in fine be gathered as one flock under one Shepherd <sup>6</sup> in the Church of Christ.

The first of these great spiritual sheep-walks was in Babylonia and the adjacent countries to which the Ten Tribes had been carried captive. There St. Peter was, when he wrote this Epistle.

The second of these spiritual sheep-walks was in Asia Minor.

The third was in Egypt 7.

Therefore, being at Babylon, and tending the sheep of the Good Shepherd there, St. Peter next directed his attention to those sheep of the house of Israel who were scattered abroad in Asia Minor; of whom not a few had heard his voice in Jerusalem, and had perhaps been already visited by him in the interval between the day of Pentecost and the date of this Epistle 1.

Thus he performed the double work enjoined him by Christ, that of tending and feeding His sheep. He tended them by his presence; and he fed them by his Epistles, which afford a constant supply of spiritual nourishment to the sheep of Christ 2.

VI. The mention of "Marcus his son," in the salutation from Babylon, supplies another illustration here.

"Marcus his son," is doubtless the Evangelist St. Mark, whose Gospel was written under the eye of St. Peter, his father in the faith 4.

This salutation itself proves, that St. Mark was known to the Asiatic Jewish Christians, whom St. Peter is addressing in the Epistle. This inference is confirmed by the mention of St. Mark by St. Paul, when writing from Rome in his Epistle to the Asiatic Church of Colosses. And it may probably be concluded from the request of St. Paul, writing from Rome to Timothy,—his own son in the faith, whom he had placed as Bishop at Ephesus,—to bring with him Mark, "for he is profitable to me for the ministry ";" that Mark was afterwards again at Rome, before the martyrdom of that Apostle.

Subsequently, St. Mark is presented to our notice in Ecclesiastical History as Bishop of Alexandria, the capital of Egypt, and as having been sent thither by St. Peter 7. Egypt and its neighbouring countries was the third great spiritual sheep-walk of the dispersed of Israel; and Alexandria was their central fold s. Accordingly, Egypt and the parts of Libya toward Cyrene are mentioned in the third place by the Historian of the Acts of the Apostles, in his enumeration of those to whom St. Peter preached on the Day of Pentecost.

St. Peter, as far as we know, never went in person into Egypt, nor did he ever write an Epistle to the inhabitants of that country; but he sent thither "Marcus his son," and fed the flock there by his instrumentality, both by his Gospel, written under St. Peter's superintendence, and by the pastoral ministrations of St. Mark, the first Bishop of Alexandria.

VII. Thus then, in another sense, St. Peter executed Christ's commission to him, "Feed My Sheep," "Tend My Sheep." And he did this in the same order as that which is set down by the Holy Spirit in the Acts of the Apostles, describing St. Peter's first preaching, as the Apostle of the Circumcision, when he had just been empowered to preach by the "Holy Ghost sent down from heaven "," and when he gathered in that spiritual harvest of souls, which may be regarded as the first-fruits of his labours.

The Tending of Christ's flock by personal presence, and preaching; the Feeding of Christ's flock with the healthful food of sound Doctrine, in the writing of Epistles, to endure for all ages after his decease 10; the continual Oversight of Christ's flock by the appointment of Chief Pastors to be continued in succession;—these were the acts of this Apostolic Shepherd, done in obedience to the pastoral charge of the Chief Shepherd and Bishop of our souls 11. And by doing these things St. Peter set an example to all Christian Bishops and Pastors, and ever cheers them with a blessed hope, that if they follow him, as he followed Christ, then, when "the chief Shepherd shall appear, they will receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away 12." May we not say, that this view, which exhibits St. Peter, the Apostle of Israel, preaching at Babylon in Assyria, and also sending "Marcus his Son" into Egypt, to found a Church there,—a Church which flourished greatly for some centuries, and was a glorious light to Christendom,—displays a fulfilment in part of the remarkable prophecy of Isaiah, "In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land 13?"

VIII. But the crowning act of St. Peter's pastoral Ministry still remained to be performed.

The Good Shepherd layeth down His life for the sheep 14, and Peter had received a commission from the Good Shepherd, "Follow thou Me 15." He would imitate the Good Shepherd, and obey

2 Christ commanded St. Peter ποιμαίνειν and βόσκειν (John xxi. 16, 17). The word ποιμαίνειν, to tend, implies the presence of the ποιμήν, or Shepherd. But βόσκειν is a work which he may perform when absent, as well as when present. St. Peter ἐποίμαινεν at Babylon; and when there he ἐβοσκεν those of Asia. He ἐποίμαινεν by his presence, and ἔβοσκεν by his writings. He tended Christ's sheep when he was alive; but he is always feeding

His command. When he had become old, he had provided for the oversight of the lost sheep of the house of Israel, scattered abroad in Parthia, in Asia, and in Egypt. But his commission was not yet fulfilled. It extended to the uttermost parts of the earth. He had been to the East, to Chaldea; he must also go to the West, to Italy; he had been to the Eastern Babylon; he must also go to the Western Babylon; he must visit Rome.

Here also he followed the order set down by the Apostolic Historian. There the mention of Mesopotamia is succeeded by the mention of Asia, and the mention of Asia is succeeded by that of Egypt, and the mention of Egypt is succeeded by that of Rome '. At Rome his course was to end.

Our Lord had charged him to prove his love to Him by feeding His lambs, and by tending His sheep, and by feeding His sheep?. And immediately after the delivery of this charge to St. Peter, Christ proceeded to utter a prophecy concerning the manner of St. Peter's death: "This He spake, signifying by what manner of death he would glorify God<sup>3</sup>. And when He had spoken this, He said, Follow thou Me." So it came to pass. After St. Peter had tended Christ's sheep by his presence and preaching, and had fed Christ's sheep by his doctrine and writings, and by the ministry of Marcus his son, it remained only that he should perform the finishing work of a Christian Shepherd, in following Him Who is the Good Shepherd, and Who showed His love for His sheep by laying down His life for them '. "Follow thou Me," were the words of Christ to him; and Christ pre-announced to Peter that he would have grace to follow His Master, not only in His death, but in the manner of it's, and would thus prove his love for the Great Shepherd of the Sheep, and would glorify-God.

This the blessed Apostle did, in the great city of the West, the Metropolis of the world 6— Rome. St. Peter himself declares that he foresaw his death approaching, and probably it was not without divine direction that he went to that place, where the evidence of his own love for Christ, in dying after His example, would be most edifying to the Christian Church. His Master had gone up to Jerusalem to die; St. Peter went for the same purpose to Rome.

Thus he fulfilled the pastoral commission which he had received from Christ, and completed the work which had been given him to do, and which had been delineated in outline by the divine record of his preaching on the Day of Pentecost, when he received the gifts of the Holy Ghost, which enabled him to feed the flock committed to his care.

IX. St. Peter's First Epistle derives special interest from his personal history.

One of its characteristics is its quiet tone of Christian gentleness and humility. This is the more remarkable, because the Author was distinguished among the Apostles by the eager forwardness and fervid vehemence of his character. This natural impetuosity seems to be subdued and chastened, in his Epistle, by an inward self-restraint. That self-restraint was probably produced by a recollection of the former confidence of his professions, and by the disastrous result of that selfreliance, in the hour of trial. He seems to write under the remembrance of the transactions of the High Priest's hall, at the arraignment of Christ's. His Epistle breathes the spirit of Christian meekness and humility, and of submission for Christ's sake. "If ye be reproached for Christ's sake, happy are ye"." "It any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf 10." Memorable words from one who had denied his Master.

The example of Christ's demeanour in the last days of His earthly ministry, which St. Peter had seen, seems to have wrought its full effect in his heart.

"Be ye clothed with humility," writes St. Peter". The word there used 12 by the Apostle has been aptly illustrated by a reference to our Saviour's action and demeanour, when He took a towel and girded Himself, like a servant, and poured water into a basin, and washed His Apostles' feet 13. St. Peter's language on that occasion, as recorded by St. John 14, shows that he was much affected by that gracious act of humility; and in his Epistle he seems to refer to it, and to commend it for

witnessed, is also presented as a pattern to his readers. "Even hereunto were ye called: for Christ also suffered for us, leaving you an example, that ye should follow His steps; Who did no sin. neither was guile found in His mouth; Who being reviled was not reviling 'again; when He was suffering, He was not threatening; but was committing Himself to Him that judgeth rightcously 2." And again, "It is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing, than for evil doing. For Christ also once suffered for sins, just for unjust, that He might bring us to God 3." And again, "Forasmuch then as Christ suffered for us in the flesh, arm ye yourselves also with the same mind 4."

All these exhortations come with special force from him who was a witness of Christ's sufferings 5, and received a solemn charge from Him, "Follow thou Me;" and who had been commanded by Christ to "strengthen his brethren "."

X. Other characteristics also of this Epistle receive light from St. Peter's personal history.

The Epistle itself contains frequent intimations of the near approach of "a fiery trial" of severe persecution; and of the exposure of Christians to indignities and sufferings for Christ'. But the Apostle was not dismayed by what he foresaw. He not only manifests a spirit of resignation under suffering, but even of joy and exultation. The mention of trial is ever coupled in this Epistle with the language of triumph. The source of that language is to be found in his personal intercourse with Christ.

St. Peter had been with Christ on the Mountain of Transfiguration. Our Lord then talked with Moses and Elias, who appeared in glory. He conversed with them concerning that future event which, though sorrowful and shameful in itself, was to be His passage to glory. He talked of His death 8 which He should accomplish at Jerusalem. After the accomplishment of that decease, St. Peter was a witness of Christ's victory and majesty in His Ascension into heaven.

Accordingly, in his Epistle, St. Peter views all the sufferings of Calvary as glorified by triumph. He sees Christ's decease, he sees his own decease, he sees the decease of all Christ's faithful followers, as invested with a heavenly radiance, by the light of the Transfiguration. He writes his Epistle in the joyful light of that prophetic Vision of Glory. And soon after the date of the Epistle 10 he went to Rome, and proved the sincerity of his words by dying joyfully for Christ.

At the time of the Transfiguration St. Peter had attempted to dissuade Christ from suffering ", and in the hour of human frailty he had shrunk from bearing witness to Christ, and denied his Master. But when he wrote this Epistle, he rejoiced in the prospect of suffering for Christ, because he saw the "glory that would follow 12;" and he teaches others to do the same. Great indeed was the spiritual change which had now been wrought in him by the Holy Ghost; and we may thence derive a blessed assurance, that the same Divine Comforter, whose perpetual presence was promised to the Church by Christ13, will never fail to shed His gracious influences on the soul, and inspire it with courage in distress.

XI. One of the most interesting characteristics of St. Peter's history is his connexion with St. John. In the Gospel history the riper age of St. Peter is blended in happy combination with the youthful years of St. John; and the ardour of the one is mellowed by the calmness of the other. The one is the Apostle of practical energy, the other of quiet contemplation. And both are joined together in tender bonds of fraternal love. What Mary and Martha were as sisters, St. John and St. Peter were as Apostles. By the side of the Lake of Galilee, after the Resurrection of Christ, they are seen together in the society of their risen Lord, Who uttered a prophecy concerning the future lot of both 14. And in the Acts of the Apostles, this holy pair of Apostolic friends and brothers is joined together by the Holy Spirit in a sacred union. They go up to the Temple together; they pray together; they preach to the people together; they are sent to prison together; they are delivered together; they go to Samaria together 15. Then, as far as the Sacred History is concerned, their union seems to cease. But there is reason to believe that this union subsists for more clearly than the agrist, the sustained meekness of our Great Exemplar, and show more forcibly the deep impression made thereby on the writer's mind.

ever in their Epistles in Holy Scripture. St. Peter wrote his Epistle from Parthia to the Churches of St. John's province—Asia Minor; and St. John, it would seem, wrote from Asia to the Christians of Parthia, after St. Peter's death. And if this was so, then this circumstance confirms the arguments already adduced, to prove that the Babylon of St. Peter's first Epistle is the Assyrian city of that name. The evidence of this Epistolary intercourse will be produced hereafter 1; in the mean time, let it be enough to have submitted it here for the reader's consideration.

XII. This Epistle, also, possesses a special interest and value in regard to the relation of St. Peter, the Apostle of the Circumcision, to St. Paul, the Apostle of the Gentiles.

St. Peter received the Keys from Christ<sup>2</sup>: and he was the first to unlock the door of the Church to the Jewish and Gentile world.

He admitted the Jews of the Dispersions, by the ministry of the Word and Sacraments<sup>3</sup>, on the Day of Pentecost. He afterwards admitted the Gentiles in the house of Cornelius at Cæsarea<sup>4</sup>.

After this initiatory work had been performed by St. Peter, a division of missionary labour was made between him and St. Paul.

"He that wrought effectually in Peter to the Apostleship of the Circumcision," says St. Paul', was mighty in me also toward the Gentiles "."

About five years after this partition, a difference arose between St. Paul and St. Peter, at the Syrian Antioch.

Whether St. Peter was Bishop of Antioch 7 at this time, is uncertain; but he had great influence in that city. In a moment of vacillation he yielded to the solicitations of those, who, in their zeal for the ceremonial Law, desired to impose it on the Gentile Christians; and he withdrew himself from the communion of those who declined to receive that Law as necessary to salvation.

In this critical emergency, St. Paul came forward to plead the cause of Evangelical Liberty, and to maintain the plenary and all-sufficient efficacy of Christ's Sacrifice, as the only cause of Justification, and to demonstrate the transitory and preparatory character of the Levitical Ritual, and its fulfilment in Christ; and he openly resisted and rebuked St. Peter <sup>8</sup>.

About four years after this difference, St. Paul, in the vindication of his own Apostolic claims, and in the maintenance of the doctrine of Christian Liberty, and of Justification by faith in Christ, was constrained to make a report of the circumstances of that controversy in writing his Epistle to the Churches of Galatia; which had been seduced by Judaizing Teachers from the foundation, on which he had settled them, of faith in Christ Crucified <sup>9</sup>.

Here was a severe trial for St. Peter.

He, to whom Christ had given the Keys; he who had been admitted to His nearest intimacy and most private retirements; he, whose house at Capernaum had harboured Christ <sup>10</sup>; he who had preached to the Jews and Jewish strangers on the Day of Pentecost; he whose preaching had been sealed with sanctions and benedictions from heaven; he who had been twice miraculously delivered from prison by an Angel; he who had opened the door of the Church to the Gentiles; he was publicly reproved at Antioch—perhaps his own Episcopal city—by one who had not been of the Twelve, and had been a Persecutor of the Church; and the narrative of this rebuke had been communicated to the world by his reprover in an Epistle addressed to the Churches of Galatia, and was openly read in Christian Congregations.

Yet further, many persons, especially the Judaizing Christians, were jealous of St. Paul's influence, and were zealous for St. Peter. They were desirous of claiming him as their champion, and of setting him up as a rival to St. Paul. And the fervid spirit and impassioned temper of St. Peter may have led them to expect that he would have been stung to the quick by the rebuke of St. Paul, and would be ready to accept the leadership which his partizans would have assigned to him.

What, then, was the conduct of the blessed Apostle St. Peter under these circumstances?

This is an interesting inquiry; and, happily, St. Peter's Epistles supply the answer.

The question debated between him and St. Paul was concerning Christian Liberty; and the circumstances of that debate had been narrated by St. Paul, the Apostle of the Gentiles, in his Epistle to the Gentile Christians of Galatia, and were doubtless familiar to other Churches of Asia.

St. Peter, the Apostle of the Circumcision, wrote this his First Epistle to the Jewish Christians of Asia—"Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia."

In it he delivers a memorable precept concerning Christian Liberty.

That sentence is as follows; it consists of three clauses—

1. " As free;

2. "And not using your liberty for a cloke of maliciousness;

3. "But as servants of God 1."

Turn now to St. Paul's Epistle to the Gentile Christians of Galatia.

There also we find a precept concerning Christian Liberty. That sentence is as follows; it also consists of three clauses—

1. "Brethren, ye were called to Liberty;

2. "Only use not your Liberty as an occasion to the flesh;

3. "But by love serve one another 2.

Thus we see in both these Epistles the same triple division; the same assertion of Liberty; the same caution against its abuse; the same rule for its use.

The resemblance between these paragraphs from these two Epistles is more remarkable, because they were addressed by the two Apostles to the same Countries; and because they concern that very question of Christian Liberty, on which those two Apostles had formerly been at variance; and because the history of that altercation had been communicated by one of them, St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Galatians, who are also specially addressed by St. Peter in this Epistle.

St. Peter therefore, we see, did not manifest any resentment toward St. Paul for the rebuke given at Antioch, and for the publication of its history to the world. He frankly comes forward and adopts St. Paul's own language on that very question which had been the subject of their dispute.

Here is a noble specimen of victory over self, and of generous confession of error; here is a beautiful practical application of his own precepts concerning Christian humility, meekness, and gentleness, and of love for the sheep whom Christ purchased with His blood.

Would to God that they who call themselves St. Peter's successors would copy St. Peter's example!

Here also was clear evidence to the Jewish and Gentile Christians, and to the world in every age, that the two great Apostles, of the Circumcision and of the Gentiles, who had formerly differed at Antioch, were now in perfect unity with each other, in preaching the great doctrines of Evangelical Liberty, and of the all-sufficient efficacy of the Death of Christ; and in guarding their hearers against abusing that Doctrine, and in exhorting them to regulate their use of Liberty by the law of Love.

XIII. Again; St. Paul had addressed another Epistle to the greatest Gentile Christian city of those Asiatic regions to which St. Peter was now writing—the Epistle to the Ephesians.

The Holy Spirit, who had spoken by St. Paul in that Epistle, now speaks by St. Peter to the Jewish Christians of the same country. He proclaims here the same doctrines; and applies them in the same way to the inculcation of the same duties, and almost in the same language as He had done by the agency of St. Paul in the Epistle to the Ephesians.

He declares, that our Regeneration, and filial Adoption in Christ, by the Love of our heavenly Father, sending His only begotten Son to take our nature, and to incorporate us into Himself, and to reconcile us to God by His blood shed for us on the Cross, are the very source and well-spring of all Christian Duty, of man to God, and of man to man; of subjects to kings; of servants to masters; of wives to husbands; and of husbands to wives; and are the origin of all personal holiness, and of all comfort under sufferings on earth, and of all hope of future glory and endless felicity in heaven.

This great argument had been handled by the Apostle of the Gentiles, St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Gentile Christians of Asia1; it is now treated by the Apostle of the Circumcision, St. Peter, in this Epistle to the Jewish Christians of the same country 2.

Thus the consent of Apostolic Teaching on the fundamental verities of Christian Faith and Practice is manifested to the world.

XIV. This brotherly unity exhibits itself also in incidents of a private character.

The person chosen by St. Peter to be the bearer of this Epistle to the Asiatic Churches is Silvanus 3. Silvanus, had been taken by St. Paul as his companion in his second missionary tour in Asia '; and he had been associated by that Apostle with himself in writing his two earliest Epistles 5.

St. Peter's choice of Silvanus as a messenger for the conveyance of this Epistle to the Jewish Christians of Asia Minor, and his designation of him "as the faithful brother," are happy expressions of his own love, not only to Silvanus, but to St. Paul.

The value of this testimony is enhanced by the addition of another name to that of Silvanus, at the close of this Epistle. Silvanus, "the faithful brother," is joined with "Marcus my son "."

Some years before, St. Paul had declined to take Mark with him into Asia, because Mark "had formerly departed from him in Pamphylia';" and the person who was then taken by St. Paul with him into Asia, in the place of Mark, was no other than Silas,—as he is called in the Acts,—or, as he is called by St. Paul, Silvanus 8. But now St. Mark had returned to the work, and was in much esteem with St. Paul'; and he is honoured by St. Peter with the affectionate title-"Marcus my son."

Here then we have another indication of the fraternal relation of St. Peter to St. Paul; and of the graces of love, joy, and peace shed by the Holy Spirit on their hearts, and on those of their friends; graces which soothed every angry passion, and joined them together in Christ.

XV. The Second Epistle of St. Peter was written soon after the first, and it was addressed to the same persons as the First Epistle 10; and the reference which he makes at its close to "all the Epistles" of his "beloved brother Paul," and the testimony which he bears to his wisdom, and to the divine inspiration of those Epistles 11, complete the evidence of St. Peter's affectionate regard for the Apostle of the Gentiles; and of his perfect agreement with him in the holy doctrine which he taught.

XVI. Finally, Almighty God, Who had called these two great Pastors of his flock, and had assigned to each of them his proper work, in tending and feeding the sheep which He had purchased to Himself with the precious blood of His dear Son, was pleased to bring them together in their old age to the same place 12.

That place was the capital of the world, Rome 13. The Apostle of the Circumcision was united

Heb. 12. 24. 2 Pet. 1. 2.

CH. I. 1. Πέτρος ἀπόστολος] Peter, an Apostle of Jesus Christ, to the elect sojourners of the dispersion of Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia.

Concerning the authorship and design of this Epistle see the Introduction.

They, to whom St. Peter writes, are addressed as elect; The Jews gloried in being the elect people of God (see Deut.

iv. 37; vii. 6. Ps. cv. 6. 43); and St. Peter assures them that by becoming Christians, they do not cease to be God's favoured people, but are a chosen generation in Christ. (See ii. 9.)

He also declares that they are at home in Christ's Church, although they are sojourners and strangers in the world (παρεπίδημος = πάροικος, Hesych.), being removed far away from Jerusalem and Judæa, as their fathers were, by their exile in Babylon, from which place St. Peter is now writing; and although they are scattered abroad in many heathen lands.

Upon this their condition as pilgrims in this world he grounds an admonition to them as strangers and sojourners (ii. 11; cp. Heb. xi. 13) to abstain from fleshly lusts, having their conversation, or intercourse, honest among the Gentiles, among whom they are commingled in their Dispersions, and to set their affections on their heavenly inheritance, their "promised land" above.

Cp. Phil. iii. 20. Heb. xiii. 14.

He addresses them all as elect, according to the foreknowledge of God; and thus he teaches, that all members of the visible Church, who profess the Faith, and partake in the Sacraments of Christ, are to be regarded by men as elect, and foreknown by God in Christ. Vocation presupposes election; and wherever we see men called, we are to presume them to be elect.

In the same manner St. Paul addresses the Ephesian Christians, as chosen in Christ by God the Father, before the foundation of the world, and as predestined to the adoption of sons in the Beloved, according to the gracious purpose of God's will in Him. See on Eph. i. 3-5, and the Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans, p. 195.

But though the members of the Visible Church are elect, and are addressed by the Apostle as such, they are not yet finally assured of salvation; but they are exhorted by St. Peter "to give diligence to make their calling and election sure."

(2 Pet. i. 10.)

- ἐκλεκτοῖς—διασπορῶς] to the elect—of the dispersion. Observe the contrast: They are like seeds scattered (διεσπαρ-μένοι) every where among the Gentiles, and yet they are picked out, as it were, by the divine mercy, and gathered together as a chosen Seed in Christ.

— Πόντου] of Pontus; placed first among the Asiatic regions here specified; whence this First Epistle of St. Peter is cited by some ancient Fathers as addressed "ad Ponticos." Tertullian, Scorp. c. 12. Cyprian, Lib. Test. iii. 36, 37.

— Πόντου, Γαλατίας, κ.τ.λ.] of Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia. The Jewish Christians to whom St. Peter writes in his two Epistles (as is affirmed by the ancient Expositors, Euseb. iii. 4, Didymus in loc., Hieron. Cat. Scr. i., Ecumenius, and others) are specially those of the Asiatic dispersion (see here and 2 Pet. iii, 1); and he enumerates them in the order in which they would occur to the mind of a writer addressing them from the east. (See below on v. 13.) This consideration confirms the opinion, that Babylon, from which this Epistle is dated (v. 13), is not any city west of Asia Minor, as Rome, but the literal, Assyrian, Babylon. See Introduction, p. 37.

This observation is illustrated and confirmed by a passage in the writings of St. Peter's brother Apostle, St. John. St. John, writing his Revelation from Patmos to the Christian Churches of Asia, specifies them in their geographical order, from West to East (see Rev. i. 11; ii. 1; iii. 14, inclusive). Here they are reckoned by St. Peter in the opposite order, i. e. from East to West. St. John was writing from the West of Asia, namely, from Patmos; St. Peter is writing from the East, namely, from Babylon. Hence the difference.

St. Peter, on the Day of Pentecost, at Jerusalem, had preached to the various Dispersions of Jews who had come up to Jerusalem to that Feast. (Acts ii. 9—14.) Those several Dispersions are thus enumerated in the Acts of the Apostles:—

Parthians, Medes, &c., i.e. the Babylonish Dispersion.
 Cappadocia, Pontus, Asia; i. e. the Asiatic Dispersion.
 Ægypt, and the parts of Libya toward Cyrene; i. e.

the Alexandrine Dispersion.

(4) Strangers of Rome; those especially which had been carried thither by Pompey the Great. See above, note on Acts ii. 9-11.

St. Peter, as a wise master-builder, is now consolidating the work which, by the aid of the Holy Ghost, he had begun at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost. He did this as follows:—

(1) He went in person to Babylon (v. 13), and edified the Assyrian Dispersion of Parthians, Medes, and Elamites, and dwellers in Mesopotamia.

(2) From Babylon, he wrote this Epistle to the Asiatic Dispersion of the strangers scattered abroad in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, and Asia, i. e. Proconsular Asia. See above on Acts xvi. 6; xix. 10; and below on Rev. i. 4.
(3) He afterwards sent St. Mark, Marcus his son (v. 13), to preach to the Egyptian, or Alexandrine, Dispersion. See above, Introduction to St. Mark's Gospel, p. 112.

(4) Finally, he himself strengthened the faith of the Roman Dispersion, by visiting Rome, and dying as a martyr there.

Thus St. Peter completed the work which he had begun on the day of Pentecost. Thus this Fisher of men (Luke v. 10) drew the net of the Gospel through the sea of the world to the shore of eternal life, and enclosed therein a large multitude, and finished the labour, symbolized by the miraculous draught of fishes, after the Resurrection of Christ. See above on John xxi. 1-14; and Introduction to this Epistle, pp. 35-40.

2. ἐν ἁγιασμῷ Πνεύματος] by the sanctification of the Holy Spirit. See next note.

- είς ὑπακοὴν καὶ ῥαντισμὸν αίματος] unto hearkening to the Gospel, and joyful acceptance of it (see Rom. i. 5; xv. 18; and below, vv. 14. 22), and unto the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ. good to men; but ye are elect, not to any presumptuous self-assurance, much less to any recklessness of living; but ye are elect to hearkening unto His word; ye are elect to obedience; or, as St. Paul expresses it (Eph. i. 3—5), ye are elect and predestined to holiness in love, to the praise and glory of His grace; ye are elect to the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ, which was once shed on the cross, and was actually and personally applied to you by the sanctifying operation of the Holy Spirit, and was sprinkled on you, the covenanted people of God; as the blood of bulls and goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean under the Law, sanctified to the purifying of the flesh. See Heb. ix. 12-14, and compare x. 22. Exod. xxiv. 8. That blood was sprinkled upon you, and was made effectual for your salvation, when you professed your faith in Christ, Who sprinkleth many nations (Isa. lii. 15), and cleanseth from all sin (1 John i. 7); and when you received the Sacrament of Baptism, which derives its efficacy from Christ's blood; and it is ever and anon sprinkled on you, at your sincere repentance, in the administration of the Holy Communion of His body and blood, and saves you, the true Israel of God, from the wrath to come, as the blood of the Paschal Lamb, when sprinkled on the lintels and door-posts of the Israelites, procured their deliverance from destruction (see Exod. xii. 22, 23); and it makes atonement with God for your sins, as the sprinkling of the blood of the sinofferings, which was sprinkled seven times before the Lord, i. c. towards the veil (Lev. iv. 4-6); and on the great day of atonement was sprinkled within the Veil, upon, and before, the Mercy Seat. Lev. xvi. 14. For, as St. Paul says to the Ephesians, they have redemption through His blood, even the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of His grace.

These blessings which flow from the love of God the Father, through the mediation of God the Son, are applied personally to each believer by the sanctification of the Spirit,—God the Male Chest. Holy Ghost. Thus, as is observed by Cassiodorus, each of the Three Persons of the ever-Blessed Trinity is here presented to us by the Apostle, as co-operating in the work of our salvation. Compare the words of St. Paul, 2 Thess. ii. 13, " God from the beginning chose you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth, whereunto he called you by our Gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ," and Eph. ii. 17, 18; and note on 2 Cor. xiii. 14.

The preamble of St. Paul's Epistle to the greatest Church of Asia, Ephesus, bears a remarkable resemblance, in the exuberant flow, and majestic splendour of its diction, and in the sublime grandeur of its substance, to that of this Epistle of his brother Apostle, St. Peter, to the Jewish Christians of the same These two Epistles throughout present clear evidence of the unity of teaching of the two Apostles on the doctrines of Universal Redemption, Election, and Predestination. See above on Eph. i. 1-8, and the Introduction to this Epistle of St. Peter, p. 43, and below, Introduction to the Second Epistle.

— χάρις—πληθυνθείη] Grace to you and Peace be multiplied. This salutation of the Apostle from Babylon recalls to the mind the greeting sent forth from the same City to all its provinces, by the two Kings of the two successive Dynasties,—the Assyrian and Medo-Persian,—under the influence of the Prophet Daniel, and other faithful men of the first Dispersion. They proclaimed in their royal Epistles the supremacy of the One true God, the God of Israel. "Nebuchadnezzar the king to all people . . . to you Peace be multiplied" (εἰρἡνη ὁμῖν πληθυν-θείη, Dan. iv. 1). Darius the king wrote to all people, "to you Peace be multiplied." (Dan. vi. 25.) See the notes there.

Daniel and the three children turned the hearts of Nebuchadnezzar and Darius, and moved them to declare the glory of the true God in Letters written "to all people." The Apostle St. Peter now carries on the work of the ancient Prophets, and writes an Epistle from Babylon, by which he builds up the Christian Sion in all ages of the world (cp. 2 Pet. i. 1, 2, and below on v. 13), and proclaims to all, "Peace be multiplied unto you!" See above, p. 37. On this Oriental salutation, very suitable to be used in an Epistle from the East, see Schoettgen here. Grace is put before Peace, because Peace is the fruit of Grace.

3. εὐλογητόs] Blessed be God, Who is also the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and Who of His great mercy has begotten us again to a living hope, through the Resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.

God the Father is the Fountain of all Blessing; and all Blessing descends through God the Son; and is applied by God the Holy Ghost; and so St. Paul teaches, Eph. i. 3-17; cp. note above, 2 Cor. xiii. 14.

St. Peter presents to us the three several ways in which we are sons of God. He is our Father—

(1) By Creation. (See v. 2.)
(2) By our New Birth in Baptism, when the Blood of Christ was sprinkled on us, and we were delivered from death. (See v. 2.)

(3) And now we, who have been already born again into a life of Grace, are born again into a living hope of future and everlasting Glory, by the Resurrection of Christ.

By that Resurrection, we, who are in Christ, our Represenand accepted; for He rose again for our Justification. (See on Rom. iv. 25.) We are already the sons of God, and "we know that, when He appears, we shall be like Him." (1 John iii. 2.) We have been baptized into His death,—that is, into conformity to it, and to a participation in its benefits; and if we have become connate, or born together (σύμφυτοι), with Him by the likeness of His Death, we shall also be born together with Him in the likeness of His Resurrection. See above on Rom. vi. 5. Cp. Bp. Andrewes, ii. pp. 198. 266. 322; and Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. i. p. 50; and on the analogies between Birth, and Baptism, and Resurrection, see below, Rev. xx. 5.

The state of death in which we once were, "having no hope, and being without God in the world" (Eph. ii. 12), "and having fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness" (Eph. v. 11).

This is the hope which springs forth from the Grave, by the Resurrection of Christ our "First-fruits" (1 Cor. xv. 20), Who was dead and is alive, and liveth for evermore" (Rev. i. 18).

This hope therefore never dies, as earthly hopes do; and it is not like the hope of those among your fathers, who looked only for an earthly Canaan (Theophyl.), but the hope of the true Israel is a hope which is ever growing, till it is consummated in everlasting fruition in the heavenly Jerusalem; and by "this hope we are saved" (Rom. viii. 24).

3, 4.] On these two verses see the exposition of Bp. Andrewes, Sermons, vol. ii. pp. 364-382.

4. είς κληρονομίαν άφθαρτον] to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, unfading; the first of these epithets concerns the inner being of the inheritance; the second, its unalloyed being; the third, the continuance of its beauty. The Heavenly Inheritance is perfect in every one of these three respects; but all earthly inheritances are imperfect in them all. Cp. Bp. Andrewes, The inheritance of the earthly Canaan was an object of earnest desire to your fathers; and they were settled in the allotments of their κληρονομία by Joshua; but you, though scattered abroad, have a better inheritance than they, an inheritance typified by theirs, and one in which the true Joshua will settle you for ever. Didymus (the master of S. Jerome) in his note on this passage says, " Since the inheritance which the Apostle here propounds to our desires is in heaven, and is eternal, surely they (the Millenarians), who put before us the hope of an earthly Jerusalem for a thousand years, propose to us what is unsatisfying and vain."

τετηρημένην] reserved in heaven for you, or unto you.

The Inheritance is reserved; therefore do not look for it now; but wait patiently, and strive earnestly for it; and it is reserved in heaven, and therefore it is safe from all changes and chances of earth (cp. 2 Tim. iv. 8). God Himself is your portion. Here is another contrast to the hopes of those who have their portion in this life. Ps. xvii. 14. Cp. Bp. Sanderson's Sermons, i. p. 379. 5. τοὺς ἐν δυνάμει Θεοῦ φρουρουμένους] you who are being guarded by the power of God; as sheep are safely guarded in a fold against the wolf; or, as citizens are securely garrisoned in a fortress against the enemy, so ye are protected from your ghostly Enemy by the power of God, in the Fold and City of His Church. "The name of the Lord is a strong tower: the righteous runneth into it, and is safe" (Prov. xviii. 10). Salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks (Isa. xxvi. 10). And ye are guarded, not as prisoners to be brought out είς ὅλεθρον, to execution, but ye are guarded for salvation; ye are caught and kept f Rom. 12, 12, 2 Cor. 4, 17, ch. 5, 10, Wisd. 3, 5. g Prov. 17. 3. Faith is a second cause of your preservation; because it applies the first cause, which is the power of God. Cp. 1 John v. 4, and Abp. Leighton here. And see above on Phil. iv. 7.

6. ἐν ῷ ἀγαλλιᾶσθε] in which ye exult, though now for a little while, if need be-for ye are not chastened by God without need, but for your profit—and He doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men (Lam. iii. 33. Heb. xii. 10),—ye were grieved in manifold temptations.

Ye exult in the last season (cp. Ecumen.), because ye do not live in the present season, but ye look forward, and dwell by faith on the glory that shall be revealed in you hereafter (cp. v. 8), and ye compare its greatness with the light afflictions of this transitory time (Rom. viii. 18), which lead you on to, and qualify you for, a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory (2 Cor. iv. 17), and ye "rejoice and are exceeding glad," even in persecution, because "great is your reward in heaven" (Matt. v. 10). "Blessed are ye that weep now, for ye shall laugh" (Luke vi. 21).

ποικίλοις πειρασμοίς] by divers temptations, see James i. 2. By this phrase and by many others in the beginning of this Epistle, St. Peter connects his own Epistle with that of his brother Apostle, St. James. See Introduction to it, p. 12. Some of these parallelisms between the two Epistles may be cited here.

St. Peter does not mention St. James by name; indeed the writers of Holy Scripture seem purposely to have abstained from lauding one another with personal eulogies. St. Peter's reference to St. Paul in his second Epistle (iii. 15), is an exception, produced by special considerations which render it more remarkable. See the note on that passage.

But St. Peter, in this Epistle, adopts much of the substance, and often the words, of St. James; and thus he shows his reverence for that Apostle, and commends his Epistle to the thankful acceptance and pious meditation of the Church; and gives a precept and example of unity to all Christians, and especially to Christian Ministers.

This remark may be extended to the allusions which St.

Peter makes to St. Paul's Epistles.

This silent interweaving of one Apostolic Epistle with another, and of one Gospel with another (see Introduction to the Four Gospels, p. xlv), may serve to remind the Christian reader, that all the Books of the New Testament form one harmonious whole. They are like the coat of Christ, woven throughout, without seam (John xix. 23). Although written by the instrumentality of different men, they come from the same Divine Author,the Holy Ghost.

7. Ίνα τὸ δοκίμιον] in order that the trial of your faith, being much more precious than gold, which is perishing (even in the using; cp. John vi. 27. Col. ii. 22), but is tried by fire, and is purified by it, and passes through the fire, and endures (cp. Job xxiii. 10. Prov. xvii. 3, and note above on 2 Cor. viii. 2), may be found to redound to the praise, and honour, and glory of God, the Giver of all the graces, by which you endure trial; and to your own praise and honour, and glory, and endless felicity in the day of the revelation of Jesus Christ the Judge of all.

Λ, C have πολυτιμότερον here, and so Griesb., Scholz, Tisch., Lach., Alf. That form is, indeed, in harmony with the style of St. Peter, who loves composite words. But B (see Mai), G, K, and Vulg., and the major part of the cursive MSS., and Ctement, Origen, and the other Fathers, have πολύ τιμιώτερον, and see the passage quoted below from S. Polycarp's Martyrdom.

Observe, it is the trial itself, δοκίμιον, which is said here to be more precious. Compare 2 Cor. viii. 2, and James i. 3, "the trial  $(\delta o \kappa(\mu \iota o v))$  of your faith by temptations worketh patience."  $\Delta o \kappa(\mu \iota o v)$  is the test or touchstone by which a thing is tried (see the examples in Wetstein, p. 682). Hence it describes afflictions and calamities which are the trials of virtue; as here.

Some Interpreters suppose δοκίμιον here to mean the thing proved and purged by trial; the smelted ore of faith, tested and cleansed by the fire of affliction. But this seems to be rather a strained exposition.  $\Delta o\kappa l \mu \iota \sigma \nu$  is the trial; it is not the residuum after suffering, but it is the suffering itself, which tries and proves  $\delta$  costμα $\delta$ (ε) the faith. St. Peter's words seem to be formed on those of the Psalmist, "Precious (τίμιοs) in the sight of the Lord is the death of His Saints" (Ps. cxvi. 15). The Apostlo appears to allude here to that passage, and to adopt the word τίμιος from it. Our very sufferings, which are our trials, even they are precious in God's sight, Who knows to what they lead. The trial, says Bp. Andrewes (v. p. 443), of our faith is more precious than gold, as in Abraham; or when He trieth our patience, as in Job; for while we live in this world, we are made a spectacle to men and angels (1 Cor. iv. 9).

Do not therefore imagine, that even your present trials are not glorious. They make you like to Christ, they are seen and prized by God. He putteth all your tears into His bottle, they are all noted in His book (Ps. lvi. 8. 10), and will one day redound to your everlasting glory.

St. Peter acted in the spirit of this declaration when he departed from the presence of the Jewish Council, rejoicing that he was counted worthy to suffer for Christ's sake (Acts v. 41). For Christ had said, "Blessed are ye when men shall persecute you, Rejoice, and be exceeding glad" (Matt. v. 11, 12). And in a like spirit, Paul and Silas in prison, at midnight, sang praises to God (Acts xvi. 25), and St. Paul glories in tribulations (Rom. v. 3), and is exceeding joyful in them (2 Cor. vii. 4), and takes pleasure in persecutions for Christ (2 Cor. xii. 10). And St. Peter himself bids them rejoice, in that they are partakers of Christ's sufferings,-and if any one suffer as a Christian, let him glorify God (1 Pet. iv. 13-16).

In a like spirit of Evangelical piety, one of St. Peter's successors at Antioch, the Martyr S. Ignatius, calls his chains, his "spiritual pearls" (Ignat. Ephes. ii.), and S. Cyprian, speaking of the dress of Virgins, says, that when Christian women suffer Martyrdom with faith and courage, then their sufferings are like "pretiosa monilia," costly bracelets. The garb of suffering for Christ is a robe of beauty, precious in God's sight; far more levely than any gilded attire; and therefore the instruments of torture by which the Martyrs suffered death (such as the sword of St. James the Great, and the fuller's club of St. James the Less, and the sword of St. Paul, the cross of St. Peter, and the lance of St. Thomas, and the gridiron of St. Laurence), are associated with them for ever in their pictures as the noblest badges of their glory. Cp. note below, v. 8.

This passage seems to be imitated by Hermas, "Aurea pars

The words of St. Peter are appropriately inserted by the Church of England in her Office for the Visitation of the Sick.

8. δν οὐκ ἰδόντες, ἀγαπᾶτε] Whom though ye saw Him not on earth, as I have done, ye love, as I do, John xxi. 15-17.

Elz. has εἰδότες with A, G, K, but ἰδόντες is in K, B, C, and several cursives, and in the Syriac, Æthiopic, and Arabic Versions; and St. Peter seems to refer to our Lord's saying, "Blessed are they who have not seen, and yet have believed" (John xx. 29), which he himself heard; and S. Polycarp thus quotes this passage in his Epistle to the Philippians (cap. i.), eis υν, ουκ ιδόντες (where the old translation has videntes) πισδυ, οὺκ ἰδόντες (where the old translation has videntes) πιστεύετε, πιστεύοντες δὲ ἀγαλλιᾶσθε χαρᾶ ἀνεκλαλήτφ καὶ δεδοξασμένη, εἰδ ἡν πολλοὶ ἐπιθυμοῦσιν εἰσελθεῖν, εἰδότες ὅτι χάριτί ἐστε σεσωσμένοι, οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων, ἀλλὰ θελήματι Θεοῦ διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. Cp. Eph. ii. 8, 9. It is worthy of remark that this Apostolic father, S. Polycarp, a disciple of St. John, and a Bishop of a Church in Asia, Smyrna, blends together two passages from two Apostolic Epistles to the Christians in Asia,—namely, from this Epistle of St. Peter, and from St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians. On S. Polycarp's references to this Epistle, see further below on v. 13.

S. Irenæus (iv. 9. 2) also, in the West, refers to this passage, "Petrus ait in Epistolâ suâ, Quem non videntes diligitis." And again (v. 7), "Quem, quùm non videritis, diligitis; in quem, nunc quoque, non videntes, creditis, credentes autem exultabitis gaudio inenarrabili."

χαρά-δεδοξασμένη] with joy unspeakable and glorified: with joy unulterable,—so great is it; and with joy even now invested with glory; such as shone in the face of the first Martyr St. Stephen, at his passion (Acts vi. 15), and such as shone in the raiment and countenance of our Lord Himself, which St. Peter saw, when Christ was conversing with Moses and Elias concerning

His Death. See on Luke ix. 31.

St. Peter throughout this Epistle represents the present sufferings of the Christian as occasions for joy; he seems to write the Epistle with a vivid recollection of the glory which he saw at the Transfiguration, which revealed the splendour of Christ made perfect by sufferings, and of all Christians who suffer for Him; and which is reflected upon them, even in this life, by lively Faith in Him. Therefore, he adds, that even now they are receiving the end of their faith, the salvation of their souls. Even whilst they are sowing in tears, they see, with the eye of Faith, the future harvest of joy; even now they reap it with the hand of llope. See above, Introduction, pp. 40, 41.

He now proceeds to describe the blessedness of that Harvest of salvation through Christ; and proves its felicity by two argu-

(1) that this salvation was the object of the earnest inquiries, and longing desire, of all the Ancient Prophets; and,

(2) that the Angels of heaven themselves desire to stoop down and look into it.

VOL. II.-PART IV.

Be sure, therefore, that the Gospel of Christ is not, as some of your Jewish fellow-countrymen allege, a novelly. No, the Hebrew Prophets inquired after it, and foretold it. And it is a thing of surpassing excellence, because they were employed in ministering to it; and the Angels of heaven are engaged in admiring it. Cp. Abp. Leighton here.

9. σωτηρίαν ψυχῶν] the salvation of your souls. Your enemies imagine, that you lose your ψυχάς (lives) by dying for Christ; but by so doing you save them. Matt. xvi. 25. Mark viii. 35.

10. περί ήs σωτηρίας | Concerning which salvation the Prophets, who prophesied concerning the grace of the Gospel which has come to you, did seek and search diligently. The Prophets of old prophesied, but were not enabled fully to understand and interpret their own prophecies. "To say that the Scriptures, and the things contained in them, can have no farther meaning, than those persons thought or had, who first recited or wrote them, is evidently saying that those persons were the original, proper, and sole authors of those books, that is, that they are not inspired."

The question is not, what the persons, who wrote, meant, but what God meant, Who wrote by them.

God revealed Himself to the Prophets of old, not so much for the sake of themselves, but for others who were to come after them. Cp. Hengstenberg, Christology, §§ 238. 249, on the Nature of Prophecy, and the present Editor's Five Lectures on the Interpretation of the Bible, Lect. iii. See below on 2 Pet. i.

The Prophets had some intimation of the grace and glory which was to be revealed afterwards in the Gospel, which has been preached to you; and they were informed that they were ministering to you, and not to themselves, those things which are now declared to you by those who have preached the Gospel to you by the Holy Spirit Who spake of old in the Prophets, but has now been sent down from heaven to us. So great are your

11, 12. ¿peuv@yres] searching. So great is the blessedness of the salvation purchased for you by the sufferings of Christ, and to be obtained by you, treading in the road of suffering, which led Him to glory, that the ancient Prophets searched and inquired diligently, what season, and what manner of season (whether one of distress or joy, Theophyl.), the Spirit of Christ that was in them was signifying, when it was testifying beforehand the in them was signly ging, when it least easy ging between the sufferings that were appointed for Christ (Winer, p. 174), and were to be laid upon Christ (cis  $Xp(\sigma\tau)v$ ), on whom "God laid the iniquities of us all;" for, "He bare our griefs and carried our sorrows" (Isa. liii. 4-6); and the glories (plural, both of Him and of us) that would follow after, as fruits and rewards of those sufferings: see Phil. ii. 8, 9. Here is the clue to the right inter-pretation of the Hebrew Prophets. See above, the Introductions to Isaiah and to the Minor Prophets.

The Spirit of CHRIST, Who is the everlasting Logos, and declares God's will (John i. 1. 18) by the Holy Ghost, spake in the Prophets concerning His sufferings and glory. "The divine Prophets," says Ignatius (ad Magnes. 8), "lived according to Jesus Christ, being inspired by His grace." The Prophets preannounced the Gospel, and had their hopes fixed on Christ, and waited for Him, and by belief in Him they were saved. They were in the unity of Christ; and were attested by Christ, and were numbered together with us in the Gospel, which is the common hope of all. S. Ignatius (ad Phil. 5). Cp. Justin Martyr, Apolog. i. p. 49; ii. p. 76; and compare Didymus here, who refers to Matt. xiii. 17. Heb. xi. 26.

Here therefore is a clear proof of Christ's Pre-existence and Godhead. "The very Truth itself, the Son of God, the Mediator of God and Man, the Man Christ Jesus, spake first by the Prophets, then by Himself, and afterwards by His Apostles," says

S. Augustine, de Civ. Dei (xi. 2).
St. Peter here asserts the procession of the Holy Ghost from the Son, as well as from the Father. See Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. viii. pp. 601, 602, and notes; and above, notes on John xv. 26, and Gal. iv. 6. Rom. viii. 9.

The Holy Spirit presignified by the Prophets that the Messiah should exifer, and so enter into His glory. (Luke xxiv. 26.)

St. Peter himself had once hear slory to admit this tout.

St. Peter himself had once been slow to admit this truth.

"That be far from Thee!" he had said to Christ, and had been rebuked by Him for that remonstrance. (Matt. xvi. 22, 23.)

But his eyes were now enlightened by the Holy Ghost; and he who had endea-oured to dissuade Christ from suffering, rose up after the day of Pentecost, and declared to all the people at Jerusalem, that "these things which God before had showed by Jerusalem, that "these things which does before had showed by the mouth of all His Prophets that Christ should suffer, He hath so fulfilled" (see Acts iii. 18). He now preaches this truth to the world; and he refers to his own illumination by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven on the day of Pentecost, Who enabled him to interpret the Prophecies of the Old Testament (see below on 2 Pet. i. 20, 21), and to preach those things which the Prophets were ministering of old, not to themselves, but to the Church, and which they desired to see (Matt. xiii. 17); and which the Angels themselves longed to look into.

the Gospel of Christ from Jewish allegations that it was a new religion, and that it was contrary to the Law and the Prophets; as his brother Apostle St. Paul has done in the Epistle to the

as his brother Apostic 33. Faut has done in the Epistle to the Romans (see Introduction, pp. 186–198), and in the Epistle to the Hebrews (see Introduction, pp. 366–368).

On the sense of the word παρακύψαι, to bend aside, and stoop, and rivet the eyes down upon, see James i. 25; and the citation of this passage by S. Hippolytus, who reads εγκύψαι, p. 220, Mai, p. 185, Lagarde. And on the wonderful announcement, that the Angels themselves derive heavenly knowledge from the Holy Scriptures, in the hands of the Church, see above on

Eph. iii. 10; and cp. 1 Tim. iii. 16.

This high and holy Mystery, which represents the Angels themselves bending over the Word of God enshrined in the Ark of the Church, was symbolized by the figures of the Cherubim of glory spreading their wings, and bending their faces, and shadowing the Mercy seat, in the Holy of Holies, upon the Ark, in which were kept the Tables of the Law written by God (Exod. xxv. 18-22. Heb. ix. 4, 5); and by the side of which was the Pentateuch. Deut. xxxi. 24-26.

St. Peter's declaration that the Prophets were ministering to us (διηκόνουν), is adopted by S. Hippolytus (de Antichristo, c. 31), addressing the Prophets, τὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ λόγια διηκονήσατε πά oais yeveais. Cp. his Philosophumena, p. 336, in his imitation of 2 Pet. i. 20, quoted below on that passage

12. ὑμῖν] So A, B, C, G, and Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch.,
If. Elz. has ἡμῖν.
13. διὸ ἀναζωσάμενοι] Wherefore,—since the salvation purchased for you is so glorious a prize,—gird up the loins of your mind. He keeps up the metaphor of pilgrims, i. 1; see also ii. 11. Gird up the loins of your mind. Keep your affections from trailing on the earth (cp. Phil. iii. 20). And be sober, and hope constantly; run onward, as it were, on the wings of hope, in your Christian course, unto the grace which is being brought to you-it is not of your own earning, but a free gift of God, "to which ye bring nothing but thirst," cp. Rev. xxii. 17—in the revelation of Jesus Christ; cp. 2 Pet. iii. 12, σπεύδοντες την παρ-

He addresses them as strangers, journeying onward in hope to their home, and exhorts them to gird up the loins of their mind, and to have a clear intellectual view of the glory which is before them, and a resolute endeavour of volition to attain it. On this twofold sense of διάνοια, see Matt. xxii. 37. Eph. ii. 3; iv. 18. Col. i. 21. Heb. viii. 10. 2 Pet. iii. 1. 1 John v. 20.

So S. Polycarp, writing to the Philippians, c. 2, ava (wodμενοι τὰς δοφύας ύμων δουλεύσατε τῷ Θεῷ . . ἀπολι-πόντες τὴν κενὴν ματαιολογίαν, πιστεύσαντες εἰς τὸν ἐγείραντα τον Κύριον ήμων Ἰησουν Χριστον εκ νεκρων (see v. 21), και δόντα αυτώ δόξαν . . . . ό δε εγείρας αυτόν και ήμως εγερεί, εων πορενώμεθα εν ταις εντολαίς αυτού, απεχόμενοι πάσης

It is interesting to observe, that S. Polycarp, the disciple of St. John, and Bishop of Smyrna, the great city of Asia, appears to have been familiar with the present Epistle of St. Peter (as Eusebius has observed, iv. 14), the beloved friend and companion of St. John, who governed the Asiatic Churches, and lived and died at Ephesus. (Acts iii. 1. 3. 11; viii. 14.) S. Polycarp's testimony to it is more important, because this Epistle is addressed to the Churches of Asia. He often adopts its words, and incorporates them in his own Epistle (see here and below, ii. 11, 12. 17. 22. 24; iv. 7); as he does also St. Paul's Epistle to the Asiatic Church of Ephesus. Cp. Eph. ii. 8, with Polycarp, Ep. c. 1; Eph. iv. 26, with Polycarp, c. 12; and Eph. v. 1, with Poly-

— τελείως ελπίσατε] hope ye perfectly, without any wavering

Observe the agrist. of doubt, and with perseverance to the end. Observe the aorist, έλπίσατε. Their whole life is to be one act of hope. On this

14. τέκνα ὑπακοῆς] children of obedience; to whom Obedience is as a Mother, communicating her nature to yours; and thus ye are prepared to invoke God as your Father, v. 17; contrast κατάρας τέκνα, 2 Pet. ii. 14.

- μὴ συσχηματιζόμενοι] not conforming yourselves to your former lusts. An allusion probably to St. Paul's precept, Rom. xii. 2, which is further imitated below, ii. 5.

— ἐν τῆ ἀγνοία ὁμῶν] in your ignorance. See Eph. iv. 14. This word ἄγνοία, ignorance, may seem to intimate that this portion of the Epistle is addressed also to Gentiles. Many of St. Peter's readers were proselytes, and had been Gentiles. But ignorance is also predicated of the Jews. See Matt. xxii. 29; xxiii. 16-24. John ix. 39. Acts iii. 17. Rom. ii. 4; x. 3; xi. 25. 2 Cor. iii. 14. 1 Tim. i. 13. Indeed, all, whether Jew or Gentile, are in a state of ignorance, before they come to Christ. Cp. below on v. 18, and ii. 10.

16. ἔσεσθε] ye shall be. So A, B, C (and R has ἔσεσθαι), and Lach., Tisch., Alf. Elz. has γένεσθε. R has διότι ἔ. ἀ. καl εἰ —, and A, B* also have not εἰμι, which is added after ἄγιος

17. και εί Πατέρα ἐπικαλεῖσθε] and if—(as ye do in the Lord's Prayer: cp. on Acts xxi. 14, as to its primitive use) - ye call upon Him as Father, Who judgeth without respect of persons according to each man's work, pass ye the time of your sojourning here in fear. " Meditemur timorem Dei; Dominus non accepta persona judicat mundum; unusquisque secundum quod facit accipiet." S. Barnabas (Ep. 4).

Here is a connected series of arguments and motives to holiness, derived from a consideration,

(1) Of the holy nature of Him Whom we invoke as Father, Whose children we are, Whom therefore we are bound to imitate

(2) Of His office as Judge, rewarding every man according to his work; Whom therefore we ought to fear.

(3) Of Christ's office as Redeemer, and of His nature as an all-holy Redeemer, paying the costly price of His own blood to ransom us from a state of unholiness, and purchasing us to Himself with His blood. Therefore we are not our own, but His; and being His, bought by His blood, we owe Him, Who is the Holy One, the service of love and holiness. See above on 1 Cor. vi. 19, 20. Eph. i. 7. 14; and cp. Clem. Rom. i. 7, ατενίσωμεν είς τὸ αἶμα τοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ ἴδωμεν ὡς ἔστι τίμιον τῷ Θεῷ πατρὶ αὐτοῦ, ὅτι διὰ τὴν ἡμετέραν σωτηρίαν ἐκχυθέν. Cp. S. Augustine, Serm. 36.

 18. ἐλυτρώθητε] ye were redeemed by the payment of a price of infinite value, namely, the blood of Christ, Who gave Himself to God as a λύτρον, ἀντίλυτρον, or ransom, for the redemption of you and the whole world. See Matt. xx. 28. Mark x. 45. Rom. iii. 24. Eph. i. 7. 14. Heb. ix. 12. 1 Tim. ii. 6.

Know you not that Christ redeemed you, not by silver or gold, but by His precious blood? You have been redeemed by Him, and therefore you owe Him service as your Lord and as your

He is a Lamb without blemish and without spot; "white, and yet ruddy," says the spouse in the Canticles (v. 10); white in spotless innocency, red in His bloody death, and He is her well beloved, because He redeemed her thereby. Cp. Abp. Leighton — πατροπαραδότου] delivered by your fathers—a passage which has been supposed by some to intimate that this Epistle, designed primarily for Jewish Christians, was intended for Gentile Christians also. Cp. ii. 10; iv. 3. Doubtless many of St. Peter's readers had been originally Gentiles, and had then become Jewish Proselytes, and so passed into the Church. The Proselytes were the "seminarium Ecclesiæ." See Introduction to the Acts, p. 9. But this statement of the Apostle may also have been designed to declare to the Jewish Christians that all their ἀναστροφή, or conversation, as delivered to them by tradition from their fathers, was vain without Christ, Who redeemed them from the curse of which, as St. Peter himself says (Acts xv. 10), neither they nor their fathers were able to bear. Cp. above on v. 14.

Scriptures (cp. v. 24), show that it was not addressed to Gentiles. Cp. note above, on 1 Thess. i. 9.

19. ἀμώμου] without blemish: as the sacrifices offered under the Law were required to be. Levit. iii. 1. 6; xiv. 10; xxi. 18; xxii. 20. Num. vi. 14. He tells them that this Lamb without blemish, the Lamb of God, was anterior to all sacrifices of the Lavitied Privale that the reasonable deforts the four the Levitical Ritual; that He was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world (cp. Rev. xiii. 8); and that therefore the Gospel is not a new religion (as the Jews alleged), but older than the Law; and he declares that they are delivered by the blood of Christ the true Passover (John xix. 36. 1 Cor. v. 7), as their fathers were from the destroying Angel by the blood of the Paschal Lamb. Exod. xii. 13.

Observe the distinction between ἀμώμου and ἀσπίλου. Christ, the true Passover (1 Cor. v. 7), had no blemish of sin in Himself, nor did he contract any stain, or spot of sin, from the world.

20. προεγνωσμένου] foreknown. Cp. St. Peter's language on the same subject in his speech in Acts ii. 23.

- ἐσχάτου] So A, B, C. On this substantive sense of ἐσχάτου, see Acts i. 8; xiii. 47. Elz. has ἐσχάτων.
 Christ was manifest in the last times (see Heb. i. 2), in the end of the world (Heb. ix. 26). The Paschal Lamb was slain in the evening. (Exod. xii. 6.)

21.] See the passage of S. Polycarp quoted above on v. 13. On the meaning of miorous els Oedv, see on Matt. xviii. 6. James ii. 19.

22. ἀληθείας] Elz. has διὰ Πνεύματος, not in A, B, C, nor — ἐκτενῶs] earnestly, intensely. Let your love for one another be ἐκτενης, stretched out continuously and intently, without interruption or relaxation. See below on iv. 8.

23. ἀναγεγεννημένοι] having been born again, not of corrupti-ble seed, but of incorruptible, through the Word of God which liveth and endureth for ever.

Λόγου is not to be coupled with Θεοῦ, but with ζῶντος (so Didymus, Luther, Bengel, De Wette, Huther, and others), in contrast with σπορâs φθαρτῆs, corruptible seed; and the participles are thus placed for the sake of emphasis, to declare that the Word here mentioned, is not like man's word, a thing that dies and disappears, but that it is the Word of God; the Word that liveth and abideth. So ii. 4, λίθον ζώντα, the stone that liveth; namely, Christ.

St. Peter reminds them that they had been born again of incorruptible seed, even of God Himself; as St. John says, "they were the sons of God, because they believed on His Name, and had been born, not of blood, nor of the will of man, but of God."

God had made them His own children in Christ by virtue-

 Of Christ's eternal Sonship; (2) Of His Incarnation; and

(3) Of their Faith and baptismal Incorporation in Him. For Christ was sent "that He might bring many sons to God" (Heb. ii. 10); so that Christ says to the Father, "Behold, here am I, and the children which God hath given Me" (Isa. viii. 18); and so "per Filium filii," by this Son they are sons. Bp. Andrewes (i. p. 298). Thus was Christ born in Sion (Ps. lxxxvii. 4), and He is even born in the Morians' Land; for in every place that receiveth the Word of Him Who is the Incarnate Word of God, there is He born. (See ibid. pp. 298, 299.) Cp. 1 John

They are born again of God, διὰ λόγου ζῶντος, through the living Word; that is, through the Word preached, and especially through Christ the Incarnate Word. As Didymus here says, "The Word is living and abiding; that Word which was in the beginning with God, the Word of God." Our first birth is by Adam, our second birth is by Christ.

Some Expositors here limit the Word to the Word written

But though this sense was doubtless in the Apostle's mind when he wrote this passage, yet it seems an error to suppose that this was all that was in his mind.

Christ is the Word (John i. 1). "His Name is the Word of God." Rev. xix. 13. By virtue of His Eternal Sonship, and by the condescension of the Word to become flesh, and to pitch His tent in our Nature (John i. 14), and to become our Emmanuel, God manifested in our flesh (1 Tim. iii. 16), and by our faith and baptismal incorporation in Him, we are born again. As to our flesh, considered in itself, we are but grass, and all our glory is as the flower of grass. But since our flesh has become the flesh of Him Who is the Word of God, and Who liveth for ever, we are partakers of the divine nature (2 Pet. i. 4); and if we endeavour to be holy as He is holy, we shall be partakers of His

On examining carefully the chapter of Isaiah—the fortieth -which St. Peter is quoting here, we see reason for believing that these truths were in St. Peter's mind when he wrote these words; and we shall be confirmed in this opinion by the consideration that one of the main purposes of this Epistle is to show the benefits which result to all mankind from the Eternal Sonship of the Word of God, and from His susception of our Flesh. Isaiah is first pre-announcing the preparatory witness of "the Voice crying in the wilderness," and he contrasts that transitory testimony of the Voice with the permanence of Him Who is the Word; he contrasts the ministry of him who prepared the way of our God with the Eternity of Him Who is the Way (John xiv. 6); he is contrasting the perishable nature of human flesh, which is as grass, and the goodliness of it as the flower of the field, with the glory of the Lord—the glory of Him Who is the only-begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth (John i. 14), and with the glory of the salvation which all flesh should see revealed in Him. . . Behold your God! v. 9.

He then passes on to describe Him as a Judge, and the Shepherd of His flock (vv. 10, 11).

That portion of Holy Scripture, which is fitly appointed by the Church as the Epistle for St. John Baptist's Day, is a prophecy of the Incarnation of Christ, the Everlasting God, and of His offices to us, and of our blessedness in Him. St. Peter, in His offices to us, and of our blessedness in Him. citing that prophecy here, doubtless intended that it should serve as a commentary on his own words, and be used to elucidate them; and that his words, on their part, should also illustrate that prophecy. It would seem, therefore, to be a narrow view of his meaning, to imagine that he intended here to speak only of God's Word as preached or written.

It is, unhappily, a characteristic of modern Biblical interpretation, to pare down the rich exuberance and beautiful efflorescence of Holy Scripture, and to lop off and amputate its ramifications of meaning, and if we may venture so to speak-to reduce them to the bare trunk and stunted pollard of a single sense.

In this way, much of the goodliness and fruitfulness of Scripture is in danger of being lost to the present generation.

The Apostles and Evangelists proceeded on a very different plan in interpreting the Old Testament, and in expounding our Lord's words. They do not confine them to one sense only. St. Matthew applies the prophecy of Isaiah (liii. 4) to Christ's acts of mercy to the body; and St. Peter adapts it to His vicarious and expiatory sufferings for the salvation of their souls. (Cp. Matt. viii. 17. 1 Pet. ii. 24.) Cp. Acts xiii. 33, with Heb. i. 5;

St. John quotes our Lord's saying, which the Evangelist himself had recorded (John xvii. 12), "Those whom Thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost," and which was spoken of their faith and adherence to Him; and applies it to the care which Christ took of the safety of His disciples, when He Himself was arrested in the Garden. (John xviii. 9.)

The primitive Interpreters of Holy Scripture pursued a similar method of exposition, and many of our own Divines, who were reared under their discipline, followed in their steps.

Thus Dean Jackson, commenting on this passage, says, " If Christ's flesh and blood be the seed of Immortality, how are we said to be born again by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever? Is this Word, by which we are born, the same with that immortal seed of which we are born? It is the same, not in nature but in Person. May we not, in that speech of St. Peter, by the Word, understand the word preached unto us by the Ministers who are God's seedsmen? In a secondary sense we may, for we are begotten and born again by preaching, as by the instrument or means. Yet born again we are by the Eternal WORD (that is, by CHRIST Himself), as by the proper and efficient cause of our new birth . . . And Christ Himself, Who was put to death for our sins, and raised again for our justification, is the Word which we all do or ought to preach.

"The Son of God manifested in the flesh, was that Word which, in St. Peter's language, is preached by the Gospel. And if we do not preach this Word unto our hearers,—if all our sermons do not tend to one of these two ends, either to instruct our auditors in the articles of their creed concerning Christ, or to prepare their cars and hearts that they may be fit auditors of such instructions, we do not preach the Gospel unto them, we take upon us the name of God's ambassadors, or of the ministers of the Gospel in vain." (Dean Jackson on the Creed, book vii. ch.

See also A Lapide here, who says, "This sense is a genuine and sublime one; because in our Regeneration, Christ Himself is personally communicated to us, so that the Deity thenceforth dwells in us as in a Temple, and we are made partakers of the Divine Nature, 2 Pet. i. 4." Cp. note above on James i. 18-21.

The Word preached is the preparatory instrument for the conveyance of the divine principle of life, which, flowing from God in Christ, is infused into the heart of man by means of the Holy Sacrament. It is the Ministry of the Word which brings men to the Sacraments; as was shown in the example of St. Peter himself, who preached to the Jews of the dispersion on the day of Pentecost, and then in answer to their question, "What shall we do?" he said, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you, in the Name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts it. 38.)

This order of things is not in any way at variance with what was done in the extraordinary case of Cornelius the first-fruits of the Gentiles, when the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word; and Peter said, "Can any forbid water, that these should not be baptized? and he commanded them to be baptized in the Name of the Lord." (See note above on Acts x. 44—48.) See also the case of St. Philip and the Ethiopian, who having heard the word, asked, "What doth binder me to be baptized?" viii. 36.)

This is what is briefly expressed by St. Paul in the Epistle to the Ephesians; which St. Peter appears to be studiously imitating and confirming in this Epistle (see above, i. 1, 2). Christ loved the Church, and gave Himself for it, that He might sanctify it, having cleansed it by the washing of Water with the

The life of flesh considered as flesh, is contrasted here with the spiritual life imparted to the sons of God, by their adoption into the "Word made flesh," and by their participation in the divine nature, in Him. See above on v. 23. Cp. John i. 12. 14, and 2 Pet. i. 4.

A, B, C, G, K, and is received by Griest., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Alf. The quotation here is almost literally from the Septuagini, Isa. xl. 6-8. And this is the case with almost all the quotations from the Old Testament in this Epistle, see for ever. (Cp. Matt. iv. 4. Luke i. 37.) Λόγος is the Word, coming forth from God, and energizing by His Divine Power; and hence is applied to the everlasting Son of God.

This entire passage may be compared with, and is best illustrated by, the words of the same Apostle St. Peter, in his speech at Cæsarea, see Acts x. 36, where is a similar transition from λόγος to βίμα.

The transition from the Incarnate Word to the spoken or written Word, and vice versa, is, as might be anticipated, of not unfrequent occurrence in Holy Writ: see on Heb. iv. 12. James i. 18-23. Observe, also, that St. Peter here returns to the principal Person, Christ, and speaks of Him, who is the Living Word, as being also the Living Stone, ii. 4.

CH. II. 1. ἀποθέμενοι οῦν] Put away, therefore, all malice and all guile: which ye renounced in your baptism, when ye put on the new man; see Eph. iv. 22. Col. iii. 9, 10, and James i. 2, imitated by Clemens Romanus, i. 13.

On the difference of these words S. Augustine says, "Malilia malo delectatur alieno; invidia bono cruciatur alieno; dolus duplicat cor; adulatio duplicat linguam; detractio vulnerat famam.

2. ως ἀρτιγέννητα βρέφη as new-born babes. He had been speaking of their baptismal new birth from the divine seed of immortality in Christ (i. 23), and he now exhorts them to crave earnestly the unadulterated rational (not carnal) milk, as babes yearn for the milk of their mothers' breasts, and to suck it in with cagerness; in order that they may grow thereby to salvation. The words είς σωτηρίαν are omitted by Elz., but are in A, B, C, K, and are received by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Alf.

On the word λογικόν cp. Rom. xii. I, λογικήν λατρείαν, interpreted by Chrys. as πνευματικήν, spiritual.

By this mention of milk, as contrasted with strong meat, he teaches them a lesson of humility. Cp. I Cor. iii. 2. Heb. v. 12, 13.

This metaphor from milk, and its adulteration, is adopted by an ancient writer quoted by S. Irenœus (iii. 17), "In Dei lacte gypsum malè miscetur" (cp. Routh, R. S. i. pp. 48. 62). Here γάλα ἐπιποθήσατε, ἴνα ἐν αὐτῷ αὐξηθῆτε εἰς σωτηρίαν 3 εἴπερ ἐγεύσασθε b Ps. 34.9 ότι χρηστός ὁ Κύριος.

is implied a protest against adulterations of the pure nourishment of divine truth, by the admixture of human corruptions, and a precept of vigilance against them. Cp. 2 Cor. ii. 17.

3. εἴπερ ἐγεύσασθε] if indeed—as it is to be supposed that ye did, when ye drank in the milk of the divine Word; see this use of είπερ Rom. viii. 9. 2 Thess. i. 6—ye tasted that the Lord is gracious. Cp. Ps. xxxiv. 9, LXX.

Observe the aorist, ἐγεύσασθε, pointing to a particular time, viz. their baptism, when they tasted the goodness of the Lord. And on this spiritual application of the word γεύσασθαι, see note above on Heb. vi. 4. Therefore an ancient Bishop, commenting above on Heb. vi. 4. on St. Peter's words, thus addressed those who had been just baptized; "These words are specially applicable to you, who are yet fresh in the infancy of spiritual regeneration. For to you mainly the Divine Oracles speak, by the Apostle St. Peter, Having laid aside all malice, and all guile, as new-born infants, earnestly de-sire ye the 'rationabile et innocens lac, ut in illo crescatis ad salutem,' if ye tasted that the Lord is gracious (dulcis). And we are witnesses, that ye have tasted it.... Cherish, therefore, this spiritual infancy. The infancy of the strong is humility. The manhood of the weak is pride." S. Augustine, Serm. 353.

Hence an argument may be derived for Infant Baptism. These converts of St. Peter are compared to ἀρτιγέννητα βρέφη, new-born babes. They had been conceived by nature of unclean seed (Job xiv. 4), in a sinful womb (Ps. li. 5), and there is not an infant of a day old, who needs not the baptismum lavacri.

"Let them all be baptized, men and infants all." Bp. Andrewes,

4. λίθον ζώντα] a stone that liveth, even by Death; and giveth life, making others also to be stones that live, by union with Him, and participation in His life, and death; for He says, "Because I live, ye shall live also" (John xiv. 19).

Thus, by a prophetic protest, Peter disclaims all notion of being what some would represent him to be, the Rock of the Church (see Matt. xvi. 18). He was indeed a true Petros, hewn out of the Divine Petra, and founded upon it (cp. 1 Cor. iii. 11). He was one of the Apostolic foundations of the heavenly city (Rev. xxi. 14), whose builder and maker is God (Heb. xi. 10).

Tertullian, speaking of the twelve wells at Elim, and the Twelve precious stones on the breast-plate of Aaron, and the Twelve stones taken from Jordan by Joshua, as typical of the Twelve Apostles, says that Christ gave to Simon the name Peter, as a derivative from His own name; because Christ is the Rock (Petra) and Stone: and is set for a stone of stumbling and rock of offence. Tertullian (c. Marcion. iv. 13). See further, v. 8, and Introduction to this Epistle, and above, notes on Matt. x. 1, 2, and on Matt. xvi. 18.

5. οἰκοδομεῖσθε] ye are being built. Observe the present indicative. The work of building is still going on, ye are not yet finally established, as are the stones in the heavenly Temple; Rev. xxi. 14. 19. Eph. ii. 22; and cp. the present participle σωζομένους, Acts ii. 47, and S. Ignatius, ad Ephes. c. 9, σντες σωζομένους, Ατις Π. 44, and S. Ignatius, an Epines. C. 9, οντές λίθοι ναοῦ Πατρὸς ἡτοιμασμένοι εἰς οἰκοδομὴν Θεοῦ. The literal Jerusalem is tending towards destruction, but ye, who compose the true Sion, are being built up.

— οἶκος πνευματικὸς, ἱεράτευμα ἄγιον] a house that is spiritual, a priesthood that is holy. Observe the position of the substantive. In Christ ye are not only living stones, making a spiritual temple—for more elections than the material because ritual temple,-far more glorious than the material house at Jerusalem,—but ye are also a holy priesthood (see below, v. 9), ministering to God in the oblation of spiritual sacrifices, which are more precious than the carnal victims of the Levilical Temple at Jerusalem, and are acceptable to God in Christ.

These sacrifices are offered by you in prayer and praise, and in the oblation of the Holy Eucharist (see on Heb. xiii. 10. 15), and in the offering of your alms (Heb. xiii. 16), and in the presentation of yourselves, your souls and bodies, as a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your rational worship

Therefore be not dismayed because ye are cut off from the service and worship of the literal Temple at Jerusalem, which will soon be destroyed: for ye yourselves are a spiritual Temple, ye are a holy Priesthood, ye offer sacrifice and oblations well-pleasing to God through Christ the One Mediator, and Everlasting High Priest. See Heb. xiii. 15. Col. iii. 17.

Some persons (the Schwenckfieldians and others of modern days) have perverted this text into an argument, that all Christians are Priests; and that there ought to be no Priests or distinct orders of Ministers in the Christian Church.

But to this allegation it may be replied, that the words "ye are a holy priesthood," were applied also to the Jews in the Old Testament (Exod. xix. 6), and yet, "Korah and his company" were punished by God for saying that "all the congregation is holy," and for invading the office of the Priesthood (Num. xvi. and for invading the office of the Priesthood (Num. xvi. 3-40). And Uzziah the King was smitten for presuming to offer incense (2 Chron. xxvi. 18), and the Apostle St. Jude declares that the sin of the gainsaying of Korah may be committed in Christian times (Jude 11).

The special ministration of God's Word and Sacraments is committed to certain persons, who accordingly have, in Scripture, special designations, as being separated for the work whereunto they are called (Acts xiii. 2); and "Ecclesia non est," says S. Jerome (adv. Lucif.), " quæ non habet Sacerdotes" (cp. S. Ignatius, ad Trall. 3), χωρίς τούτων Ἐκκλησία οὐ καλεῖται. Christ gave not all, but some to be Apostles, and some to be Prophets, for the work of the ministry (Eph. iv. 11, 12). "Are all Apostles? are all Prophets? are all Teachers?" (1 Cor. xii. 29.) No, every one in his own order. And St. James would not have commanded Presbyters to be sent for (James v. 14), and St. Peter would not have enjoined Presbyters to feed the flock committed to their care (1 Pet. v. 1), if every one was a Priest. And if all men are equally Priests, then all men are equally Kings. For the Scripture says that Christ hath made us Kings and Priests (Rev. i. 6), and according to this notion all civil order must be abolished.

But the true exposition is, that all Christians are to be distinguished from the world, as the Jews were distinguished from other nations, and as Priests are distinguished from those to whom they minister; and that all persons who are Christians, and distinguished as such from those who are not Christians, are to be a holy priesthood, and to consecrate their souls as altars to God, and to offer themselves as living sacrifices to Him. See Augustine, Tract. in Joan. 51.

6. περιέχει ἐν τῆ γραφῆ] it is extant in the Scripture: περιέχει is used in a middle sense, as many other verbs in the N. T. (see on Mark xiv. 72. Luke xv. 12), and so περιέχει in Josephus (Ant. xi. 4. 7), καθώς εν αὐτῆ ἐπιστολῆ περιέχει. Winer, p. 225. The verb ὑπερέχω in ii. 13, is an example of similar usage, and παρεδίδου in ii. 23.

— λίθον] stone. See Ps. cxviii. 22, LXX. Matt. xxi. 42. Cp. Barnabas (Epist. 6, p. 10, Dressel), who appears to imitate these verses of this Epistle.

Here also is another parallel between this Epistle of St. Peter (ii. 4-8) and St. Peter's speeches as recorded by St. Luke in the Acts. See there, iv. 10-12.

7.  $\hat{\nu}\mu\hat{\nu}$  où  $\hat{\nu}$   $\hat{\eta}$   $\tau\mu\hat{\eta}$ ] to you therefore, who believe in Him, the worth of this stone is imparted. The sense is well expressed in the Syriac Version, "Vobis igitur datus est hic honor," and so the Vulg. and Arabic, "Vobis igitur est honor." That is to say, ye are not put to shame as unbelievers will be (v. 6), but are made sharers in the honour and value (τιμή) which belongs to this living stone, Christ, which is precious and honourable (ξντιμος).

This honour and value are imparted to you on your profession of faith, in your baptism, by which ye are cemented in Ilim; and by your stedfast adherence and continuance in belief in Him, you, coming to Him who is the Living Stone, became also living stones. See Didymus here.

Ye are not dead stones, like the stones of the material Temple at Jerusalem, which will soon be cast down, and not "one stone be left upon another" (Matt. xxiv. 2. Luke xix. 44). And ye are not diseased stones, like the stones infected with leprosy, which were to be taken out of the wall of the house (Lev. xiv. 40-44). Ye are living, healthful stones, joined together in unity, and compacted and growing in Christ; and being built up in Him ye have been made to be sharers and partakers of His glory, so that by your inedification on Him, who is set in Sion as the Stone elect, precious, ye become like the jewels and precious stones in the wall of the heavenly Jerusalem (Rev. xxi. 19). Thus His honour and worth  $(\tau \iota \mu \eta)$  is given to you, who believe; it is given to you by virtue of your faith in Him; for those who serve Him will His Father honour (John xii. 26).

As to the sense of the dative participle, cp. Winer, p. 485. ἀπειθοῦσι δέ] But to those who are disobedient, the stone which the builders rejected, this became the head of the corner. That is, it was exalted and glorified, notwithstanding their rejection of it; nay, more, even by means of their rejection of it; nay, more, even by means of their rejection of it, it became more glorious; for the glory of Christ is due to His suffering, and He cements His Church with His own blood, shed on the cross, and by His Death He lives, and overcame Death, and delivers us from Death, and gives eternal life to all who believe. See Phil. ii. 9. Heb. ii. 14.

— είς κεφαλην γωνίας] to the head of the corner. See Matt. xxi. 42. 44. Acts iv. 11, St. Peter's own speech: cp. Eph. ii.

— καὶ λίθος προσκόμματος] and a Stone of stumbling, and Rock of offence to them who stumble at the word, i. e. at the preaching of the cross (ὁ λόγος τοῦ σταυροῦ), which is to the Jews a stumbling-stone. (1 Cor. i. 18.)

8. els δ και ετέθησαν] to which they were also set, or ap pointed. Christ is the Stone who is set for the fall, and for the rise, of many in Israel. (Luke ii. 34.) Christ is set for the rise of all who believe in Him; and He is set for the fall of all who disobey Him.

No man is set for disobedience; but all, who are disobedient, are set for a fall; and whosoever falleth on this stone shall be broken, and on whomsoever it shall fall, it shall grind him to powder. (Matt. xxi. 44.) Cp. Jude 4, and Didymus here, who says, that their voluntary unbelief was the cause of their appointed fall; and see the remarks above, Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans, p. 194; and Dr. Hammond here.

9. υμεῖς δέ] but ye, who are believers in Christ, are Israelites indeed, and enjoy all the titles and privileges which are promised by God in the Old Testament to His chosen People. (See above, i. 2.) The literal Israel who reject Christ have fulfilled the prophecies, which declared that the elect corner stone (Isa xxviii. 16) would be also a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence to some (Isa. viii. 14); and that the stone which the builders, or chief workmen in God's Temple in Jerusalem, refused, should become the Head of the corner. Do not therefore be staggered by that rejection; nor imagine that ye have forfeited any privi-leges by embracing the Gospel. Ye are now God's people indeed, a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, being members of the mystical body of Him Who is the everlasting Priest and King, and being partakers of the holy unction of His Royalty and Priesthood: ye are a holy nation, a peculiar people, λads eis περιποίησιν (from LXX, Exod. xix. 5. Deut. vii. 6. Cp. Isa. xliii.

21. Mal. iii. 17); i. e. literally, a people for a purchasing, or acquisition, πόρο (segullah, peculium), and specially for the purchase effected by the precious blood of Christ.

The peculiar people, or people for the purchase, is the Universal Church which Almighty God has purchased to Himself by the precious blood of His dear Son. Cp. Acts xx. 28; and see above on Titus ii. 14, and Eph. i. 14.

 — ἀρετάς] viríutes, God's attributes and works of love and mercy to you in Christ. Cp. 2 Pet. i. 3. St. Peter is adopting the language of Isaiah (xlii. 12), τὰς ἀρετὰς αὐτοῦ ἐν ταῖς νήσοις ἀπαγγελοῦσι.

10. of ποτè οὐ λαός] who were formerly not a people; for ye are scattered in all lands, and have no king or country; but now ye are a people, for ye have a home in the Church, and a King in Christ. St. Peter is appropriating the words of Hosea (ii. 23), where God is pre-announcing His reconciliation with Israel; a circumstance which may serve as an evidence that these words do not show (as some have supposed) that this Epistle was written to Gentiles. See above, i. 14, 18, and on Hosea i. 10; ii. 23.

— οἱ οὐκ ἡλεημένοι, νῦν δὲ ἐλεηθέντες] Observe the difference of tense in these two participles, the perfect and aorist; the former describing a state, the latter an act. Ye were formerly not  $\hbar \lambda \epsilon_{\mu\nu}$  in the state, one of remoteness from God's mercy; but  $\hbar \lambda \epsilon_{\mu}$  in that state, one of remoteness from God's mercy; but  $\hbar \lambda \epsilon_{\mu}$  in  $\hbar \epsilon_{\mu\nu}$  were made an object of mercy by His act of free grace to you in Christ. Cp. Winer, § 45, p. 307.

11. ἀγαπητοί] Beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims. He had been speaking of their new birth in Christ (i. 23), and had just been describing them as a people redeemed. and purchased by God to Himself; redeemed from the captivity of Satan, and purchased by the blood of Christ to Himself, and to the hope of an eternal inheritance in the heavenly Canaan.

The mercies they now enjoy are the antitypes of those vouchsafed to their fathers, the Israelites of old, when they were redeemed out of the house of bondage in Egypt, and saved from the destroying angel by the blood of the Paschal Lamb; and became God's peculiar people, dedicated to Him, and were made inheritors of the land of Promise. Cp. 1 Cor. x. 1-6.

St. Peter had exhorted them to sing praises to God for their deliverance out of darkness into light (ii. 9), as Moses and Miriam sang praises to Him for the salvation of the people out of Egypt, after their passage through the Red Sea (Exod. xv. 1-22), the type of Baptism. And now by a happy connexion he exhorts them to march onward in their journey, as the Israelites did in their pilgrimage through the wilderness; and to abstain from fleshly lusts, which they had renounced in their baptism, and which war against the soul; and to be warned by the fate of their fathers, whose carcases fell in the wilderness; and to remember the fires of Taberah, and the judgments of Kibroth-hattaavah, the graves of them that lusted. Num. xi. 4-34. Ps. cvi. 14. 1 Cor. x. 6.

This address to them as strangers and pilgrims was specially pertinent to the first readers of this Epistle (see above on i. I and 17); but is also applicable to all, who have no continuing city here, and seek for a home above. See Heb. xi. 13-15. Cp. Phil. iii. 20. 1 John ii. 15.

- ἀπέχεσθε] abstain ye. The imperative mood. Elz. has the infinitive here,  $\alpha\pi\epsilon\chi\epsilon\sigma\theta a\iota$ , and so B, K, and most editors. But the imperative,  $\alpha\pi\epsilon\chi\epsilon\sigma\theta a\iota$ , as sanctioned by A, C, G, and many Cursives, and the Syriac, Coptic, and Ethiopic Versions; and Didymus, Cyprian, and Leo; and this direct address gives more life and force to the appeal. Compare the similar passage of St. Paul, Rom. xii. 2, and note there; and the like structure in this Epistle, v. 1, παρακαλῶ τοὺς ἐν ὑμῦν πρεσβυτέρους, ποιμάνατε.

- altives] quippe que - more expressive than which: it implies the reason why we are to abstain from them; viz. because they war against the soul. On this use of borus, see Rom. i. 25. 32; ii. 15; vi. 2. 1 Tim. i. 4; vi. 9.

— στρατεύονται] are warring: he refers to James iv. 1, "lusts warring in your members."

12. την ἀναστροφήν] having your conversation (social intercourse and behaviour, Gal. i. 13. Eph. iv. 22. James iii. 13) honest among the Gentiles, among whom ye are dispersed and scattered abroad, as a holy leaven to leaven the world, in order that in the very respect in which (èv φ, see iii. 16) they speak against you as evil-doers, by calling you disloyal to Rulers, but ύμῶν ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν ἔχοντες καλὴν, ἵνα ἐν ῷ καταλαλοῦσιν ὑμῶν ὡς κακοποιῶν, έκ τῶν καλῶν ἔργων ἐποπτεύοντες δοξάσωσι τὸν Θεὸν ἐν ἡμέρα ἐπισκοπῆς.

finding you when tried most loyal to them (see v.~15), they may, from your good works, of which they are spectators ( $\epsilon \pi \sigma \pi \tau \epsilon \acute{v} \circ \nu \tau \epsilon s$ , so B, C), glorify God in the day of visitation; that is, in the day when ye are visited by God, the Inspector and Judge of all, and when ye are tried by afflictions (see Luke xix. 44. Isa. x. 3. Jer. vi. 15; viii. 12), and are manifested in your true light by Him, in the eyes of the world, especially of your slanderers and detractors; then in "the time of visitation shall ye shine, for grace and mercy is to His saints and  $\epsilon \pi i \sigma \kappa \sigma \pi \eta$  to His elect.' Wisd. iii. 7. 9; iv. 15. Ecclus. ii. 14; xviii. 20.

The day of Visitation may also be understood more generally as describing God's Judicial Visitations, such as the impending War in Judæa, and other Wars, Famines, Earthquakes, Plagues, and Pestilences. Matt. xxiv. 7.

In such trials as those, the faith and love of the Christians were displayed in striking contrast with the Jews and Heathens.

A memorable instance of this may be seen in the history of the Plague at Carthage, in S. Cyprian's Episcopate, as described by his Deacon, Pontius, p. 6. "The majority of our brethren," says Pontius, "took care of every one but themselves; by nursing the sick, and watching over them in Christ, they caught the disorder which they healed in others, and breathed their last with joy; some bare in their arms and bosoms the bodies of dead saints; and, having closed the eyes of the dying, and bathed their corpses, and performed the last obsequies, received the same treatment at the hands of their brethren. But," he adds, "the very reverse of this was done by the Gentiles: those who were sinking into sickness, they drove from them; they fled from their dearest friends; they threw them expiring into the streets, and turned from their unburied corpses with looks of execration." See also S. Cyprian's words in his treatise published on that occasion, De Mortalitate, sive Peste, capp. 9, 10, "Mortalitas ista, ut Judæis et Gentilibus et Christi hostibus pestis est, ita Dei servis salutaris excessus est."

The words ἐποπτὴs and ἐποπτεύειν are applied to spectators of actors in a drama, or of wrestlers in athletic games, or who are admitted to view some sacred Mysteries. See above on I Cor.

ii. 6, and Wetstein, p. 687.

The Christians in their sufferings were a spectacle (θέατρον) to the world (1 Cor. iv. 9), and the heroism and patience with which they endured them, excited the admiration and elicited the applause of the Heathen; and this applause redounded to the glory of God, Who gave them grace to suffer as they did. Thus the Martyrdoms of Christians were instrumental in the conversion of Heathens, and in the Propagation of the Faith.

This passage is quoted by S. Polycarp, ad Phil. c. 10, "omnes vobis invicem subjecti estote (1 Pet. v. 5), conversationem vestram irreprehensibilem habentes in gentibus, ut ex bonis operibus vestris et vos laudem accipiatis, et Dominus in vobis non blasphemetur."

13. ὑποτάγητε οὖν] be ye subject therefore. A practical application of the general precept just enunciated.

- ὑποτάγητε πάση ἀνθρωπίνη κτίσει] be ye subject, submit yourselves, to every power, to every ordinance appointed by man.

The ruling Power, to which they are to submit, is called here κτίσις ἀνθρωπίνη, an ordinance of man; because the choice of the particular form of Government in a State, whether it is to be Monarchical or Republican, is commonly determined by men: and the persons who are appointed to govern, - whether by hereditary succession, or election,-are often designated by men.

But the Authority (¿¿ovoía) itself, which Rulers have and exercise, when they have once been appointed by men, is not derived from man, but it is from God alone. (See Rom. xiii.

This important proposition, which is plainly set forth in Holy Scripture, by St. Peter here, and by St. Paul (Rom. xiii. 1-4), and which declares the true grounds of all allegiance and obedience to Rulers and all in authority, may be thus illustrated;

Water may be made to assume different forms, in fountains and cascades, and be made to flow in different channels or aqueducts, by the hand of man; but the Element itself, which flows in them, is from God. So again, Marble may be hewn by man's hand into different shapes; under the sculptor's chisel it may become a statue, a frieze, or a sarcophagus; but the Marble itself is from the quarry, it is from the creative hand of God:

So it is with Civil Power. The Form which Power may assume, and the Person who may be appointed to exercise it, may be κτίσεις ἀνθρώπιναι, ordinances of man: but the Authority itself (ἐξουσία) is from God.

Consequently, as St. Peter teaches, we are bound to submit to every ordinance of man, "for the Lord's sake," Whose ministers and vicegerents our Rulers are; and as St. Paul declares, "he that resisteth the Authority, resisteth the ordinance of God, and they that resist, shall receive to themselves damnation." See

"All the Kingdoms and Governments of the whole earth are Thy ordinance, O Lord (Rom. xiii. 2), albeit an institution of man (1 Pet. ii. 13)," says Bp. Andrewes (Private Devotions, p. 48, ed. 1830). Cp. Bp. Sanderson, Præl. vii. 15. Abp. Bramhall and Bp. Horsley in Christian Institutes, iii. 39. Aip. Leighton here, and Hooker (VIII. ii. 6), who says, "Unto kings by human right, honour by very divine right is due."

Obedience therefore is to be paid to Authority in all commands that are not contrary to divine law. As to our duty in those cases where the human Governor commands any thing which is forbidden by God, or forbids any thing which God commands, St. Peter's own conduct may be our guide. See above,

Acts iv. 19, 20; v. 29.

There is a particular emphasis in the word πάση here, every ordinance of man; because some Jewish Christians, and especially the Gnostics, held and taught that they were exempt from submission to human rule, particularly to heathen rule. See on 1 Tim. ii. 1—3. Titus i. 10; iii. 1, and below, ii. 16, and on Particularly to the submission to human rule, particularly to heathen rule. 2 Pet. ii. 10, and Jude 16, for corrections of this notion.

St. Paul uses the same word, in order to teach that no one is exempt from the duty of subjection to Rulers. "Let every soul"  $(\pi \hat{\alpha} \sigma \alpha \psi \nu \chi \hat{\gamma})$ , he says, "be subject to the higher powers." (Rom.

St. Peter himself here teaches the duty of submission to lawful authority. But they who call themselves "successors of St. Peter," have set themselves above, and in opposition to, lawful authority, and have often encouraged others to rebel against it. See above, on 2 Thess. ii. 4, and below, on Rev. xiii. 15, 16; xvii. 3. How much misery would the World have been spared, if they who profess to revere the name of St. Peter, and to be successors of St. Peter, had listened to the precepts of St. Peter, and had followed the example of St. Peter!

— βασιλεί] the King—the Roman Cæsar. So βασιλεύs is used by Josephus, B. J. v. 13. 6. Cp. v. 17. The regions to which this Epistle was sent were provinces of Rome.

- ὑπερέχοντι] as being over you. See on Rom. xiii. 1.

14. ἡγεμόσιν] governors. In our Lord's Ministry and Country Cæsar was βασιλεύς (John xix. 15), but Pilate was ηγεμών (Matt. xxvii. 2). He submitted to both. (Matt. xxii. 17. John xix. 11.)

15. ὅτι οὕτως] for so is the will of God, that by well-doing we may stop the mouth (φιμοῦν, to muzzle, Matt. xxii. 12. 34. Mark i. 25; iv. 39. 1 Tim. v. 18) of the ignorance of foolish men. We Christians may be maligned by the heathen, as if we were ill affected to Cæsar; but when we are put to the test, it will be found, that we Christians are loyal subjects, and in fact almost the only loyal subjects of Cæsar; because it is our religion alone which teaches men to regard Cæsar as the Minister of God. Cp. Ecumen. here, and see this doctrine eloquently preached by Tertullian in his Apology, § 28-37.

This admonition of St. Peter to the Jewish Christians was very seasonable at this time, when the Jews at Jerusalem, and in various parts of Europe and Asia, were preparing to rise in that Rebellion against Rome which ended in the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, about five years after this Epistle was written; and which produced its fatal results in the slaughter of many thousands of Jews collected in Jerusalem from all parts, and in the unutterable woe and final dispersion of their nation.

The Christians were rescued from those calamities by the prophecies and exhortations of Christ and His Apostles, particularly St. Peter and St. Paul.

Christ was crucified by the power of Rome, as He had foretold that He would be (Matt. xx. 19). St. Peter and St. Paul, as they also foreknew, were martyred by Rome; but yet they preached submission to Rome. p John 8, 22, Rom. 6, 18, 1 Cor, 7, 22, Gal. 5, 1, 13, 2 Pet, 2, 19, q Matt. 22, 21, Rom. 12, 10, Eph. 4, 3, Phtl. 2, 3, Heb. 12, 1 ποιούντας φιμούν την των άφρόνων άνθρώπων άγνωσίαν 16 p ώς έλεύθεροι, καὶ μη ως επικάλυμμα έχοντες της κακίας την έλευθερίαν, άλλ' ως δούλοι Θεού. 17 η Πάντας τιμήσατε, την άδελφότητα άγαπατε, τον Θεον φοβείσθε, τον

16. ωs ἐλεύθεροι] as free, and yet,—although free by reason of that liberty, with which Christ has made you free (Gal. v. 1), -not using your liberty as a cloke (or specious pretext) for maliciousness.

He had exhorted them to be subject to every human ordinance for the Lord's sake : and he now obviates the objection of those Christians who-following the example of the Pharisees, and others among the Jews, who pleaded that they were God's peculiar people (see v. 9), and that, as children of Abraham, and subjects of Jehovah, they ought not to be in bondage to any man (John viii. 33), and especially ought not to submit to any heathen rule, and could not in conscience pay tribute to Casar (see Matt. xxii. 17-21)-alleged, that since they had been made free by Christ, they could not obey any other rule, especially a heathen power, without treachery to Him.

It is well observed by Bp. Sanderson, that St. Paul, the Apostle of the Gentiles, usually treats the question of Christian Liberty in reference to the duty of using it in such a manner as not to give offence to weak brethren; and that St. Peter, the Apostle of the Circumcision, generally handles it in such a manner as to guard it against being abused into an occasion of insubordination to Authority. The one guards against the danger of scandal; the other inculcates the duty of obedience.

The reason of this was, that St. Peter had to do with Jews "who could not brook subjection and were of all nations under heaven the most impatient of a foreign yoke." "Seditiosissima gens." Scaliger. Bp. Sanderson, iii. 273. St. Paul dealt with mixed communities of Jews and Gentiles, and had a delicate and difficult part to perform, in preventing the one from giving offence to the other, and from rashly judging the other; and in endeavouring to unite them all by the bonds of Love.

St. Peter asserts their freedom, and exhorts them to live as free: but he also warns them against making their freedom a mask for maliciousness, and against falling into the sins of licentiousness and rebellion, under the sacred guise of liberty, and religion; and against forfeiting their freedom, by making themsclves slaves of evil passions.

This twofold duty has been well inculcated in a sermon on this text by Bp. Sanderson. To do God and ourselves right it is necessary that we should with our utmost strength maintain the doctrine and power of that Liberty wherewith Christ hath endowed His Church, without either usurping the mastery over others, or subjecting ourselves to their servitude, so as to surrender either our judgments or Consciences to be wholly disposed according to the opinions or wills of men, though of never so excellent piety or parts.

But yet, lest while we shun one extreme, we fall into another, as we are very apt to do; and lest, while we seek to preserve our Liberty, we lose it; the Apostle, therefore, in the next clause, putteth in a caveat for that also, not using your liberty for a cloke of maliciousness. We must so maintain our Liberty that we abuse it not, as we shall, if, under the pretence of Christian Liberty, we either adventure the doing of some unlawful thing, or omit the performance of any requisite duty. Bp. Sanderson, v. p. 289. On the grounds and nature of Christian Liberty, and on the rules for its right use, see also note above, on I Cor. iii. 4. 22, 23; vi. 12; ix. 19, and Gal. v. 1 and 13.

As free, and not using your liberty as a cloke of maliciousness, but as servants of God.

It is observable, that St. Peter imitates and adopts here

St. Paul's language to the Galatians (v. 13).

(1) St. Peter's words "as free," correspond to St. Paul's words, "brethren, ye are called to liberty."

(2) St. Peter's words, "and not using your liberty as a cloke of maliciousness," correspond to St. Paul's words, "only use not your liberty as an occasion to the flesh."

(3) St. Peter's words, "but as servants of God," correspond to St. Paul's, "by love serve one another."

Thus these two Apostles unite in teaching, (1) The duty of maintaining Christian Liberty. (2) The need of caution against its abuse.

(3) The Law by which it is to be regulated, and the manner in which it is to be used.

Observe also, that St. Peter, the Apostle of the Circumcision, in this Epistle, which is addressed to Jewish Christians of Galatia, (i. 1), refers here to that Epistle of St. Paul—the Apostle of the Gentiles,-the Epistle to the Galatians (v. 13), in which St. Paul had specially inculcated the duty of maintaining Christian Liberty against the usurpations of Judaizing teachers, who endeavoured to bring them into bondage (Gal. i. 7; v. 1), and in which St. Paul had recorded his own public opposition to St. Peter at Antioch, when, in a moment of weakness, he connived at those Judaizing teachers who would have imposed the yoke of the Levitical Law on the Gentile Christians (Gal. ii. 11-21).

Thus St. Peter now declares his entire concurrence with St. Paul on that matter which had then produced a difference between them; and in which his conduct had exposed him to the rebuke of his brother Apostle. And by the adoption of the language of the Epistle of St. Paul to the Galatians, and by incorporating it in his own Epistle to the Jewish Christians of Galatia, he presents a noble example of recovery from error, and of generosity and love of truth. Compare note below, 2 Pet. iii. 15, 16, and Introduction to this Epistle, pp. 42, 43.

17. πάντας—τιματε] Honour all men, Love the brotherhood. On this text see Bp. Sanderson's Sermon, i. pp. 54-81.

- την άδελφότητα] the brotherhood (see v. 9). So Clemens R. i. 2, ἀγὼν ῆν ὑμῖν ὑπὲρ πάσης τῆς ἀδελφότητος εἰς τὸ σώζεσθαι, and so S. Polycarp (c. 10), in the old Latin Version, "fraternitatis amatores."

Love the brotherhood; sympathizing with them in grief, succouring them in trouble, rejoicing in their graces, as if they were your own. There is the same blood in your veins; the same Head of the whole brotherhood; the same Spirit knitting all together in one. Cp. Abp. Leighton on i. 22.

- τον βασιλέα τιματε] Honour the King, even Nero. See above, v. 13. Mark the difference between Timhoare and Timare.

The union of these two Apostolic precepts arranged in this order, "Fear God, Honour the King," shows that Loyalty is to be grounded on Piety; that in order to be good Citizens men must begin with being good Christians; that honour to Kings is to be based on the fear of God, by Whom Kings rule, and Whose ministers they are. St. Peter follows Solomon (Prov. xxiv. 21), φοβοῦ τὸν Θεὸν, υίὲ, καὶ βασιλέα.

18. οἱ οἰκέται] ye domestics,—a milder word than slaves. This is the only place in the Apostolic Epistles where the word οἰκέτης occurs in this sense.

This fact may thus be accounted for;

St. Peter is writing specially to Jewish Christians, who would not regard their domestics, especially those of their own nation, in the same light as the Heathen Masters did theirs, namely, as slaves. See Lev. xxv. 39-44, where the Jews are forbidden to reduce any poor man of their own nation to the state of a bondsman, and they might not purchase as bondsmen any of their own nation, but of the heathen only.

St. Paul, the Apostle of the Gentiles, and writing specially to them, always uses the word δούλος (bondsman, slave) in his precepts concerning household service (I Cor. vii. 21. Eph. vi. 5-8. Col. iii. 11. 22; iv. 1. 12. 1 Tim. vi. 1. Tit. ii. 9).

Many Jewish Rabbis taught, that a Jew might not serve a Heathen (see Lightfoot on I Cor. vii. 23. Cp. John viii. 33). Therefore this precept of St. Peter, the Apostle of the Circumcision, exhorting servants to be subject to their Masters, was a necessary caution to Jewish Christians; and it proves his courage and honesty; he would not ingratiate himself with them by flattery, and by concessions to their national prejudices. Cp. on Tit. i. 10-12.

19. τοῦτο γὰρ χάρις] for this is acceptable. Properly, this is an act of grace, freely and cheerfully laid up on your part, as a deposit with God, and favourably accepted by Him, and requited to you with praise and benefit. See v. 20, where  $\kappa\lambda \delta cs$  explains it; and cp. 1 Tim. ii. 3. Col. iii. 20. Hence Ecumen. renders it by  $\delta mo\delta o\chi \dot{\eta}$ , and  $\chi \dot{\alpha} \rho ss$  in Luke vi. 32 is represented in the parallel place of St. Matt. v. 46 by  $\mu u\sigma\theta \dot{\delta} s$ .

— ἡμῖν ὁπολιμπάνων ὑπογραμμόν] leaving to us (when He went away to heaven) a copy, for us to imitate; properly an exemplar or model, τύπος (2 Thess. iii. 9), to be followed in writing or painting (see Wetstein, p. 688), that we should follow

This saying has a peculiar force in the mouth of this blessed Apostle, who had been an eye-witness of our Lord's patient bearing, and meek demeanour, when He was arrested in the Garden of Gethsemane; and when He stood before Caiaphas and the Sanhedrim, on the morning before the crucifixion; and to whom our Lord, after His Resurrection, in reply to his question, "What shall this man do?" (viz. St. John,) said, "Follow thou Me" (John xxi. 22), and who did follow Him even to the cross as a Martyr; and having received the charge, "Feed My sheep" (John xxi. 15-18), laid down his life for them, as Christ, the good Shepherd, had laid down His life for the sheep. Cp. 1 John iii. 16, and Augustine in Joan. Tract. 84.

This passage is also imitated by S. Polycarp, c. 8, Χριστδs 'Ιησοῦς ἀνήνεγκεν ήμων τὰς άμαρτίας τῷ ἰδίψ σώματι ἐπὶ τὸ ξύλον, δε άμαρτίαν οὐκ ἐποίησεν, οὐδὲ εῦρέθη δόλος έν τῷ στόματι αὐτοῦ μιμηταὶ οὖν γενώμεθα τῆς ὑπομονῆς αὐτοῦ....τοῦτον ἡμῖν τὸν ὑπογραμμὸν ἔθηκε δί ἐαυτοῦ.

Christ is our Example of patience; as Tertullian says, He Who is God stooped to be born in the womb of His Mother, and waited patiently, and grew up; and when grown up was not impatient to be recognized as God. He was baptized by His servant; and repelled the Tempter only by words. When he became a Teacher, He did not strive nor cry, nor did any one hear His voice in the streets; He did not break the bruised reed nor quench the smoking flax. He scorned no man's company; He shunned no man's table. He conversed with publicans and sinners. He poured out water and washed His disciples' feet. He would not injure the Samaritan village which did not receive Him, when His Disciples desired to call fire from heaven to consume it. He cured the unthankful; He withdrew from those who plotted against Him. He had the Traitor constantly in His company and did not expose him. And when He is betrayed, and is brought to execution, He is like a sheep which before his shearers is dumb, and a lamb that doth not open its mouth. He Who was Lord of Angelic Legions did not approve the sword of Peter drawn in His defence. He is spit upon, scourged, mocked. Such long-suffering as His, is an example to all men, but is found in God alone. Tertullian, de Patientia, c. 3. Cp. Augustine, Serm. 114 and 284.

22. δs ἀμαρτίαν—αὐτοῦ] Who did not commit sin in act; no, nor even (οὐδὲ) was any guile found in His mouth. He was so far from doing any evil, that He did not even speak any guile.

23. δs λοιδορούμενος οὐκ ἀντελοιδόρει] Who being reviled, was not reviling again; when suffering, He was not threatening.

Observe the imperfect tenses here, ἀντελοιδόρει, ἢπείλει, παρεδίδου, was committing, i. e. Himself and His cause (see v. 6). Clem. Alex. here, and Winer, § 64, p. 521.

24. δs τὰs ἁμαρτίαs] Who His own self carried up our sins in His own body on to the tree. The preceding imperfect tenses (see the last note) give more significance to the subsequent transition to the carriet in dishyerers. He Himself willingly and transition to the aorist in ανήνεγκεν, He Himself willingly and Vol. II.—Part IV. alone (abros) carried up our sins by one act alone, done once for all; namely, by His death on the cross. He was Himself without sin; but He bare in Himself the sins of those for whom

He offered Himself as a sacrifice. Severus (in Catenâ, p. 58). He Who took the Nature of us all, and incorporates us all in Himself, carried, lifted up, our sins, collected together, as a weight laid upon Him, in His own body, as our proxy, substitute, and vicarious sacrifice, on to the tree on which He offered Himself as an expiatory and propitiatory sacrifice to God (Heb. vii. 27); and on which He became a curse for us, for it is written, "Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree." (Gal. iii. 13.) Thus He took away the curse in which we were involved by the sin of our first parents eating the fruit of the forbidden tree: and by His perfect obedience took away the curse of the Law for disobedience; for it is written, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all that is written in the Law to do it." (Gal.

The Vulgate has "pertulit" here, and the Syriac still more fully, "bajulavit omnia peccata nostra, eaque sustulit in corpore suo ad crucem."

The Socinian exposition of this passage is, that Christ dis-played a noble example of patience in our nature, and took away our sins by instructing us in patience.

It is true that the Apostle is here representing Christ as our pattern of patience. But he compares Him also to sacrificial victims, the offerings of the Law, who are described in Scripture as bearing the sins of those who offer them, see Lev. x. 17; and whose blood was to be carried into the holy place, because the blood is the life of man. (Lev. xvii. 11—14.)

St. Peter uses the word ἀνήνεγκε to describe the act of carrying the sins up, i. e. to the cross; as victims (to whom the sins were transferred and laid as a burden upon them, Lev. i. 4; iii. 2; iv. 15) were carried up and offered on an altar. See below on iii. 18; and compare Isa. liii. 12. Heb. ix. 28, δ Χριστδς απαξ προσενεχθείς είς το πολλών άνενεγκεῖν άμαρτίας.

Christ is here propounded as an example of patience in His act of bearing and carrying, not in His act of taking away, as

Christ's sufferings were exemplary; but they were also something much more than exemplary, they were also propitia-tory. This Scripture is happily connected, as an Epistle, with the Collect for the Second Sunday after Easter, where the doctrine of that double character of Christ's sufferings is taught.

St. Peter goes on to declare that the effect of Christ's patience in taking up our sins in His own body on the cross was to liberate us from the penalty of sin; for St. Peter adds, "by whose stripes ye were healed." See Irenœus, iii. 16. 9. Origen (in Levit. 3). "peccata nostra portavit; vitulum immaculatum, hoc est, carnem incontaminatam obtulit Deo;" so Cyprian, Ep. 8, and Ep. 63, "Christus peccata nostra portabat;" and other citations from ancient Christian Fathers on this subject at the end of the treatise of Grotius, de Satisf. Christi, pp. 229—267, and his own remarks, pp. 14—16, ed. 1675; and Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. ii. p. 140, and the note below on 1 John ii. 2; iv. 10.

On the genitives οὖ-αὐτοῦ, see Matt. iii. 12; the αὐτοῦ adds to the emphasis. Cp. Winer, p. 134. He, and He alone, is our Healer. On this text see the notes above on Isaiah liii. 4-6.

On the word μώλοψ, vibex, livor, wound or weal; especially made by scourging, see Welstein, p. 689.

Here is an Apostolic paradox: ye were healed by His wounds. (Bengel.)

The μώλωψ is the wound produced by the chastisement of slaves, and the ξύλον is the instrument of the death of slaves. Mark the Humility of Him, Who, being Lord of all, stooped to be the servant of all, and to suffer scourging and the cross as a slave; and was especially exemplary to that class which St. Peter is here addressing. Cp. κολαφίζόμενοι, v. 20.

Thus St. Peter obviates all Antinomian perversions of the Doctrine of the Atonement.

25. ἦτ∈ γὰρ ὡς πρόβατα] for, ye were as sheep yoing astroy, but have now returned to the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls: a reference, it would seem (as Bede remarks), to our Lord's parable of the Lost Sheep. St. Peter had been speaking of Christ, meek and patient as a sheep (vv. 22-24), and tenderhearted and vigilant as a Shepherd, laying down His life for the Sheep; bearing our sins in His own body on to the tree, as the good Shepherd in the Parable "came to seek and save the sheep that was lost," and "when he had found it, laid it upon his own shoulders, rejoicing, and said, Rejoice with me, for I have found My sheep that was lost." Luke xv. 5.

The Lost Sheep of the house of Israel were now scattered in all countries of the world; but Christ the Good Shepherd, stretching forth His hands upon the cross, and laying down His life for them, had borne them all on His shoulders, and brought them all home to the one fold.

A, B have πλανώμενοι, and so Lach., Tisch., Alf. Elz. πλανώμενα (agreeing with πρόβατα, sheep), with C, G, K, and most Cursives, and Theoph., Ecumen. And this reading seems to be confirmed by Ps. cxix. 176. Isa. liii. 6, where the sinners are compared to sheep that are lost, as in our Lord's Parable (Luke xv. 6); and compare Matt. xviii. 12. The reading therefore of Elz.—the textus receptus—seems preferable.

CH. III. 1. δμοίως, αι γυναικές] In like manner, ye wives, submilling yourselves to your own husbands, for the Lord's sake (ii. 13). He had been exhorting subjects to submit to their Rulers (ii. 14), and servants to their Masters (ii. 18), so do ye; for so, by your meek and gracious demeanour, ye may win your own Husbands, if heathen, to the faith in Christ, and save their souls. See 1 Cor. vii. 16.

3. ὧν ἔστω] of whom, let not that outward adornment of braiding of hair, and of putting round (the head, neck, wrists, &c.) of yolden ornaments, be the adornment, on which ye pride yourselves. Cp. Clemens Alexandr. (Pæd. iii. 4), who says, the women that pride themselves in wearing gold, and plaiting their hair, have not the image of God in the inner man . . . but let it be the hidden man of the heart.

St. Peter does not here prohibit a decorous apparel, suitable to the station of the wearer, but he exhorts women to take heed, first, to the dress of the heart, as being ever in the eye of God, who readeth the heart. Then they will never err as to the dress of the body. See Augustine, Epist. 73.

 - ἐμπλοκῆς τριχῶν] of the weaving of hair in knots, &c., κόρνμβοι οτ σκόρπιοι, by means of the pecten, calamistrum, and acus crinatis, used for such purposes. Cp. 1 Tim. ii. 9, ἐν πλέγμασιν, joined with ἡ χρυσῷ, as here. 6. Σάβρα] Sarah, "who by faith received strength to conceive seed, and was delivered of a child, when she was past age, because she judged Him faithful Who had promised." Heb. xi. 11.
Sarah is also described as speaking by divine inspiration, when her son Isaac was persecuted by Ishmael. See on Gal. iv. 28, 29.
And the faithful seed are exhorted to look to Abraham and Sarah that bare them (Isa. li. 2); and her name was changed from Sarai to Sarah, because God made her a Princess, and a Mother of Nations (Gen. xvii. 15); and God said to Abraham, "Hearken unto Sarah's voice; for in Isaac, her son, shall thy seed be called."

κύριον αὐτὸν καλοῦσα] calling him Lord, as the Rabbis observe on Gen. xviii.12. Wetstein; although she was herself

Sarah,-a princess.

 - η s εγενήθητε τέκνα] whose (Sarah's) children ye became (εγενήθητε) by doing well, and not being afraid with any trepidation; πτόησιν, terror, panic, alarm, shown by crouching like a hare, and attempting to fly (πτοέω, πτήσσω, πτώξ). The word is used in this sense by Philo, p. 516 (ή ξκπληξις πτόησιν έμποιεί).

On the cognate accusative after φοβούμεναι, see the examples in Estius here, and Winer, § 32, p. 201. Cp. Mark iv. 41. Luke ii. 9. 1 Tim. vi. 12. 2 Tim. iv. 7. Rev. xvii. 6, and below, iv. 14. Or the words may be translated, "not being affrighted by any terror," i. e. by any object of terror from without, as in Prov.

This admonition of St. Peter was very necessary for Christian women, specially those who were married, who were subject to vexations and persecutions from Heathens, and even from their own husbands. See Tertullian, ad Uxor. ii. 4, 5. Prof. Blunt, Early Church, ch. v. p. 98.

This Apostolic precept, to do good and fear not, was exemplified by St. Peter's wife, who had probably seen the Lord (Matt. viii. 14), and was St. Peter's companion in his Apostolic journeys (I Cor. ix. 5), and went before her husband to Martyrdom, and was cheered by him in her way, by the consideration suggested here; namely, by the recollection of the sufferings of Christ. "Seeing his wife led to death, Peter rejoiced, because she was being called by God, and returning home; and he, calling her by name, comforted her, saying, O woman, remember the Lord!" (Clemens Alex. apud Éuseb. iii. 30.)

7. συνοικοῦντες κατὰ γνῶσιν] cohabiting (with your wives) according to knowledge (not in the lust of concupiscence), rendering honour (τιμήν, reverent regard and modest forbearance in conjugal intercourse) to them as to the weaker vessel, as being heirs together with them of the grace of life, so that your prayers (that is, the prayers of you and your wife) may not be interrupted.

Β, G have the dative συγκληρονόμοις, and so Tisch., Alf.

This is a general precept—as the ancient Expositors observe -to regulate the use of the marriage bed with reverential regard to the spiritual welfare of husband and wife, as fellow-heirs of life eternal; and in such a manner, as may be conducive to mutual edification, and to conjugal union in holy offices of prayer and praise to God. Compare St. Paul's precept, 1 Cor. vii. 5, and Eccles. iii. 5, and S. Jerome c. Jovinian, i. 4, and S. Augustine in Ps. exlvi., and Œcumenius here. On the use of the word σκεῦος, ressel, compare 1 Sam. xxi. 5, and see the note above on 1 Thess. iv. 4. Every man ought to regard his own body as a vessel sanctified to the Lord (2 Tim. ii. 21); like those holy vessels for divine service in the Temple (Heb, ix. 21). He ought also to regard the body of his wife as an holy ressel, and as one of more delicate and fragile structure than his own; and to treat it with modest reserve and reverential tenderness and honourable love.

St. Peter's words here are best illustrated by those of St-

Paul (1 Thess, iv. 3-5. Col. ii. 23), especially as to the word  $\tau\iota\mu\eta$ , honour, which means reverent regard for the body (whether it be our own body, or that of another), as contrasted with πάθη ariulas, lusts by which the body is dishonoured. See the Apostle's words, Rom. i. 24-26.

This Apostolic precept, to render honour to the wife, as the weaker vessel, is a scriptural warrant for the sentence, against which some have excepted, in the plighting of troth in the office of Holy Matrimony in the Book of Common Prayer,—" With my body I thee worship," i. e. I render thee honour. "Habere uxorem non in servæ loco, neque meretricis, sed ut sororis in Christo, et cohæredis regni colorum, viri est Christiani." To render due honour to the body by keeping it in subjection, and by abstinence from fornication and uncleanness; and to pay due honour to the body of the wife, by sobriety, modesty, and love, are conjugal offices, requisite for the maintenance of due regard for that holy Ordinance of God, which was instituted by Him in the time of Man's innocency, and by which is represented and signified the spiritual Marriage and Unity betwixt Christ and His Church. (Eph. v. 25-32.)

10. δ γὰρ θέλων ζωην ἀγαπᾶν] For he whose will it is to love life: that is, who sets himself by a deliberate act of volition to love that life which is true life; cp. Matt. xvi. 25, δs αν θέλη ψυχήν σῶσαι, Luke ix. 24, and see S. Basil in Catenâ here.

St. Peter thus gives additional emphasis to the Psalmist's words ( $\check{\alpha}\nu\theta\rho\omega\pi\sigma$ s  $\delta$   $\theta$  $\dot{\epsilon}\lambda\omega\nu$   $\zeta\omega\dot{\eta}\nu$ ,  $\grave{\alpha}\gamma\alpha\pi\dot{\omega}\nu$   $i\delta\epsilon\hat{\imath}\nu$   $i\eta\mu\dot{\epsilon}\rho$ as  $i\delta\gamma\alpha\dot{\alpha}\dot{\alpha}\gamma$ , and shows that love itself  $(\dot{\alpha}\gamma\dot{\alpha}\pi\dot{\eta})$ , in the true sense of the word, is not a mere appetite, but requires a sustained effort

13. τίς δ κακώσων ύμας, έὰν τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ ζηλωταί γένησθε;] πίπο is he that will harm you, if ye become zealots for that which is good? Many among the Jews and Jewish Christians had zeal, but not according to knowledge (Rom. x. 2), and were not zealots in a good thing (Gal. iv. 17). Many were called ζηλωταl, zealots, and under plea of zeal for God were guilty of enormities (see on Matt. xxiv. 15). Be ye zealots, says the Apostle, but let it be for that Such a Zelotes was St. Peter's fellow-Apostle, which is good. Simon, called the Cananite for his zeal (see on Matt. x. 4); and

The oldest uncial MSS., A, B, C, have  $\zeta \eta \lambda \omega \tau \alpha l$  here: but Elz., G, K, and many cursive MSS. have  $\mu \iota \mu \eta \tau \alpha l$ , imitators, and this reading (which is received by Tisch. in his last edition) deserves attention.

If it is the true one, the sense is, Who is he that will harm you, if ye become imitators of Him that is good? The word μιμητής is used in six other places of the N. T. (1 Cor. iv. 16; xi. 1. Eph. v. I. 1 Thess. i. 6; ii. 14. Heb. vi. 12), and in all it is followed by a person who is to be imitated (see on 1 Cor. xi. 1), and a Person is here proposed for imitation, namely, Christ (v. 18; iv. 1). And then He, who is the Good One, is here represented as a Defender of those who imitate Him, against the assaults of any person, man or Devil, who would harm them.

14.  $\tau \delta \nu \phi \delta \delta \rho \nu a \delta \tau \omega \nu \mu \gamma \phi \delta \delta \rho \eta \theta \gamma \tau \epsilon$ that is, the fear with which they would inspire you; but sanctify the Lord of Hosts Himself, and let Him be your fear. Isa. viii. 12, 13. See Ps. lxiv. 1, "Preserve my life from fear of the enemy," and above, v. 6, and cp. Phil. i. 28.

15. Κύριον δὲ τὸν Χριστὸν (so A, B, C. Elz. has Θεὸν) ἀγιάσατε] but sanctify the Lord Christ in your hearts. Even Moses and Aaron were excluded from the promised land, because they did not sanctify the Lord among the children of Israel at the waters of strife (Deut. xxxii. 51), but claimed to themselves some of that honour which belongs to Him alone. Cp. Bp. Andrewes, ii. p. 336, "on sanctifying God's Name."

Christ is to be worshipped as God, in the Temple of our hearts, and all that appertains to Him must be treated with reverential awe. His glory is to be the aim and end of all our actions; His word our law; His grace our strength; His blessed

Self the object of our desires.

This precept, "to sanctify the Lord Christ in our hearts," especially when compared with the parallel passage, "Fear ye not their fear, but sanctify the LORD of HOSTS Himself, and let him be your fear" (Isa. viii. 12), is a clear demonstration of the Divine Nature of Christ.

When we say, "Hallowed be Thy Name," in the Lord's Prayer, we pray for the sanctification of the Name of our Lord Christ. Cp. Clemens Alex. here.

We may be thankful, therefore, for the testimonies of the most ancient MSS., and of the Vulgate, Syriac, Armenian, Coptic, Sahidic, and Arabic (Erpenian) Versions, which are followed here by Lachmann, Tisch., Alford, for the restoration of

meekness, and not with insolence, or presumption.

Some of the interpolated "Acts of the Martyrs,"—for example, those of S. Cæcilia, -afford a comment on this text. In the Acts of her Martyrdom, as recently published, the Christian Virgin is transformed into a bold virago, venting the language of insult against her Roman Judge sitting on the seat of authority. Very different, doubtless, was the real demeanour of S. Cæcilia in the hour of trial. Very different was the demeanour of all genuine Martyrs imitating the example of Christ, who, when He was reviled, reviled not again (Isa. liii. 7. 1 Pet. ii. 23); and obeying this precept of St. Peter.

This is the conscience which produces καλὴν ἀναστροφὴν, good conversation. See Bp. Sanderson, iv. pp. 10. 65—90.

order that he might present us to God.

The Sin-offerings in the Old Testament are styled above sixty times in the LXX τὰ περὶ ἀμαρτίῶν. Therefore the Jews, to whom the Apostle writes, would understand his words here to mean, that Christ suffered to make atonement for sins, by suffering the punishment of sin in the stead of those for whom He offered Himself a sacrifice on the Cross.

- θανατωθείς μεν σαρκί] having been put to death in the flesh. St. Peter thus guards his readers against the heresy of Simon Magus, and the Docetæ, who said that Christ's flesh was a phantom; and against that of the Cerinthians, and other false teachers, whose errors were propagated in Asia, who alleged that the Christ was only an Æon or-Emanation, which descended on the man Jesus at His Baptism, but departed from Him before His Passion. See S. Iren. i. 26, and Ittig, Hæres. c. v., and below, preliminary note to 2 Pet. ii., and Introduction to the First Epistle of St. John.

18-22.] The important statements contained in these verses will be best considered collectively in one note.

Christ suffered, a just person on behalf of the unjust, in order that He might present and bring us near to God (see Rom. v. 2. Eph. ii. 18; iii. 12), Who before was alienated from us; having been put to death in His human flesh, but quickened in spirit (i. e. in His disembodied human spirit), in which (human spirit) is the spirit (i. e. in His disembodied human spirit). spirit) He went and preached even (kal) to the spirits (disembodied human spirits) which were then in prison (φυλακή), which spirits disobeyed (did not hearken, Rom. xi. 30, 31. Heb. iii. 18) formerly, when the long-suffering of God was waiting (anexεδέχετο, which is the reading of the best MSS. and Editions. Elz. has ἄπαξ ἐδέχετο; compare Rom. viii. 25) in the days of Noe, when the Ark was preparing, into which (εἰs ἡν) few persons (ἀλίγοι Α, Β), that is, eight souls, entering, were saved effectually (διεσώθησαν; as to the accusative cp. Gen. xix. 19, διασωθήναι εἰς τὸ ὄρος. Thucyd. i. 110, ἐς Κυρήνην διεσώθησαν) by means of water, which overwhelmed the rest of the world. And so δι ΰδατος may have also a secondary sense, and mean, "through the water," which drowned the disobedient, while Noah had a refuge and means of escape from and through it, in the Ark.

St. Peter is here exhorting his readers to suffer patiently for doing well; and for this purpose he presents to them the example of Christ; first in suffering; then in the fruits of suffering; namely, in the collation of infinite good to others, on earth, under the earth, and in heaven; so filling all things with His power and love; and in the acquisition of eternal sovereignty and glory to His own Humanity in heavenly places, by virtue of His sufferings in His own human body upon earth.

St. Peter's language is best illustrated by that of St. Paul in Phil. ii. 5—11, where, like St. Peter, he is exhorting to humility and patience by a consideration of the condescension, sufferings, and subsequent exaltation of Jesus Christ; "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus, who, when subsisting in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God, but made Himself of no reputation, and took upon Him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself and became obedient unto death, even to the death of the Cross. Wherefore God also highly exalted Him, and gave Him the name, which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.'

St. Peter shows, that Christ, Who is God (v. 15), and just, and sinless (i. 19), condescended in His love to suffer for sins; that, in His love for us, He vouchsafed to suffer for us, in order to bring us near to God; that He, Who is perfectly just, and therefore not liable to any punishment, consented to suffer for us, when we were unjust: and that He suffered once, and once only.

Here is our pattern and example.

Here also is our comfort.

Christ's sufferings, which were endured once for all (amat), were the means of everlasting blessedness to others, and of eternal glory to Himself.

For, says the Apostle, although He was put to death in the flesh, yet that death itself was the occasion of new honour to Himself; and of great good to others, to whom He went after

When Christ was on the cross, He breathed forth His human spirit, and gave up the ghost, and died. (Matt. xxvii. 50. Luke

At His death, His human spirit was severed from His human flesh. His human flesh was taken down from the cross, and was laid by Joseph of Arimathæa in a new tomb. (Matt. xxvii. 57-

But His human spirit, being liberated by death from the burden of the flesh, acquired new life by death; it gained new powers of motion; it went forth on a journey (ἐπορεύθη); it travelled on a blessed mission to the region of departed spirits  $(\pi\nu\epsilon\dot{\nu}\mu\alpha\tau\alpha)$ , and entered the place where they were detained in prison (φυλακή).

Christ then went in His human spirit, and preached (¿κήρυξε to those spirits in prison, which were disobedient formerly, and did not hearken to the preaching of Noah, when the long-suffering of God was waiting for the space of one hundred and twenty years (Gen. vi. 3), in the days of Noe, when the Ark was preparing, into which only eight persons entered, and were saved by water; and the rest perished in the flood.

Few indeed were they, who were thus saved in the Ark; but we Christians, adds the Apostle, we are now being saved by Baptism, which was typified by the Flood. We are being saved by Baptism, through the Resurrection of Jesus Christ, whose spirit, having gone into the place of departed spirits, preached to those who had been disobedient formerly in the days of Noah, when the Ark was a preparing, but not yet built, more than 2000 years before the days of Christ, by whom the Church Universal, typified of old by the Ark, has now been built for all nations; and Who, having gone in His spirit to the lower region of departed spirits, has now raised Himself from the Grave, and has become the pledge and first-fruits of our Resurrection (1 Cor. xv. 20), and having reunited His human body to His human spirit, went on another journey, even to the highest regions of heaven, and is at the right hand of God, Angels and Authorities and Powers having been made subject unto Him.

These important statements may be compared with St. Peter's speech on the Day of Pentecost, Acts ii. 23-36.

St. Peter, in using the word  $\pi\nu\epsilon\bar{\nu}\mu\alpha$  (v. 18), is not speaking of the Holy Spirit, as has been supposed by some; but he is speaking of the action of Christ's human spirit (πνευμα), when it departed from His human flesh at His death on the cross.

The word πνεθμα, or spirit, is here contrasted with the word σάρξ, flesh: the former being that higher and nobler part of human nature, by which we are akin to God, and recipients of His Spirit; whereas  $\sigma \lambda \rho \xi$ , flesh, represents that side of our nature by which we appertain to earth. See Matt. xxvi. 41. Mark xiv. 38. John vi. 63. Col. ii. 5. Heb. xii. 9; and note above on 1 Thess. v. 23. And see the passages in which the  $\pi \nu \epsilon \hat{\nu} \mu \alpha$ , or human spirit of Christ, is mentioned, Mark viii. 12. Luke x. 21; xxiii. 46. John xiii. 21; xix. 30.

This is the meaning assigned to the word mvevua, spirit, here, by ancient Expositors, who cited this text in refutation of the Apollinarian heresy, which denied the reality of our Lord's human Apolimarian heresy, which defined the feath of the souls spirit. Thus S. Athanasius (c. Apollinar. ii. c. 8) says, "If the soul is only carnal, why does it not die with the body, and why does St. Peter call the souls detained in prison spirits?" And so the Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic Versions, and many of the best modern interpreters from the times of Estius.

And S. Hilary says (on Ps. exxxviii.), "This is the condition of our humanity; after our death our bodies are buried, but our souls descend to their appointed place below (ad inferos). And our Lord Himself, in order that He might fulfil all the laws of a real humanity, did not decline that Descent.'

Elz. has  $\tau \hat{\varphi}$  before  $\pi \nu \epsilon \hat{\nu} \mu \alpha \tau_i$  here; but this is not in A, B, C, G, K, and is rejected by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Alf.

Christ was put to death in His σαρξ, flesh (see iv. 1, cp. iv. 6), the earthly part of our nature; but in His human spirit έζωοποιήθη, He was endued with new life by death. During His lifetime on earth He was restrained by the earthly conditions of His flesh: He preached in person to only a few of His own age and country. He delivered them from the captivity of sin and Satan; He proclaimed liberty to the captives; He preached to them deliverance from prison, and an Evangelic Jubilee. (Luke iv. 18.)

But ofter death He went in His disembodied spirit to the nether world. Death opened to Him a new sphere of missionary enterprise. He went and preached to the spirits in prison—to spirits of a by-gone generation, to spirits which had lived upon earth in the days of the Patriarch Noah, more than two thousand years before.

Thus Satan's malice recoiled upon himself. He had instigated Judas to betray Christ, and the Jews to kill Him. But by Christ's death new life accrued to Christ, and new comfort was ministered to spirits, which were held in prison in the lower Observe here the word  $\pi open\theta els$ , and again in v. 22. It describes an actual journey of Christ. He is here (in v. 19) described as going to the lower world of Spirits, and He is described there (v. 22) as going into heaven. There is a local transition in both passages. Christ made two journeys; one downward in His human spirit to the nether world of disembodied spirits; and another upward in His risen body, reunited to His spirit, to the heavenly world of angels, and to the right hand of God.

Observe also the word kal before mvebmaouv. Christ, who before had preached on earth to men, in bodily presence, now, after His removal from them by death, preached also, or even, to human spirits in the region under the earth, in the time between

His Death and Resurrection.

After the Incarnation, no portion of Christ's time has ever been without benefit to mankind. Wherever He goes, whether on earth, or under the earth, or in heaven (cp. Phil. ii. 10), He carries blessings with Him. He fills all things with His love. He suffers, and conquers by suffering. He dies, and lives by Dcath, and brings eternal life to others, and everlasting glory to Himself.

Next, remark the word ἐκήρυξεν. Thus placed it cannot be understood in any other sense than He preached-preached the Gospel. This word κηρύσσω is placed thus in about fifteen other passages of the New Testament, and in every one it means to preach the Gospel or preach Christ. See Matt. iii. 1; iv. 17; z. 7. 27; xi. 1. Mark i. 7. 38, 39; iii. 14; v. 20; xvi. 20. Luke iv. 44. Rom. x. 14. 1 Cor. ix. 27; xv. 11.

Accordingly, this is the sense assigned to the word κηρύσσω here by the ancient Greek Fathers, e. g. S. Irenœus (iv. 37. 2, p. 347, Grabe), "Dominum in eâ quæ sunt sub terrá descendisse evangelizantem adventum suum."

And in another place (iii. 33), S. Irenæus speaks of Christ as going down to Hades, and says, " Primogenitus enim mortuorum natus Dominus, et in sinum suum recipiens pristinos patres, regeneravit eos in vitam Dei." And a little after, "Hic illos in evangelium vitæ regeneravit."

These phrases are a comment on the text of St. Peter, He went and preached to the spirits in prison; as is observed by Wall on Infant Baptism, I. ch. iii.

Lapide here, p. 214.

Also the word φυλακή can hardly have any other sense than prison. See Matt. v. 25; xiv. 3; xviii. 30; xxv. 36. 39. 43, 44. Mark vi. 17. 27. Luke iii. 20; xii. 58; xxi. 12; xxii. 33; xxiii. 19. John iii. 24. Acts v. 19; xii. 4; and in thirteen other places; and 2 Cor. vi. 5; xi. 23. Heb. xi. 36. Rev. ii. 10;

Lastly, in the history of Joseph in prison, and in his deliverance and exaltation, we have a type of Christ's Burial and Resurrection, and Ascension. See Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. v. p. 475; Art. vi. p. 515; and note above on Acts vii. 1.

The time in which Joseph was ἐν φυλακῆ, in prison (see LXX in Gen. xl. 3), was signalized by a remarkable exercise of his prophetic office in the respective of deliverance from punish. his prophetic office in the revelation of deliverance from punishment. Cp. Gen. xli. 43. May not that incident, which is recorded with so much circumstantiality in Holy Writ, concerning Joseph, the type of Christ in His Burial, Resurrection, and Ascension, have some reference to the preaching of Christ to the spirits in

On the whole, then, we arrive at this result,-

Christ in His human spirit preached to spirits in prison; and having done this, He raised His own body from the dead, and went in that body, reunited to His spirit, into Heaven, where He is now in His glorified manhood, at the right hand of God, Angels and Principalities and Powers being made subject unto

Here is the climax of all. Well, then, may the Apostle proceed to add, Since then Christ suffered in the flesh, and thus conferred blessings upon mankind on earth, and under the earth, and thus entered into His glory in heaven, arm ye yourselves with the same mind.

Let the same mind be in you which was in Christ Jesus, Who, as St. Paul speaks, first descended into the lower parts of the earth, and then ascended into heaven that He might fill all things (Eph. iv. 9, 10), and being God from Eternity, took on Him the form of a slave, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross, and thus obtained the Name that is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of beings not only in heaven and on earth, but also under the earth  $(\kappa\alpha\tau\alpha\chi\theta\circ\iota(\omega\tau))$ , "and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." (Phil. ii. 5-11.)

In like manner, St. John, in the Apocalypse, speaks of beings under the earth (ὑποκάτω τῆς γῆς) as joining with those in earth, and in heaven, in ascribing praise and glory to the Lamb who had been slain. (Rev. v. 12, 13.)

This then is the scope of St. Peter's argument;

He is delivering an exhortation to suffer gladly for well-doing after the example of Christ, God Incarnate, suffering death for man, procuring benefits for all by suffering, and thus entering into His heavenly glory; and by virtue of His Incarnation and Passion, His Resurrection and Ascension, exalting all, who suffer for Him, to bliss eternal.

In this argument the Apostle asserts that our Lord in His human spirit went and preached to the spirits in prison, who were formerly disobedient in the days of Noah.

He states the fact, but he does not declare the subject of the preaching, nor its result.

Our duty therefore here is to receive with reverence what is revealed, and not to aspire "to be wise above what is written."

Much consolation and instruction may be derived from what is here revealed.

It is a comfortable thing to know, that the human spirit of Christ was not in any way impaired by death. Hence we receive a blessed assurance, that our own human spirits, on their dissolution from the body, will not lose any of their energies.

It is a joyful thing to know, that Christ's human spirit was quickened by death; thus we learn, that our human spirits, if we die in the Lord, will acquire new life by death. This is also clear from other scriptures, especially from the conveyance of the spirit of Lazarus, on his death, into Abraham's bosom (see on Luke xvi. 22, 23), and from the transition of the spirit of the penitent thief from the cross to Paradise. See on Luke xxiii. 43, and Justin Martyr (c. Tryphon. c. 5), where he says that the "souls of the righteous abide in a better place, and the souls of the wicked in a worse place-awaiting the future judgment,' which is quite consistent with the assertion of Lactantius (Inst. vii. 21), that "disembodied spirits are in one region," inasmuch as that region has two distinct compartments, between which "a great gulf is fixed."

By this journey of Christ's spirit to the nether world of disembodied spirits, Death has been despoiled of its terrors, and the Grave has become to us a Passage to peace, and a Gate of light and joy.

It is also a comfortable thing to know, that the disembodied spirit of our adorable Redeemer was full of tenderness to men. That love extended even to by-gone generations, whose names are unknown to us. He went and preached-preached to spirits in prison; to those spirits which had been disobedient formerly, when the Ark was a preparing, and which had not entered into the Ark, and which were now in a place of confinement.

So much the Holy Spirit reveals to us by St. Peter. in this revelation he affords us abundant cause for gratitude to Christ, and for stedfast trust in Him, and for patient suffering for Him, and for a lively hope of a glorious Resurrection and Ascension to Him, and of an eternity of glory with Him.

Let it not, however, be imagined that He here gives any ground for presumption, that, if we do not do well, and are not ready to suffer for Christ, and if we die in disobedience and impenitence, there remains for us any message of comfort after

For, be it observed, the circumstances of the persons here mentioned are unique, and can never again be paralleled. Christ, says St. Peter, suffered once for sin. He died once, but He dieth no more. He went in His human spirit after His Death, and before His Resurrection, and He preached to spirits in prison. But He is now risen from the dead; He has now ascended into

The incidents of that preaching, therefore, can never recur. It was fit, that, as the hour of His Crucifixion was marked by an extraordinary miracle of mercy, the rescue of the spirit of the penitent thief confessing Him in that crisis of shame, and by the translation of that spirit to Paradise, so His descent into the nether world should be marked by some special extraordinary overtures of mercy to spirits in prison.

Besides, the circumstances of the spirits in prison, to whom He is here described as preaching, were also unique and unparalleled.

They likewise can never recur.

God has pledged His word, that He will never more send a Flood of waters to drown the earth. (Gen. ix. 11. 15.) Other judgments were local, the Flood was universal.

Besides, though they who lived then, had the benefits of the preaching and example of Noah, and the long-suffering of God waited for one hundred and twenty years while the Ark was a preparing, yet their condition was very different from that of all generations of men since the Death of Christ.

The men of Noah's age had only the example of a single godly family (Gen. vi. 7, 8, 11—13; vii. 1), and, as far as appears, Noah alone and his house had a direct invitation to come into the Ark; and God looked upon the earth, and all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth (vi. 12), and the result was, that all flesh died (vii. 21), and only eight persons were saved in the Ark. But, after Christ's Resurrection, He gave a commission to His disciples to preach the Gospel to all nations (Matt. xxviii. 19) and to baptize all.

The waters of Baptism are as universal as the waters of the Flood. They are now saving us (v. 21); their saving power never ceases. God will never more send the destroying waters of a Flood; and He will never dry up the saving waters of Baptism. The Ark of Noah was fixed in one place, and in fine it received only eight persons. But the antitype of the Ark, the Christian Church, is universal in time and place. He pours out His Holy Spirit on all flesh (Acts ii. 17), and His Gospel will be preached as a witness every where (Matt. xxiv. 14), and His words will never pass away. (Matt. xxiv. 35.)

Thus the circumstances of the generation of those who perished in the Flood, differed widely from those of all generations since the coming of Christ even to the end of the world. There appear therefore to be special reasons for special mercy to them. There seem to be also special reasons for a reference here to their case.

Many ancient Heretics, especially the Marcionites and Manicheans, and their predecessors, even in the days of the Apostles, asserted the doctrine of dualism, that is, of two opposite principles in the world. They represented the Law as contrary to the Gospel (see Epiphanius, Hæres. lxvi.; Bp. Pearson, Art. i. p. 120, note). They said, that the God of the Old Testament was at variance with the God of the New. They alleged that the God of the former was of a stern disposition, different from the God of the Gospel. They introduced two antagonistic deities, and undermined the doctrine of the unity and sovereignty (μοναρχία) of God. This theory of dualism was the groundwork of almost all the Gnostic heresies of the Apostolic times.

This theory derived some arguments from the history of the Flood. (Cp. Aug. c. Adv. Legis, i. 45.) St. Peter's Epistle was probably written in the East (see v. 13.) There the belief in two opposite principles, a Good and Evil, was widely disseminated by the religion of Zoroaster, and by the Magi of Persia (see on Isa. xlv. 3—7). There also the Ark rested after the Waters of the Flood.

The author of this Epistle, written in the East, may have heard the objections raised on the history of the Flood, against the Divine Benevolence, and the unity of the Godhead; and he appears to be answering such objections as those, and to be vindicating that history. He shows the harmony of God's dispen-sations, Patriarchal and Evangelical. He teaches us to behold in the Ark a type of the Church, and in the Flood a type of Baptism. He thus refutes the Manichæan Heresy. He says that God was merciful even to that generation. He speaks of God's long-suffering, waiting for them while the Ark was preparing. He states boldly the objection, that few, only eight souls, were saved in the Ark, and he contrasts the condition of those who were drowned in the Flood with the condition of those who have now offers of salvation in Baptism. He says, that the rest disobeyed, while the Ark was preparing. He uses the agrist tense  $(\mathring{a}\pi\epsilon \imath \theta \acute{\eta}\sigma a\sigma\imath)$ . He does not say, that when the Ark had been prepared, and when the Ark was shut, and when the Flood came, and it was too late for them to reach it, they all remained impenitent. Perhaps some were penitent at the eleventh hour, like the thief on the cross. Every one will be justly dealt with by God. There are degrees of punishment as there are of reward. (See on Matt. x. 15. Luke xii. 48.) God does not quench the smoking flax (Matt. xii. 20). And St. Peter, by saying that they did not hearken formerly, while the Ark was preparing, almost seems to suggest the inference, that they did hearken now when One, greater than Noah, came in His human spirit, into the abysses of the deep of the lower world; and that a happy change was wrought in the condition of some among them by His coming.

In the words of S. Hilary (on Ps. cxix. 82), "When wilt thou comfort me?" The soul (of the faithful) knows, on the witness of the Apostle Peter, that when the Lord went down into Hades, words of comfort were preached even to those who were in prison, and were formerly unbelieving in the day of Noah, and did not enter the Ark, but may probably have had some strong penitential emotions, and have put up some hearty penitential prayers to God, and may have had some earnest desires, and made some eager but fruitless efforts to enter the Ark, when the Flood came and destroyed them. And S. Cyril answers an objection to the lateness of Christ's Incarnation, by saying, that many, who would have profited by his preaching, if He had been incarnate in their age, derived benefit from His manifestation to the region of departed souls. See the ancient valuable testimonies recently published by Dr. Cramer, Catena, pp. 66—70, and cp. Greg. Nazian., Orat. Pasch. xlii.; and Theophylact here, 372, ed. Bened.; and Œcumen.; and an excellent note by Estius on this passage.

The Church of England in one of her Articles published in the fourth year of King Edward VI., declared that the body of Christ lay in the grave until His Resurrection; but His spirit which He gave up, was with the spirits detained in prison, and preached to them, as the place of St. Peter testifieth; and she has wisely appointed this portion of St. Peter's Epistle (1 Pet. iii. 17—22) to be read as the Epistle on Easter Even.

By connecting this passage with that Day, she supplies a practical commentary on the meaning of this portion of Holy Writ: and she suggests to the faithful a profitable and consolatory meditation on the work of mercy and love, in which the disembodied spirit of our adorable Saviour was employed at that solemn time when His human body was lying in the grave.

Such appears to be the most probable interpretation of this very interesting portion of Holy Scripture. Expounded in this sense, it harmonizes with the Apostle's argument concerning the blessedness of suffering for doing well in imitation of Christ.

A view of the various expositions of this subject may be seen in S. Augustine's Epistle to Euodia, Ep. 164, al. 99. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. ii. p. 211; and Art. v. pp. 425-455. Cp. Milton, Par. Lost, xi. 723; Abp. Leighton here; Bp. Beveridge, and especially Professor Harold Browne on the Third Article of the Church of England; Bp. Horsley, vol. i. serm. xx.; Bp. Middleton here; and in the notes of De Wette, Huther,

21. b—ἀντίτυπον—βάπτισμα] which (water) also is now saving us, being an antitype of the water of the Flood; and being ministered to us as Baptism.

"Tómos est res præfigurans,  $\mathring{a}\nu\tau l\tau\nu\pi\sigma\nu$  est res præfigurata." Raphel. Elz. has  $\mathring{\varphi}$  here in the dative case; but  $\mathring{\sigma}$ , the nominative, which (i.e. water), is the reading of A, B, C, G, K, and is adopted by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Alf.

The word βάπτισμα, Baptism, is placed emphatically at the end, and stands in contrast with Circumcision, which some of St. Peter's Jewish readers were disposed to enforce as necessary to salvation; and the absence of all reference to Circumcision in this Epistle is a silent protest against the Judaizing notions, at which he himself had once been tempted to connive. See Gal. ii. 11—17.

St. Peter aftirms that Baptism saveth us; that is, God therein does His part effectually for the salvation of all who come to άλλὰ συνειδήσεως ἀγαθῆς ἐπερώτημα εἰς Θεὸν, δι ἀναστάσεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ,  $^{\rm s. Him therein. Compare St. Paul's words in Titus iii. 5, where, for a like reason, the agrist tense is used, ἔσωσεν ἡμας, " He saved us by the laver of regeneration, and by the renewing of the Holy Ghost.

Thus St. Peter shows the harmony of God's dealings with mankind. He teaches that the Ark, "in which Noah and his family were saved from perishing by water," is a type of the Church of Christ, in which all who are "stedfast in faith, joyful through hope, and rooted in charity, pass the waves of this troublesome world, till they finally come to the land of everlasting life;" and that in their double character the waters of the Flood were symbolical of the water of Baptism, salvific to all who obey God and enter the Ark which He has built for them, and abide therein; and destructive to them who disobey Him; and thus they have a double office, as Christ Himself and all His dispensations have. See Luke ii. 34. 2 Cor. ii. 16. Rev. ix. 14-20, and S. Augustin. c. Faustum, xii. 17, "Præter Arcam omnis caro diluvio consumpta est; quia præter Ecclesiæ societatem, aqua Baptismi quanvis eadem sit, non solum non valet ad salutem, sed etiam valet ad perniciem."

The mystery of salvation, says Justin Martyr, was manifest in the Flood. The righteous Noah, the eighth person, a preacher of righteousness, in whom the new generation arose, as it were, from the dead, after the Flood, seems to have had a figurative relation to the eighth day, the day of the Resurrection of Christ (see above on Luke xxiv. 1, and below on 2 Pet. ii. 5), the firstbegotten of every creature and the Origin of the new race born again of Him through Water and Faith. See Justin Martyr c. Tryphon. c. 138. S. Aug. c. Adv. Legis, i. 45. Cp. Jerome c.

Jovinian. ii. p. 214; adv. Lucif. p. 303.

At the Creation, the Holy Spirit moved on the face of the waters, and all things were created out of the Water by the Word of God. (Gen. i. 6. 9. 2 Pet. iii. 5, 6.)

At the Deluge, Noah and his family were saved by water, in which the world was drowned; and a new generation arose in Noah and his family, to people the world after its Baptism by

At the new Creation of mankind in Christ, Who is the Second Adam, the Holy Ghost came down from heaven to sanctify Water in the Baptism of Christ, Who had been conceived by the Holy Ghost. Thus the Holy Ghost, the "Author of the first genesis or birth, was also the Giver of Palingenesia or New Birth" (see Tertullian, de Baptismo, c. 3; Bp. Andrewes, iii. 250); and He has sealed that New Birth to us by the Resurrection of Christ our Head from the Grave, which is represented to us in Baptism, "wherein Justification and a title to eternal life are exhibited to us, as the Death and Burial of Christ are symbolically undergone by us" (Dr. Barrow, v. p. 70); wherein we are born anew and grafted into the body of Christ, and our life is hid with Him in God. (Col. iii. 3.)

Thus "Baptism represents to us our profession, which is to follow the example of our Saviour Christ, and to be made like unto Him, that as He died and rose again for us, so we who are baptized and buried with Christ in His death, should be dead to sin and live unto righteousness," "continually mortifying all our evil and corrupt affections, and daily proceeding in all virtue and godliness of living," in order that we who are "baptized into His death may pass through the grave and gate of death to our joyful Resurrection, through His merits who died, and was buried and rose again for us, Jesus Christ our Lord."

 οὐ σαρκὸς ἀπόθεσις ῥύπου] not the putting away the filth of the flesh. St. Peter contrasts the Christian Baptism (βάπ- $\tau \iota \sigma \mu a)$  with the Jewish washings ( $\beta a \pi \tau \iota \sigma \mu a)$ . "What is the use of that baptism which only cleans the flesh?" Be ye baptized in your souls," says Justin Martyr to the Jew Tryphon, capp. 14 and 18.

- ἐπερώτημα] an interrogatory. The baptism which saveth us is not, as legal purifications were, a cleansing of the flesh from outward impurity, but it is ἐπερώτημα, an interrogative trial of a good conscience towards God. Hooker, V. lxiii.

St. Peter lays stress here on the  $\frac{\partial \pi}{\partial r} \rho \omega \tau \eta \mu a$ , or questioning, rather than on the answering, because to save is the act of God, and it is God Who originates the work of the Baptismal covenant by His interrogation, "Dost thou believe?" "Wilt thou obey?"
But St. Peter also marks man's part as necessary, by saying that it is the interrogation of a good conscience, els Oedv, towards God, Who reads the heart; this it is which saveth, i. e. which is the instrument in God's hand for saving man.

The interrogatory examinations and trials of the Faith and Obedience of Catechumens before the Administration of the Sacrament of Baptism are described in the primitive records of the Church. See the address of St. Philip to the Eunuch, Acts viii. 37. Justin Martyr, writing in the second century, says (Apol. i. c. 61), "As many persons as believe that the things which we preach are true, and who promise to live accordingly . . . . are brought to a place where is water, and are made regenerate by the same way of Regeneration as we ourselves are regenerate, and are baptized in water in the name of the Father of all, and of Jesus Christ our Saviour, and of the Holy Ghost." Tertullian, in the same century, describes the baptismal interrogatories and vow of Renunciation, Faith, and Obedience; De Spectac. c. 4, De Corona Milit. c. 3, and De Resurrectione Carnis, c. 48, where he says, "Anima non lavatione sed responsione sancitur." Cp. Cyprian, Epist. 70. 76. 85. S. Hippolytus, Theophan. c. 10. Origen, Exhortatio ad Martyr. c. 12, and Vales. in Euseb. vii. 8, and Euseb. vii. 9, where Dionysius, Bp. of Alexandria, in the third century, speaks of a person who was present at the baptism of some who were lately baptized and heard the questions and answers, των ἐπερωτήσεων καὶ ἀποκρίσεων. baptismal ἐπερωτήσειs that St. Peter is here speaking.

The reading of the Vulgate is "interrogatio bonæ conscientiæ in Deum," and the Greek Expositors interpret the word ἐπερώτημα by έξέτασις or εκζήτησις (Theophyl. p. 373), and by ἀρραβών, ἐνέχυρον, and ἀπόδεξις, a pledge or stipulation (Œcum.). Cp. Estius and Grotius here, and Bingham, Antiquities, xi. chap. vii., and Dr. Waterland on Justification, p. 440, who says, "St. Peter assures us that Baptism saves: that is, it gives a just title to salvation, which is the same as to say that it conveys justification. But then it must be understood, not of the outward washing, but of the inward lively faith stipulated in it and by it; Baptism concurs with Faith, and Faith with Baptism, and the Holy Spirit with both; and so the merits of Christ are savingly applied. Faith alone will not ordinarily serve in this case, but it must be a contracting faith on man's part; contracting in form corresponding to the federal promises and engagements on God's part; therefore Tertullian rightly styles Baptism obsignatio fidei, testatio fidei, sponsio salutis, fidei pactio, and the like." See note

De Wette also and Huther understand the word επερώτημα in this sense, and so Professor Blunt (Early Church, pp. 36, 37), who observes that "it is certain that there was a public form of Baptism of the most primitive, even of an Apostolical date," for which he cites this passage, and Heb. vi. 1, 2; cp. Rom. x. 10; and thence we may recognize the scriptural and primitive character of the Interrogatories and Vows of Renunciation, Faith, and Obedience in the Office for the Administration of Baptism in the Book of Common Prayer of the United Church of England and Ireland. Cp. Palmer's Origines Liturgicæ, chap. v. sect. ii.-iv.

22. ὑποταγέντων αὐτῷ ἀγγέλων] Angels being subjected to Him. A protest against the heresies of the Apostolic age which subordinated Christ to Angels. See on Col. ii. 8, and Tertullian (Præscr. Hær. 33), speaking of Simon Magus, "Simonianæ magiæ disciplina Angelis serviens, utique et ipsa inter idololatrias deputa-batur, et à Petro Apostolo in ipso Simone damnabatur." He that has been crucified with Christ in his flesh (Rom. vi. 6; viii. 2. Gal. vi. 14), that is, he that is crucified and dead to carnal lusts (Gal. ii. 19, 20), has been buried with Christ unto death, and has "put off the body of sin in the flesh," in baptism, and has found in this baptismal burial a spiritual rest or sabbath from sin; and as Christ was raised from the dead on the first day of the week, so he rises again to God, in order to serve in newness of life. He is dead unto sin, and "his life is hid with Christ in God." Col. iii. 3. See above on i. 21, and Gerhard and Calvin here χρόνος] Elz. adds τοῦ βίου,—not in A, B, C.

 — βούλημα] desire. So A, B, C. Elz. has θέλημα, will.
 On the difference between θέλω and βούλομαι see 1 Thess. ii. 18. Philem. 13, 14. There is a force in the contrast here. Formerly they were subscrient to the desire (βούλημα) of the Heathen, but now they are obedient to the will (θέλημα) of God. See ii. 15; iii. 17; iv. 2. 19.

κατειργάσθαι] to have wrought. So A, B, C, a reading much preferable to that of Elz., κατεργάσασθαι.
 οἰνοφλυγίαις] "temulentiis;" swillings of wine: from οἰνοφλυγίαις] "temulentiis;" swillings of wine: from οἶνος and φλύω, φλύζω, to swell, as it were, with boiling heat (φλέγω, φλόξ). See Welstein, p. 693.

4. ξενίζονται] they are surprised, as by some strange apparition. Cp. Acts xvii. 20, ξενίζοντα εἰσφέρεις: below, v. 12. The word is used in this sense by Polybius, Plutarch, Philo, and Josephus; see the passages in Wetstein, pp. 566 and 694. Compare the use of ξενισμός, surprise, in Ignatius ad Ephes. c. 19, and Dr. Jacobson's note. The servant of God seems like a strange prodigy to the world. Even the Heathen writers of the post-apostolic age could thus speak, "Rari quippe boni, numero vix sunt totidem quot Thebarum portæ . . . Nunc si depositum non inficietur amicus, . . . Prodigiosa fides, et Tuscis digna libellis, . . . Egregium sanctumque virum si cerno, bimembri Hoc monstrum puero, vel mirandis sub aratro Piscibus inventis, et fetæ comparo mulæ." Juvenal, xiii. 24. 60–66.

— μὴ συντρεχύντων ὑμῶν εἶς τὴν αὐτὴν τῆς ἀσωτίας ἀνάχυσιν]

because you do not run together, like foul streams flowing together into one and the same sink, or sewer (sentina), of licentiousness.

A strong and expressive metaphor; especially in countries where after violent rains the gutters are suddenly swollen and pour their contents together with violence into a common sewer. Such is the Apostolic picture of vicious companies rushing together in a filthy confluence for reckless indulgence and effusion in sin. Cp. Juvenal iii. 63, "Jam pridem Syrus in Tiberim defluxit Orontes &c., and G. Dyer's description of the Ruins of Rome, vv. 62-66.

5. κρίναι ζώντας και νεκρούς] to judge the quick (i. c. those who will be alive at His second coming) and the dead; and thus to judge all. See above, on 1 Thess. iv. 17. '1 Cor. xv. 51.

6. νεκροῖς] dead in sins. See Eph. ii. 1. Col. ii. 13. Rev. iii. 1. "Animā mortuis," Aug. Epist. 164. Clemens Alexand. and Cassiodorus here. No valid objection to this interpretation of recesses is to be found in the allegation, that is the preceding of verpois is to be found in the allegation, that in the preceding verse νεκρούs means men physically dead. Precisely the same transition from one meaning of νεκρὸs to another, is found in our Lord's saying, "Let the dead bury their dead," Matt. viii. 22, and cp. John v. 25—29, where see the notes.

The argument of the Apostle is clear; They who revile you with blasphemous words for not running together with them in their godless and riotous excesses, will be required to render an account (of this their reviling and blasphemy) to Him who is ready to judge the quick and the dead. For  $(\gamma \lambda p)$  the Gospet was preached even to men dead in sin (as ye yourselves sometimes were, vv. 2, 3), for this purpose, in order that they might be indeed on condensed within the world as well as be judged or condemned (vilified by the world, as you are) according to men, in the flesh; but should live to God in the

Therefore, since your godly life in the spirit is the end and design of the preaching of the Gospel of God, and since the mockery you encounter, and the condemnation you endure from ungodly men in the flesh, were consequences contemplated by Him, even in the publication of the Gospel-which is man's moral probation, an odour of life to some, and an odour of death to others (2 Cor. ii. 16)-it is certain that they who revile and condemn you for accepting the Gospel of God will have to render an account to Him who is the judge of quick and dead.

— "va] in order that they may be judged, condemned indeed

according to men (that is, according to human judgments and in human respects), in the flesh (see on this use of κατά, 1 Cor. iii. 3; xv. 32. 2 Cor. vii. 9. Winer, p. 358), but should live according to God, that is, in God's eye, with a view to God and by His power and love, in life eternal, in the spirit.

On this use of Iva, in order that, see John ix. 39; xii. 33.

1 Cor. xi. 19. Winer, p. 406.

Christ was condemned and crucified in the flesh by men,— Pilate, the Chief Priests, and People;—but He was quickened in His spirit even by death (see iii. 18, 19), and He liveth for ever to God (Rom. vi. 10). So, subsequently, St. Peter himself was judged and killed by Nero, according to men in the flesh; but by death he gained new life in the spirit; his death was gain to him, for it was his passage to life eternal.

This may be predicated of all those who suffer for Christ in the flesh; they live by dying; they are judged and condemned by the world, but they receive power to "sit on thrones," and to "judge the world:" see below, on Rev. xx. 4-6.

In a certain sense also, this act of judging the righteous by worldly trials may be called an act of the judicial power of God, who uses even evil men to try and judge the good in this world,

This is the condition of all, who were once dead in spirit, and alive in carnal respects, but who have been raised from the death of sin by Him who is the Life. Their lot is to be condemned by worldly judgments, to suffer in carnal respects; but their privilege and reward it is, to live in the spirit the life of God here, and to dwell with Him in life eternal hereafter. S. Augustine (Epist. 164. 21) thus expounds these words; "For this cause the Gospel was preached to the unbelieving, in order that when they had believed they might be judged in divers tribulations, and even in the death of the flesh, but might live according to God in the spirit, in which spirit they were dead, as long as they continued in sin."

8. ἐκτενή] intense; stretching itself forward to the end without interruption: an epithet applied to Prayer, made continuously,

Acts xii. 5; and also to Love, above, i. 22.

There is always to be a habit of prayer in the soul, and a habit of love in the heart-it is to reach continuously from the beginning of life to the end; although there may not always be an opportunity of exercising it in the outward acts specified in the foregoing precepts.

άγάπη καλύπτει] Love covereth a multitude of sins. Λ general expression, describing the virtue of Love, which renders the merits of Christ applicable to the covering of the sins of others and also our own. See note on James v. 20, and Matt. xxv. 35 -46, where Love to men in Christ is represented as the future test at the day of Judgment.

St. Peter's words are quoted by Clemens Rom. i. 49. Tertullian, Scorp. c. 6, and Augustine (in Joann. Epist., Tract. i.), who says that Love alone covers sins, because Love is the fulfil-ling of the law, and is the opposite of all sins; and he often applies this argument in extenuation of the error of S. Cyprian, in the matter of heretical baptism. c. 1; iv. c. 6; vi. 2: c. Gaudent. ii. 8. See Aug. de Baptismo, ii.

St. Peter had spoken of Love, stretching itself out without interruption; and the passage of St. James (v. 20), considered together with the context here, where St. Peter is presenting Christ as their example, may suggest a belief, that he is comparing the act of Love to that of the Cherubim stretching out their wings on the Mercy Seat, and forming a part of the Mercy Seat (Exod. xxv. 18-20), the emblem of Christ's propitiatory covering of sins (see on Rom. iii. 21-25).

It is observable that the LXX use the words extelveir tas πτέρυγας to describe the act of the Cherubim stretching out their wings, which touched one another, and reached continuously from one wall of the Holy of Holies to the other. Exod. xxv. 20;

xxxvii. 9. Cp. 2 Chron, iii. 7-13; v. 7, 8.

The office of Love may also be compared to the act of the Patriarch's two dutiful sons, stretching out the garment on their shoulders, with their eyes averted from him, and covering the nakedness of their father. Gen. ix. 23.

Elz. has ἡ ἀγάπη καλύψει, charity will cover; but the reading in the text is that which has the preponderance of authority, and is adopted by Lach., Tisch., Alford. Cp. Prov. x. 12, LXX.

10. χάρισμα] a gift, of the Holy Ghost; see I Cor. i. 7. St. Peter appears to be studiously imitating and enforcing here St. Paul's admonition, Rom. xii. 6-8.

11. εἴ τις λαλεῖ, ὡς λόγια Θεοῦ] if any one speaks, in teaching, let him speak as do the oracles of God. The words λόγια Θεοῦ are used without any definite article, to designate the Holy Scriptures of God, as being sufficiently definite in themselves, and having the distinctness of a proper name. See Winer, § 19. Rom. iii. 2. Cp. 2 Tim. iii. 15, 16. Gal. i. 8.

Hence the Holy Scriptures are called simply τὰ λόγια by

S. Polycarp, ad Phil. c. 7.

This precept of St. Peter deserves the consideration of those who claim to be his successors, and profess great reverence for his authority, and yet derogate from the dignity of the oracles of God, and set up oracles of their own, in place of the Scriptures, and against them. See on 2 Tim. iv. 3. Rev. xi. 3-10.

The delivery of this precept was very appropriate at a time when almost the whole Canon of the New Testament was complete. See 2 Pet. iii. 16.

12, 13. ἀγαπητοί] beloved, be not surprised, as by some strange thing (see v. 4), by the fire of persecution kindled for

Here is a caution against another dangerous error of the Gnostic Teachers, who said, that provided men had knowledge, they need not be martyrs; and allowed men to comply with the requirements of their persecutors, and to eat meats offered to idols, rather than to suffer martyrdom. Cp. Rev. ii. 20, and the Introduction to the Second Epistle of St. Peter.

On the contrary, St. Peter, in his Epistles, declares the blessedness of suffering for Christ. This is one of their characteristics, probably derived from the writer's personal view of Christ's Glory, when Moses and Elias spake with Him of His Passion (Luke ix. 31) in the Transfiguration (Matt. xvii. 2). Cp. Tertuilian, Scorp. 12, who quotes this passage, vv. 12-16.

The glory and happiness of suffering for God in the fire of persecution might also well occur to his mind at Babylon, where he is writing, and where he would be cheered by a remembrance of the three faithful children walking unburt in the fiery furnace, with the Son of God. (Dan. iii. 1-25.)

This mention of the near approach of a fiery trial, intimates that this Epistle was written a short time before the Neronian persecution, A.D. 64. See above, Introduction to this Epistle, Vol. II.—PART IV.

p. 41, and the Introduction to St. Paul's Epistles to Timothy, pp. 417. 423, and below, v. 17.

15. μη γάρ] Cp. James i. 7.

- ἀλλοτριοεπίσκοπος] one who sets himself up as an overseer and censor of what belongs to others; a judge of other men's servants. Cp. Rom. xiv. 4. James iv. 12. "Alieni speculator," Tertullian, Scorp. 12.

This word is applicable to those who assume spiritual functions which do not belong to them, and intrude into other men's dioceses; and it may be applied to those who call themselves successors of St. Peter, and yet, in contravention of his precept, claim to be "Episcopi Episcoporum."

16. Χριστιανός] a Christian; the name given first to believers at Antioch (Acts xi. 26), of which city St. Peter was Bishop. See note there, and Euseb. iii. 36.

 - δυόματι] name. So A, B, and many Cursives, Versions, and Fathers. Elz. has μέρει. Cp. Polycarp, Ep. 8, who says, "If we suffer for His name, let us glorify Him."
 17. ὅτι ὁ καιρός] for it is now the season of the beginning of judgment at the house of God. Here is another proof that this Exists. Epistle was written on the eve of Persecution, see vv. 12, 13. The time is now arrived for it: we are ripe for Persecution. Let no one, therefore, be perplexed or cast down, for it is now the season of the beginning of judgment at the house of God. Ye are tried by Him with temporal judgments, in order that ye may not be condemned with the world (1 Cor. xi. 32), but be purified by the furnace of trial, as silver and gold in the fire, i. 7. Observe, he calls it a season,  $\kappa aipbs$ , not  $\chi \rho \delta vos$ , and thus suggests the comfortable reflection, that the tyranny of the enemy will soon be overpast. Ps. lvii. 1.  $\kappa \rho \tilde{\iota} \mu a$  is properly the sentence, or doom, pronounced by the Judge; and so differs from  $\kappa \rho \delta \sigma is$ , which is the act of judging. See Heb. vi. 2.

"When holy men are punished," says Augustine, "this also proceeds from the just judgment of God. It is part of His discipling which no vight town many is promitted to seem in this cipline, which no righteous man is permitted to escape in this world. 'He chasteneth whom He loveth, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth' (Heb. xii. 6). Hence the Apostle Peter, when exhorting the brethren to endure sufferings for the Name of Christ, thus speaks (vv. 15—18); and by these words he shows that the sufferings of the righteous proceed from the judgment of God, which begins with the house of God; whence we may infer, how awful will be the sufferings which are reserved for the ungodly: and so St. Paul says, 'we glory in you for your patience and faith in the persecutions and tribulations which ye endure, as a specimen of the just judgment of God'" (2 Thess. i.

4, 5. S. Augustine, Epist. ad Rom. i. 10).

Judgment must begin at the house of God, who out of His tender care for their well-doing will sooner punish-temporally I mean-His own children (when they take pride in their own inventions, and soothe themselves in their own devices) than He will His professed enemies, that stand at defiance with Him, and openly fight against Him. These He suffereth many times to go on in their impieties, that he may make use of this oppression for the scourging those of His own household, and in the end get Himself the more glory by their destruction. But then however judgment may begin at the house of God, most certain it is, that it shall not end there; but reach the house of the wicked oppressor also; and that, not with temporal judgments, as He did correct His own, but, without repentance, evil shall hunt them to their everlasting destruction (Ps. cxl. 11). God delighteth to get Himself honour, and to show the strength of His arm by scattering such proud Pharaohs in the imagination of their hearts (Exod. r Prov. 11. 31. s Ps. 31. 6. Luke 23. 46. 2. ποιμάνατε] tend ye the flock that is among you: do not leave your own flock, in order to tend other people's flocks, as άλλοτριοεπίσκοποι (iv. 15), but tend the flock that is in you, έν υμίν; make that your care. Observe the Aorist, which, as Dean Alford well observes, gathers together the whole work of teaching, feeding, watching, leading, into one act, occupying the entire life. On the sense of ποιμαίνειν see above, Introduction, p. 38, note.

Inc. On the sense of ποιμαινείν see above, Introduction, p. 30, note.
— ἐπισκοποῦντες] overseeing the flock. The πρεσβύτεροι, presbyters, are said ἐπισκοποῖν, to oversee; they are presbyters in age, and they are ἐπίσκοποι, overseers, as to office.
Hence, after the death of the Apostles, they who succeeded them in the Apostolic office, not presuming to take the name of Apostles, were called Episcopi; and thenceforth the name of Episcopus,—which in the Apostolic age had been often applied, as here, to designate those who had the oversight of a ποιμνίον or flock,-was reserved for those who had the oversight of Pastors as well as of flocks; and who are now called Bishops. Cp. Acts xx. 17. 28, and see above, Note prefixed to the Third Chapter of St. Paul's first Epistle to Timothy, and notes on 2 Tim. ii. 1, 2. 3. μηδ' ως κατακυριεύοντες των κλήρων]

There is a slight paronomasia, or play upon the words, which gives an edge to this precept.

He had just said, Ye Presbyters, tend the flock of God that is among you, overseeing it, not of constraint, but willingly (1 Cor. ix. 16, 17), not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; and he now warns them not to behave themselves as lords over the Churches committed to their charge, which are not the heritages of man, but of the Lord. See on our Lord's words to St. Peter himself, Matt. xvi. 18, Μοῦ τὴν ἐκκλησίαν. Consequently the usurpation of dominion and lordship over them is an encroachment on the prerogative and inheritance of the Lord Himself.

The word κλήροι does not mean here Clergy apart from the Laity, nor does it mean Laity apart from the Clergy; but it signifies the Clergy and Laity, or People, united together. It designates Christian Churches, which are the  $\kappa\lambda\hat{\eta}\rho o \iota$  or heritages of God, as the Israelites of old were, and are so entitled by Himself in His Holy Word, Deut. iv. 20, and ix. 29, and see Grotius here.

St. Peter happily uses the plural  $\kappa\lambda\eta\rho\sigma\iota$ ; for, in Christian times, it is not one nation, as it had been of old, which is the chosen people and heritage of God, but all national Churches, all congregations of Pastors and People are heritages of the Lord: each "Church and each congregation," which every Pastor serves, is, in a mystical sense, as the English Ordinal declares, the "Spouse and Body of Christ." By the word κλήροι, therefore, we may understand here the faithful people of Christ, distributed in regular order into various dioceses, parishes, churches, and congregations, like the companies to which our Lord distributed the loaves and fishes by the hands of His Apostles. Mark vi. 40:

cp. A Lapide here.
St. Peter appears to have written these words in a grateful remembrance of those which had been spoken to him by the Lord Himself; "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou Me?" . . . "Feed Himself; "Simon, son of Jonas, lorest thou Me?"... "Feed My sheep" (John xxi. 16). And he and others were warned against usurping lordship over the heritage of the Lord by Christ's language; "On this Rock (i. e., Myself) I will build of Me the Church." Let no man therefore treat it as his own. It is the Church of Me; and of Me only (Matt. xvi. 18). I have purchased it with My blood (Acts xx. 28). Let no man lord it over what belongs to the Lond.

Here is another caution from St. Peter's mouth, which may be commended to the consideration of those who call themselves his successors. "The Apostle forbiddeth dominari in cleris." But they who claim to be his successors are not afraid to "teach that their own judgments are infallible, and to make their definitions an universal Rule of Faith, and to require subjection to their laws and persons, as of necessity to salvation, and to be called 'Dominus Deus noster Papa'" (Gloss. in Extrav. Papæ, Johann. *Dominus Deus noster Tapa (Oross in Extra Cape) waxii. Tit. xiv. 4), &c., all which and much more is professed by the Popes, and in their behalf. No modest man can deny that this amounts to as much as St. Peter's dominari in cleris, even to the exercising of such lordship over the Lord's heritage, the Christian Church, as will become none but the Lord Himself, whose heritage it is. Bp. Sanderson, iii. p. 283.

 Δ. ἀμαράντινον] amaranthine; literally, woven of the flower called amaranth. (Bengel.)
 δ. ἐγκομβώσασθε] clasp ye on humility; submitting yourselves one to another (cp. Eph. v. 21, ἀλλήλους as here) in the fear of God. Clasp it on as a garment (properly, a servile garment, ἐγκόμβωμα, Pollux iv. 119) clasped with a περόνη, fibula, or with knot or hell; see Function of the content of a knot or belt; see Eustath. on Homer, II. K. 133, and Suicer in v. p. 995, and Wetstein here. Bp. Pearson, Vind. Ignat. ii. cxiv. p. 579, ed. Churton; and Fritz, Opuscula, p. 259.

In illustration of this word we may refer to the reverential action of St. Peter, described John xxi. 7. But, as Alford well remarks, The action which best illustrates this precept is that of our Blessed Lord Himself girding Himself with a napkin, as a servant, and pouring water into a basin and washing His Apostles' feet, in which St. Peter had a special part. See on John xiii. 4, 5, and our Lord's precept there, v. 14.

8. Διάβολος] the devil. At the time which St. Peter is preannouncing, the Devil was, in the strictest sense of the term, a περιπατεί ζητών τίνα καταπίη. 9 ι φ αντίστητε στερεοί τη πίστει, είδότες τὰ ι Eph. 4. 27 % 6. 11. 13. Devil, a Διάβολοs, a false accuser. For he devised all manner of calumnies against the primitive Christians, and instigated even their friends to bring them before the heathen tribunals, that they might be put to death. He was then especially "the false accuser of the brethren." Cp. Rev. xii. 10. The Lion goeth about seeking those who may be made the victims of his διαβολαl, and be cast "ad Leones." See next note.

- ως λέων ωρυόμενος] as a lion roaring. This was the first form in which the Devil showed his enmity against the Church of Christ; and he was now about to wreak his fury on the two Apostles, St. Peter and St. Paul.

He was now "rugiens ut leo," roaring as a lion; but he was afterwards about to change that shape, and appear in a more specious semblance, "insidians ut draco," lurking in ambush as a dragon. See below on Rev. vi. 3, 4.

Well might he now be compared to a Lion. Many of the first martyrs, e.g. St. Peter's successor at Antioch, S. Ignatius (cp. 2 Tim. iv. 17), were cast to the Lions; and the popular cry at Rome was now soon to be, "Christianos ad Leonem!" (Tertullian, Apol. 40.) The devil went about as a Lion roaring, in the days of the first persecutions of the Church, and he will go about again roaring as a Lion in the last age-at the eve of the end. See Rev. xii. 12; xx. 7-9.

 $-\pi$  εριπατεί] he walketh about, Job i. 7. Therefore, the Devil is not yet confined to Hell. See above on Matt. viii. 29.

9. εἰδότες] knowing that the same kinds of sufferings are being filled up by the brotherhood that is in every part of the world. "No temptation hath taken you but such as is common to man," I Cor. x. 13. Do not be cast down, as if the sufferings, which ye are called upon to endure, were new, perpetual, or partial. They are only a continuation of the sufferings of Christ (see Col. i. 24), and they will soon be consummated, and they are shared by all your brethren in the Churches of God, throughout the world: therefore resist the Devil, who is the author of these persecutions; standing fast and solidly grounded in faith, by which ye will be more than conquerors. Eph. vi. 16. 1 John v. 4.

10. καταρτίσει—θεμελιώσει] will perfect—will stablish: in the future tense. So A, B, and Griesh., Lach., Tisch., Alf.

Elz. has the agrist optative here, καταρτίσαι.

This assurance of divine support comes very appropriately from St. Peter, in compliance with Christ's precept to him, "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." Luke xxii. 32. Bengel.

12. διὰ Σιλουανοῦ] By Silvanus, the faithful brother, as I reckon, or count him to be (Rom. viii. 18), I write to you in

This is said to assure them, and the Churches at large, of the genuineness of the Epistle. It would be brought to them by Silvanus, the faithful brother, who would certify them from whom it came. This practice of the Apostles to send their Epistles to the Churches by the hands of tried and faithful friends, has been of signal use in establishing the Canonical authority of the

New Testament. Cp. Eph. vi. 21.

There was something significant in this choice of Silvanus for the purpose here described, especially in connexion with the mention of St. Mark. Silvanus, or Silas, had been chosen by St. Paul at Antioch, about thirteen years before, in the place of St. Mark, who had left him in Pamphylia, and was a near kinsman of St. Barnabas (Col. iv. 10), who was led into an altercation with St. Paul, on account of his refusal to take Mark; and who also had before been led away by the influence of St. Peter at Antioch, in opposition to St. Paul, contending for the Evangelical liberty of the Gentile Christians. See on Acts xv. 37-40. Gal. ii. 12, 13.

Silas, being chosen by St. Paul in place of Mark, accompanied that Apostle in his missionary tour in Syria and Cilicia, and in divers other parts of Asia Minor, especially Phrygia, Lycaonia, and Galatia, to Troas, and into Greece. He would therefore be known, in connexion with the Apostle St. Paul, to those Asiatic Churches which are addressed by St. Peter in the present Epistle, Silas had also been associated with St. Paul in writing the two Epistles to the Thessalonians, which had been published about ten years before the date of the present Epistle, and had, probably, by this time been circulated in Asia.

After the date of these two Epistles to the Thessalonians, the name of Silas, or Silvanus, vanishes for a time from the pages of the New Testament.

It does not occur after that time in the Acts of the Apostles, or in any of St. Paul's other Epistles.

But it re-appears in this present passage (1 Pet. v. 12), at the close of the ministry of St. Peter (see 2 Pet. iii. 1), which coincided in time with the close of the ministry of St. Paul.

It here re-appears in company with the name of St. Mark. Cp. note above, Phil. i. 1. And the name of Silas is here characterized by St. Peter with the honourable appellation "the faithful brother, as I reckon."

Here then we have a happy intimation of the harmony which subsisted among the Apostles and first preachers of Christ.

They were not exempt from human infirmities. The Apostle St. Peter faltered for a time through fear at Antioch, and had then been boldly resisted by St. Paul (see on Gal. ii. 11-14). The Evangelist St. Mark, the son of St. Peter in the faith (v. 13), and the kinsman of St. Barnabas (Col. iv. 10), had also faltered once for a season through fear, and had once forsaken St. Paul. (Acts xiii. 13; xv. 38.) St. Paul and St. Barnabas had formerly striven so sharply at Antioch on St. Mark's account, that they departed asunder for a time (Acts xv. 39), and St. Paul had chosen Silas, or Silvanus, as his companion in the room of St. Mark.

All these infirmities are recorded in the Holy Scriptures. The New Testament does not disguise the frailties of the first preachers of Christianity. Here is an evidence of its truth.

But this is not all. We are left to gather from incidental notices scattered in different parts of the New Testament, that by the grace of God all these frailties and infirmities were corrected and amended; and that they were graciously overruled by God's Providence to the victory of Christian virtue, and to the good of the Church, and to His glory.

As has been already shown in another place, the strife of St. Paul and St. Barnabas had now been healed, and Mark had been restored to the favour of St. Paul, and he afterwards was chosen to be the writer of a Gospel, under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, and with the aid of his spiritual father St. Peter, and he became the founder of the Church of Alexandria. See above, Acts xv. 39. Col. iv. 10, and Introduction to St. Mark's Gospel.

St. Peter now employs Silas to be the bearer of his Epistle to the Jewish Christians of Asia. He calls him the faithful brother, and he associates him with St. Mark, whom he calls "his son;" his son in the faith.

A happy combination. Silas had been chosen by St. Paul in lieu of St. Mark, and had preached with him in Asia, and had been associated with him in writing his first Epistle. And St. Paul, in writing to the Galatians, who are addressed in this Epistle of St. Peter (see I Pet. i. 1), had recorded his own contention with St. Peter, on account of his conduct toward the Gentile Christians, and had related that his own friend St. Barnabas had been formerly drawn away from him by St. Peter. (Gal. ii. 13.)

But now all differences are at an end. St. Peter, the Apostle of the Circumcision, chooses Silas, St. Paul's friend and fellowlabourer in preaching and writing, to carry this Epistle to the Jewish Christians of Asia, where Silas had formerly preached in company with St. Paul. And by this choice, and by his reference to the Epistles of his "beloved brother Paul," as a part of divinely inspired Scripture (see 2 Pet. iii. 15), he proclaims to the Jewish Christians his own perfect union in Christian faith and in Christian love with the great Apostle of the Gentiles.

Here was a noble example of repentance, and of generous self-sacrifice, and of love for Christ and the Church.

St. Peter avouches to his readers that St. Paul's fellow-labourer among them, Silas, is "their faithful brother." He calls St. Mark his son, who had once faltered in the faith, but who had afterwards preached to them in Asia (see on Col. iv. 10. Philem. 24), and whom St. Paul, writing from Rome to the Churches of Phrygia, mentions as being there among his own tried and trusted friends, and calls him "sister's son to Barnabas."

St. Paul, as well as St. Peter, now also at the close of his career, writes to Timothy about the same time as the date of this έγραψα παρακαλών καὶ ἐπιμαρτυρών ταύτην εἶναι ἀληθη χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰς ἡν

Epistle of St. Peter, and bears witness that Mark "is profitable to him for the ministry." (2 Tim. iv. 11.) And St. Peter here joins Mark with Silas, who had once been preferred in his room.

So may all wounds be healed, and all differences cease in the Church of Christ. So may all falterers be recovered, and Christian charity prevail, and God's glory be magnified in all persons and in all things, through Jesus Christ!

 δι' δλίγων ἔγραψα] I write in few words; with δι' δλίγων, διά βραχέων, Heb. xiii. 22. The Epistle is short, relatively to the importance of the subject; and the Apostle might perhaps design to prepare them by these words to receive a second Epistle from him, on the second or polemical portion of the subject which now occupied his thoughts. See Introduction to that Epistle, below, pp. 71-74, and 2 Pet. iii. l.

- ἔγραψα] I write: ἔγραψα is the epistolary aorist; a graceful mode of expression, by which the writer puts himself in the place of the reader, and looks at the thing written from the reader's point of view. See Rom. xvi. 1. Eph. vi. 21. Col. iv. 7.

- ἐστήκατε] ye stand. So Elz., Tisch. A, B have στῆτε, stand ye, and so Lach., Alf.

13. ἀσπά(εται ὑμᾶς ἡ ἐν Βαβυλῶνι συνεκλεκτή] the co-elect (feminine) which is in Babylon, saluteth you. At the beginning of this Epistle St. Peter had written thus, "To the elect strangers of the dispersion of Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia.' As we have already seen:

(1) They are there called elect;

(2) They are there called strangers of the dispersion, i. e. of the Jewish dispersion, scattered throughout Asia Minor.

(3) They are there enumerated in a particular geographical order, i. e. from East to West.

(4) They are greeted in the name of Christ, with the words, "Grace to you, and Peace be multiplied." (1 Pet. i. 1, 2.)

Hence we may infer,

That the co-elect who is here mentioned at the close of the Epistle, in Babulon, is of the same character as those persons who had been designated as elect at the beginning of this Epistle. That is to say, this word (συνεκλεκτή) co-elect designates a Christian congregation gathered principally from Jews of the dispersion, and thus associated, as co-elect in Christ, with those whom St. Peter at the beginning of this Epistle had addressed as the elect strangers of the dispersion of Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia. The preposition σὺν is a link which connects the elect at Babylon with the elect in Asia.

Accordingly we find, that in the Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic Versions the word Church or Congregation is supplied here, to agree with συνεκλεκτή; and so our English Authorized Version, "The Church that is at Babylon, elected together with you, saluteth you." The word συνεκλεκτή is also understood in this sense by most Ancient Expositors.

The word seems to be left purposely elliptical, i.e. without a substantive adjoined. St. Peter would thus leave it to the reader to supply either ἐκκλησία, Church, or διασπορά, Dispersion; each of those two words being admissible and suitable, and neither to be excluded.

They to whom he writes are elect, and they are also the dispersion. The co-elect is a dispersion also; yet though she is dispersed and in Babylon, yet she is gathered together as a congregation in the Christian Sion, or Church Universal, and is co-elect with other dispersed brethren who are gathered together in Christ.

ἐν Βαβυλῶνι] in Babylon. What city is this Babylon?

(1) The reader's first impression is, that it is the Babylon of Assyria, the Babylon on the Euphrates; and this seems to be the right interpretation.

(2) It is true that another great City in the West was called figuratively among Jews by the name of Babylon; namely, Rome. See on Rev. xvii. 1-10.

(3) It is also true that some ancient writers supposed Babylon to mean Rome here. See Papias in Euseb. ii. 15, and Vales, there.

(4) It is also probable, that this Epistle was written a short time only before St. Peter's death (cp. 2 Pet. iii. 1), and that he died at Rome (see Euseb. ii. 25).

(5) But these considerations seem to be overbalanced by others of greater weight.

Rome was called Babylon figuratively. But tropes are scarcely admissible in dates, especially in Epistles like the present, which is remarkable for its quiet tone. In details of fact, the literal meaning seems to be the true one: and if the literal meaning will stand, it ought not to be abandoned for a metaphorical

(6) The fact, that Rome was sometimes called Babylon figuratively, and that St. Peter was martyred at Rome, may probably have induced some in ancient and modern times to suppose, that the Babylon here mentioned is Rome; and may serve to account for that opinion.

(7) The City of Rome is mentioned in other places of the New Testament, and always by the name of Rome (Acts xviii. 2; xix. 21; xxiii. 11; xxviii. 14. Rom. i. 7. 15. 2 Tim. i. 17), except only in a poetical and prophetical book, the Book of Revelation, where a figurative name is in its proper place; and there though the word is used six times, yet it is never placed singly as Babylon, but always with an epithet, Babylon the Great (Rev. xiv. 8; xvi. 19; xvii. 5; xviii. 2. 10. 21).

(8) It has been alleged, indeed, that Babylon was deserted when St. Peter wrote this Epistle, and that it is not probable that the Apostle should have gone thither, and have sojourned there.

This opinion has been supported by high authorities, e.g. by

Bp. Pearson (de successione Rom. Episcop. i. c. viii. vol. ii. pp. 348-53, ed. Churton), who supposed that the Babylon here mentioned is a Babylon in Egypt. Cp. Professor Blunt, Early Church, p. 59, and Hengstenberg on Rev. xiv. 8.

But it may be proved, that there were at this time large numbers of Jews resident in the province of Babylon, and not a few in Babylon itself. See Josephus, Ant. xv. 2. 2; xv. 3. 1; xvii. 2. 1—3; xviii. 9. 1; and xviii. 9. 7—9. Philo, Legat. ad Caium, § 36, p. 587. Theodoret (on Isa. xiii.) says that in his age Babylon was inhabited by Jews. Scaliger (in Euseb. p. 205) observes that from "the days of Salathiel even to the seventieth year after Christ, a Chief of the captivity was elected from the stock of David and resided at Babylon." Cp. Basnage, Annal. stock of David and resided at Babylon," Cp. Basnage, Annal. Pol. Eccles. A.D. 46, pp. 561—3, and Dr. Lightfoot's Sermon on this text, Works, ii. pp. 1144-6, where he says, "Babylon was one of the greatest knots (i.e. centres) of the Jews in the world. Need I tell you that there were multitudes of Jews in Babylon that returned not with Ezra? That there were in that country three Jewish Universities, and that there were ten tribes scattered in Assyria?" And it has been shown from Jewish usage, that the word Babylon need not be limited to the precise site of the ancient ruined city, but may be extended to its neighbourhood. See Wetstein, p. 693, and Vitringa in Rev. xviii. 2, "Judai maxime Babylonem occupabant." Rennel, Geogr. of Herod. sect. xv., "So great a number of Jews was found in Babylonia, as is astonishing; they are spoken of by Josephus as possessing towns and districts in that country about forty years after Christ; they were in great numbers in Babylon itself." Biscoe on the Acts, i. p. 88. Wieseler, Chronol. p. 557. Mayerhoff, p. 128. Dr. Davidson's Introduction, iii. pp. 362-366. Cp. Huther, Einleitung, p. 23, and on this passage, p. 180, and Dean Alford,

(9) There does not seem, therefore, to be any cause for discarding the literal meaning of the word Babylon here. On the contrary, there are strong reasons why, with many learned and able expositors, we should adhere to it.

If St. Peter had been writing from Rome or from any place to the west of Asia, he would not, in his enumeration of the Asiatic districts at the beginning of his Epistle, have mentioned Pontus first, the most eastern region of Asia. He would not have begun his enumeration with the most distant eastern district, and have proceeded, as he does, in a westerly direction. till he ends with Bithynia; but he would have reversed the order; he would have begun with Bithynia at the west, and would have ended with Pontus in the east.

This is what St. John does in the Apocalypse in writing from Patmos on the west of Asia. He begins with Ephesus on the west, and proceeds in an easterly direction, and ends with Laodicea in the east. Rev. i. 11; ii. 1; iii. 14.

See Col. iv. 13. 16.

There is no exception to this principle in the enumeration in the Acts of the Apostles, ii. 9-11. There the Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and dwellers in Mesopotamia are placed first, for special reasons; the writer is not addressing an epistle to them, but he is speaking of the region from which they came to Jerusalem, and he naturally begins with those at a distance from it, and with those who were first expatriated from it. See

Εἰρήνη ὑμῖν πᾶσι τοῖς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ ἀμήν.

The Geographical order adopted by St. Peter is precisely that which would naturally occur to a person writing from Mesopotamia, and sending forth an Epistle to be read in succession by Christian communities in different regions of Asia. He begins with Pontus, because (if we suppose him in Mesopotamia) that region was nearest to him, and his Epistle would reach Pontus first, and pass on from it to other regions in order, - Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia.

Therefore the date of the Epistle being Babylon, we are led to conclude, that it was written in the literal or eastern Babylon, on the Euphrates; and not in the figurative or western Babylon, on the Tiber. Rome.

(10) There were also some special reasons for a mission of St. Peter to the east, especially to the Jewish Christians of those parts. He was the Apostle of the Circumcision (Gal. ii. 7). Assuredly it was fit that he, who had a special charge to feed Christ's flock (John xxi. 16), should go and seek the lost sheep of the house of Israel; that is, the remnant of the Two Tribes at Babylon, and the Ten Tribes in Assyria.

Besides, the Jews of those parts, who had come to Jerusalem for the great annual festivals, and had heard him preach at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost after the Ascension of Christ, and many of whom had been baptized by him on that day, and many doubtless had been led from those regions to Jerusalem on other great festivals in succeeding years, were well acquainted with the name and person of the Apostle of the Circumcision.

Among those devout Jews who are enumerated by St. Luke in the Acts as present at the day of Pentecost, the first mentioned are Parthians, Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, that is, those who dwelt in the neighbourhood of Babylon. For as is well said by one of the best historians and geographers among Poets, Milton, describing the condition of the East in our Lord's age :-

> "There Babylon, the wonder of all tongues, All these the Parthian holds.' (Paradise Regained, iii. 280.)

See on Acts ii. 9-11. They had come from their own land to Jerusalem, and had been evangelized by St. Peter there. Surely it was very reasonable that St. Peter should go from Jerusalem to Babylon to confirm those in the faith, who had come from the neighbourhood of Babylon to Jerusalem, and had been received into the Christian Sion there, by the ministry of the word of God preached by the Apostle St. Peter. See above on i. 1.

There were also special reasons why such an Epistle as the present should be written from Babylon. Babylon is Babel. It had been the source of confusion of tongues. Its very name means confusion. But now, under the influence of divine grace, the curse of Babel is removed. The Holy Spirit, who came down at Pentecost at Sion, reverses the curse of Babel. At Babel mankind was scattered abroad, with a jargon of tongues. At Pentecost the Holy Ghost came down in fiery tongues, and preached the one Gospel in all tongues. He enabled the Apostle St. Peter, who received the gift of tongues at Pentecost (1 Pet. i. 12), to preach the one Gospel to the dispersed of Israel in Babylonia and the East. Thus Sion was built up in Babylon; the city of Confusion became a city of Peace.

Besides, Babylon had been the enemy and persecutor of Sion. It had carried Judah into captivity. But now it has become subject to Christ. It is His captive. It submits to His mild sway and easy yoke. He has His elect there. His Apostle preaches there. This is in perfect unison with all God's dispensations.

The Syrian Antioch was the city of Antiochus, the persecutor of God's people, the type of Antichrist. But in course Antioch became the place where the faithful were first called Christians (see on Acts xi. 26). At Antioch Paul and Barnabas had been ordained to the Apostleship, and had been sent forth to evangelize the Gentile world (Acts xiii. 1, 2). And there St. Peter himself had presided as Bishop of the Church: see above, Introduction, p. 42.

Rahab or Egypt had also been the persecutor of God's people. But Christ was sheltered there in His Infancy, and in His own time God made a highway in Egypt for Christ (Isa. xix. 31), especially by the preaching there of St. Peter's son in the faith, St. Mark, at Alexandria. Euseb. ii. 16.

In like manner, Babylon is now visited by St. Peter, and has heard the Gospel of Christ, and is the place whence this Epistle goes forth to the Churches of Asia and the world. From the city of Nebuchadnezzar and Darius, who wrote to the provinces of the Assyrian Empire, "Peace be multiplied to you," now proceeds the word of the Apostle, "to the elect strangers of Asia; Grace and Peace be multiplied unto you." (See i. 2.)

Thus the prophecy is fulfilled; "The Egyptian shall serve

God with the Assyrian, and Israel shall be the third with Egypt and Assyria (Isa. xix. 24); and I will make mention of Rahab and Babylon with them that know me" (see Ps. lxxxvii. 4).

Finally, the Apostle of the Circumcision, St. Peter, is thus seen to have carried the Gospel to the eastern limits of the Roman Empire. Thence he goes westward in order to seal his preaching with his blood (see Tertullian c. Marcion. iv. 5. Euseb. ii. 25; above, Introduction to this Epistle, p. 44). He goes from the Eastern Babylon in Assyria, to the Western Babylon in Italy. He goes from Babylon to Rome. He thus gives evidence of God's love to His own people, and having followed Christ to the end, and having finished his course with joy, like the Sun from East to West, he is associated with the Apostle of the Gentiles, his beloved brother St. Paul, in dying a martyr's death in the capital of the Heathen world, and having there gone down in a glorious sunset he will rise to bliss in Christ.

INTRODUCTION

THE SECOND EPISTLE GENERAL OF ST. PETER.

On the Genuineness of the Epistle.

1. The First Epistle of St. Peter was written at a time when a Persecution of the Church was imminent, as appears from internal evidence; and for this and other reasons already stated, the date to be assigned to that Epistle is probably the year A.D. 641.

The Second Epistle is addressed to persons dwelling in the same countries as the First, and seems to have been written soon after it 2; and was composed at a time when St. Peter was anticipating his death 3. St. Peter died A.D. 68 4.

The date of this Epistle may therefore be placed in A.D. 66, or A.D. 67.

II. To this conclusion there have been made the following objections:—

(1) It is not probable—it is alleged by some persons—that St. Peter would write two Epistles to the same inhabitants of the same regions at nearly the same time.

(2) Nor is it probable, it is said, that the same Author would write in so different a style as that of the Second Epistle, compared with the First, especially if he were writing to persons living in the same countries at nearly the same time.

The First Epistle, which was generally acknowledged in primitive times to be a genuine work of St. Peter, is composed in a quiet and subdued tone; but the second is characterized by impassioned vehemence, and poetic exuberance of language. This is more remarkable, because if this Epistle is genuine, it was written by him when he was old, and looking forward to the near approach

This Second Epistle is rarely quoted by primitive writers; even in the third and fourth centuries some doubts were expressed concerning its genuineness ;; and in later days many Critics have denied it to be a work of St. Peter?.

III. Let us consider these objections.

1. It cannot be doubted, that there is great diversity of feeling and style between this Epistle and that which was generally received as St. Peter's, namely, his First Epistle.

But there were good reasons for this difference.

6 It is reckoned among the ἀντιλεγόμενα, but γνώριμα τοῖς πολλοίs, by Eusebius, iii. 25; and in another place he says, την πολλοίς, by Paseous, in. 25; and in another place he says, την φερομένην αὐτοῦ (of Peter) δευτέραν οὐκ ἐνδιάθηκον μὲν εἶναι παρειλήφαμεν ὅμως δὲ πολλοῖς χρήσιμος φανεῖσα μετὰ τῶν ἄλλων ἐσπουδάσθη γραφῶν. S. Jerome is more explicit as to his own belief (Scr. Eccl. c. 1): "Simon Petrus duas Epistolas, quæ catholicæ nominantur, quarum secunda à plerisque (by many persons) ejus esse negatur, propter styli cum priore dissonan-tiam." And Epist. 120, he says, "Duæ Epistolæ, quæ feruntur Petri, stylo inter se discrepant, structurâque verborum; ex quo intelligimus pro necessitate rerum diversis eum usum Interpre-And Epist. 50, he says, "Jacobus, Petrus, Joannes.

As to the statement of S. Jerome's master, Didymus (in Bibl. Patrum Max. iv. 236, or in Gallandi Biblioth. Patr. vi. 294), "Non est ignorandum, præsentem Epistolam esse falsatam;" if the words are genuine, they mean only, that this Epistle νοθεύεται, i.e. is accounted spurious by some. But these Epistle νοθεύεται, i.e. is accounted spurious by some. words, ascribed to Didymus, are probably not genuine, but added by a later hand, as Wolf, Pott, Mayerhoff, Guerike, and others suppose. See Guerike, p. 465, and Davidson's Introduction, iii.

7 The genuineness of this Epistle is questioned by Eichhorn, De Wette, Schott, Neander, Credner, Mayerhoff, Richter, Reuss, and others; but its genuineness is maintained by Michaelis, Pott, Augusti, Storr, Hug, Flatt, Dahl, Windischmann, Heydenreich, Guerike, and others.

St. Peter had a twofold work to do; first, to declare the truth, next, to refute error.

He had executed the first of these two tasks in his former Epistle; he performs the second in the latter.

In the first Epistle he had proclaimed the great goodness and infinite love of God the Father to all mankind, in giving His own Son, to redeem the world by His death, and to open the gate of everlasting life to all; and on this basis of Christian doctrine, he had reared a superstructure of moral duty. He had stated the obligations, under which all men lie, by reason of Christ's Incarnation, and their inedification as living stones in Him Who is the Living Stone; and he had urged the motives which ought to constrain all to imitate Him Who died for all, in order that, being dead to sin, they may live to rightcousness, and Who has left us "an example, that we should follow His Steps'."

St. Peter had applied these principles, in a practical and didactic manner, to the inculcation of various precepts, concerning civil, social, and domestic duties. As a wise master-builder he had thus completed a solid work of construction.

If the Church of Christ had not had any enemies, who assailed her doctrinal foundations, St. Peter might have been content with having executed this work of building up the fabric of Christian Life, grounded on Christian Faith.

But his position was like that of the valiant and wise leader of God's ancient people, Nehemiah, in building up the Holy City after the Babylonish captivity. He and his associates were encountered by Sanballats and Ammonites, who interrupted the work, and endeavoured to overthrow it.

They had therefore a double work to do: they must fight as well as build.

This was also the case with St. Peter; he had likewise a double work to do; first, to build up the Church; and next, to fight against the foes of the faith, who scoffed at the work, and were eager to destroy it 3.

False Teachers were stirred up by the Evil One to assail the Apostolic builders of the spiritual Sion, and to hinder the work, as Sanballat, Tobiah, and the Ammonites, had conspired to attack and harass Nehemiah and his comrades when building up the fortifications of Jerusalem. As then Nehemiah and his friends carried in one hand an instrument for building, and had in the other hand a weapon for defence ', so it was with St. Peter. In his First Epistle he had raised up the fabric of Christian Faith and Duty. In his Second Epistle he represents that foundation as already laid, and he comes forward to contend against those who would destroy it. In the one Epistle he is a Christian Builder raising up the fabric of truth; in the other he is a Christian Soldier repelling its assailants.

Here is the solution of the supposed difficulties that have been just stated. Here is an answer to the objections, grounded on the alleged improbability, that two Epistles, of different styles, would be addressed by the same person to the same parties about the same time.

2. We have a striking parallel here in the Epistle of St. Peter's "beloved brother Paul'," as he is called in this Epistle.

St. Paul had recently written two Epistles at about the same time from the same place, Rome, to the inhabitants of the same country; first, the Epistle to the Ephesians; and, secondly, that to the Colossians 6.

Those two Epistles of St. Paul correspond in a remarkable manner with the two Epistles of St. Peter. They treat of the same doctrines: the Love of God to man in the Incarnation and Death of Christ, and of the Christian privileges and duties growing therefrom.

The Epistle to the Ephesians is of a constructive and didactic character, and is similar to St.

Peter's First Epistle.

The Epistle to the Colossians, with its polemical protests and denunciatory warnings against those heresies which impugned the doctrine of the Divinity of Christ, and His Incarnation and Atonement, and the immoral consequences of those heresies, resembles the Second Epistle of St. Peter.

There was great wisdom in this arrangement, adopted by both these Apostles, distributing their work into two parts, in two Epistles respectively; the one Epistle of each being designed for the statement of truth; the second, for the refutation of error.

Many there were then in the Christian Church, as there ever have been, and are now, who were imbued with a loving and reverent spirit, and dwelt devoutly on the attributes of their Heavenly Father reconciling the World to Himself by His well-beloved Son; and who rejoiced to sit, like Mary. in quiet gentleness and meek docility at the feet of Jesus, and to learn their duty from His teaching and example; and who would shrink with feelings of pain, distress, and horror, as from a withering pestilence, from all heretical cavils, which might seem to cast any disparagement on the glorious Name of their adorable Redeemer, Who of His infinite love and mercy had condescended to take their Nature and to die for them on the Cross.

For such pious and loving minds as these, the two Holy Apostles have provided divine food St. Peter in his First Epistle, St. Paul in his Epistle to the Ephesians. The former Apostle wrote particularly for the use of Jewish believers, the latter for Gentile Christians. They both taught the same truth, as it is in Christ, in those two Epistles; they taught it clearly and simply, without any reference to the Heresies by which it was assailed.

3. But these two Apostles knew, that it is not enough to teach the Truth; it is necessary also to repel error. The Christian Builder must be a Christian Soldier. While he works with the trowel, he must be girded with a sword 1. He must build up himself and others upon our most hely faith 2; and he must also contend earnestly for it 3.

They saw false Teachers speaking proud and swelling words against the Truth, and vaunting their own knowledge, and undermining the Doctrines of Christ's Divinity, Lordship, Incarnation, and Atonement, and denying the Lord that bought them, and scoffing at the doctrine of a Resurrection and Judgment to come 4. They beheld the anarchical lawlessness which followed from these heresies; and the impure and dissolute practices, which were the fruits of the teaching of those, who, like Balaam, were seducers of others to works of lust, and who, on the plea of Christian Liberty, destroyed the foundations of Christian Truth, Christian Holiness, and Christian Charity, and turned the grace of God into lasciviousness 6; and they foresaw, that the same errors in doctrine would produce the same evil consequences in succeeding ages of the Church. Therefore each of these two Apostles, having declared severally the true doctrine in one Epistle, proceeds to complete his work, in another Epistle, by delivering also an Apostolic protest and caution against error.

This is done by St. Paul in his Epistle to the Colossians, and by St. Peter in his Second Epistle.

Thus these two Apostles, the one the Apostle of the Gentiles, the other of the Jews, are seen united in proclaiming to every age the love of God in Christ; and in warning the Church against the dangerous and deadly errors of those, who impugn the Doctrine of His Divinity and Humanity, and of the Sacrifice offered, and of the Atonement made, by Him on the Cross.

4. When these circumstances are considered, it will not seem surprising that the feeling and language of the Second Epistle of St. Peter should be very different from that of the First.

This difference is seen specially in the second Chapter of the second Epistle, where the Author is describing the erroneous and strange doctrines of the heretical teachers. That chapter of the second Epistle is very different in tone from the first Epistle; but it also differs from the two other chapters of the second Epistle 7.

There are also many points of resemblance between those two Chapters and the first Epistle of

The reasons of this difference between the second Chapter of the Second Epistle and the First Epistle may be thus stated. In the first Epistle St. Peter had been like a faithful and affectionate Shepherd, feeding and tending Christ's sheep and lambs; but in the second Epistle he is like the same Shepherd driving away the Wolves, who were ready to tear and devour those sheep and lambs, which Christ had purchased with His own blood o, and had specially committed to his care 10.

As is well observed by Bp. Sherlock, Dissertation on the Authority of this Epistle, Discourses, vol. iv. p. 130.
Thus, for example, in the First Epistle, St. Peter dwells on the sufferings of Christ and of Christians as the appointed path to glory for Him, and through Him, for them. See i. 7. 11. 21; ii. 12; iv. 12-14. 16; v. 1. 4. 10, 11. So likewise in the Second Epistle, i. 3. 17; ii. 10; iii. 18. Compare his language on the nature of the Christian calling, in the First Epistle, i. 15; ii. 9;

v. 10, with the language on the same subject in the Second 19. Guerike, p. 466. Davidson, iii. pp. 435-440; and Alford, Proleg. pp. 153. 157. 10 John xxi. 15-17. 9 Acts xx. 28.

The gestures and features of the Shepherd, when, like David, he is killing the bear and the lion', or when, like the Shepherd described by Amos, he is taking out "of the mouth of the lion two legs or a piece of an ear 2," are very different from the Shepherd's aspect, when watering his flock at the well in the evening, or when with the pastoral crook in his hand he is leading his sheep into green pastures and beside the waters of comfort.

If we consider St. Peter's natural temperament, eager, vehement, impassioned; if we contemplate the fervent and courageous Apostle, such as he was after the Day of Pentecost, and when he opened his mouth in the Sanhedrim at Jerusalem against the Chief Priests and Rulers, and preached to them Jesus of Nazareth, "whom ye crucified;" and "this is the Stone set at nought by you builders, which is become the headstone of the corner 3;" if we remember his ardent love to Christ, a love intensified by remorse 4; if we bear in mind the pastoral commission given him by Christ, and the prophecy of Christ, that he would follow his Master in laying down his life for Him 5; if we recollect that he did glorify God by following Him in the manner of his death; if we remember the evidences which Christ had given to St. Peter of His tender love to him, by admitting him to the secret retirements of His Transfiguration, and His Agony; if we recollect all the personal proofs that St. Peter had of Christ's gentleness and kindness, and also of His Divine Truth, and Power, and Glory, in His Teaching, His Miracles, His Passion, His glorious Resurrection, and Ascension into Heaven, and in His sending down the Holy Ghost with the wind and fire from heaven, Whom St. Peter had as a Divine Guest living and dwelling in his heart; surely, we may say without fear of contradiction, that St. Peter would not have been St. Peter, if, -when viewing as he does in his Second Epistle the audacious boasting and outrageous contumelies, and insolent scoffings, and impious blasphemies of the Heretics, "who denied the Lord that bought them," and renewed the indignities of the Crucifixion, and rejected as a cunningly-devised fable the doctrine of the Union of the two Natures of God and Man in the Person of Jesus Christ, Who died for our sins, and rose again for our justification, and derided the promise, and defied the Majesty of His Second Coming to Judgment, and when he saw the sensuality and debauchery in life and manners, which flowed like polluted streams from the impure source of these Heresies,—he had stood quietly by, and looked on with calmness, and had spoken in unimpassioned language, such as he uses in his first Epistle.

There is the same St. Peter in both. And if the second Epistle had not been very different in tone from the former, if it had been composed in the same equable and tranquil style as the First Epistle, every judicious critic, who has studied the character of St. Peter, and the history of the heresies of the Apostolic age, would have been reluctant to believe that the Second Epistle is from him.

The style of the Second Epistle is precisely that, which might have been anticipated from an enlarged and clear view of the circumstances of the writer. St. Peter, ardent by nature, and inspired by the Holy Ghost, speaks here with the oratorical vehemence and impassioned energy and holy indignation, and with the poetic enthusiasm of an inspired Hebrew Prophet. He becomes like a Jeremiah rebuking the errors and corruptions of the False Prophets 6, or like an Ezekiel looking through the hole of the wall in the Temple, and seeing the abominations wrought in the Sanctuary, and what the idolatrous Priests did in the chambers of their imagery 7.

The force of the Holy Spirit, stirring within him, vents itself in bold comparisons and imaginative metaphors, and in an impetuous flood of words. Nor was his old age any bar to this poetic outpouring of his soul. What Moses was in his old age, when he sang his last song *, what David was in his old age, when he chanted his last Psalm 9, full of ardour and energy imparted by the Holy Ghost, Who inspired him; such was the aged Apostle, St. Peter, when he wrote his Second Epistle, before his martyrdom for Christ.

IV. There remains another point to be considered.

As has been already observed, the Second Epistle of St. Peter was not universally received in primitive times as a genuine work of the Apostle, and as a part of Canonical Scripture. If it was written by St. Peter and is an integral portion of Holy Writ, how is this to be accounted for?

1. Here is a question of great importance, and which concerns some other of the Catholic

Epistles<sup>1</sup>, and therefore is entitled, on general grounds, to a full and serious consideration.

We, who live now, see all the books of the New Testament collected in one printed Volume. And thus we are prone at first to form erroneous notions with regard to them. But let us divest ourselves of modern prepossessions. Let us imagine ourselves living in the second or third century. The several parts of the New Testament were originally given to the world, singly, as different Volumes, at different times, and in different places. If we had lived then, those books would have reached us one by one, and in Manuscript. Each book was to be examined separately, before it could be received as inspired. A serious question was then at issue. Is this book the work of him whose name it bears? Is it the writing of an Apostle or no? Is it the Word of God, or not?

Such questions as these were to be asked and answered with respect to each of the Twenty-seven Books which now compose the New Testament. They were to be asked by each particular Church in succession, before a book could be said to be received by the Church Universal, which is formed of all particular Churches throughout the world. Such an examination demanded much caution, and much time was requisite before it could be completed.

However, in course of time this process was performed. Each book was scrutinized. Each in succession passed through this searching ordeal. Some Books of the New Testament were immediately received by all Churches. This was the case with the Four Gospels and the Acts of the Apostles, and with thirteen Epistles of St. Paul, and with the first Epistle of St. Peter, and with the first Epistle of St. John. No doubts were entertained with respect to any of those books by any Church. They were received at once by all as genuine, and as the Word of God. And thus the New Testament, as we now possess it, was, as to its main substance, received in the Apostolic age, and was acknowledged to be the Word of God.

2. It was received as such, as to its main substance. For doubtless, there were some few other and smaller books, which are now received by us as integral parts of the New Testament, and which were indeed received as genuine and inspired by some Churches as soon as they were written; but other Churches suspended their judgment concerning them for a time.

One of those Books was this Second Epistle of St. Peter.

Some Churches of Christendom, in the second and third centuries, did not know this Epistle, and some reserved their judgment, and entertained doubts with regard to its genuineness and inspiration.

3. Let us consider how this happened.

This Epistle claims to be by St. Peter. It bears his name at the beginning. The Author speaks of an event, the Transfiguration, of which he professes to have been a witness, and at which St. Peter, with only two others of the Apostles, were present? But it was not therefore safe to conclude that it was written by St. Peter. Writings were forged in early times by heretics in the names of Apostles, especially in the name of St. Peter³. It was therefore incumbent on Christian Churches to be on their guard, and not to receive any book as written by an Apostle, and as dictated by the Holy Spirit, before they were convinced by irrefragable proofs that it was Apostolic and inspired. Little harm would arise from a temporary suspension of judgment. If the Epistle was what it professed to be, viz., a work of the Apostle St. Peter, then, in due time, it would not fail to be universally received as such. But if it was not what it claimed to be, then perhaps Heresy might steal into the Church under the venerable guise of an Apostolic name, and the Church might be convicted of reading a forgery as the Word of God; and then the Credibility and Inspiration of those other Books, viz., the four Gospels, the Acts of the Apostles, and the thirteen epistles of St. Paul, which had been already received by the Church, would be impugned; they too might be exposed to suspicion; and thus the foundations of the faith would be in danger of being overthrown.

It was therefore the duty of all Churches to take time to consider, before they received any book as the writing of an Apostle. It was their duty to doubt.

<sup>1 &</sup>quot;Among those writings which are controverted (ἀντιλεγόμενα) but are recognized by the majority of persons (τοῖς πολλοῖς), are the Epistles of James and Jude, and the Second of Peter, and the Second and Third of John." Oxon, 1698, where fragments from these "Petri Apocrypha" are collected, and Cotelerii Patres Apostolici, i. p. 608, ed. Amst. 1724, where the so-called "Epistle of Peter to James" is printed. Cp. ibid. p. 755.

4. Let us now proceed to observe, that there were some special circumstances in the case of this Second Epistle of St. Peter which made such doubts in the first instance not unreasonable.

Suppose for argument's sake the Epistle to be genuine. Then this Epistle, it would appear. was published a very short time before St. Peter's death. The Author there speaks of himself as about to put off his earthly tabernacle, as the Lord had showed him. Suppose this to be the case. Then soon after the publication of it, the Apostle would be no longer at hand, to assure the Churches in person of the genuineness of this Epistle. The testimony of the Author himself could no longer be had concerning the Authorship of the Epistle: he was no longer on earth to give it. That testimony must be collected from other quarters-from his surviving friends, such as St. Mark and others, who were scattered by Persecution into different parts of the world. It would require time to collect their evidence, and to communicate it throughout Christendom; and the Book must wait for reception, till this evidence could be procured.

Hence a delay would arise in the reception of the Epistle.

Besides: the Church had already received one Epistle of St. Peter—the first of the two Epistles. It was universally recognized as genuine and inspired. And when this second Epistle came under review, it was found that it differed in style-or at least some portion of it, viz., the second chapter of it,—differed in style from the first Epistle, known to be by St. Peter. This discrepancy of style caused doubts and demurs in some quarters'. If the first Epistle was St. Peter's (and it was universally acknowledged to be so), could the other, which differed from it in style, be St. Peter's also? And if the second was his, might not some doubts be cast on the genuineness of the first?

Hence also it came to pass, that delays arose, which retarded the general reception of this Epistle.

5. Here we may observe two circumstances, which suggest reasons for thankfulness to Almighty God, watching over Holy Scripture.

Some persons have deduced objections against Scripture from the comparative lateness of the general reception of some few and smaller portions of the New Testament-particularly this Second Epistle of St. Peter.

But the fact is -this comparative lateness of reception furnishes a strong argument in favour of Scripture.

For, whence did this lateness of reception arise? From the wise caution and deliberation of the Church in this important matter. May we not say, it was due to the inspiration of the Holy Spirit Himself, preventing and restraining her from receiving any portion of His own Word without due evidence of its Genuineness and Inspiration? If she had acted with less caution, if she had received at once any book which presented itself bearing an Apostolic name, she might have received forgeries, she might have received heretical writings, she might have been deceived by emissaries of the Evil One, disguised as Angels of Light.

She was warned by the Holy Ghost not to believe every spirit, but to try the spirits whether they are of God 2. Some are praised in the Apocalypse because they tried them that said they were Apostles, and were not, and found them liars's. She would therefore make every Book pass through a period of probation, and a strict and severe ordeal;—she would summon witnesses to give evidence on its authorship; she would collect the suffrages of the Churches with regard to it, before she would pronounce her verdict, and acknowledge any Book to be the work of an Apostle, and receive it as the Word of God.

Shall we murmur or cavil because this was the case? No. Rather we may thank God that it was so. For we here see an additional reason for trust and confidence in His Holy Word. It is precisely this wise caution of the Church, this lingering prudence, or rather let us say, it is the gracious influence of the Holy Spirit Himself, to which we owe the fact, that no Book, which has gone through that probationary scrutiny, and has once been received by the Church Universal as genuine and inspired, has ever been proved to have been erroneously received as such. In two or three cases, as was before observed, the judgment of the Church was delayed, and wisely delayed, for a time, according to the sound maxim, "Deliberandum est diu, quod statuendum est semel."

But in no case, when once given, has that judgment been reversed. The Canon of Scripture once formed has been stcreotyped for ever.

6. Next, it may be observed, that the circumstances, which delayed the reception of certain books for some time, corroborate the evidence in favour of their reception, now that they are received.

Thus, for example, the difference in diction between the Apocalypse and Gospel of St. John, confirms our belief that writings so different in character would not have been received as the works of one person, and as divinely inspired, unless the primitive Churches, which received them as such, had been firmly persuaded that they were what they acknowledged them to be.

So again, as to the discrepancy of style that has been noticed between the First Epistle and part of the Second Epistle of St. Peter. This delayed the reception of this Second Epistle. But now that it is received by the Church of Christ, this very discrepancy strengthens the argument in farour of its received by the Church of Christ, this very discrepancy strengthens the argument in farour of its reception. For it is evident that the Apostle St. Peter, who was enabled by the Holy Ghost to speak with tongues of various nations, could write in different styles: and reasons have been already adduced to show, that, from the difference of the circumstances under which the two Epistles were written, and from the difference of the design of each, and from the peculiar character, temperament, and position of the Author himself, St. Peter could not have done otherwise than adopt, in the Second Epistle, a very different tone from that of the First; and it is also clear, that another person, wishing to palm upon the world a forgery in the name of St. Peter, would have taken good care to imitate the style of St. Peter, as seen in his First Epistle, and would also have taken good care not to write a chapter so different in diction from the First Epistle of St. Peter, as the second chapter of the Second Epistle is.

7. But an objection may be urged here.

The circumstances just stated may explain, why this Second Epistle was not received at once by all Churches of Christendom in the first and second centuries. But it may be said; If this Epistle is the work of St. Peter, if it is inspired Scripture,—it was so in the first Century. A book cannot become Scripture by lapse of time. No number of years can make a writing to be Apostolic, which is not Apostolic; no number of years can make a writing to be inspired which was not inspired from the first. Eternity itself cannot change the word of man into the Word of God. And this Epistle, if it is an inspired work of St. Peter, must have been known by some persons in the first century to be an inspired work of St. Peter; and must have been received by some persons as such.

Was this the case? Certainly, it was.

8. Let us remember that the Author claims to be St. Peter 1. If this Epistle was not written by that Apostle, it is a shameless forgery; and there is good reason to believe, that such a forgery as this could not have escaped detection and exposure.

There were doubts concerning the genuineness and inspiration of this Epistle; and in consequence of these very doubts, its claims to be received as a canonical work of St. Peter would be scrutinized more closely. If on the one hand the Epistle was not what it professed to be, then it would certainly have been rejected; but if it passed through this scrutiny, and was finally recognized as genuine and canonical, then these doubts only strengthen our belief that it is what it claims to be, a work of the Apostle St. Peter.

What then is the evidence here?

9. Beginning with Apostolic times, we find that there are numerous passages 2 in the Epistle of St. Jude, which coincide almost word for word with passages in the Second Epistle attributed to St. Peter.

Either St. Jude's Epistle was written before this Epistle, or after it.

If it was written before, then it is not at all likely, that a forger should have transcribed so many paragraphs from the Epistle of one Apostle, St. Jude, and have ascribed them to another, St. Peter.

If St. Jude's Epistle was written after this Epistle, as is most probable 3, then this Epistle must have existed in Apostolic times, and it must have been exposed and rejected as a forgery; and it is certain, that a forgery would not have been copied by the Apostle St. Jude; or rather we may say, the words of a forger would not have been repeated by the Holy Spirit, writing by the Apostle St. Jude.

Next, let us recollect, that the literary remains of the first and second centuries of the Christian Church which have been preserved to us, are very scanty, and that it is probable that this Epistlo was quoted in Ecclesiastical writings which do not now survive.

This inference may reasonably be derived from later writings.

Melito, Bishop of Sardis in the second century, in a recently discovered passage, appears to refer to this Epistle 1. This evidence is the more important, because Melito dwelt in the country to which this Epistle purports to be addressed.

The same may be said of another testimony to which we may now refer.

Firmilian 2, Bishop of Cappadocia, who wrote in the third century, speaks of Epistles by St. Peter. This testimony shows that the Church of Cappadocia had received more than one Epistle by St. Peter. And this evidence is of more value, because both these Epistles which we receive as St. Peter's are addressed to the Churches of Cappadocia and Asia 3. Firmilian's Church and its neighbour Churches had received two Epistles from St. Peter. We have no evidence of the existence of any other Epistles by St. Peter than those which we possess. They are addressed to the Churches of Cappadocia and Asia. Therefore here is a strong presumption that these two Epistles were written by St. Peter.

S. Hippolytus, the scholar of Ignatius, and Bishop of Portus near Rome in the earlier part of the third century, quotes this Epistle as a genuine work of St. Peter '.

We have an earlier testimony from Alexandria: Clement, the celebrated Presbyter of that Church and teacher in the catechetical school there, commented on this Epistle's; and Origen, his scholar, the famous teacher of that School in the second century 6, mentions two Epistles by St. Peter. This testimony is the more important as coming from that country, in which St. Mark, the son of St. Peter in the faith ', had governed the Church.

Origen, indeed, mentions that the authority of this Epistle is questioned by some *. Doubtless the Heretics, who are so severely censured in it, would have spared no effort to discredit and disparage it; they would have moved heaven and earth to destroy its Apostolic authority. These very doubts therefore confirm the proof in its favour.

We have seen why it was doubted by some—on account of discrepancy of style from the first. The fact of doubts existing in some places with respect to it, is a proof that it would not be received by them before its claims were scrutinized and settled. It would never have been generally received, before all doubts on this subject were cleared up.

10. And what was the result of the inquiry?

Eventually all doubts concerning its genuineness and inspiration were cleared up. It was received as an inspired work of St. Peter by all the Churches of Christendom. Thus these doubts of some Churches have served a most important purpose. They have been, under God's Providence, what the doubts of St. Thomas were concerning the resurrection of Christ. The result of these doubts is, that we need never doubt.

When we arrive at the fourth and fifth century after Christ, we find that at that time this Epistle was universally received throughout Christendom as an inspired writing of St. Peter. It was recognized and cited as such by S. Cyril at Jerusalem, by S. Athanasius at Alexandria, by the Council of Laodicea, by S. Gregory Nazianzen at Constantinople, by S. Epiphanius in Cyprus, by S. Augustine in Africa, by Ruffinus and Philastrius in Italy?. These venerable men were in carnest. They understood the importance of the question at issue,—Is this the work of an Apostle, is it the Word of God? They possessed many written documents for determining that question which we do not now possess. They all received this Epistle 10. And let us consider, -to what did this reception amount? It amounted to no less than this—that this Epistle was to be read in Christian Churches to Christian congregations as the work of an Apostle; it was to be read as Canonical Scripture, as of equal Authority with the writings of Moses and the Prophets,—as the Word of the Holy Ghost.

<sup>10</sup> To this may be added the testimony of the Ancient Uncial Manuscripts. In A and C the First Epistle is inscribed Πέτρου Α', and also in the Codex Sinaiticus; and in B it is inscribed πρώτη. These inscriptions show that the copyists of those very early documents knew a Second Epistle, and in A,  $\aleph$ , and B the Second is contained, with the inscription  $\Pi \acute{e} \tau \rho o \nu B'$ . It is also described as the Second Epistle of St. Peter in C, G, K.

How could such a reception have taken place? Only from the concurrent persuasion of all those Fathers and Churches—that this Epistle is indeed the work of St. Peter, and the Word of

11. If, as has been alleged by some in recent times, this Epistle was not known in the age of St. Peter, if it is the production of a later generation, how could this general suffrage have been obtained, and this universal reception have ever been effected? The question was not concerning a various reading, or a single verse, but a whole Epistle, claiming to be from the pen of an Apostle. Suppose now that the Bishops and Clergy of the Churches in all parts of Christendom had been able or willing to palm a forgery upon the people, suppose that they had all conspired to invite them to receive the work of an Impostor as the Word of God, can we imagine that the many thousand Congregations would have connived at such an act of impiety? Would no single voice have been raised to denounce it? And this not in a dark age, -not in mediæval twilight, when ignorance prevailed, and superstitions stole into the Church; but in the meridian splendour of the fourth and fifth centuries,—in the most brilliant age of Ecclesiastical learning, in the age of S. Athanasius, S. Basil, S. Cyril, and the Gregories, and S. Chrysostom, and S. Jerome, and S. Augustine. All these received this Epistle. It was read,—as it is now read,—in all Churches, as the work of St. Peter, and as the Word of God. It never would have been so received, it never would have been so read, unless they had been satisfied by irresistible proofs that it is, what it professes to be, the work of St. Peter, and that it is, what they declared it to be, the Word of God. Their reception of it affords practical demonstration that such proofs were given. We may safely appeal to their reception of it as a sufficient reason for our reception of it. If such evidence as this does not convince us, no evidence will. There is scarcely a single writing of all Antiquity, sacred or profane. which must not be given up as spurious, if the Second Epistle of St. Peter be not received as a genuine writing of the Apostle, and as a part of Holy Writ.

12. Let us consider also the nature of this testimony,—the testimony of the Universal Church. The Universal Church is formed of all the Churches of Christendom. The testimony of the Churches of Christendom, regarded merely as human societies, guided by reason and experience, is assuredly of great weight. But the Church of Christ Universal is not to be regarded as a mere human association. It is not like a legal Tribunal, or a civil Assembly; it is not like a literary Institution, or a scientific Society. It is the Spouse and Body of Christ, enlightened by the Holy Ghost. It is the seven-branched Golden Candlestick, set in the Tabernacle of this World, to illumine it with the Light of His Holy Word. It is the Guardian and Keeper of Holy Writ. If any Book which the Church universal propounds to us as Scripture, be not Scripture; if any Book, which she reads as the Word of God, is not the Word of God, but the Work of an Impostor, then, with reverence be it said, Christ's promise to His Church has failed, and the Holy Spirit has not been given to guide her into all truth. But Christ is the Truth. He is the Alpha and Omega. His Word is Yea and Amen. And therefore what He promised, that He performed. He has been, He is, and He ever will be, with His Church. He is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. He has sent His Spirit to teach her all things. And therefore the testimony of the Universal Church of Christ, declaring that the Epistles, which we receive as such, are Epistles of St. Peter, and are the Word of God, is not her testimony only,—it is the testimony of Christ, Who is present with her. It is the Witness of the Holy Spirit, Who is in her. Therefore that witness is true. And we may rest firmly assured, that the Second Epistle of St. Peter, which has been received by the Universal Church of Christ for fourteen hundred years, is indeed what she affirms it to be, a genuine work of the Apostle, and a part of the Holy Scriptures given by Inspiration of God 1.

the world as Christian Advocate in the University of Cambridge. He did not live to execute his design; but enough is preserved to show his strong conviction of the genuineness of this Epistle. An extract from his papers will be found below, p. 80, and some use has been made of them in the Synopsis of the Contents of the Epistle.

After this Introduction had been finished, the Writer was favoured by the kindness of the Rev. Francis Procter, M.A., Author of the History of the Book of Common Prayer,—with access to some papers of the late lamented Archdn. Hardwick, in vindication of the genuineness of this Epistle. The learned Author designed to have written a Treatise on this question, and to have added it to those valuable works which he bequeathed to

V. Summary of the Contents of the Epistle.

In addition to what has already been said above on the design of this Epistle, the following brief summary of its contents may be inserted here:—

The doctrines which constitute the groundwork of this Epistle are those of the Eternal Sonship, Divine Majesty, and glorious Re-appearing of Christ our Saviour and Lord.

The opening salutation is addressed to all who are represented by the Apostle as partakers of the same precious faith as that which animated the writer and his Jewish fellow-Christians; and he prays that Grace and Peace may be multiplied to them in the mature knowledge ' of God and of Jesus our Lord.

He then proceeds to recall to the minds of his readers, in a hortatory form, certain fundamental truths of religion, as already known to them.

1. The divine gift of Regeneration, bestowed upon them by God, and making them partakers of the divine Nature.

2. The consequent obligation on their part to add to their faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and other graces, till their Christian life is consummated in Love.

3. The glorious recompense, which is laid up in store for those who cherish these evangelical graces, and "bring forth the good fruit of them in their lives; and this recompense is the entrance, that is richly furnished to them, into the Eternal Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ<sup>2</sup>."

St. Peter had dilated on these truths in his First Epistle; and the reference to them here indicates the connexion of this Epistle with the former one, and confirms the arguments for its genuineness

He warns them that wherever these graces and virtues are not, there the doctrine of Christ is not duly known. Whoseever does not grow in grace, and bring forth good fruit, is blind to the true nature of the Gospel, and forgets the purging away of his former sins, and cannot hope for admission into the holy and blessed presence of their Saviour and King.

The Apostle reminds them, that these truths have already been made known to them, and supposes that "they are well grounded and settled in them";" but he deems it right, while he is spared to them, which will be but for a short time, to stir up their minds by calling these doctrines and truths to their remembrance. Truths like these, he implies, deserve the most earnest attention; and we must be solicitous for their maintenance. For it was no fable, such as misbelievers devise, which we followed, when we made known to you the Power and glorious Re-appearing of Christ. Our eyes saw some gleams of that glory in His Transfiguration on the Holy Mount, and we heard with our ears the voice from heaven proclaiming Him to be the well-beloved Son of God.

We have, also, other confirmations of these truths in the prophetic Word; to which ye give heed, and in doing so, ye act wisely—however the false Teachers may disparage it 5—until the day dawn, and the light in all its fulness breaks in upon you.

But with regard to Prophecy, you need some cautions. The true Prophecy must be distinguished from the false: and you must remember, first of all o, that true Prophecy is a far higher thing than the utterance of the Prophet's own knowledge; and though he utters prophecy, it surpasses his powers of interpretation; for they who uttered it, did not utter it as mere men, but as men of God, who were borne along by the Holy Ghost?

Besides, as there were false prophets among the people of Israel, who were a type of the Christian Church, so there will be false Teachers among you. The writer places himself, without any misgiving, among the true Prophets, and proceeds to unveil the future. He pre-announces that false Teachers will arise in the Church, and he describes the character of those Teachers, and the evil fruits of their teaching, with the prophetic fire and pathos of an ancient Hebrew Prophet. The chief characteristic of these false Teachers is, that they will "deny the Lord that bought them "." Here is the source of the misery which will overflow from them upon the Church. Starting forth from this destructive heresy, they will seduce many by their licentious doctrines, and will trade and traffic therewith, for love of lucre. Yet the destruction of these destroyers is at hand. They may boast of angelic intelligence and power, but He who spared not the rebel Angels, will not spare them. He who overwhelmed the world with a flood, will overwhelm them. He who consumed Sodom with fire from heaven for its filthiness, will consume them for their licentiousness. And as certainly as God destroyed the ungodly, will He save you, if you are true to Him. He who saved Noah, He who delivered Lot, will rescue you, and all the righteous with you.

After this warning and encouragement, the Apostle goes on with the prophetic vehemence and indignation of a true seer of God, to complete his description of the impiety and profligacy of the false Teachers. He beholds them as present before him. They follow the flesh in the pollutions of lust. They speak evil of Dominion, and blaspheme Glories 1. And yet they call themselves Christians; they associate with you in your assemblies; and like Balaam, once a true prophet, but tempted to swerve from the right way by love of money and worldly honour, they leave the path of righteousness; and while they boast their superior intelligence, they degrade themselves beneath the brute creatures, whose lusts they imitate, and become like the false prophet, whose madness was rebuked by the ass upon which he rode 2.

The false teachers, as described by the writer, bear a striking resemblance to those with whom Simon Peter himself, as we know from the Acts of the Apostles 3, and from other sources, had a personal conflict—especially Simon Magus'; and this consideration supplies another argument in favour of the genuineness of this Epistle.

Like Balaam, these false Teachers cast a stumbling-block in the way of God's people. They carry away with them many others, especially new converts, who had only just escaped the errors and vices of Heathenism. They allure them with the promise of liberty, being themselves slaves of licentiousness. Their latter end is worse than the beginning; for it were better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than when they had known it to turn away back from it, like the sow, that has been washed, to her wallowing in the mire 5.

The Apostle now reverts to those whom he had addressed in his First Epistle 6. He reminds them again of the warnings uttered by the Prophets, and of the charge delivered to them by the Apostles. They well knew, that errors such as he was denouncing had been reprobated by anticipation. They knew that in the last days would arise scoffers, striking at the root of their Christian hopes, and asking, "Where is the promise of His Coming?" Where is the end of all things? "All things remain as they were from the beginning." He refutes these mockers by pointing to the Sacred History of the Creation, and by affirming, that, as the Heaven and Earth were not from eternity, but were made by God's Word; so they would not remain for ever, but would be destroyed by the same Word; and as the antediluvian world was destroyed by water, ministered from the internal reservoirs of its own Heavens and Earth, so it will be consumed by fuel and combustion supplied and set on fire by its own Elements. He reminds them that God's ways are not as our ways; that his measure of Time is not like ours; that what is slow to us, is speedy to Him, with Whom a thousand years are as one day. But, in fine, the Day of the Lord will come. The conflagration of the World will be universal. But the faithful will survive it, and will inhabit the new heavens and the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness 7.

On this assurance he grounds a concluding exhortation to earnestness, circumspection, and holiness. God delays His coming in long-suffering, which is salvation: for who otherwise would

Manuscript note already referred to:

"The same Peter (Symeon Peter) who professes to have written this Epistle, had himself confronted Simon Magus (Acts viii.) in the province of Samaria, where the soil, half heathen and half Jewish, was peculiarly prepared for such a conflict; and though stories told of their subsequent encounters are in many cases altogether fabulous, especially those recorded in the Pseudo-Clementines, the vast importance which the Early Church attributed to Simon Magus, is receiving fresh corroboration from inquiries of the present day.

"If Simon Magus himself was not the patriarch of all the Gnostic heresics, he was at least their first patron and great precursor. He put forth the earliest counterfeit of Christianity, and in the time of Justin Martyr he was worshipped as the first God

"When we find him in the Acts of the Apostles, Simon, not devoid it would seem of religious sensibility, is borne along by the popular excitement; he believes and is baptized (viii. 13). Yet like the man depicted in the first chapter of our Epistle, he does not add to his faith virtue, nor place knowledge in subordination to moral goodness; he forgets that he was purged from his old sins (2 Pet. i. 9), and his last state is worse than the first (2 Pet.

"We cannot positively affirm indeed from what has been recorded in the Acts, that Simon, immediately after his relapse, proceeded to build up a system of belief, commensurate in every point with the heresy imputed to him by Irenæus and Hippolytus. But evidence exists to prove, that most, if not all, the ingredients of Simonianism had been projected, and were actively fermenting, in the Apostolic age. The founder of this system wished to be regarded as the highest emanation of the Deity ('sublimissima virtus'). He was consequently a false Christ, and even if it could be shown that he adopted Christian phrascology, he used the Gospel as a kind of magical agent, but neglected its moral power. He respected (so to say) its supernatural gifts and revenience. power. He respected (so to say) its supernatural gifts and revelations, but threw off its salutary discipline, and did not scruple to prostitute its holy maxims to the basest and most selfish ends. This latter circumstance excited, as we know, the most emphatic reprobation of St. Peter."

be saved? Such also had been the teaching of "his beloved brother, St. Paul," who had been represented by some as a rival and opponent of the writer, and whose writings had been perverted by some, in favour of Antinomian licentiousness, as the rest of the Scriptures had been wrested by the unlearned and unstable, to their own ruin. Be ye therefore on your guard, for ye are forewarned. Do not swerve from your own stedfastness, but grow in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, to whom be Glory, both now and for ever. Amen.

CH. I. 1. Συμεών] τρου (Shimeon), the Aramaic form of Simon; used by St. James at Jerusalem, when speaking of Simon Peter. Acts xv. 14. Its use here is an evidence that the Writer is addressing Jewish Christians.

- ἐν δικαιοσύνη τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν καὶ Σωτῆρος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ] in the righteousness of our God and Saviour Jesus Christ, Ye have obtained faith by the free gift and grace of God. Faith itself is a gift of God, and your faith is equally precious in His sight with our faith. On this use of  $\tilde{\eta}\mu\tilde{u}\nu$ , compare Rev. xiii. 11, κέρατα δμοια άρνίφ. Winer, § 66, p. 549.

Ye obtained "this faith in and by the righteousness of Christ, Who is the Lord our Righteousness" (Jer. xxiii. 6; cp. 1 Cor. i. 30. 2 Cor. iii. 9. Rom. iii. 21—26; v. 20); and by virtue of

1. 30. 2 Cor. III. 9. Rom. III. 21—26; v. 20); and by virtue of His Incarnation and your Incorporation in Him, ye receive all grace from God. John i. 16.

The words τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Σωτῆρος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ are best rendered, of our God and Saviour Jesus Christ. That they may be thus rendered, cannot be doubted (cp. Winer, p. 118, note, and De Wette here). And they are rendered thus by Bezel, Hemming, Combard Pictlein and others here, and by the Greek and Latin Gerhard, Dietlein, and others here; and by the Greek and Latin Fathers in the similar place of St. Paul, viz. Titus ii. 13, τοῦ μεγάλου Θεοῦ καὶ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, where see the note, and Wiesinger's commentary there.

This declaration of the Godhead of Christ was very suitable to the commencement of this Epistle, in which the Author is speaking of the gracious dispensation by which we have become "partakers of the divine nature," v. 4; a participation effected by the Incarnation of the Eternal Word (John i. 14), God manifested in the flesh (1 Tim. iii. 16), "God with us" (Matt. i. 23).

This declaration was also very pertinent here, because this Epistle was designed to refute the errors of those who separated Jesus from Christ, and denied the Lord that bought them, and rejected the doctrine of His Divinity. See the Introduction, and below on ii. 1.

It is observable, that this Epistle ends in the same terms.

See note below, iii. 17, 18.

St. Peter's usage of the article (\(\tau\epsilon\)) and copula (\(\kar\alpha\)) in other places of the Epistle confirms this interpretation. Compare v. 11, τοῦ Κυρίου ήμῶν και Σωτήρος Ίησοῦ Χριστοῦ, and ii. 20, and iii. 18; so that there appears to be good ground for the assertion of Bp. Middleton, p. 595, that "this passage is plainly and unequivocally to be understood as an assumption that Jesus Christ is our God and Saviour," and it may be coupled with the testimony of St. Paul to the same effect, in Titus ii. 13.

2. χάρις—πληθυνθείη] Grace to you and Peace be multiplied. The same salutation as in the First Epistle of St. Peter, and not found, in the same terms, in any other Epistle. See 1 Pet. i. 2.

- ἐν ἐπιγνώσει] in the mature knowledge of God and of Jesus our Lord. St. Peter inculcates this word ἐπί-γνωσις (v. 3. 8; ii. 20) in this Epistle, directed against the falsely called  $\gamma\nu\hat{\omega}\sigma\iota s$ , or knowledge (1 Tim. vi. 20), of the Gnostic Teachers.

The same thing is done by his brother Apostle St. Paul, in the Epistle to the Colossians (Col. i. 9, 10; ii. 2; iii. 10), an Epistle which, in many respects, is the best commentary on this Epistle of St. Peter. See above, Introduction, p. 71.

 $-\epsilon \delta \sigma \epsilon \beta \epsilon_{12} v$ ] godliness; a word repeated in this Epistle (see vv. 6, 7; iii. 11) in opposition to the  $\delta \sigma \epsilon \beta \epsilon_{12} a$  of the false Teachers; and for similar reasons, reiterated by St. Paul in his Epistle to the Bishop of Ephesus, see 1 Tim. ii. 2; iii. 16; iv. 7, 8; vi. 3. 5, 6. 11; and 2 Tim. iii. 5, where he describes false Teachers as having μόρφωσιν εὐσεβείαs, a form of godliness, but denying its power. Cp. Titus i. 1. It occurs only in one other place of the New Testament. Acts iii. 12.

— δεδωρημένης] having given as a δῶρον, gift,—active; so δεδώρηται, he hath given as a gift, v. 4. Cp. Rom. iv. 21, δ επήγγελται. Winer, § 39, p. 234.

— ὶδία δόξη καὶ ἀρετῆ] by His own Glory and Virtue. So A, C, and Lach., Tisch., Alford.—Elz. has διὰ δόξης καὶ ἀρετῆς. Δόξα is the Glory of the Godhead in its own Essence and Nature. Aρετή is the excellence of its moral attributes energizing in acts of Power, Wisdom, Justice, and Love. Cp. 1 Pet. ii. 9.

This use of Your for suus is characteristic of St. Peter. See here, ii. 22; iii. 3. 16, 17; and 1 Pet. iii. 1. 5.

This passage is cited as from "the Catholic Epistles," by Athanasius, Dialog. de Trin. i. p. 164.

4. θείας κοινωνοί φύσεως] partakers of the Divine Nature, by the Incarnation of the Eternal Word, and by your filial Adoption and baptismal Incorporation in Him. See John i. 12. This and baplismai incorporation in thin. See John i. 12. This passage appears to be imitated by S. Hippolytus, Refut. Hæres. p. 339, γέγονας θεός . . . ὅσα παρακολουθεί Θεφ, ταῦτα παρέχειν ἐπήγγελται Θεός, ὅτι ἐθεοποιήθης ἀθάνατος γενηθείς . . . σοῦ πτωχεύει Θεός, καὶ σὲ θεόν ποιήσας εἰς δόξαν αὐτοῦ. S. Hippolytus in that treatise, especially at the close, seems to have had this Epistle in his mind, see p. 338, and cp. below, ii. 4; and in his inculcation of the true ἐπί-γνωσις in opposition to the false gnosis of heretical teachers; cp. pp. 338, 339, with i. 3. 8; ii. 20.

This passage is cited by Origen in Levit., hom. 4, as from a genuine writing of St. Peter. See also below, vv. 16. 19; and so Athanasius, c. Arian., orat. ii. 1, p. 323.

- ἐπιχορηγήσατε ἐν τῷ πίστει ὑμῶν τὴν ἀρετήν] contribute, or furnish forth, in your faith, virtue.

Επιχορηγείν is, literally, to contribute, or furnish, the re-Eπίχορηγειν 1s, literally, to contribute, or jurnish, the requisite resources for the outfit, equipment, and training of a dramatic chorus; and perhaps επὶ may here imply addition. Hence it means to supply means and resources generally. Cp. Gal. iii. 5. 2 Cor. ix. 10. Col. ii. 10, and Wetstein here.

The preposition εν, in, indicates that the Virtues here specified are to be linked one to another, as in a chain. Seven Christian graces are here joined together hand in hand. Faith leads the Chorus, and Love completes it. St. Peter's seven core.

leads the Chorus, and Love completes it. St. Peter's seven correspond to St. Paul's three. (1 Cor. xiii. 13.) In each Apostolic group Faith leads, and Charity ends.

To adopt another metaphor, suggested here by St. Peter's words. Faith, the gift of God (see v. 1), is the groundwork, on which all Christian virtues are to be built up, so as to be in it as in their original and actuating principle. (Theophylact.) Compare the use of έν in Eph. ii. 21, 22, έν φ πᾶσα οἰκοδομή συναρμολογουμένη αὐξει εἰς ναὸν ἄγιον έν Κυρίφ, ἐν ῷ καὶ ὑμεῖς συνοικοδομεῖσθε εἰς κατοικητήριον τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν Πνεύματι.

God has laid the foundation of faith; but remember, it is your faith (πίστις ύμων), it is to be yours by being moulded into the whole framework of your life. God has laid this foundation, do you supply in addition (ἐπιχορηγήσατε) on your part, the materials requisite for the structure and furniture of the Christian life. Faith is the foundation; that is laid by God. Man must do his part in rearing the superstructure; he must add the successive stages of spiritual masonry, one upon another, till the fabric is complete.

Another figure also, taken from the natural world, seems to have been in the Apostle's mind. The Christian believer must put forth his spiritual energies, till the Tree of Christian Life reaches its full maturity. See note above on Luke xvii. 5, where Christ represents faith as the seminal principle from which all Christian Virtue grows. So here St. Peter.

If this is done, then they will not be either like useless heaps of rubbish, or like barren trees; they will be neither apyol nor άκαρποι (v. 8; 1 Tim. v. 13. Titus i. 12; iii. 14), but the entrance to the everlasting kingdom will be richly supplied also (ἐπιχορηγηθήσεται) to them (v. 11); they will be built up in the heavenly City; they will also be like Trees planted by the side of the living Water, which flows from the throne of God. Rev. xxi. 19; xxii.

—  $\tau \dot{\eta} \nu \ \dot{\alpha} \rho \epsilon \tau \dot{\eta} \nu$ ] supply in your faith virtue, blended with your faith. Let not your faith be a barren speculative faith, but a faith that worketh by love. Gal. v. 6. Titus iii. 8. Supply also in your virtue, knowledge; let your zeal be according to knowledge. (Cp. Rom. x. 2.) And in knowledge join temperance; let not your knowledge be a  $\gamma \nu \dot{\alpha} \sigma \tau$ , which puffeth up, such as that of those who, to gratify the carnal appetite, did not scruple to eat things offered to idols, and professed to have more intelligence than others, whom they condemned as weak brethen. than others, whom they condemned as weak brethren. 1 Cor. viii. 1, 2. Cp. Rom. xiv. 20.

γ ἐν δὲ τῆ φιλαδελφία τὴν ἀγάπην] and in your brotherly kindness do ye supply, in addition, love. Αγάπη is more expressive and diffusive than φιλαδελφία. It extends not only to the brotherhood (1 Pet. ii. 17), but to all men, even enemies. Therefore Love is the crown of Christian Virtues. As S. Ignatius says (ad Ephes. 14), ἀρχὴ μὲν πίστις, τέλος δὲ ἀγάπη.

Thus the cornu-copiæ of Christian fruits and flowers will be filled up and flow over in plentiful abundance.

8. εἰς τὴν—ἐπίγνωσιν] to the mature knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. Knowledge is the fruit of Virtue, see John vii. 17. By Christian obedience and Christian fruitfulness ye will attain to the clear knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, v. 8; or as it is expressed by St. Paul in his parallel Epistle, that to the Colossians, "rooted and built up in Him, and stablished in the Colossians, robleta and bath up in Sin, and stabilities faith' (ii. 7), being fruitful in every good work, and growing into the clear knowledge (ἐπίγνωσιν) of God (i. 10).

With this exhortation of St. Peter, compare St. Paul's to the Colossians, "Put on, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering; and over all put on Charity (Love, ἀγάπην), which is the bond of perfectness; and may the Peace of God rule in your hearts, to which also ye were called." (Col. iii. 12-14.)

9. φ γὰρ μη πάρεστι ταῦτα] for, whosoever hath not these graces, that man, whatever may be his professions of knowledge, is in fact blind; and he is  $\mu\nu\omega\pi\alpha\zeta\omega\nu$ . He is blind, because he is μυωπάζων (observe the participle), that is, because, having the inner optic nerve clouded with the films of carnal lusts, he is unable to see those heavenly things which are the true objects of spiritual vision (2 Cor. iv. 18), and which are too bright for his hazy eyesight; and he is dazzled by them, as Saul was by the glory of the light of heaven. Acts xxii. 11. And they are too distant for the range of his feeble ken, so that he cannot descry

On this sense of μυωπάζω, to blink, to be purblind, weaksighted, and short-sighted, see Aristot. Probl. 31, who says, that old men's vision differs from that of the  $\mu\nu\omega\pi\dot{a}(\omega\nu)$  in this respect,—that they see things at a distance but not near, and he sees things near and not far off. Wetstein, p. 700.

The yap, for, in this text brings out the important doctrine. that unholiness is the cause of spiritual blindness; and that, consequently, increase of holiness enlarges the range of spiritual vision. See Rom. i. 22.

— λήθην λαβών] receiving forgetfulness, by a deliberate act of his own will. Cp. iii. 5, λανθάνει αὐτοὺς τοῦτο θέλοντας. The opposite to this is ὑπόμνησιν λαβών, 2 Tim. i. 5

10. διο μάλλον] Wherefore, since some have fallen away from their first faith, and have forgotten the vows and privileges of their Baptism, in which they were once enlightened (see Heb. vi. 4; x. 32); and since their eyes are now blinded (v. 9), do ye the rather on this account, taking warning from their downfall, earnestly endeavour to make your calling and election sure.

St. Peter places our calling before our election, for so it is to God from the beginning sees us in Christ; and He foresees who will persevere to the end. But we can only infer election from vocation. By Baptism men are visibly declared to be called of God. And from the fact of their being called, and ingrafted into the body of Christ, we may suppose them to be elect.

God has done His part; it remains for us to do ours; namely, so to use His grace, as to make our calling and election sure. See above, I Pet. i. I, and on Rom. viii. 30, and Introduction to that Epistle, p. 194.

11. οὅτω γάρ] For thus the entrance into the everlasting king-dom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ will be richly supplied unto you. If you supply your part (see v. 5, ἐπιχορηγήσατε), God will richly supply His, not only in abundance of grace, but of glory also. On this text see Bp. Bull's Sermon (vii. vol. i. p. 168), who hence concludes that according to our different degrees of improvement of God's grace here, will be our different degrees of participation in His everlasting glory hereafter. ' 12, 13. μελλήσω] This is the reading of A, B, C, and Vulg., Copt., Sahidic, Armenian Versions, and several cursives, and is approved by Mill and Bengel, and received by Lach., Tisch., Alford. Elz. has οὐκ ἀμελήσω.

The future, μελλήσω, is found in Matt. xxiv. 6, μελλήσετεἀκούειν. The word signifies what is future, and often implies an intention, as (Matt. ii. 13), μέλλει Ἡρώδης ζητεῖν τὸ παιδίον. Cp. Luke xxii. 23. Acts xii. 6; xvi. 27; xx. 13. Rev. ii. 10; x. Hence Hesychius interprets μελλήσω by σπουδάσω.

The sense is, I shall be about to remind you always of these things, by means of this Epistle, which will be read in your ears, in your churches, after my decease; and thus I shall always remind you; and I write with this design, in order that, being soon about to be absent from you, and from this world, I may yet continue for ever to exhort you thereby, although you know these things, and have been established in the truth present with you, and therefore may seem to have less need of admonition from me, when absent from you. But (b) I deem it right, as long as I am in this mortal tabernacle of the flesh (2 Cor. v. 1), to stir you up in reminding you. Cp. iii. 1. I do not profess to teach you any thing new, but I endeavour to stir you up to recollect those things which you already know, and in which you have been already settled. Cp. note above on St. Paul's language, 2 Cor. viii. 10.

14, 15. είδως] I deem it right to stir you up, as long as I am in this tabernacle, because I know that my time is short, and that speedy is (eativ) the putting off of my tabernacle. Compare St. Peter's similar language in Acts ii. 26, ἡ σάρξ μου κατα-σκηνώσει ἐπ' ἐλπίδι. My departure is at hand, it is now fast approaching; I have no time to lose; As also our Lord Jesus Christ declared to me. Observe the aorist here: St. Peter is showing that the writer is referring to the particular occasion, recorded by St. John, when our Lord revealed this: Christ then said, that "when thou shalt grow old," literally, when thou shalt have begun to be old (ὅταν γηράσης, quùm consenueris), "another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not" (John xxi. 18). I have now begun to grow old, and I therefore know that my exit is speedy. έξοδος here precedes είσοδος, v. 11. His exodus will be followed by entrance into his Canaan.

St. Peter pre-announces his own death, lest his friends and readers should be perplexed and dismayed by the sufferings of an aged and faithful servant of Christ; and lest they should be tempted thereby to falter in the faith. He therefore tells them that the Lord Jesus Christ had declared to him the manner of his death. But he has not therefore failed in his love to Christ; he is not terrified by the prospect; he describes the martyrdom which awaited him by crucifixion, whereby he would follow Christ (John xxi. 19. Cp. Euseb. iii. 1), as a pulling off of his tabernacle.

He describes that death by a double figure; it is the putting off of a garment, to be reassumed in a more glorious form. It is also the removal of a tabernacle, to be replaced by a glorious Temple in the heavenly Sion; as the itinerant Tabernacle in the Wilderness was succeeded by the stationary Temple in Jerusalem. So, in like manner, when the earthly house of this tabernacle, of our mortal bodies, in which we sojourn for a short time in this our earthly pilgrimage, shall be dissolved, we have a building from (&) God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens (see 2 Cor. v. 1).

In this double figure he imitates his brother Apostle, St. Paul, who had said, "we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle shall have been dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens; for in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house from heaven: for we, that are in this tabernacle, do groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed

He speaks of his departure under these terms, as well knowing that by following Christ in putting off the tabernacle of the body of humiliation (see Phil. iii. 21), he will follow Him also in putting on that body of glory, which he had seen at the Transfiguration in the holy mount. He had then craved leave to make three tabernacles, and to detain Christ there (Matt. xvii. 4. Mark ix. 5. Luke ix. 33), but he had there heard Christ talking of his own departure (ἔξοδος, Luke ix. 31), and he had seen that ἔξοδος followed by the glory of the Resurrection and Ascension.

The word $\( \xi_0 \delta_0 \text{so} \) may perhaps be derived by St. Peter from St. Luke's narrative of the Transfiguration (Luke ix. 31), and is happily here applied to describe his own έξοδος in which he followed his Master according to His precept (John xxi. 22), even in the manner of his death. Here is a silent note of the genuineness of this Epistle. The same word (ξξοδος) appears to be applied to designate the death both of St. Peter and St. Paul, by S. Irenæus (iii. 1), μετὰ τὴν τούτων ἔξοδον, Μάρκος, ὁ μαθητής καὶ ἔρμηνευτής Πέτρου, καὶ αὐτὸς τὰ ὑπὸ Πέτρου κηρυσσόμενα έγγράφως ήμῶν παραδέδωκεν: and perhaps St. Peter's design that his hearers should have it in their power on every occasion,—in every emergency and need, when they would require admonition and comfort,—to exercise the remembrance of these things (cp. Rom. i. 9. Eph. i. 16), after his own decease (μετὰ την εξοδον), may have been realized, not only in writing the present Epistle, but in the composition of the Gospel of "Marcus his son" (I Pet. v. 13).
16. οὐ γὰρ σεσοφισμένοις] for we did not follow cunningly

devised fables-fables sophistically invented (πλαστοῖς λόγοις, ii. 3), with fraudulent purpose, like those fabricated by others, when we made known to you the power and future coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but we did this, having been made spectators of His Majesty. The preposition έξ in έξακολουθήσαντες indicates that the followers of these fables had gone out of the way of truth.

He contrasts his own preaching with that of those whom he refutes in this Epistle. The Gnostic teachers followed cunningly devised fables. The system of St. Peter's adversary, the Father of the Gnostics, Simon Mayus, was grounded on cunningly devised fables; viz., that he himself was the great Power of God (Acts viii. 10), and that from him and his paramour, Helena, the Angels were born, who made the world. The impious fables of Simon, asserting that he himself was the "sublimissima virtus" of the Deity, the "super omnia Pater," and that he (Simon) was the δύναμις μεγάλη of God (see on Acts viii. 10), and that the Son of God was another apparition of himself, dwelling in the man Jesus for a time, are here confuted by St. Peter's declaration concerning the δύναμις and μεγαλειότης of Jesus Christ; and the heavenly witness of the Father to Him in the Mountain of Transfiguration (cp. Matt.

— οῦτος—εὐδόκησα] This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. This reading (είς δν εὐδόκησα) does not coincide with that in any of the Gospels, but agrees with the citation in the Clementine Homilies (iii. 53); and an argument has thence been derived by some in modern times (e.g. Mayerhoff) in behalf of the strange theory, that this Epistle is of Ebionitish origin! But, as Archdn. Hardwick has observed, the citation corresponds with the form in which the words appear in S. Hippolytus, c. Noët. c. 5.

See also below on iii. 15, where the author speaks of St. Paul as his "well-beloved brother," which is conclusive against that theory; inasmuch as St. Paul was the special object of hatred to the Ebionites and all other Judaizers, as Archdn. Hardwick has remarked (see Iren. i. 26. 2); and in the Pseudo-Clementines St. Paul is represented under the person of Simon Magus disputing with Peter. Schaff, Hist, of the Apost. Church, ii. 360, note.

The originality of the reading εἰς δν εὐδόκησα may be remarked as an argument for the genuineness of the Epistle. forger would have copied the reading in St. Matthew, xvii. 5. Observe too, he says, φωνης τοι ασδε (such as this), he does not pretend to give the precise words.

18. σὺν αὐτῷ ὅντες ἐν τῷ ὅρει τῷ ἁγίῳ] being with Him on the holy mount; holy, like the place in which God appeared to Moscs and said, "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground" (Exod. iii. 5. Acts vii. 33), and so Joshua is commanded by the Captain of the Lord's host who appeared to him near Jericho, to loose his shoe from his foot, "for the place whereon thou standest is holy." Josh. v. 15.

This designation of the Mountain of Transfiguration as "the holy mount," is an evidence that the history of that event was well known to the Christians of Asia, probably by the dissemina-tion of copies of St. Matthew's and St. Luke's Gospels, when

St. Peter wrote this Epistle.

There is a peculiar pertinency in this reference to the Transfiguration here. The False Teachers denied the doctrine of Christ's παρουσία or Second Coming (see iii. 4). The Transfiguration was designed and declared by our Blessed Lord to be a type and earnest of that Future Coming in glory. See the connexion of His declaration concerning His Coming (παρουσία) with the Evangelical accounts of the Transfiguration, Matt. xvi. 28; xvii. 1, and the parallel places in St. Mark and St. Luke. There is also a peculiar fitness in the transition from the mention of the Transfiguration to the case of Prophecy: for the Prophets of old, when they prophesied, underwent a spiritual Transfigura-tion; they were illumined by the splendour of the Eternal Word, and spake of Christ. See above, Preface to the Gospels, p. xviii.

19. και έχομεν] and we—observe, we—possess the word of prophecy, a more sure evidence: i. e. the word of Prophecy which we have is more sure to us than even this Voice from heaven which I heard, and than that Vision of the Transfiguration which I saw. Do not therefore suppose that you have not as clear evidence of that Second Coming as I have, who was admitted to see His glory at the Transfiguration.

Our Lord Jesus Christ (says S. Augustine), foreseeing that some ungodly men would arise, who would disparage His miracles as if they were the work of sorcery, sent the Prophets to bear witness of Him before His Incarnation, and therefore the word of Prophecy is even more sure than the voice which the three Apostles heard from heaven. S. Augustine in Joan., Tract. 35.

And again; St. Peter calls the word of Prophecy more sure than the voice which he heard from heaven; he calls it more sure, not more true. And what does he mean by calling it more sure? He means, that it is an evidence by which the hearer is more assured. And why? Because it might be alleged by impious men, that the voice and light from heaven were magical illusions; but no such objection can be made against the word of Prophecy. By the Voice from Heaven the believing are confirmed, and by the Word of Prophecy the unbeliever is convinced. S. Augustine, Serm. 43.

Besides, the Voice from heaven was a single Voice, heard by only a chosen few, who survived but for a short time; but the Word of Prophecy is the concurrent testimony of many inspired persons in several ages, and has been delivered to the Churches of God; and it receives fresh accomplishments, and gains additional force, in every successive generation; and it "endureth for ever" (1 Pet. i. 25); and is ever sounding in the ears of the world.

Further, the Transfiguration was indeed designed to be a type of Christ's future Coming in Glory; but the testimony of types, which are allusive and analogical, is not so clear as the explicit promise and descriptive language of the sure Word of Prophecy.

Moses and Elias, the Representatives of the Law and the Prophets, appeared to St. Peter and the two other Apostles on the holy mount. But St. Peter, in his speeches to the Jews, as recorded in the Acts of the Apostles, never refers to that personal appearance; but he always grounds his appeal on the writings of Moses and the Prophets. The Vision on the holy mount was a strong argument to himself; but the argument from the prophetic word, delivered "by holy men of God, borne along by the Holy Ghost," was  $\beta \in \beta$ alore  $\rho$ os, surer to his hearers.

We must come for our light to the word of prophecy; for even they, who had the supernatural light, "were fain to resolve all into this. Witness St. Peter; he, and they that were with him, saw Christ's glory, and heard the voice from heaven. What then? He had the evidence of both senses; and yet after both these, he says, 'we have the more sure word of prophecy' than both these—a word more sure and more clear than them both.'

Bp. Andrewes, i. p. 255: see also ibid. i. 19.

Here is a strong evidence of the genuineness of the present Epistle. A forger, personating St. Peter, would have magnified the importance of the supernatural visions vouchsafed specially to him whose character he assumed. He would have exalted those revelations above prophecy. But the Apostle, whose characteristic is humility, is not "elated by the greatness of his revelations;" but wisely and soberly commends the ordinary means of grace, which all Christians, of every age and country, possess in the sacred Scriptures, as of more cogency and value for their assurance and growth in grace, than any extraordinary visions which were vouchsafed personally to himself.

-  $\tilde{\phi}$  καλῶς ποιεῖτε] to which (word of prophecy) ye do well that ye take heed, as to a lamp shining in a dark place—αὐχμηρ $\tilde{\phi}$  τόπ $\phi$ , a dry, gloomy, squalid place (Wetstein, p. 702)—until the day shall have dawned, and the morning star shall have arisen in your hearts.

The Apostle compares Prophecy to a lamp which guides the footsteps of the wayfaring man in a gloomy, desolate place, where he is not likely to meet any one to direct him on his way; and serves as his guide in the night and the twilight, till the dawn appears, and he no longer needs the lamp: compare note above on the word φωστηρες, Phil. ii. 15. Prophecy is such a lamp; it has a preparatory and manuductory office, as John the Baptist, the precursor of the Light, had. He was a λύχνος φαίνων, a shining lamp; and the Jews did well to rejoice for a season in his light (see on John v. 35).

But Prophecy is not the Light. It was sent, as John the Baptist was, to bear witness to the Light (John i. 7, 8). And the Lamp of Prophecy is only for a season, till He, who is "the True Light," "the Light of the world" (John i. 4. 9; viii. 12; xii. Light," "the Light of the world" (John I. 4. 9; vin. 12; xi. 46), shall have risen in your hearts; as John was only for a season, till Christ, the Day-spring from on high, had arisen, and was fully revealed and manifested in His works. See above, on Matt. xi. 2—13, and Rev. xxii. 16, where Christ calls Himself the Morning Star; and He is called  $\delta \pi \rho \delta \epsilon \omega \sigma \phi \delta \rho o \nu \phi \omega \sigma \phi \delta \rho o b$  by Hippolyt., Refut. here, p. 337, from Ps. cx. 3; and so Theo-

These words, so interpreted, do not imply, that those persons to whom they were addressed had not received the light of Christ in their hearts; but they intimate, that all the prophecies concerning Christ had not as yet been fulfilled, and therefore the word of prophecy was still in some respects, especially in the predictions delivered by our Lord and His Apostles, in the New Testament, concerning His Second Coming and Future Glory, a lamp shining in a dark place

If even St. John the Baptist was only a Lamp compared with Christ, in His First Coming, how glorious was that Coming! And if all the word of Prophecy, spoken by all the holy men of old, is only a Lamp compared with Christ in His Second Coming, how glorious will that Coming be!

The Christian, therefore, does well to take heed to the word of Prophecy, even till the Great Day shall have dawned on the world, and the Morning Star shall have risen on the hearts of the faithful, to whom He who is "the Morning Star" has promised to "give the morning Star" (see on Rev. ii. 28). Then the Lamp of Prophecy will be eclipsed in the splendour of Christ's presence, as St. Paul has taught us (1 Cor. xiii. 8, 9. 12). It will be obscured by the surpassing Light of the Countenance of God shining on the pure in heart (Matt. v. 8). They will no more need the prophetic word, who are permitted to see the Incarnate Words in all His Glory. Compare S. Augustine, in Joann., Tract. 35, sect. 9, and Serm. 126.

The truth of Christ's δύναμις καl παρουσία, power and Second Coming, is even now realized by Faith in the hearts of the believers; but it will hereafter be seen with their eyes.

20.  $\tau \circ \tilde{\nu} = \tau \circ \tilde{\nu} = 1$  knowing this first of all, that no prophecy of Scripture becometh a matter of its own interpretation; for prophecy was not at any time brought (to the world) by the will of man—like the delusions of the false prophets who prophesied out of their own hearts (Jer. xxiii. 26)—but holy men of God spake, being borne along by the Holy Ghost, or as the reading of the verse stands in B, men spake from God (à $\pi \delta$ )  $\Theta \in \circ \hat{\nu}$ ), being borne along by the Holy Ghost.

Before ἄγιοι Elz. has of; but this is not in the most ancient MSS. The reading of ἀπὸ for ἄγιοι is received by Tisch. and

p. 25.

However excellent the uses of Prophecy are—as just declared—yet do not imagine that it can interpret itself. It does not become a thing of its own solution. It cannot interpret itself. Its Interpreter is Time; see below, the Introduction to the Book of Revelation.

The word totos is used seven times by St. Peter, and always in this sense, its own: see 1 Pet. iii. 1. 5. 2 Pet. ii. 16. 22; iii.

The word  $\epsilon \pi (\lambda \nu \sigma \iota s)$  is best explained by the use of the verb  $\epsilon \pi \iota \lambda \iota \omega$  (to interpret,  $\epsilon x p lain$ ) in the Gospel of St. Peter's disciple, St. Mark, iv. 36,  $\tau \sigma \hat{\imath}s$   $\mu \alpha \theta \eta \tau \alpha \hat{\imath}s$   $\alpha \dot{\nu} \tau \sigma \hat{\imath}$   $\epsilon \dot{\kappa} \dot{\kappa} \nu \epsilon \sigma \dot{\kappa} \dot{\kappa} \tau \sigma \dot{\kappa}$ . He was  $\epsilon x p laining$  all things to His disciples; cp. Gen. xli. 12, where Joseph is said  $\epsilon \pi \iota \lambda \dot{\nu} \epsilon \iota \nu$  (i. e. to interpret) to each man according to his dream. And this is the sense given to  $\epsilon \pi (\lambda \nu \sigma \iota s)$  in the Vulg, Syriac, Arabic, and Athiopic Versions. The passage of Genesis affords an excellent illustration of St. Peter's meaning. The dreams of the chief butler and baker, and of Pharaoh, were from God. So is Prophecy. They could tell their dreams. But Joseph expressly declares, on both occasions, that the interpretation appertains not to himself or to any man, but to God. Gen. xl. 8; xli. 15, 16: cp. Huther, p. 287.

The best comment on this passage is supplied by St. Peter himself, in his First Epistle, i. 10, where he represents the Prophets as making search concerning the salvation to be revealed, and as inquiring what the Spirit of Christ, which was in them.

The Prophets were inspired to prophesy, but were not enabled to interpret their own prophecies. See Dan. viii. 26, 27; xii. 8, and Theophylact here, and the excellent remarks of Bp. Sherlock, at the beginning of his Second Discourse on Prophecy, vol. iv. pp. 19—23; and so Knapp, De Wette, Schleusner, and others. Cp. note above on 1 Pet. i. 10, and Dr. W. Lee on Inspiration, Lecture v. pp. 206—213, and Hengstenberg, Christology, § 248; and the notes above on Hosea xi. 1.

This statement of St. Peter is an answer to the objections of those who, like the Jews, to whom he was writing, had possessed the Prophecies for many generations, and yet expected a Messiah very different from Him Who was foretold by the Prophets, and came and fulfilled the Prophecies.

It also contains a caution against several errors of the false Teachers against whom St. Peter is writing. The Simonians, Cerinthians, and other Heretics of the Apostolic age, alleged that Moses and the Prophets were not inspired by God, but by Angels, who made the world. See S. Hippolytus, Refut. hæres. p. 178, προφήταs ἀπὸ τῶν κοσμοποιῶν ἀγγέλων εἰρηκέναι τὰς προφητείαs: cp. p. 194. Some of these heretics even said that the Prophets were inspired by the Evil Spirit (see ibid., p. 245, and Tertullian, Præscr. Hær. c. 48. S. Epiphan. hæret. c. 21).

St. Peter is also warning his readers against another device

St. Peter is also warning his readers against another device of these false Teachers. They grounded their errors on arbitrary private interpretations of the word of prophecy; contravening the public testimony, and received doctrine, of the Universal Church of Christ; see S. Iren. i. 23, ed. Stieren, i. 20; i. 26, ed. Grabe, "prophetica curiosius exponere nituntur," and the assertion of Irenæus, "that the Gnostics study to pervert the Scriptures so as to suit their own fables" (i. 8. 1); cp. below, iii. 16.

The Gnostics grounded their impure doctrines upon several passages of the Old Testament, interpreted after their own polluted fancies, as may be seen in Epiphanius; and out of their mystical interpretation of it brought in many damnable heresies. Hence in this Epistle, which is wholly designed as an antidote against the Gnostics, the word γνωσιs is used in opposition to knowledge, to which they pretended: Dr. Hammond. on v. 5.

Anouvedge, to which they pretended; Dr. Hammond, on v. 5.

It is well observed by Neander (Church Hist., sect. iv.), speaking of some of the Gnostics, especially of the writer of the Pseudo-Clementines, that they indulged in violent and tortuous interpretations, with a view to favour their own opinions. And the writer of the Clementines, and advocate of Ebionite opinions, would not allow that in the case of the true prophet there was any state of estasy, in which the prophet is borne onward by the might of a higher Spirit, and aunounces greater things than he himself would understand. And as he could not apply his notion of Prophecy to the Prophets of the Old Testament, he looked on whatever could not be literally understood, as a mark of a spurious and delusive prophetic spirit.

St. Peter therefore contrasts the private spirit of the false interpreters with the operations of the Holy Spirit, by whom the Prophets spake. The Prophets did not speak their own words, but were illuminated by God. They had gracious intimations from God of the glorious Revelations of the Gospel, but did not understand, nor were they able to interpret, their own Prophecies; as is well said by Œcumenius here, ἤδεισαν τὸν καταπεμπόμενον αὐτοῖς προφητικὸν λόγον οὐ μέντοι καὶ τὴν ἐπίλυσιν αὐτοῦ ἐποιοῦντο. They inquired what the Spirit of Christ, which was in them, did signify. (1 Pet. i. 11.) They were like lamps shining in a dark place till the dawn of day.

Since, therefore, the Prophets themselves could not expound their own prophecies, which were not produced by their own will, but were dictated by the Holy Ghost, let no person pretend to explain them by his own private spirit. But for the right interpretation of the words of the Ancient Prophets, let us listen to the words of the Apostles, who received the promised gift of the Holy Spirit, who had spoken by the Prophets, and who explained by the Apostles the words which He Himself had uttered by the Prophets. Let St. Peter himself (e. g. in Acts ii. 16. 25. 34), and St. Paul, and St. Matthew, and the other Apostles and Evangelists, be our interpreters of Ancient Prophecy. Cp. Bp. Andrewes, iii. 133. 275, 276, and Wm. Lowth, Preface to Isaiah, p. 225, ed. 1842.

Prophecy did not come by the will of man, but was dictated by the Holy Spirit of God. The Prophets prophesied, but did not interpret their own prophecies. And no one can interpret prophecy without the aid of the Spirit Who wrote Prophecy. "No one knoweth the things of God, but the Spirit of God" (1 Cor. ii. 11). And the Spirit of God does not reveal Himself in men's private imaginations, setting themselves up in opposition to the Witness of God in the Mystical Body of Christ; but the Spirit of God spake by the Prophets and Apostles to the World; and He dwells in the public assemblies of the Faithful, and makes Himself seen and heard in the general consent and concurrent practice of the Church Universal, to which Christ has promised His abiding presence (Matt. xxviii. 20), and the perpetual indwelling and guidance of His Spirit (John xiv. 16. 26; xvi. 13).

Herein consists the probationary use of Prophecy; viz., to try the faith, and exercise the vigilance and patience, of believers, and to make unbelievers themselves to become vitnesses to the truth, and instruments in establishing it. If Prophecy had been iδίας ἐπιλύσεως, if its interpretation had been declared at the same time with its delivery, then none of those moral and probationary purposes would have been answered. The fulfilment of prophecy in a manner contrary to all previous expectation, proves the prophecy to be Divine: see below, Introduction to the Book of Revelation.

On the inspiration and office of the ancient Prophets, see Tertullian, Apol. 18, "viros justitià et innocentià dignos Deum nôsse et ostendere à primordio emisit Deus, Spiritu Divino inundatos."

άνθρώπου ἢνέχθη ποτὲ προφητεία, ἀλλὰ ὑπὸ Πνεύματος άγίου φερόμενοι ἐλάλησαν άγιοι Θεοῦ ἄνθρωποι.

This passage of St. Peter seems to be imitated by Theophilus, ad Autolyc. ii. 9, where he speaks of the writers of Scripture as πνευματοφόροι Πνεύματος άγίου, and iii. 12, τοὺς πάντας πνευματοφόρους ένὶ Πνεύματι Θεοῦ λελαληκέναι. ## PRELIMINARY NOTE TO THE SECOND CHAPTER.

In the following Chapter, the writer, enlightened by the Holy Ghost, has a view of the Heresies rising up in the Church, and eagerly propagated by men who denied the Lord that bought them with His own blood, shed for them on the Cross. In it he displays the immoral consequences of these Heresies, and the ignominy which they would bring on the Christian name. He speaks in short and abrupt sentences, as one who is hurried on with impassioned vehemence and strong emotions.

The fervid cloquence of the writer in this chapter is precisely what might have been anticipated from the character of St. Peter, full of ardent love to Christ, and of earnest zeal for His glory

It is, therefore, assuredly the part of a poor and purblind Criticism, to reject this Second Epistle, because it is not like in style to the First Epistle of St. Peter. When St. Peter wrote that Epistle, he was like a Shepherd feeding the flock of Christ's pasture; but now, in the Second Epistle, he is the same Shepherd, fighting against the wolves who were ready to tear the sheep. He is the same Shepherd in both Epistles; but the feelings by which he is animated are very different; and the language of his lips corresponds with the feelings of his heart. Cp. above, Introduction, pp. 71, 72.

As a preliminary, for the more profitable study of this Chapter, it is requisite to take a view of the principal Heresies which were springing up in the Apostolic age, and which developed themselves before the close of the first Century.

The Gnostic false Teachers of the Apostolic age, and those who arose immediately after it, whose appearance is predicted by St. Peter, denied the Lord that bought them with His blood, shed for them on Calvary, and grieved the Holy Spirit whom they had received in their baptism. St. Peter, the Apostle of the Circumcision, had a special commission to refute those heresies. For they were, for the most part, the up-growth of Judaism, not able to resist the evidence of Christianity, and desirous to accommodate it to its own prejudices. Their promoters were reluctant to receive the main doctrine of Christianity, that of the ever-blessed Trinity, as contravening the Jewish notions of the Divine Unity; and they were unwilling to accept the belief in a suffering and dying Messiah. Thus they were led to invent certain theories by way of compromise. All the heresies which are here referred to by St. Peter, will, when analyzed, be seen to be logical consequences of those Judaistic prejudices.

They may be ranged under the following heads:

The Simonians, or followers of Simon Magus, who may be regarded as the precursors of the Sabellians, taught that the Three Persons of the Trinity were only three revelations of the Same Divine Person; and they ventured to assert that Simon Magus himself was that person. Thus "they denied the Lord that bought them." See S. Irenæus, i. 20 (ed. Grabe); i. 23 (ed. Stieren). S. Hippolytus, Ref. hær. vi. p. 175.

The Docetæ of the Apostolic age, who seem to have sprung from the sect of Simon Magus, denied the reality of the human body of Jesus Christ, and asserted that He died only in appearance. Thus "they denied the Lord that bought them." Compare S. Iren. i. 20, Grabe, "passum in Judæå putatum, cum non esset passus." Cp. Clem. Alex. Strom. vii. p. 765, and Bp. Pearson, Vind. Ignat. ii. 11. Bp. Bull, Judic. Eccl. Cathol. cap. ii.: and Waterland on the Trinity, ch. vi. vol. v. p. 187. Tillemont, ii. p. 23.

The Nicolaitans, by their licentious practices, virtually denied the Incarnation of the Son of God; see further below on

Rev. ii. 6. 15.

The Ebionites of the Apostolic age, who may be called the predecessors of the Socinians, denied the Divinity of Jesus. They affirmed that he was the son of Joseph and Mary, and born in the ordinary manner of men, and was only a just and holy man. Thus they detracted from the value of the price paid by the Son of God on the Cross, and impugned the sufficiency of that sacrifice which was offered for the satisfaction of God's Justice, and for the ransom of Mankind from the bondage of Sin and Satan, and for the reconciliation of the World to God; and thus they undermined the doctrine of the Atonement, and denied the Lord that bought them. See S. Ireneus, i. 20, Grabe, where 'consimiliter' is to be read for 'non similiter,' from S. Hippolytus, vi. p. 257.

The Cerinthians of Asia, and many others of the Apostolic and sub-apostolic age, such as Carpocrates (S. Hippolyt. Phil. 255), who followed in their steps, separated Jesus from Christ. They asserted that Christ descended from the Father into the man Jesus, the son of Joseph and Mary, at His Baptism, in the form of a dove, and preached during His Ministry, and worked Miracles; but that at the end of His Ministry the Christ flew away from Jesus, and did not suffer death, but that only the man Jesus suffered on the cross. See S. Iren. i. 25, Grabe. S. Hippolyt. Refut. hær. vi. p. 256. S. Epiphan. hær. 28. Tillemont, ii. p. 26. Ittig, p. 53.

All the Gnostics, in fine, of whatever denomination they were, denied the Nativity, Passion, and Resurrection of Jesus Christ; though not all in the same way. Indeed, according to the excellent summary of their doctrines by S. Irenæus (iii. 11), not one of them received the truth, that the "Word was made flesh." Thus it may be truly said, that they "all denied the Lord that bought them." See S. Irenæus, cited in the Introduction to St. John's First Epistle, and Bede here, who says that "this Epistle was specially directed against the Simonians, Ebionites, and Nicolaitans;" and Bp. Bull, Defens. Fid. Nic. iii. 1, § 6; and cp. Dr. Waterland on the Trinity, ch. v. vol. v. pp. 107, 108, where he comments on this text of St. Peter, and shows that the Apostles and Apostolic men agree in censuring with the strongest language of reprobation those who taught heretical doctrines concerning the Divinity, Humanity, and Atonement of Christ. Their dogmas were condemned by the primitive Church as αίρέσεις ἀπωλείας, heresies of destruction.

Thus great good has been elicited by the wise Providence of God from the manifold variety of error by which these Gnostic Teachers sought to corrupt the truth in primitive times. By that merciful overruling Providence, and by the Voice of the Holy Spirit in Holy Scripture, and in the Church, condemning their dogmas, and proclaiming the Catholic Faith, these false Teachers themselves have been made subservient to the refutation of similar errors in later times, and to the maintenance of the Truth in Christ.

Therefore, we may thank God for His marvellous wisdom, power, and love, in rendering the pernicious devices of the Evil One ministerial to our everlasting salvation; and we may thence derive a comfortable assurance, that even in times of greatest distress and difficulty, when the storm raised by Satan rages most fiercely, and when the water-floods of Heresy seem ready to overwhelm the Church, the rock on which she is built will stand secure, and the violence of the tempest will prove the strength of her foundation, and "the rivers of the flood thereof will make glad the City of God."

1. ἐγένοντο δὲ ψευδοπροφηται ] But there arose false prophets also (as well as true) in the people, or ancient Church of God in Israel. On this meaning of λαόs, see Rom. xv. 10; Mede's Works, Disc. xliii. p. 238, on this text.

Do not, therefore, be surprised that there should arise false teachers among you also, even such as will bring in aipeoeis ἀπωλείαs, heresies of destruction, by the side (παρά) of the true evangelical Doctrine received from us. On this use of παρὰ, see St. Paul's words, Gal. i. 8, "If any one, or even an Angel from heaven, preaches any thing  $\pi a \rho \lambda$ , beside, what we preached to you, and ye received from us, let him be accursed."

The word παρ-εισάγειν implies here something of sidelong and surreptitious insinuation of what is false, as in St. Paul's phrase, speaking of false brethren privily brought in, Gal. ii. 4, τοὺς παρ-εισάκτους ψευδαδελφούς; and cp. Jude 4, speaking of false teachers who παρ-εισέδυσαν, crept in secretly by the side.

Παρ-εισάξουσιν, they will bring in. Observe the future Here is a prophecy of what was still to come. Contrast this with St. Jude's word παρ-εισέδυσαν in the past tense, they crept in. What St. Peter describes as future, St. Jude declares as present. Here is an evidence that St. Jude wrote after St. Peter. Cp. iii. 2. Jude 17, and Introduction to St. Jude's Epistle.

The words ἔσονται—ἀπωλείαs are quoted by S. Hippolytus, de Cons. Sæculi, c. 10, p. 98, ed. Lagarde; and Firmilian, Bishop of Cappadocia, early in the third century, refers to this passage as written by St. Peter, Ep. Cyprian. 75, "Petrum et Paulum beatos Apostolos qui in Epistolis suis harelicos execrati sunt, et ut eos evitemus monuerunt." This is an important testimony—from the country to which the Epistle purports to be addressed (cp. 1 Pet. i. 1 with 2 Pet. iii. 1)-to the genuineness of this Epistle.

- αίρέσεις] heresies-doctrines adopted by an act of the private choice (alpeaus), in opposition to the Will and Word of God, and at variance with the public teaching of the Church. The word alpeais is often used in the New Testament to signify a sect (from sequor), see Acts v. 17; xv. 5; xxiv. 5; but it is a word of more general import, as the etymology shows, and its sense in any passage must be determined by the context. Here the Apostle is doubtless condemning separation from the Church, but the false doctrines of the Separatists is what he has principally in view; and therefore aipéaeis may be here properly rendered heresies.

Indeed, the one involves the other. For, as S. Jerome says (ad Titum, c. iii.), "though there is this difference between schism and heresy, that schism is a separation from the Church, and heresy is perverse doctrine, yet every Schism devises some Heresy, in order that it may appear to have a reason for separation from Heresy is so called from the Greek word signifying choice; and therefore St. Paul says that a heretic is self-condemned (Titus iii. 10), because by the very act of choosing he condemns himself. For "we Christians have no licence to bring in any thing new, or to choose for ourselves. The Apostles of the Lord are our Guides, who did not choose any doctrines, and bring them in of their own choice, but received their teaching from Christ, and faithfully delivered it to the World. And therefore, if even an Angel from heaven were now to preach to us any thing else, he would be called anathema by us." Tertullian (Præscr. hær. c. 6).

Thus this mention of Heresy follows naturally from that of iδία ἐπίλυσιs, or private interpretation. Indeed, Heresy, or the exercise of arbitrary, private, choice in matters of doctrine, always endeavours to strengthen itself by private interpretation of Holy

The Heresies which were propagated by false teachers, denying the Lord that bought them, i. e. denying the doctrine of Christ's true Divinity and Humanity, and of the Atonement made by Christ on the cross (see the preliminary note to this chapter), are called by St. Peter "heresies of destruction," because they are opposed to the Way of Salvation; and because they as certainly lead to the destruction of the souls of men, as the true Faith leads to their salvation. Therefore, he adds, that they who bring in these heresies of destruction, by the side of the true Faith, do in fact bring upon themselves swift destruction. Here again St. Peter's language coincides with St. Paul's, who says, "that the end of those who are enemies of the Cross of Christ is destruction." (Phil. iii. 19.)

Let these warnings of the two Apostles be earnestly commended to the consideration of Socinians, and others, who deny the Godhead of Christ, and reject the doctrine of the Atonement; and to the attention of those who favour such opinions, or treat them as matters of indifference.

The false Teachers to whom St. Paul here refers, are Simon Magus and his disciples, and Cerinthus and Elion, and the Nicolaitans; see Ecumen. and Theophylact here, and the preliminary note.

On the use of the genitive in alogoris amakelas, see above on

και τον άγοράσαντα αὐτοὺς δεσπότην άρνούμενοι denying even the Lord, or Master, Who bought them with His own blood, shed as the price of their redemption from captivity, for the purchase of them to Himself; and of a glorious inheritance for them. See on 1 Cor. vi. 20; vii. 23. Gal. iii. 13; iv. 5.

Compare the parallel place in St. Jude's Epistle, where he speaks of these false teachers as denying the only Master (δεσπότην) and Lord Jesus Christ, where the word Θεὸν (God) after δεσπότην, in the edition of Elz. and in the English Version, is not found in the best MSS. (see note there), and it seems that there the Apostle St. Jude calls Christ the only Master (δεσπό- $\tau \eta \nu$ ), and thus leads us to the interpretation of this place of St. Peter could hardly have written these words, "denying the Lord that bought them," without some reflection on his own conduct in the High Priest's courtyard at Jerusalem, when, notwithstanding his Lord's warning, he denied Him thrice. (Matt. xxvi. 70. 72.) But he had not then seen the bloodshedding on the cross, nor received the gracious outpouring of the Holy Ghost.

— ἐπάγοντες ἐαυτοῖs] bringing upon themselves. Observe the paronomasia here. They will bring in stealthily heresies of destruction, and thus they will bring swift destruction upon themselves.

2. ἀσελγείαις] lasciviousness. See Rom. xiii. 13. 2 Cor. xii. 21. Gal. v. 19. Eph. iv. 19. 1 Pet. iv. 3. It is connected by St. Peter with the lust of the flesh in v. 18; cp. Jude 4. Cp. Wetstein, i. p. 588; the word ἀσέλγεια is interpreted in the old Glossaries by "impudicitia, lascivia."

Elz. has ἀπωλείαις here; but ἀσελγείαις is the reading of A, B, C, K, L, and is received by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Alf., and is important to be observed, as marking the connexion of heretical doctrine with licentious and unclean living. Those heresiarchs who "denied the Lord that bought them, also taught men to sit loose from all decent rule and order, and under pretence of liberty, to run riot in luxury and dissolute behaviour: they were heretics in morality as well as in faith, and of the worst kind." Dr. Waterland, v. p. 108.

The denial of the Incarnation of the Son of God, and of His Passion and Resurrection, took away the strongest motives to holiness; and the presumptuous claims which the Gnostic Teachers made to supernatural powers and supereminent spiritual knowledge, led to the encouragement of all carnal indulgences. Thus, for example, Simon Magus, from "whom the knowledge, falsely so called  $(\psi \epsilon \nu \delta \omega \nu \nu \mu \sigma s)$ , received its beginnings" (says  $Iren \omega u s$ ), asserted that "they who believed in Him were free to live as they pleased, and that men would be saved by His grace and not according to their works; and that nothing is good by nature, but only by institution. And therefore his votaries live in lasciviousness," adds Irenæus, i. 20, Grabe 1. Cp. Euseb. ii. S. Augustine, de hær. c. 1.

In like manner, the Nicolaitans of the first century denied the need of martyrdom, and allowed the indulgence of fleshly lusts. See Ecumen. and Hammond here, and Dr. Whitby, and below on Rev. ii. 6. 14.

The Gnostic Teachers boldly asserted, that as gold is not injured by mud, so, whatever they themselves do, they are not soiled, although they wallow in the mire of lust, and filth of uncleanness; and therefore they practise with recklessness such things as those of which the Apostle says "that they who do them shall not enter the kingdom of God," and they venture to accuse us who abstain from these things, as mere dotards who know nothing. S. Irenæus (i. 6. 2).
Some of the Gnostics affirmed that they themselves were perfect; and that no one-not even a Paul or a Peter-could soar

Indeed, the enormities committed by them, while pretending to superior spiritual knowledge of things, are too monstrous to be recorded; they may be seen in the histories of their doctrines and practices, particularly in the works of S. Irenæus, S. Hippolytus, S. Epiphanius, and Philastrius, and the collections made from them by Tillemont, ii. 19-28. Ittig, de hæresiarch. 21-95, cd. Lips. 1690, and Neander's Church Hist. sect. iv., and Dr. Burton's Hist. of the Heresies of the Apostolic Age, 1829.

The historic records of those moral enormities, foreseen and denounced in Holy Scripture, serve the important purpose of showing, that the teaching of Heresy leads to libertinism in practice; and that the purity of society, and the happiness of household life cannot be maintained, without vigilant caution and courageous zeal against the inroads of heretical error, and that we cannot reasonably hope for the preservation of those blessings without diligent examination of sound doctrine, and unremitting earnestness in defending it.

"Denying the Lord that bought them." This text also is of great use in confuting the exclusive notions of partial Redemption, broached by Calvinists and others of later days. Peter asserts that Christ died for all; that He shed His blood for the salvation of all; that He bought even those who deny Him, and reject the doctrine of the Atonement made by Him on the Cross, and thereby are the cause of their own destruction. St. Peter's doctrine coincides here also with that of St. Paul, who affirms that the brother may be destroyed for whom Christ died. See on Rom. xiv. 15. Besides, St. Peter here expressly declares that the destruction is brought on these false Teachers by themselves; and is not designed by God.

Thus this text declares in the strongest terms the doctrine of Universal Redemption.

God, being desirous of all men's salvation (1 Tim. ii. 4), hath in token thereof, for their sakes whom He loved, bestowed His beloved Son. The self-same affection was in Christ Himself, to whom the wicked at the day of their last doom will never dare to allege, for their own excuse, that He which offered Himself, as a sacrifice to redeem some, did exclude the rest, and so made the way of their salvation impossible. He paid a ransom for the whole world; on Him the iniquities of all were laid; and, as St. Peter plainly witnesseth, He bought them who deny Him, and who perish because they deny Him (2 Pet. ii. 1). As in very truth, whether we respect the power and sufficiency of the price given, or the spreading of that infection, for remedy whereof the same was necessary, or the largeness of His desire which gave it; we have no reason but to acknowledge with joy and comfort that He tasted death for all men, as the Apostle to the Hebrews noteth (Heb. ii. 9). Hooker, E. P., book v. Appendix, p. 726. See also notes above on 1 Cor. viii. 11. Rom. viii. 30; xiv. 15. Heb. ii. 9.

- δι' οὖs—βλασφημηθήσεται] through whom the way of truth will be evil spoken of. Cp. Rom. ii. 24, το όνομα τοῦ Θεοῦ δι' ύμας βλασφημείται.

The Nicolaitans and Gnostics generally are described by Ecumenius as most "unholy in their doctrines, and most licentious in their lives." Clemens Alexandrinus states as a reason for his own writing, that false teachers, professing the name of Christians, and yet living shameless lives, have brought infamy (βλασφημίαν) upon the Christian name, even among the Gentiles, and that it was necessary to disabuse their minds of this illusion, and to yindicate the Gospel of Christ. See Clem. Strom. iii. init.

Doubtless, the Gentile calumnies against the Christians, to which Tertullian and the other ancient Apologists refer, and which were used to instigate persecutions against the Church (Tertull. Apol. c. 7), were caused by the dissolute practices of the Gnostics.

3. ἐν πλεονεξία] in covetousness with feigned speeches, speciously fashioned in fair forms, so as to allure and deceive (see Wetst.), they will make merchandise of you.

Covetousness is represented as a characteristic of the false teachers of the Apostolic age; and therefore in this, as well as in other respects, they are compared to the prophet Balaam, who "loved the wages of unrighteousness" (v. 15), and fell through covelousness. They taught things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake (Tit. i. 11), supposing that godliness is a lucrative traffic (πορισμόν, 1 Tim. vi. 5); and with this view they Vol. II.—Part IV.

adulterated the word of God, as κάπηλοι adulterate their wares, in order to allure and deceive. See note on 2 Cor. ii. 17. They were therefore called χριστέμποροι: see Dr. Bentley on that text, and Pseud.-Ignat. ad Trall. 7, where is a graphic picture of these Gnostic teachers,—εἰσί τινες οὐ Χριστιανοὶ, ἀλλὰ Χριστε έμποροι, καπηλεύοντες τὸν λόγον τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, λέγουσι Χριστὸν, Ἰνα Χριστὸν ἀθετήσωσιν, καὶ οὐ νόμον συστήσωσιν, ἀλλ' Ἰνα ἀνομίαν καταγγείλωσιν: for (he adds) "they sever Christ from the Father, and they calumniate the law of Christ and His birth from the Virgin, and are ashamed of His cross, and deny His Passion, and do not believe His Resurrection. And some of them (i. e. the Ebionites) assert that Christ is a mere man (ψιλον ἄνθρωπον), and some of them say (e.g. the Simonians). that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are the same thing, and that the Creation was not made by God through Christ, but by some other strange power."

The covetousness of the Gnostic Teachers was exemplified by the offer made by the Father of Gnosticism, Simon Magus, to St. Peter himself, at Samaria, as recorded in the Acts of the Apostles (Acts viii. 18). He supposed St. Peter to be like himself, and offered him money for the power of giving the Holy Ghost; because he worked his own magical juggleries, and taught his own ilicentious and self-glorifying doctrines for money. St. Peter in his indignant reply to that offer, uses the same word as here, τὸ ἀργύριον σου σύν σοι είη είς ἀπώλειαν (Acts viii. 20).

The Valentinians also of the Sub-Apostolic age, would only interest their practicing to impart their mysteries to those who paid large sums of money for them (S. Iren. i. 20), and the Gnostic teachers are called χρηματολαίλαπες by Pseud.-Ignat. ad Magnes. § 9.

- ή ἀπώλεια αὐτῶν οὐ νυστάζει] their destruction slumbereth not: properly, does not nod the head, as if it were dozing, like a weary Judge, νυστάζων δικαστής, Plato, de repub. iii. 405. Cp. Matt. xxv. 5, where this word describes the Virgins in the parable, and Wetstein, i. p. 508, and here, p. 703. Here is a poetic personification of Divine Retribution. Compare the words of Elijah, contrasting the slumber of Baal with the Eternal watchfulness of Him "who neither slumbereth nor sleepeth." (I Kings xviii.

4. εl γάρ] For if God spared not Angels who sinned, but ταρταρώσαs, committed them to chains of darkness, in which they are kept for judgment. Compare Jude 6. He (God) hath kept Angels, who kept not their own first Estate, but left their own habitation, for the judgment of the great Day, in everlasting chains under darkness. Cp. Wisd. xvii. 18. A, B, C have  $\sigma_{\epsilon i \rho o l}$ , caves, here, or dens. See Passow; and this reading is received by Lach., Alf.; but not by Tischendorf, and it does not appear to be authorized by any of the Cursive MSS. or Versions. A has ζόφοις here.

The words σειραίς ζόφου ταρταρώσας παρέδωκεν declare that the chains of darkness are the Tartarus of which the Apostle

Besides τηρουμένους, being kept, is the reading of B, C*, G, K, and of the majority of Cursive MSS., and A and some Versions have κολαζομένους τηρεῖν, and some Versions express a future, κολασθησομένους. The reading of Elz. τετηρημένους, having been kept, rests on very little authority.

The word ταρταρώσαs, found here and only here, does not necessarily signify casting them down to Tartarus, which would be καταταρταρώσας; but (like φλογώσας, τεφρώσας, κεραυνώσας, and other similar words) it signifies their element of punishment; and this statement, so understood, is quite consistent with the revelations of Scripture concerning the present liberty of evil Spirits, who carry a hell, a Tartarus, about with them. Cp. A Lapide here, p. 284, and Estius, p. 1170, and Bengel, who says, "possunt in terrd versari mancipia tartari." (Luke viii. 31. Eph. ii. 2. Rev. ix. 11; xii. 9.) The word τάρταρος is used by the LXX, in Job (xl. 15), in the sense of a deep thicket, as it seems; and τάρταρος and ταρταροῦχος are used by S. Hippolytus in his newly discovered treatise (pp. 338, 339), and he seems to make a distinction between Tartarus and the lake of fire; for he describes Tartarus as a dark place, Ταρτάρου ὅμμα ἀφώτιστον ύπὸ Λόγου φωνης μη καταλαμφθέν, and then proceeds to speak of the lake of fire, where ταρταρούχοι άγγελοι are used as instruments of punishment.

Origen (in Rom. lib. 3), referring to Jude 6, says, " æternis vinculis in tartaro (al. in tartarum) constrictos renovavit."

This passage, and the parallel in St. Jude 6, are two important Texts on the present condition and future destiny of Evil

Angels; and consequently, of those persons who yield to their solicitations (see Matt. xxv. 41).

These two texts declare-

(1) That some Angels sinned; and, as a penalty for their sin, were cast out of their original habitation; and,

(2) That they have been committed in custody to chains of darkness; and that they are now being kept in them, and they there endure some punishment.

(3) That they there remain even to the end of the World,

(3) That they there for the Judgment of the end of the World, and are reserved there for the Judgment of the Great Day.

This appears also from the language of the Devils themselves to Christ, "Art thou come to torment us before the season (καιροῦ) of Judgment?" See Matt. viii. 29, and note; and on

It is also evident from our Lord's words, describing the transactions of the Great Day. He there pre-announces that He will then say to them on the left hand, "Depart from Me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, that hath been prepared for the Devil and his angels." They are therefore not yet cast into it.

It is also further apparent from the Apocalypse, revealing the credition of the Apocalypse, revealing the casting of the Devil into the Lake of Fire, as an event which has not taken place, but is yet future. Rev. xx. 10.

(4) Comparing also these texts with other portions of Holy Scripture (1 Pet. v. 8), where the Devil is compared to a roaring Lion walking about, seeking whom he may devour; and (Rev. xx. 7) where Satan is described as loosed; and with the clear assertions of the Apostolic writings, describing his present liberty, energy, and influence, and designating him as "the Prince of the power of the air" (ἀέρος not αἰθέρος, Eph. ii. 2), and as "the god of this world" (2 Cor. iv. 4), we must conclude, that the chains of darkness, of which the Apostles St. Peter and St. Jude speak, and to which Satan and his associates are now confined, and in which they will be kept even till the day of Judgment, are of such power as to restrain them from ever recovering their place in the regions of light; but not such as to prevent them from exercising great power over those persons in this lower world, who allow themselves "to be taken captive by them at their will." See above, note on Eph. ii. 2, and below on Rev. xx. 1-8.

The Book of Enoch, in like manner, describes the Evil Angels as chained under the earth, till the Day of Judgment, when they will be cast into the Lake of Fire. See there, cap. v. 16; x. 6. 15; xiv. 4; xxi. 6; xxii. 4. Huther, p. 205. Cp. also the Catena here, p. 91, where we read, that "at the end of the world, Christ will condemn to severer punishment those evil Angels whom He has already shut up (in the abyss), and this He will do by casting them into everlasting fire." And Bede says here, "The Apostate Angels are yet to be condemned to the penalties of the Final Judgment; for although they have already received the nether regions of the murky air, as a prison-house, which, when compared to the bright glories of heaven, where they once dwelt, may be called an Inferno, yet there is a deeper gulf below, which still awaits them.

Accordingly, S. Jerome (in Eph. vi.) delivers it as the opinion of all the Doctors of the Church, that "the Devils have now their abode in the space between heaven and earth." And S. Augustine (De Civ. Dei, viii. 22) says, "that the Devils dwell in this nether air, and being cast down from heaven for their sin, they are here pre-condemned as in a prison, suitable to their sin." asserted as an article of the Catholic Faith, by S. Irenæus (i. 2), that "Jesus Christ will come again hereafter, to raise all bodies and to judge all men, and to cast the rebel Angels into everlasting fre." S. Justin Martyr, Origen, in Num. cap. 22, S. Irenæus (v. 26), and Eusebius (iv. 17), were of opinion "that the Devils never openly blasphemed God before the publication of the Gospel, because they did not know till then what their future punishment would be;" which opinion, whether true or no, shows that those ancient writers did not imagine that the Devil had as yet been cast into hell. See the discourse of Joseph Mede, Works, p. 24, Disc. v.

5-7.] S. Clement, Bishop of Rome, seems to have had this passage of St. Peter before him when he wrote his Epistle, capp. 7. 9. 11, pp. 34. 47 note, ed. Jacobson, p. 58, ed. Dressel.

5. υγδοον Νωε] eighth Noah. Observe the order of the words: ογδοον, eighth, is emphatic. It not only calls attention to the oyooo, eighth, is emphatic. It not only cans attention to the fact, that he was saved with seven others (on which use of the ordinal see Winer, § 37, p. 223), but it places him as it were at the highest point of the climax; and in this respect this expression may be compared with St. Jude's saying, "Enoch, the seventh from Adam," v. 14.

Seven is the number of completion and rest, the Sabbatical number; and in Enoch-the seventh from Adam-who walked with God, and did not die, but was translated from the turmoils of this world to a heavenly rest, and taken up to God, there appears to be a figurative adumbration of the Sabbath of heavenly rest, "which remainesh to the people of God." Heb. iv. 9.

The ancient Fathers also observe, that a figure of the Glory of the Resurrection, assured to those who rise to the new life in Christ, may be seen in Noah (whose name is Comfort), the Preacher of righteousness, the eighth; under whom the seven are gathered as under their head, in the Ark, the figure of the Church, rising above the old World buried in the Flood,-which, as St. Peter teaches, is the type of Baptism, the Sacrament of Spiritual Resurrection, and makes us partakers in the benefits of the Burial and Resurrection of Christ (1 Pet. iii. 21), and derives its hopes therefrom. We are born again to a lively hope of a Resurrection to glory in Christ, whose name, Jesus or Saviour, is equivalent to the number 888, and who rose on the eighth day from the Grave. See above on Luke xxiv. 1. They who abide in the Ark of the Church built by Him Who is the true Comfort, the true Preacher of righteousness, and who brought in everlasting righteousness (Dan. ix. 24), will be borne therein by the Spirit over the waters of this troublesome world, till it is safely moored on the Ararat of Heaven. It is observable, that the Mountain on which the Ark is said to have rested, is called by the Arabs "the Mountain of the Eight." See Hammond here; or, as others affirm, a village near it is called the "town of the Eight." Cp. Winer, R. W. B. p. 82.

7. αθέσμων] of the lawless. Cp. iii. 17. Especially violators of divine laws, θεσμοί.

Observe, therefore, that, before the Decalogue was given, there was a Moral Law of God in the World. Cp. Rom. ii. 14. And this was broken by the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah; and for their violations of that Law, especially as to unlawful Marriages, the Canaanites were extirpated. Lev. xviii. 3—28.

9. ἀδίκους—τηρεῖν] to keep wicked men under punishment unto the day of Judgment: as the rich man in the Parable is kept in Hades, during the interval between Death and Judgment. See Luke xvi. 23.

10. τους δπίσω σαρκός, κ.τ.λ.] those who are walking ofter the flesh—that is, who are not led by the Spirit, but by the flesh, and fulfil the lusts thereof (Gal. v. 17, 18. Rom. viii. 12-14. Jude 8), as the Gnostic Teachers and their votaries did, see v. 2.

- και κυριότητος καταφρονοῦντας] and despising lordship: as St. Jude expresses it, κυριότητα ἀθετοῦσι, they cancel, or annul lordship: i. e. render it of none effect; remove it from its place, dethrone it. See the use of ἀθετεῖν Mark vii. 9. Luke vii. 30. John xii. 48. Gal. ii. 21; iii. 15. Heb. x. 28.

The Gnostic Teachers despised and annulled κυριότητα, or Lord of Lords.

Hence the Æthiopic Version explains the word lordship here by the Creator. They derogated from His κυριότης, or Lordship, by their system of dualism, in which they set up a rival evil deily in opposition to the One True God; and by separating the supreme God from the Demiurge or Creator of the material World; the origin of which was ascribed by many of them to Angels or to Æons. See above on Col. ii. 8, and 1 Pet. i. 23. S. Iren. i. 28. S. August. hær. 6. Epiphan. hær. 26. Ittig, p. 34. Tillemont, ii. pp. 17. 23, where he rightly says, "All who took the name of Gnostics distinguished the Creator of the World from the God Who revealed Himself by His Son; thus they made two gods." Cp. Gieseler, Ch. Hist. § 44.

They despised and annulled lordship—

(2) With regard to the Lord Jesus Christ. Some of them

(e. g. the Ebionites) regarded Jesus as a mere man; others (the Cerinthians) separated Jesus from Christ (see above on v. 1), and they denied the Passion and Resurrection of JESUS CHRIST, by which he has acquired universal lordship over the Church and over the World. See Matt. xxviii. 18. 1 Cor. xv. 25. Phil. ii. 6-9.

They also invoked other mediators in place of Christ (see on Col. ii. 8. 1 Tim. ii. 5), and denied the Lord that bought them (v. 1; cp. Jude 4); and would not call Him Lord (S. Iren. i. 1), although, as St. John says in the Apocalypse, He has His name written on His vesture and on His thigh, "King of kings and Lord of lords." (Rev. xix. 16.)

They despised and annulled lordship-(3) With regard to earthly rulers, who are Vicegerents and Deputies of God (Rom. xiii. 1—3), and are entitled to subjection for the Lord's sake (1 Pet. ii. 13). They took away the foundation of the authority of Civil Governments, by denying the Lordship of God and of Christ; and by affirming themselves and their votaries (who held the speculative gnosis which they delivered) to be free to do all things, and to be exempt from all civil restraints. See above on v. 2, and 1 Pet. ii. 16.

St. Peter wisely uses here a comprehensive word, κυριότητος, lordship, in order to remind all, that they, who despise the lordship of the Lord God, and of the Lord Jesus Christ, will pay no regard to the lordship of earthly lords and governors; and that men must first "fear God," before they can "honour the king."

δόξας οὐ τρέμουσι βλασφημοῦντες] they (these false teachers) tremble not while railing at, or speaking evil of, glories, δόξας. Cp. Jude 8.

What are δόξαι, or glories, here?

Doubtless the word δόξα is chosen, as the word κυριότης before (see last note), for its large and general import.

It signifies,-

The μεγαλοπρεπης δόξα, the excellent glory, the Divine Shechinah of the Godhead itself, i. 17.

(2) The glory of the Incarnate Word. John i. 14. James ii. 1.
(3) The glory of the Holy Ghost. Cp. Isa. vi. 3. 9, 10.

John xii. 41. Acts xxviii. 25.

The false Teachers blasphemed the glories of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, by disparaging the Creator and Redeemer, and by ascribing the work of the Divine Sanctifier to their own magical arts, and by calumniating the prophecies of Holy Scripture, given by His Inspiration. See on i. 21.

(4) They denied the Resurrection of the Flesh; and thus they derogated from the future glories of Christ, when He "will come in His glory (Matt. xxv. 31) and in the glory of His Father" (Matt. xvi. 27), and when "He will be glorified in His Saints" (2 Thess. i. 10); and in "their glorious bodies, fashioned to be like unto His glorious body," Phil. iii 21. See 1 Pet. i. 11, the only other passage in N. T. beside Jude 8, where  $\delta \delta \xi \alpha$  is found in the plural as here.

(5) They spake evil of the glory of the Holy Angels. The Simonians represented them as the offspring of Simon Magus, who "was glorified by many as God." See Catena here, p. 93, where it is truly said, "Peter here refers to the Simonians, who blended licentiousness with ungodliness." And they traduced the the successor of Simon Magus, Menander, called himself the Saviour, and affirmed that he could impart knowledge greater than that of the Angels. S. Irenaus, i. 23.5.

(6) They spake evil of earthly dignities, which are images and glories of God's majesty (Rom. xiii. 1—3), and are even called gods (Ps. Ixxxii. 6), as man himself is, in his headship over woman. 1 Cor. xi. 7.

(7) They spake evil of the glories of the natural world (1 Cor. xv. 40), ascribing their creation to the operation of the Demiurge, hostile to the supreme God. See the preceding note.

11. ὅπου ἄγγελοι] whereas Angels, although greater in strength and their acquiret them, before the Lord and interest.

and might, do not bring against them, before the Lord, a railing judgment. On this use of ὅπου see Thucyd. viii. 96, ὅπου τοσαύτη ή ξυμφορὰ ἐπεγεγένητο, πῶς οὐκ εἰκότως ἡθύμουν; Huther, and cp. 1 Cor. iii. 3.

There are two probable interpretations of this passage-

(1) Although they (i. e. these false teachers) are so insolent, contumacious, and impious in speaking evil of the glories of God, and of His Angels, and Saints, and His earthly representatives (see preceding note), and although the Angels of God are far superior to them (i. e. to these deceivers) in strength and might, however these false teachers may boast of their own mighty power,—as Simon Magus, who called himself "sublimissima virtus," and others did,-yet the Angels of God do not retaliate, and bring against them (i. e. against these false teachers) a railing verdict (κρίσιν); but reserve all things for the future sentence of God the only Judge.

The good Angels of whom St. Peter speaks, earnestly desire the repentance of the wicked (see Luke xv. 7-10); but Satan is the accuser, even of the good, before God. Rev. xii. 10.

The same thought occurs in St. Jude's Epistle, in a somewhat different form, in reference to the Evil Spirit himself, by whom these false teachers were employed as emissaries. Although Michael is an Archangel, St. Jude argues, and superior in might to Satan; and although Satan dared to contend with him for the body of Moses, which had been buried by God, yet Michael did not bring against Satan a railing judgment, but referred all to the tribunal of God,—"The Lord rebuke thee!"

Therefore, great is the insolence of these heretics in speaking evil of God Himself, of His Lordship and Glory; and of that of His Blessed Son and the Holy Spirit; and of heavenly and earthly Powers.

(2) The second interpretation is as follows: - Theophylact, in ancient times, and Bengel and others, in later, suppose that αὐτῶν, them, refers to δόξας, glories; and that the sense is, as athered from the parallel passage in St. Jude, that the good Angels do not bring a railing accusation against glories, i. c. Angelic powers, however defaced they may be; as they are in the case of Evil Angels.

This sense has something to recommend it. Satan, though fallen, is still an Angel, he is "the strong man" (Matt. xii. 29); he is a Prince (Eph. ii. 2), and he was created by God; he is immortal, and immortality is from God. Therefore he is still a δόξα, though sullied and marred; and to condemn him is not for us, but for God.

But, on the whole, the first interpretation seems preferable. St. Peter, in this Epistle, frequently uses the pronoun αὐτῶν and αύτων in referring to the false teachers. See this chapter, ev. 2, 3. 12, 13; and αὐτοῖs, v. 20-22. And this interpretation is sanctioned by Didymus.

There is also something constrained in the interpretation which rightly supposes δόξας to mean glories—even the glory of God, and Christ, and good Angels—and then explains αὐτῶν, referred to δόξαs, as applicable only to Evil Angels.

Besides, δόξαι is never used in a personal sense in the New Testament. Δόξα does not ever signify an Angel: but it signifies an attribute of Angels: and therefore αὐτῶν, which is personal here, can hardly refer to δόξας.

Lastly, though there is much similarity between St. Jude's Epistle and this Second Epistle of St. Peter, yet, as might be expected, the one very often adds new matter to the other. here, in the next verse, we have ἀπάται, where St. Jude has ἀγάπαι, and σπίλοι, where he has σπιλάδες.

The words παρὰ Κυρίφ are not in A and some Versions, but are in B, C, G, K.

12. οδτοι δέ] but these men, like irrational animals, which have been born naturally for capture and for destruction. It is well observed by Bede here, that there is a resemblance between these teachers and brute beasts in this respect, that both are led by their fleshly appetites to fall into snares and destruction. profess to exercise their reason with superior acuteness and to be able to save others, but they reduce themselves, by their doctrines and practices, to the level of irrational animals, which are made to be taken and sacrificed as victims. gnosis, or knowledge, but yet they are guilty of speaking blasphemy of things which they know not. On the construction, equivalent to οτ things which they who how. On the construction, equivalent to  $\dot{\epsilon}_{\nu}$  τούτοις &  $\dot{\alpha}_{\gamma}$ νοοῦσι, see Winer, § 66, p. 553. Cp. Jude, v. 10. —  $\dot{\epsilon}_{\nu}$  τῆ φθορᾶ αὐτῶν καὶ φθαρήσονται] The double meaning of φθείρω, to corrupt and destroy, can hardly be rendered in English. Cp. 1 Cor. iii. 17, the best comment on this text. Elz. has καταφθαρήσονται; but A, B, C\* have καὶ φθαρήσονται.

13. ήδονην ήγουμενοι την εν ήμερα τρυφήν] deeming their revelry, which is in the day-time, to be delight. Thus the Syriac Version renders this passage, and so the English Version, and Ecumenius; and Passow renders the words ἐν ἡμέρᾳ, ' by day,' and refers to passages in Pindar, Herodotus, Æschylus, and Thucydides, in support of this rendering.

This translation seems to be correct, as marking the voluptuous recklessness of these deceivers, not delaying their enjoyments till night-time; μεθημεριναί τρυφαί were a sign of great voluptu-

This is noted as a characteristic of the Gnostics. Even heathens were, for the most part, content with revelry in the night-time; for they that are drunken are drunken in the night (I Thess. v. 7); and it was the rule of Christians to walk honestly as in the day (Rom. xiii. 13), but these heretical libertines revelled in the day itself, and deemed that revelry to be delight. See S. Jerome (adv. Lucif. p. 53), "tune Nicolaus diu noctuque nuptias faciens obscenas," &c.; and Epiphan. hær. 25, asserting as one of their maxims "that a man had no hope of everlasting life," ἐὰν μὴ καθ' ἐκάστην ἡμέραν λαγνεύη. Another interpretation, which deserves to be noticed, is this, while they boast themselves wise, they are like idiots and madmen in preferring the voluptuousness of a day, "unius dieculæ with these Gnostic Teachers. They disauded Christians from suffering martyrdom for Christ (Philast. c. 36). See on Rev. ii. 14. 20. "Semper pseudo prophetæ dulcia pollicentur, et ad modicum placent." S. Jerome, c. Jovin. lib. 11, ad fin.

 σπίλοι καὶ μῶμοι] spots and blemishes; opposed to Him Who is ἄσπιλος καὶ ἄμωμος (1 Pet. i. 19), and to you who ought to be found ἄσπιλοι καὶ ἀμώμητοι (iii. 14). See Deut. xxxii, 5.
— ἀπάταις] deceits. Λ** and B, and some Versions, have àyáπais here, love-feasts, and so Lach.; see Jude 12, οὖτοί είσιν έν ταις αγάπαις ύμων σπιλάδες, συνευωχούμενοι αφόβως, έαυτούς ποιμαίνοντες.

But it is not probable that, if ἀγάπαις had been the original reading here, it would have been altered into anarais. The probability rather is, that there is indeed a similarity between the passages of St. Jude and St. Peter, and also some independent characteristic in each. The false Teachers called their meetings άγάπαι, love-feasts, but they were mere ἀπάται, deceits. Their table was a snare. Ps. lxix. 19. 23.

As is well observed by Windischmann (Vind. Petr. p. 45), there is a similar paronomasia or play on the words ἀπάτη and ἀγάπη in St. Paul's Second Epistle to the Thessalonians, ii. 10; "St. Peter would not call these heretical feasts by an honourable name (ἀγάπας), but styles them ἀπάτας, and describes their true character by adding the word ἐντρυφῶντες."

The Gentiles denied Christ's passion; and therefore they rejected the Doctrine of the Church concerning the Holy Eucharist. See S. Ignat. ad Smyrn. §§ 6, 7, with Bp. Pearson's remarks, Vind. Ignat. ii. c. 11, and Dr. Waterland, vol. viii. p. 31, and the notes in Dr. Jacobson's Patr. Apost. ii. pp. 444, 445. Therefore, also, it was only for the sake of carnal indulgence that they took part in the love-feasts of the Church.

14. μοιχαλίδος of an adulteress. Λ very strong expression. Their eyes are full of an adulteress; as Plutarch (de Verecund. falså, p. 528, cited by Wetstein. Hammond, p. 815) says of persons, who have not  $\kappa \delta \rho \alpha s$  (= pupillas, et virgines), but  $\pi \delta \rho \nu \alpha s$   $\ell \nu$   $\tau \delta r \nu$   $\delta r \nu$   $\delta$ James iv. 4, Moixalíbes, ye adulteresses !

- ἀκαταπαύστους ἁμαρτίας] he who is baptized is pledged to cease from sin; see 1 Pet. iv. 1, πέπαυται άμαρτίαs, but their eyes cannot be made to cease from sin.

- δελεάζοντες luring: as fish are lured by a hait. twice used in this Epistle, see v. 18; and a metaphor likely to occur to St. Peter, the fisherman of Galilec, to whom our Lord said, Matt. xvii. 27, βάλε ἄγκιστρον, cast a hook. The word occurs only in one other place of the N. T., James i. 14.

— πλεονεξίαs] covetousness, the genitive case. So A, B, C, K, L, and all the best editions. Elz. has the dative plural, πλεον-

The construction is like that of Philostr. Her. ii. 15, εγυμνασμένοι θαλάττης, versed in the sea, i. e. practised in seafaring affairs. See Boissonade, Philostr. p. 451. Winer, § 30, p. 175. So these false teachers are indeed exercised; but it is in covetousness; this is their art and discipline-not holiness. Cp. 1 Tim. iv. 7, 8.

κατάρας τέκνα] children of malediction. Cp. 2 Thess. ii. 3. Eph. ii. 3. They are children of a curse, like the posterity of Ham and Canaan, Gen. ix. 25, for undutifulness and uncleanness.

15.  $\tau \hat{\eta}$  δδ $\hat{\omega}$  τοῦ Βαλαάμ] in the way of Balaam; on which he went, in direct opposition to the command of God, and swerving from the way of godliness, and to gratify his own love of lucre. See Numb. xxii. 12. 22. 32.

These false teachers followed Balaam, not only in his love of lucre, but in his Satanic counsel to Balak, to allure the people of God to harlotry and idolatry.

Here is an evidence that St. Peter is referring to the Nicolaitans, who are described as teaching the doctrine of Balaam. See below, on Rev. ii. 14, 15.

— τοῦ Βοσόρ] of Bosor, i. e. of Beor. Numb. xxii. 5. The y (ayin) in τίχι (Beor) being changed in the Chaldee dialect into sigma. Hammond. Vitringa, Obs. Sacr. i. p. 936. Philol. Sacr. p. 601.

— δs μισθὸν ἀδικίας ἡγάπησεν] who loved the wages of unrighteousness: cp. Jude 11, and Numb. xxii. 7, where the mention of the rewards of divination is very significant. See Deut. xxiii. 4, and Neh. xiii. 2, where it is said that the Moabites hired Balaam.

Here is a clue to the character of Balaam, and a divine comment on his history. "Balaam could not forego the rewards of unrighteousness, and therefore first seeks for indulgences (from God); and when these could not be obtained, he sins against the whole meaning, end, and design of the prohibition, although nothing could prevail with him to go against the letter of it; and surely the impious counsel he gave to Balak against the children of Israel (Rev. ii. 14) was, considered in itself, a greater piece of wickedness than if he had cursed them in words." See Bp. Butter's Sermon, vii. p. 65, "Upon the character of Balaam," and note above, 2 Cor. iv. 4.

16. ὑποζύγιον ἄφωνον] a dumb beast of burden, speaking with man's voice, forbad the madness of the prophet.

Horses were rare in Palestine. This general word, ὑποζύγιον, is applied to the animal which was most used for the purpose of bearing burdens. Cp. Matt. xxi. 5.

Here is an Apostolic testimony to the truth of the history of Balaam and his ass, Numb. xxii. 23. This is to be noted, because that history has been treated as a legend by some recent Expositors of the Old Testament, laying claim to the merit of special acuteness and crudition. And others have explained away the dialogue of Balaam and his ass into a mere vision of Balaam in a state of prophetic ecstasy; or into a mere imagina-tion of his own mind: see Winer, R. W. B. i. p. 184, and the excellent remarks of Dr. W. Lee on Inspiration, Lect. v. pp. 214

To all these allegations it may be replied, that St. Peter, the Apostle of Christ, who was enabled to speak with tongues, and to discern the spirits of men (as in the case of Ananias, Acts v. 3), and to foretell the future (ibid.), accepted this history of Balaam as true, and explained its meaning, and showed how, by that signal example, Almighty God declared, that the most despised of brute creatures is wiser and more clear-sighted than a disobedient Prophet.

The dumb creature speaking by man's voice, rebuked the madness of the Prophet. The ass saw the Angel which the Prophet could not see; and showed more of reason and knowledge than her master who rode upon her, and who, though endued with many spiritual gifts, was then blinded by disobedience.

In like manner the simplest peasant, who receives the history of Balaam as true,—a history guaranteed by the testimony of the inspired Apostle St. Peter, and by that of the Lord Jesus Christ Ilimself, Who received all the Old Testament as true, and commands us to receive it (see on Luke xvi. 29),—is really a far more intelligent and clear-sighted person than the Infidel Philosopher and Biblical Expositor who reject that history as false. The believing peasant sees the Angel: the unbelieving Philosopher and Expositor are blind. Compare the similar evidence with regard to the history of Jonah in the whale's belly, on Matt. xii. 40.

This passage is cited as Scripture by Origen, in Numer.

17. πηγαί ἄνυδροι] wells without water: they profess to teach, but they deceive those who resort to them; like wells which attract the weary and thirsty traveller, but are found to have no water. But Christ, the true Teacher, makes those who come to Ilim to be like wells of living water, springing up into everlasting life. John iv. 14; vii. 38.

καὶ δμίχλαι] and mists: so A, B, C. Elz. has νεφέλαι, clouds: cp. Jude 12.

18. ὑπέρογκα ματαιότητος φθεγγόμενοι] Speaking great swelling words of vanity; as Simon Magus did, affirming himself to be no less than God; and other Gnostic teachers, boasting themselves superior to the Apostles, and equal to Christ. S. Hippolyt., Phil. pp. 255. 257. See on Acts viii. 10. Iren. i. 13, and i. 23 (ed. Stieren).

These false Teachers are called wells without water, because they have not the living spring of the Holy Spirit gushing within them; and they are not called clouds ( $\nu\epsilon\phi\dot{\epsilon}\lambda\alpha i$ ) as the Saints are, but  $\delta\mu i\chi\lambda\alpha i$ , mists, of darkness and gloom, and driven by the gusts of the Evil Spirit. Catena, Cramer, p. 96. Euseb. iii. 26.  $-\delta\lambda(\gamma\omega_s]$  a little.—Elz., with C, G, K, and many Cursives and Armenian and Arabic Versions have  $\delta\nu\tau\omega_s$ . But A, B, C have  $\delta\lambda(\gamma\omega_s)$ , and Vulg. "paululum:" and this seems to be the true reading, and is adopted by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Alf.: compare v. 14, δελεάζοντες ψυχὰς ἀστηρίκτους. These false Teachers allured those persons who were only just escaping (ἀποφεύγοντας, so A, B, C,—Elz., ἀποφυγόντας) from the heathen who live in error, and by promising them liberty they made them the slaves of brutish lusts.

19. ἐλευθερίαν αὐτοῖς ἐπαγγελλόμενοι] promising them liberty: as the Gnostic Teachers did, assuring their votaries, that if they became their disciples, they were free to live as they pleased, "liberos agere quæ vellent;" see S. Iren. i. 23, and S. Hippo-"liberos agere quæ vellent;" see S. Iren. 1. 23, and S. Hippolytus (Philos. p. 175), describing Simon Magus and his followers, who boasted that they had been liberated from all moral restraints by their own superior intelligence (λελυτρῶσθαι διὰ τῆς ἰδίας ἐπιγνώσεως); and see above, on 1 Pet. ii. 16.

The latter part of this verse is quoted as Scripture by Origen, in Exod. hom. 12, and de Rectā fide, § 1.

20. ἐν ἐπιγνώσει] by the true gnosis, or knowledge, of our Lord and Saviour. Here and in the following verses St. Peter inculcates the word êniqueous, the ripe knowledge of Christ, in opposition to the spurious gnosis of the Gnostic Teachers: cp.i. 2, 3. It were hetter for them not to have had this epignosis, than after they had received it, to turn away from the holy commandment, as Simon Magus did. Acts viii. 13-23.

22. τὸ τῆς ἀληθοῦς παροιμίας] that (saying) of the true proverb. On the use of the article τδ, cp. Matt. xxi. 21. James iv. 14. Winer, § 18, p. 99.

The proverbs here quoted were perhaps contained in two iambic verses, thus :-

εἰς ἴδιον εξέραμ' ἐπιστρέψας κύων, λελουμένη θ' δε εἰς κύλισμα βορβόρου.

Compare note above, on I Cor. xv. 33, and Bp. Pearson, Vind. Ignat. pt. ii. ch. 14; vol. ii. p. 579, ed. Churton. Compare also Prov. xxvi. 11, ωσπερ κύων όταν ἐπέλθη ἐπὶ τὸν ἐαυτοῦ ἔμετον,

The βόρβορος, mire, of which the proverb speaks, was specially pertinent to those Gnostic Teachers who said, that they 'might wallow in the mire as much as they pleased," and thatsuch was their spiritual virtue—they could not be polluted by it any more than gold by mud; τοῦ βορβόρου μηδέν αὐτοὺς άδι-κῆσαι δυναμένου. S. Irenæus, i. 6. 2.

CH. III. 1, 2. ταύτην ήδη] This Epistle, already a second, write I unto you, beloved. This expression, "already a second," intimates that this Second Epistle was written soon after the First. Compare Bengel here, "priorem paullo antè scripserat;" and on i. 12, "alteram hanc Epistolam scribit brevi intervallo post primam."

On this sense of $\tilde{\eta}\tilde{\gamma}\tau_1$ see Matt. v. 28. John iii. 18; iv. 35; xxi. 14. 1 Cor. v. 3. 2 Tim. iv. 6. Hence it appears that the First Epistle also was written not long before the breaking out of the Neronian persecution and St. Peter's death (see 2 Pet. i. 14), and this is suggested by the general tone of that Epistle. See Introduction, p. 40.

The reason why he wrote these two epistles almost at the same time was his earnest desire to stir up their pure mind—clear from all admixture of sinister affection (see on 1 Cor. v. 8), to remember the words spoken before by the Holy Prophets, and the command of the Apostles of their Lord and Saviour.

Elz. has ἡμῶν, of us; but the reading ὑμῶν, of you, is in A, B, C, K, L. The Apostles are the Apostles of you, as sent to you; and they are the Apostles of the Lord, as sent by Him. Compare Jude 17, ἀποστόλων τοῦ κυρίου, and the double genitive in James ii. 1, τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν τῆς δόξης.

Some persons have argued from these words, that this Epistle could not have been written by St. Peter.

But he uses a similar expression in his First Epistle, i. 12. In both places he modestly speaks of himself in the third person, and associates himself with others who had been his fellowlabourers in the same field.

Indeed here is another evidence of genuineness. A forger, personating an Apostle, would have said, "us, the Apostles;" but an authentic Apostle, like St. Peter, is content to speak more modestly, and to say, "your Apostles." Cp. Dean Alford, Pro legg. p. 155. St. Peter here declares the harmony of the Prophets and the Apostles; in opposition to the Gnostic Teachers, who ascribed the writings of the "haly Prophets" to some other source than that of the Gospel (see on i. 20), and so prepared the way for the Marcionite and Manichæan heresies.

The Apostles, to whom St. Peter here specially refers, were St. James—many portions of whose Epistle are adopted and reiterated by St. Peter in his former Epistle—and St. Paul; see

v. 15.

On èv als, in which two Epistles-bio being implied in δεντέραν—see Winer, § 21, p. 128.

3. ἐλεύσονται] There will come in the last days, in scoffing, scoffers, walking after their own lusts. St. Jude refers to these words in his Epistle, v. 17, Remember ye the words spoken before by the Apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ, that they were saying to you, that in the last time there will be scoffers walking after their own lusts.

From this reference, it appears that St. Jude wrote his Epistle after the present Epistle (cp. note above on ii. 1), and that he owned this Epistle to be the work of an Apostle, and therefore an authentic writing; and if authentic, then it must be also genuine, for it asserts itself to be written by St. Peter, ch. i. 1, and cp. i. 17, where the writer describes himself as present at the Transfiguration, at which only three Apostles were present, viz., Peter, James, and John.

This passage (ἐλεύσονται—πορευόμενοι) is quoted by S. Hippolytus, the scholar of Irenæus, de Consummatione Sæculi, c. 10.

- ἐν ἐμπαιγμονῆ] in scoffing; omitted by Elz., but in A, B, C, and received by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Alf. "In scoffing, scoffers"—a strong Hebraistic expression: see on Acts iv. 17. They will not only be scoffers, but they will come in scoffing, like those of whom the Psalmist says, that their delight is in cursing, and that they clothe themselves with it as it were with a raiment (Ps. cix. 16, 17); and the contrast is striking to the divine words, εὐλογῶν εὐλογῆσω, Gen. xxii. 17; cp. Eph. i. 3, δ εὐλογῆσας ἡμᾶς ἐν πάση εὐλογίσα, and Clem. Rom. i. 23.

4. λέγοντες, Ποῦ ἐστιν] saying, Where is the promise of His coming? This prophetical warning is directed against the literature with Lentine Resistance of Options and Nagarowith. Heretics called Lampetians, Euchites, or Ophites, and Naasseni.

(Catena, Cramer, p. 98. Theophylact.)

Compare the warnings of an Apostolic Father; "Whosoever does not confess the suffering of the Cross, is of the devil; and whosoever perverts the oracles of the Lord to his own lusts, and says that there is neither Resurrection nor a Judgment,-he is the firstborn of Satan." S. Polycarp, c. 7.

At the first Creation, the Hely Spirit brooded over the Water, as with wings, and made it productive of life and order to the Earth; see on Matt. iii. 16, and Milton, Par. Lost, i. 19,

- "Thou from the first Wast present, and with mighty wings outspread Dove-like sat'st brooding on the vast abyss, And mad'st it pregnant."

And at the New Creation the Holy Spirit like a dove brooded over the baptismal water, when Christ by His Baptism in Jordan "sanctified water to the mystical washing away of sins," and made it to become instrumental for the new Birth of Mankind.

5. θέλοντας] They are wilfully blind to this truth, which is revealed to them in the Holy Scriptures. The word θέλων expresses a deliberate act of the will. See Col. ii. 18. Philem. 14.

St. Peter censures the false Teachers, who denied the doctrine of the second Advent of Christ (Hapovola) and of Future Judgment and Resurrection, and of the Dissolution of the material world.

He confutes them by several considerations:
(1) The World was created by God, and therefore it can be destroyed by Him.

(2) The World was created out of the water, and through water; and yet it was destroyed by God by the very same element, water; out of which it had been made. This destruction by water, at the Deluge, was executed by God as a Judicial punishment for men's sins.

The Universal Deluge, therefore, was a warning and a rehearsal of the General Judgment to come.

(3) At the Flood, the Heavens and the Earth themselves were made by Almighty God to supply the means of their own destruction. They supplied the Water by which the world was drowned. See Gen. vii. 11-21, "the same day were all the fountains of the great deep broken up, and the windows of heaven were opened, and the rain was upon the earth forty days and forty nights, . . . and the waters prevailed . . . and all flesh died."

(4) Human notions of duration of time are very different from those of God; with Whom "a thousand years are as one day.

-  $\gamma \hat{\eta}$  έξ ὕδατος] the Earth was subsisting out of the water and through the water. See Gen. i. 6, "God said, Let there be a Firmament in the midst of the waters:" and Gen. i. 9, "Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear:" and Ps. xxiv. 2, "He hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods:" and Ps. cxxxvi. 6, "He stretched out the Earth above the Waters."

On the symbolical and spiritual significance of these words, applied to the use of Water, as instrumental in the work of the New Creation or Regeneration of Mankind, see John iii. 5. Tertullian, de Baptismo, c. 3, "dispositio mundi modulatricibus quodammodo aquis Deo constitit (συνέστηκε) . . . primis aquis præceptum est animas proferre, ne mirum sit in baptismo si aquæ animare noverunt." Cp. Bp. Andrewes, iii. p. 250, and note above on 1 Pet. iii. 20, 21.

The assertion that the Earth arose out of the water is opposed to the dogma of Simon Magus, that it was engendered opposed to the dogma of Simol Magus, that it was eigendered from fire: see S. Hippolyt., Refut. hær. p. 165.

— συνεστώσα τῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ λόγφ] consisting by the Word of God—the spoken word; and, in a higher sense, by the Eternal Consubstantial Word. The Logos was the Creator; and this was no new doctrine to St. Peter's Jewish readers. See on Ps. xxxii. 6, and on John i. 1, 2, and Bp. Wilson here, p. 686.

This assertion of St. Peter, that the heavens were created by the Word of God, and subsist thereby—especially in the sense above specified—is opposed to the error of the Gnostic Teachers, asserting that the Universe was made by Angels, or by the Demiurge opposed to the Supreme God: see Iren. i. 19 (Grabe), who says (in reference to that Gnostic error) that the World was not made by Angels, nor by any powers separated from God, but by His Word, i. e. Christ, and he refers to Ps. xxxii. G. John i. 3, in proof of this doctrine: see also S. Iren. ii. 2 (Grabe); "omnia quæ fecit Deus, infatigabili Verbo fecit; quemadmodum Joannes Domini discipulus ait de Eo" (John i. 3).

Observe the word συνεστώσα, consisting: that is, framed and compacted by the Word of God; and compare St. Paul's use of the same verb in the same sense (Col. i. 17), "by Him (Christ) all things consist" (συνέστηκε).

6. δι ων] by means of which, i.e. by means of the Heavens and the Earth; which were the reservoirs of the Water by which the world was drowned at the Flood. The Heavens and Earth supplied the element of Water by which the world was destroyed.

Gen. vii. 11. See Theophyl., Hammond, Welstein.
So, the Fire, contained in the Heavens and the Earth, is the fuel of its future funeral pile. The Heavens and Earth have within themselves-in the electric fluid of lightnings, and meteors, and comets, and in the subterranean reservoirs of Volcanos,—the materials of their own future combustion and conflagration at the Great Day. Nero's burning of Rome may have suggested this reference.

Hence that last conflagration is called by S. Irenæus (v. 29), a Flood of Fire,—"Diluvium ignis." The ravages made by Lightnings and the eruptions of Volcanos are prophetical signs of Christ's Coming to Judgment (cp. Matt. xxiv. 7), and are premonitory symptoms of the Earth's future destruction by fire, as even the heathen writers of Antiquity believed. See the passages from Lucretius, Pliny, Lucan, Seneca, cited here by A Lapide and others. Did the great fire at Rome, A.D. 64, suggest this? See above p. xi.

7. τεθησαυρισμένοι είσὶ πυρί] are treasured up for fire. They are indeed treasured up; but not as these false Teachers say, for eternity, but for fire, as the old world was treasured up for water; and they are treasured up by His Word, that is, as long as He wills it, and no longer. The word fire is emphatic, and therefore is placed the last in the clause; and this rendering, which is that of the Æthiopic version, seems preferable to that which connects πυρί with τηρούμενοι.

This reservation of the world for fire had been revealed by the old Prophets. Isa. lxvi. 15, 16. Dan. vii. 10, 11. Mal. iv. 1. In an Oration of Melito (Bishop of Sardis in the second century), which has been published from the Syriac for the first time by the Rev. William Cureton, D.D. (Lond. 1855, p. 51), there appears to be a reference to this passage of St. Peter, -" There was a flood of water, and all men and living creatures were destroyed by the multitude of waters, and the just were preserved in an Ark of wood by the ordinance of God. So also it will be at the last time; there will be a Flood of Fire, and the Earth will be burnt up together with its mountains, and men will be burnt up with the idols which they have made; and the sca together with the isles will be burnt, and the just shall be delivered from the fury (of the fire), as their fellows in the Ark (were saved) from the waters in the Deluge" (Melito). Compare the learned Editor's remarks, p. xi, and p. 51, on the importance of this passage in relation to the question concerning the authenticity and seems of the concerning the authenticity and the concerning the authentic the concerning th ticity and genuineness of the present Epistle. See also above, p. 76.

8. μία ἡμέρα] one day with the Lord is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. See St. Barnabas (Ep. 15), who thence takes occasion to state the opinion, that as the world was created in six days, and God rested on the seventh day, so the world will last six thousand years, and in the seventh Millennium the End will come: and cp. Irenæus i. 28, Grabe. Cp. Justin M. c. Tryphon. c. 81, who, perhaps, quotes from this passage of St. Peter as well as from Ps. xc. 4. See Joseph Mede's Works, p. 611.

- στοιχεία] elements. It has been objected to this translation,—which is that of the Vulg., Syriac, Arabic, Æthiopic, and English versions,—that Earth itself and Fire are Elements, and that the writer, according to this translation, is liable to the charge of tautology; and therefore the word στοιχεῖα is here rendered heavens by some, and this rendering is justified by citations from ancient Christian writers, Justin M., Theophilus of Antioch, and Polycrates. See Joseph Mede's Works, p. 614.
Bengel, Alford, Hammond, Whitby, and others.

But St. Peter's meaning seems to be, that the στοιχεία, elements or rudiments, of which the Universe is composed and compacted, will be loosed; that is, the frameworks of the world will be disorganized, and this is the sense of στοιχεῖα in the LXX, Wisd. vii. 17; xix. 18, and in S. Hippolyt., Philos. pp. 219.
318. This dissolution is contrasted with the consistency described by the word συνεστῶσα in v. 5. The heavens are reserved for fire (v. 7), and will pass away with a rushing noise, and, being set on fire, will be dissolved (v. 12), the elements will be on fire and melt (v. 12), and be reduced to a state of fusion; the earth and the works therein, will be burnt up.

There does not, therefore, seem to be any cause for abandoning the common meaning of στοιχεία, the elemental principles of which the Universe is made.

11. τούτων οὖν πάντων λυομένων ] Since then all things are being dissolved, that is, since this is their destiny, and, though the dissolution is future, yet is so sure that it may be regarded as present. Cp. Matt. ii. 4, ποῦ δ Χριστὸς γεννᾶται, and Winer, ὑπάρχειν] More emphatic than είναι. In what state ought we to be subsisting  $(i\pi d\rho \chi \epsilon_i \nu)$ , since that catastrophe is so certain and so sudden? See v. 10. In what state ought it to find us?

12. σπεύδοντας] hastening the Advent of the Day of God. A remarkable expression; but not strange to the Jewish mind of those whom St. Peter is addressing, "If thou keepest this precept, thou hastenest the day of the Messiah" (Debarim, R. vi. Deut. xxii. 7. See Wetstein on John ix. 7). Whoever prays "Thy kingdom come," and promotes the preaching of the Gospel to all Nations (Matt. xxiv. 14), hastens the coming of the Day of Christ. Cp. Dean Trench on the Authorized Version, p. 84, and the margin of that Version.

It is worthy of remark, that St. Peter himself, in his speech in Solomon's Porch at Jerusalem, had pressed this same truth, when he said (Acts iii. 19. 21), "Repent ye and turn to God, that your sins may be blotted out; and in order that (δπως αν) the seasons of refreshing may come from the presence of the Lord, and that He may send Jesus Christ, whom the heavens must receive till the times of the restitution of all things," i. e. of the new Heavens and new Earth, described by the writer here in a 12.

This use of σπεύδειν in this passage, and the use of the ὅπωs

This use of σπεύδειν in this passage, and the use of the ὅπωs by Expositors to present some difficulties. But the one difficulty solves the other. And the occurrence of this remarkable thought in this Epistle, as compared with that speech of St. Peter, is another silent evidence of the genuineness of this Epistle.

13. καινούς δε οὐρανούς] But we look for new heavens and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. On the meaning of καινούs, made new, as distinguished from νέος, see above, on Eph.

Concerning this future renovation, see above, Rom. viii. 20-22; below, Rev. xxi. 1; and St. Peter's speech, Acts iii. 19-21. Cp. Isa. lxv. 17; lxvi. 22.

There are frequent anticipations of this physical restoration in the Book of Enoch (x. 27; 1. 5; liv. 4, 5; xc. 17). Huther,

St. Peter does not represent the Heavens as destined to destruction, but as hereafter to be transformed (ἀναστοιχειουμέvous) to a more glorious condition. As the mortal bodies of the Saints are dissolved by death, and will not be reduced to annihilation, but will, by reason of Christ's Resurrection, and of their incorporation in Him Who is the Resurrection and the Life, bo renewed to Immortality, so the heavenly bodies will be renewed by fire, and be delivered from the bondage of corruption. See Rom, viii, 20-22.

The material Creation has sympathized with us in our Fall, and it has derived benefit from the Incarnation of Christ, and from our elevation in Him (see on James i. 18), and will rejoice with the righteous in their Redemption and Revivification, when their mortal bodies will rise and bloom anew, like vernal herbs m 1 Cor. 1. 8. Thus the benefits of the Incarnation and the Redemption wrought by the Second Adam extend also to the Natural World. He has restored already the free use of the creatures to us (see on 1 Cor. iii. 23); and He will raise the Creation itself to a more glorious state of being.

15, 16. καθώς και δ άγαπητος ήμων άδελφος Παῦλος] as also our beloved brother Paul, according to the wisdom given unto him, wrote to you; as also in all his Epistles, speaking of these things in them; in which are some things hard to be understood, which the unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other Scriptures, to their own destruction.

Part of this text is quoted by Origen de Recta Fide, sect. 2, and ascribed by him without any hesitation to St. Peter. See also on i. 4; ii. 16. 19.

With regard to the reading of this passage, Elz. has ταιs before ἐπιστολαιs, but this is not in A, B, C. However, the sense is not affected by its omission: it means in all Epistles written by him.

Elz. has èv ols, "in which things," and so C, G, K; but A, B have èv als, "in which Epistles," and also many Cursives, and the Arabic, Syriac, and English versions, and Lachmann: and this text is supposed to contain a reference to St. Paul's Epistles, by S. Cyril of Alexandria (in Catenâ, p. 103), Augustine (De Fide, § 22), and others. They therefore are in favour of the reading èv als, agreeing with emiotohals.

The context also seems to require èv als, in which Epistles. For, it can hardly be said, that unlearned men wrest obscure things or mysteries—as they do "the other Scriptures"—to their own destruction. The wresting of one set of writings (i. e. of the other Scriptures) is here joined with the wresting of another set of writings, i. e. the Epistles of St. Paul: and the unlearned and unstable are said to pervert both.

This passage seems to have been in the mind of S. Polycarp when he wrote to the Philippians, i. 3, "No one like me can equal the wisdom of the blessed Paul, who being absent wrote to you Epistles (ὑμῖν ἔγραψεν ἐπιστολάs), into which if you look diligently, you will be enabled to be built up unto the faith."

"Our beloved brother Paul wrote to you," says St. Peter here; "to you of Asia Minor, whom I address." Especially St. Paul did this in his Epistles to the Galatians and to the Ephesians in Asia Proper, and to the Colossians in Phrygia. Compare St. Peter's inscription of his own First Epistle to those of the dispersion of Galatia, Asia, and Bithynia; and St. Peter's Second Epistle is addressed to the same persons. (2 Pet. iii. 1.)

As has been already observed, St. Peter in these two Epistles adopts much of the language and reinforces the precepts

Ephesus and Colossæ. See above, p. 44.

To what does he specially refer when he says that there are "some things hard to be understood in St. Paul's Epistles?

S. Augustine thus replies to this question :-

"Even in the times of the Apostles, certain persons, who did not understand some of Paul's rather obscure (subobscuras) sentences, alleged that he said 'Let us do evil, that good may come,' because he had said that the Law entered in, that sin might abound; and where sin abounded, there did grace much more abound.' (Rom. iii. 8; v. 20.)

"When the Apostle Paul says that a man is justified by faith (per fidem) without the works of the Law, he does not mean thereby, that, when a man has received and professed the Faith, he may despise the works of rightcourness; but that every one may know that he may be justified by faith, although works of the law have not gone before his Faith. For works follow him that is justified, 'Sequuntur justificatum, non præcedunt justifi-

"Since however the notion above mentioned had arisen at that time (viz. that works were not requisite), the other Apostolic Epistles of Peter, John, James, and Jude, specially contend against that notion; in order to maintain earnestly, that Faith without works doth not profit. Indeed Paul himself has defined Faith to be not any kind of Faith by which man believes in God; but he defines true faith to be that healthful and evangelical faith, whose works proceed from love—' Faith which worketh by love.' (Gal. v. 6.) And he asserts, that the faith which some men think sufficient for salvation is so worthless, that 'if I have faith (he says) so as to remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing '(1 Cor. xiii. 2); and doubtless that man's life is good, where faithful love works, for he says, 'the fulfilling of the Law is love' (Rom. xiii. 10)."

This remark is specially applicable to St. Paul's own latest Epistles. See above, Introduction to the Epistles to Timothy and Titus (near the end).

"Evidently, therefore (continues Augustine), for this reason, St. Peter, in his Second Epistle, when he was exhorting to holiness of life, and was declaring that this world would pass away, and that new heavens and new earth are looked for, which are to be assigned as dwellings to the righteous; and when he was admonishing men to consider what ought to be their life in this world, in order that they may be made meet for that future habitation; and being also aware that many ungodly men had taken occasion from certain rather obscure sentences of the Apostle Paul, to be reckless of living well, and to presume of salvation by faith, has noted that there are some things hard to be understood in St. Paul's Epistles, which men wrested, as they did the other Scriptures, to their own destruction; whereas, in truth, that Apostle (St. Paul) entertained the same opinions as the rest of the Apostles concerning everlasting salvation, and that it would not be given to any but to those who live well. Thus therefore Peter writes." Augustine then quotes this chapter, vv. 11-18. S. Augustine, de Fide et Operibus, c. 22, ed. Bened.

Many of the Ancients supposed the Epistle of St. James,

Many of the Ancients supposed the Epistle of St. Jude, and the Second of St. Peter, to have been written against those who, mistaking the sense of St. Paul's Epistles, held that faith without good works is sufficient for salvation. Which opinion is greatly confirmed by St. Peter, where he says that in the Epistles of St. Paul may be found some things which by bad men are perverted to the worst sense, and to their own destruction. Bp. Bull, de Justif., diss. ii. ch. iv. Cp. also Bp. Bull's Examen Censuræ Strict. i. § 4, where he says, "that St. Peter refers here to St. Paul's doctrine on Justification by Faith, hath been the judgment of most learned Cp. Bp. Sanderson, Prælect. ii. de Conscientia, § 5, and above, Introduction to the Epistle of St. James, pp. 1-3.

Observe, however, how wisely St. Peter guards against the inference which has been derived by some from his words—especially by Theologians of the Church of Rome—alleging that Holy Scripture is here represented by him as obscure, and that therefore it ought not to be allowed to be read by the people.

In this same chapter, St. Peter commends the "words of the holy Prophets, and the commandment of the Apostles," to the careful meditation of his readers (iii. 2); and he had said, "if any man speaks, let him speak as the oracles of God," which presupposes knowledge of those oracles (iv. 11). And he does not say here that Holy Scripture is obscure; but that there are unlearned and unstable men in the world; and that there are some things hard to be understood in some portions of Holy Scripture, which he commends to their reverent regard by saying, that they are written by "our beloved brother Paul according to the wisdom that was given him." And he does not suppose that the faithful and well-grounded believer will misapprehend them; but he affirms that unlearned and unstable men wrest them, that is, put them, as it were, to the rack, and torture them, contrary to their true and natural meaning—to their own destruction; whereas, when properly understood, they are able to make wise unto salvation. He also says that this evil practice of these unlearned and unstable men is not limited to these particular portions of Holy Scripture; but that they treat the rest of the Scriptures in the same way.

These words of St. Peter possess much interest and importance, as taking their place with the other testimonies of Prophets and Apostles to the authority of Holy Scripture.

The Prophet Malachi closes the Canon of the Old Testament by a solemn appeal "to the Law of Moses, and to the Statutes and Judgments." He says, "Remember them" (Mal. iv. 4).

 $^{17}$   $^{\circ}$   $^{\circ}$ άθέσμων πλάνη συναπαχθέντες έκπέσητε τοῦ ίδίου στηριγμοῦ 18 αὐξάνετε δὲ έν χάριτι καὶ γνώσει τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν καὶ Σωτῆρος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ· αὐτῷ ἡ δόξα καὶ νῦν καὶ εἰς ἡμέραν αἰωνος ἀμήν.

The Apostle and Evangelist St. John closes the four Gospels with a similar reference. "These things are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that, believing, ye might have life through His Name." (John xx. 31.)

St. Paul, the Apostle of the Gentile World, closes his Epistles with a testimony to the sufficiency and Inspiration of Holy Scripture. "Abide thou in those things which thou hast learnt, and wert assured of, knowing from whom thou didst learn them; and that from a child thou knowest the Holy Scriptures, which are the things that are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith that is in Christ Jesus. Every Scripture, being divinely inspired, is also profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, in order that the man of God may be perfect, throughly furnished unto every good (2 Tim. iii. 14-17.)

St. Peter, in like manner, closes his Epistles here with a similar exhortation, and with a warning against perversion of

St. Jude also closes the Catholic Epistles with a memento to his readers, "Remember ye the words spoken before by the Apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ." (Jude 17.)

Lastly, the Apostle and Evangelist  $St_*$  John closes the Apocalypse with a promise of blessing to those who keep its sayings, and a curse on those who take from it or add to it. (Rev. xxii. 7. 18, 19.)

Thus the duties of the Christian Church, as the Guardian of HOLY SCRIPTURE, and the duties of every member of the Church, as bound to receive, to meditate upon, and to obey the written Word of God, are solemnly inculcated by the farewell voices of Prophets and Apostles.

Prophets and Apostles pass away to another and better world. But the WORD of GOD, written by their instrumentality, endureth for ever. (1 Pet. i. 25.)

Observe, also, the importance of this passage with regard to the Epistles of ST. PAUL.

When St. Peter wrote this Epistle, he was near his death (2 Pet. i. 14), which took place in or about A.D. 68. He refers here to St. Paul's Epistles—to all his Epistles.

At the date of the present Epistle, all St. Paul's Epistles had been written, with the exception perhaps of the last Epistle, the Second to Timothy. See above, Chronological Table prefixed to St. Paul's Epistles, pp. xiv, xv.

"Peter wrote his present Epistle a very short time before his own and St. Paul's martyrdom; and St. Peter had read all Paul's Epistles." Bengel.

St. Peter here designates St. Paul's Epistles as γραφάς, Scriptures. He says that some men wrest them as they do "the other Scriptures. The say a that sounds γραφάs).

The word γραφαl is used about fifty times in the New Testament, and is there always applied to characterize devinety interests. spired writings, specially those of the Old Testament, which were received by Christ Himself as given by inspiration of God. It is never used in the New Testament to designate any other writings than those. Therefore, St. Peter here declares, that the Epistles of St. Paul are divinely inspired, and are to be received

This testimony to the wisdom of St. Paul and to the divine inspiration of his Epistles, is specially interesting and valuable as coming from St. Peter.

Some persons had endeavoured to make him a rival of St. Paul. "I am of Cephas," was said in opposition to others, who said, "I am of Paul" (I Cor. i. 12). He was the Apostle of the Circumcision, and St. Paul of the Gentiles (Gal. ii. 7). And Peter had been once prevailed upon by the Judaizing Christians at Antioch to side with them in opposition to St. Paul. (Gal. ii. 11.) On that occasion he had been openly resisted and publicly rebuked by St. Paul; and St. Paul has fully recorded the circumstances of that resistance and rebuke in one of his own Epistles to the Christians of Asia: the Christians of one of the same regions as are recited in the inscription of St. Peter's First Epistle, and to which the Second Epistle of St. Peter was addressed-Galatia. (Gal. ii. 11-21.)

St. Peter, therefore, in acknowledging St. Paul's Epistles to be Scripture, that is, as written by inspiration of God, acknowledges them to be true; and therefore he owns, that what is therein recorded in St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, concerning himself, and his own conduct at Antioch, is a true history; and that he was then justly rebuked, because he was κατεγνώσμένος, condemned. (Gal. ii. 11.)

St. Peter, therefore, here refutes the assumption of the Bishops of Rome, who call themselves his successors, and who allege that they themselves are infallible, and are not to be rebuked by any; an assumption grounded on St. Peter's supposed infallibility (see on Matt. xvi. 18).

But St. Peter himself faltered, and the record of his failing is written in the Word of God; and St. Peter himself owns that record to be true, and to be divinely inspired. Therefore, none of those who call themselves his successors, and who ground their claims on St. Peter's alleged infallibility, can be allowed to be infallible. And whoever desires to build his hopes of heaven on the rock and not on the sand, will not place his faith on the baseless foundation of such an imaginary Infallibility. St. Peter's generosity, wisdom, and charity, are also here

He owns himself to have been in error. He makes public reparation for his error, in writing to those to whom his error might be a snare; the Jewish Christians of Asia. He refers to Epistles, in which that error is recorded by him who rebuked him for his error. He acknowledges these Epistles to be written by his beloved brother; to be written according to divine wisdom; he owns them to be Scripture, written by inspiration of God. He thus publicly confesses and retracts his error: he thanks him who corrected him: he shows his own wisdom. "Rebuke a wise man, and he will love thee" (Prov. ix. 8).

St. Peter felt that he had been rightly rebuked by St. Paul; he did not indignantly spurn that rebuke as an injury, but received it thankfully as a benefit. Such is the temper of those who have learnt to be meek and lowly in heart (Matt. xi. 29); "in honour preferring one another" (Rom. xii. 10). In a like, loving, spirit, St. Peter had closed his first Epistle, saying, that he sent it by "Silvanus the faithful brother," who had been the chosen associate of St. Paul; and joining him with "Marcus his son," See note on 1 Pet. v. 12, 13.

Thus, in fine, the Apostle of the Circumcision, now ready to put off his mortal tabernacle (i. 14), is seen standing, as it were, side by side, with the Apostle of the Gentiles, who is also now "ready to be offered up, and the time of his departure is at hand" (2 Tim. iv. 6), and he declares to the Churches of Asia and the world, that the Epistles of his beloved brother Paul are to be received as divinely inspired Scripture. Thus both these Apostles proclaim to the Church Universal that they are of one mind; and that the Faith is one and the same, which they have preached in their lives, and for which they are about to die.

They died as Martyrs in the same city-Rome; and as some ancient authorities relate, in the same year, and even on the same ancient authornes relate, in the same year, and even on the same day (see Introduction to the Epistles to Timothy, at the end). However this may be, "they were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided." 2 Sam. i. 23.

17. δμεῖs οὖν, ἀγαπητοί] Ye therefore, beloved, knowing these things before, take heed that ye be not led away by the error of the lawless, and fall away from your own stedfastness.

These two verses contain the sum of the whole Epistle.

First, here is a warning against the errors and allurements of the false teachers with their specious claims to superior gnosis; to this he opposes the divine gnosis, which he has just supplied, and he therefore adds what follows;-

18. αὐξάνετε δέ] But grow in grace, and in the knowledge (the true gnosis) of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; to Him be the glory both now and for ever,-literally, for the day of eternity, which has no night (see on Matt. xxv. 46). Observe the arrangement; true gnosis is a fruit of grace.

Here is a Doxology to Jesus Christ as God. On ή δόξα, cp. Rev. iv. 11; v. 13; vii. 12. He ends, as he had begun, with an assertion of the unity of the person of Jesus and Christ; and of His Lordship; and of His office as Saviour, and of His Godhead . because in opposition to the Gnostic false teachers these were the principal doctrines to be maintained.

TO

THE FIRST EPISTLE GENERAL OF ST. JOHN.

I. Each of the Catholic or General Epistles has a special character.

The Epistle of St. James corrects the errors of those who imagined that a theoretical knowledge of religion, apart from practical piety, is acceptable to God 1. St. Peter, in his First Epistle, builds up a system of ethical duty on the foundation of Christian Faith 2. In his second Epistle he condemns the false doctrines of those heretical Teachers who denied the Lord that bought them?, and exposes the evil consequences of heretical teaching, in its influence on moral practice '.

St. Jude, in his Epistle, completes the work of St. Peter. He recalls the attention of the Church to the warnings of that Apostle, and of his Apostolic brethren. He displays in clearer light, and fuller amplitude, what St. Peter had revealed by the Spirit of prophecy 6.

II. The beloved disciple, the holy Apostle, and Evangelist, St. John, had another work to perform.

It was his special office to defend the doctrine of the Incarnation.

That doctrine had been taught with great clearness by the Apostle St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Ephesians; as has been already shown in the Introduction to that Epistle.

St. Paul, in his solemn farewell charge to the Presbyters of Ephesus, had exhorted them to "feed the Church of God, which He purchased with His own blood," and he had given to them a prophetic warning that after his departure "many grievous wolves would enter in among them not sparing the flock, and that even of their own selves men would rise up, speaking perverse things to draw away the disciples after them 7."

And in writing to his own son in the faith, Timothy, whom he had placed as Bishop at Ephesus, St. Paul first reminds him that "God willeth all men to be saved"," and that the One Mediator between God and men "gave Himself a ransom for all"," and then exhorts him to behave himself aright "in the house of God which is the Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth (and without controversy great is the Mystery of godliness); Who was manifested in the flesh 10;" and then he proceeds to warn Timothy that "some will depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits "."

St. John, who lived and died at Ephesus, continued, maintained, guarded, and completed this work of St. Paul; and St. John's writings show the truth of St. Paul's prophecy.

He had to encounter false Teachers whose rise had been predicted by St. Paul.

No one could be better qualified for this work than St. John.

He had been admitted to the nearest intimacy with the Incarnate Word. He had leaned on His breast at suppor 12. He saw Him die on the cross, and beheld His side pierced, and there came forth blood and water 13.

St. John, who had seen these things, had testified of them in his oral teaching. And probably he had already written the record of them in his Gospel, before he published his Epistles 14. St.

John's Gospel affords the best help to the study of his Epistles. And the reader is requested to refer to the Introduction prefixed to his Gospel', as serving, in some respects, for an Introduction to his Epistles also.

St. John's life was providentially prolonged by the Head of the Church, in His love to her, in order that the beloved disciple might bear testimony to the fundamental doctrines of the Godhead and Incarnation of Jesus Christ; and that he might also pronounce a judicial sentence, with all the weight of his Apostolic authority, on the wickedness of denying any of those doctrines; and might deliver to all of every age a warning against those Teachers who impugn any of these articles of the Faith; and might provide a refuge for the faithful under the peaceful shelter of his Apostolic name 2.

This he has done in his Epistles.

Ancient writers, dating almost from the age of St. John, bear witness to these statements.

The most important testimony of Christian Antiquity to this effect is that of S. Irenæus, which will be quoted presently. He came from the neighbourhood of Ephesus, the country in which St. John passed the latter part of his life, and in which he died 4. He had conversed with S. Polycarp, Bishop of Smyrna; and S. Polycarp had conversed with St. John and other Apostles'. The testimony therefore of S. Irenæus concerning the design of St. John's Epistles is of great weight.

III. Certain Heresies affecting the doctrine of Christ's two Natures and one Person had sprung up in Apostolic times. The Jews, who looked for a temporal kingdom of Christ, could not reconcile their minds to the doctrine, taught in the Gospel, of a suffering Messiah. They were ashamed of the cross of Christ: they shrank from the scoffs of the Heathen taunting the Christians with worshipping a man, who died the death of a slave.

Those Jews also, who did not rightly understand the doctrine of the Divine Unity, were not prepared to accept that other cardinal article of the true Faith, that Jesus Christ is God.

Accordingly, when the Gospel was presented to the minds of those among them who could not gainsay the proofs of its truth as a Revelation from God, they endeavoured to accommodate it to their own preconceived opinions. Such persons were no longer willing to be called Jews; they assumed the name of Christians. But they were not sound Christians; and some among them are condemned by St. John.

The difficulties just specified beset the Jewish mind when it contemplated the Gospel, as preached by the Apostles.

IV. There was also another embarrassment which perplexed many inquirers,  $\Pi \dot{\phi} \theta \epsilon \nu \tau \dot{\sigma} \kappa \alpha \kappa \dot{\phi} \nu$ ; Whence is evil? How came it into the world?

This question had produced the Magian Philosophy, with its two independent Principles, and antagonistic Powers; and it engendered also the Gnostic Theories of emanations, or cons; according to which, the Demiurge or Creator was a different Person and Agent from the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; and the Law and the Prophets were severed from the Gospel.

V. The Heresies produced by these causes, and which sprung up especially among the Jewish Christians, in the age of St. John, concerning the Person and Nature of Christ, and against which the Apostle wrote, were mainly four 6-

1. The heresy of those who affirmed that Jesus was a mere man; this was the heresy of Ebion.

2. The heresy of those who said that Jesus was a different being from Christ; and that Christ was an eon or emanation, who was sent into the world to reveal the knowledge of the true God, and to free the souls of men from the power of the Demiurge or Creator of matter; and descended into the man Jesus at His baptism, and departed from Him before His crucifixion. This was the heresy of Cerinthus.

3. The heresy of those who asserted that Christ had no real human body, but that He suffered merely in appearance. This was the heresy of the Docetee, and of their leader Simon Magus.

4. The heresy of those who said that the world was not created by Him, or by the Father, but by some rival powers; and who affirmed that there was no necessity for abstaining from idolatry, or for incurring any danger in behalf of the Faith. These were the Nicolaitans and others.

VI. They who taught these doctrines are called deceivers and antichrists by St. John in his two Epistles 1, as is observed by S. Irenœus 2, who speaks at large concerning these errors in his great work against Heresy 3.

1. A summary of the remarks of S. Irenæus on this important subject may be presented to the English reader in the words of Bp. Bull;—

"All the Gnostics, of whatever denomination, did in reality deny the true Nativity, Passion, and Resurrection of Jesus Christ, although not all in the same way. This is a learned observation of Irenœus, who was a most careful investigator of the doctrine of the Gnostics, in the third book of his Treatise, where, after showing how the Apostle John, in the very beginning of his Gospel, glances at the Cerinthians and Nicolaitans, he proceeds presently to those words of the Apostle 4, and demonstrates that neither the Cerinthians, nor any other sect of the Gnostics, did sincerely acknowledge the Incarnation, the Passion, or the Resurrection of Jesus Christ.

"These are the words of Irenœus. According to those heretics, neither was the Word made Flesh, nor Christ, nor the Saviour. For they maintain, that the Word and Christ did not even come into this world, and that the Saviour was neither Incarnate, nor suffered, but that He descended like a dove upon Jesus, and having declared the unknown Father, ascended again into the pleroma. But He who was incarnate and suffered, some of them affirm, was that Jesus who is of the Gospel dispensation, who, they say, passed through the Virgin Mary, as water through a tube; others assert, that He, who suffered, was the Son of the Demiurge, or Creator, upon whom that Jesus descended, who is of the Gospel dispensation; others again say, that Jesus was indeed born of Joseph and Mary, and that upon him Christ descended, who is from above, being without flesh, and incapable of suffering.

"According, however, to no view entertained by these Heretics, was the Word of God made Flesh. For if one carefully search into the theories of them all, he will find, that there is introduced a Word of God, and a Christ that is on high, without flesh, and incapable of suffering. For some of them think that He was manifested, as transfigured into the form of man, but say that He was neither born, nor incarnate; whereas others suppose that He did not even assume the form of man, but descended as a dove upon that Jesus who was born of Mary. The Lord's disciple, St. John, therefore, showing that they are all false witnesses, says, 'And the Word was made flesh, and DWELT AMONG US 5," Irenœus applies these words to those, like Cerinthus, who said that Jesus was only a "receptacle of Christ, and that Christ descended like a dove into Jesus;" and he says that these Antichrists whom he has mentioned do indeed in name confess Jesus Christ, but in fact deny Him by separating Jesus from Christ; and he applies to them the words of St. John in his First and Second Epistles, 1 John iv. 1, and 2 John 7, 8. English Theologian, Dr. Waterland, who has illustrated this subject with special application to the Epistles of St. John.

Those remarks, together with the observations of the two English Prelates quoted in this Introduction, may serve as preparatory to a profitable study of this Epistle.

"If we examine this Epistle, we shall perceive"-says Dr. Waterland-"that a great part of it was levelled, not so much against Jews, or Pagans, as against fulse Christians; against the heretics of that time, Simonians perhaps, or Cerinthians, or Ebionites, or Nicolaitans, or all of them.

"The two principal errors which St. John there censures, were, the denial of Christ's being come in the flesh, and the disowning that Jesus was Christ. The Doceta, as they were afterwards called, the followers of Simon Magus, denied Christ's real humanity, making Him a mere phantom, shadow, or apparition. And the Cerinthians, making a distinction between Jesus and Christ, did not allow that both were one Person. Against those chiefly St. John wrote his Epistle. He speaks of Antichrists newly risen up 3, which could not be intended of Jews or Pagans, who had opposed the Gospel all along; and he speaks of men that had been of the Church, but had apostatized from it: 'they went out from us, but they were not of us '.'

"Let us now proceed to the explication of those passages in St. John's Epistle which relate to our purpose.

"The Apostle observes, that the Word of Life (or the Word in whom was Life's) was from the beginning 6; conformable to what he says in the entrance to his Gospel, and in opposition both to Cerinthus and Ebion, who made Jesus a mere man, and who either denied any pre-existing substantial Logos, or at most supposed him to stand foremost in the rank of creatures. The Apostle further styles the same Logos, Eternal Life, to intimate his eternal existence, in opposition to the same heretics. He adds, which was with the Father, parallel to what he says in his Gospel, was with God 8."

St. John proceeds to declare the reality and efficacy of the Vicarious Atonement made by the Son of God dying on the Cross for the sins of the whole world. "My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not: and if any man sin—or rather, have sinned  $(\dot{a}\mu\dot{a}\rho\tau\eta)$ —we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous, and He is the Propitiation for our sins, and not for our sins only, but for the sins of the whole world ";" and he says, "In this was manifested the love of God towards us, because that God sent His only-begotten Son into the world, that we might live through Him. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another 10."

"In the second chapter of the Epistle (says Waterland) the Apostle describes the antichristian heretics of that time as denying that Jesus is Christ, which amounted to the same with denying the Father and the Son 11; because whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father 12. Cerinthus denied that Jesus was Christ, dividing Christ from Jesus; and he, of consequence, denied the Son. because he allowed not that Jesus was personally united with the Word, the eternal Son of God; nor that the Logos which he speaks of, was the only-begotten of the Father, being Son only of the only-begotten, according to his scheme; so that he totally disowned the divine Sonship, both of Jesus and Christ, and by such denial denied both the Father and Son 13.

"The Apostle goes on to say, Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God. Where again he manifestly strikes at the Cerinthian and Ebionite principles, which allowed not Jesus to be the Son of God, in any true and proper sense, such as St. John lays down in several places of his writings, but particularly in the entrance to his Gospel 14.

"In the chapter next following, the Apostle repeats the same thing as before, or uses words to the same effect; Whosever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God'; and soon after adds, Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?? Here lay the main stress, - to believe that Jesus, who was truly and really Man, was as truly and really the eternal Son of God's. The Apostle in the next verse seems to point at the Docetae, as he had before done in the same Epistle', being equally concerned to maintain that Christ had real flesh, as that He had real Divinity; that so the faith of the Gospel might stand upon this firm foundation, that the Eternal Son of God became Son of Man for the salvation of mankind. Hereupon therefore the Apostle, in defence of Christ's real humanity, says, This is He that came by water and blood's. What he elsewhere expresses by His coming in the flesh, here he expresses more emphatically, by His coming in, or by, water and blood; alluding to what Christ shed at His passion, as a proof that He had then a real body, and was really man, not a spectre, phantom, or apparition, as some heretics pretended. It is to be noted, that the ancient visionaries (who were the Simonians, Menandrians, Saturnilians, and Basilidians), being ashamed perhaps to confess Christ crucified, contrived any wild supposition imaginable to evade it. Basilides pretended that Christ Himself did not suffer, but that Simon of Cyrene was crucified in His room 8. The elder Docetæ said that Christ had no real body, and suffered in appearance only.

"But the Apostle here emphatically observes that Christ came by water and blood: this shedding of both water and blood out of his side, at his Passion, was a demonstration, that there was a real body then hanging upon the cross, not a phantom, or a spiritual substance. Which very argument is well urged by Ireneus and Novatian 10, in proof of the same thing, against the Docetæ. As St. John is the only Evangelist who has related that circumstance of the Passion 11, so it is observable how particular a stress he lays upon it, immediately subjoining, in confirmation of it, and he that saw it bare record, and his record is true. And he confirms it further from two prophecies out of the Old Testament.

"St. John strengthens the argument further by superadding the consideration of the testimony And there is the Spirit also bearing witness, because the Spirit is truth 12, is essential truth. The Spirit residing in the Church, and working in believers by supernatural graces, bears testimony to the doctrine taught by the Apostles, and believed by the Church; particularly to the doctrine here spoken of, viz., that Christ the Son of God became Son of Man for the salvation of mankind.

"The Apostle, in the close of this Epistle, sums up all in these strong words: we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know Him that is true, and we are in Him that is true, even in His Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God and eternal life 13.

"The title of true God, in this text, is to be understood of Christ, as I have shown elsewhere. I would observe further, how aptly every word is chosen to obviate the erroneous tenets of Cerinthus, and of other the like false teachers of those times. The Son of God, not the son of Joseph and Mary, nor the Son of the only-begotten, but the immediate Son of God, related to God as a son to a father, not as a creature to his Lord and Maker. He is come, come in the flesh, and not merely to reside for a time, or occasionally, and to fly off again, but to abide and dwell with man, clothed with humanity. We are in Him that is true, in the true Father, by His Son Jesus Christ, who is the true God; not an inferior power or angel (such as Cerinthus supposed the Demiurgus, or Creator to be), not a created LEon, the offspring of the Monogenes, or of Silence, as Cerinthus fondly imagined the Logos to be; but true God, one with the Father. And He is eternal life, the same that had been with the Father, from the beginning, before any thing was created, consequently from all eternity.

"I have now gone," says Dr. Waterland, "through the Epistle of St. John. The sum of what I have advanced is, that St. John most apparently levelled a great part of his First Epistle against the Cerinthian doctrines.

"It appears further, that in his Epistle particularly, he has asserted the necessity of believing our Lord's divine Sonship, His proper Divinity, under pain of being excluded from heaven and happiness. Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father. Whosoever denies Christ to be Son of God, in St. John's sense of Son, a Son that was always with God, and is God', is a liar and antichrist, denying both the Father and the Son. The conclusion therefore is, that the denying our blessed Lord's real Divinity, is heresy and antichristianism, much to be abhorred by every disciple of Christ, according to the infallible decision of an inspired Apostle 2. Many were the evasions and subterfuges of self-opinionated men, who thought it a thing incredible that the Divine Word should put on flesh, or become man; and who chose rather to pass censure upon the wisdom of Heaven, than suspect their own. But sober and modest men resigned up their faith to divine Revelation; and among the foremost of those was our blessed Apostle. So now, taking in what the Scriptures have declared of the truth of the doctrine of the Trinity in Unity; besides the true and natural import of the form of Baptism, in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; we have the determination of St. John himself for the importance of the doctrine of our Lord's Divinity; and of consequence, for the doctrine of a co-equal and co-eternal Trinity 3."

VII. The student of Holy Writ will readily acknowledge the importance of these statements as elucidating the design and language of St. John in his Epistles; and they are confirmed by the fact, that one of St. John's disciples, S. Ignatius, speaks in similar language of censure and caution against the same heresies.

Here again we may refer to the words of Bp. Bull '. "The words in which S. Ignatius exhorts the Magnesians 5 'to run together unto one Jesus Christ, who came forth from the Father, and who is and hath returned unto one,' are plainly aimed against the Gnostics, especially the Cerinthians; for the Cerinthians did not believe in one Jesus Christ, but taught that Jesus was one, and Christ another, who came down from the supreme power upon Jesus after His baptism, and returned again from Jesus before His Passion, back to His own pleroma. Nor did they acknowledge one Father of Jesus Christ; but professed that the Father was the Father of Christ. Next, when Ignatius afterwards says 6, 'that the Prophets of the Old Testament were inspired by the grace of Christ, to convince the unbelievers that there is one God, who hath manifested Himself through Jesus Christ His Son,' in these words again the Gnostics are evidently glanced at. For they all taught, that the Father of Jesus was the Demiurgus or Creator of the world, and God who created the world was one, the God who manifested himself to mankind through Christ his Son, another."

These assertions may also be confirmed by the testimony of another English Prelate, Bishop Pearson, who has observed, that the heresies of Ebion and the Docetæ were specially censured and condemned by St. John, and his scholar, S. Ignatius, in his Epistles; the former heresy involving a denial of the divinity of Christ, and the latter impugning His humanity?

Another of St. John's disciples, S. Polycarp, joins with his brother Bishop and brother Martyr, S. Ignatius, in condemning these erroneous and strange doctrines.

"Every one," says he, "who does not confess that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is an anti-

Such were the doctrines taught by the disciples of St. John.

VIII. Almighty God permitted Heresies to arise even in the Apostolic Age, and under His controlling power and superintending providence, Heresies have been made subservient to the clearer manifestation, and stronger confirmation, of the Faith.

Hence, therefore, it is clear, that the Heresies which now impugn the doctrine of Christ's Godhead and Manhood, and the reality and efficacy of His Atonement, are not of modern origin. They who would despoil Christ's Person of its historic reality, and would reduce it to a visionary phantom, and would dissolve the solid verities of the Gospel into legendary fables, are not propounding novelties. Their "new light is an old darkness." They are only borrowing the Heresies of ancient days. They are dressing them up in new attire, and displaying them in a new fashion to the world. Their theories, when stripped of their disguise, are nothing more than reproductions of the exploded dogmas of Ebion, Cerinthus, and the Docetæ, which were propagated in primitive times.

IX. By the mercy of God, the life of the Apostle and Evangelist St. John, the beloved disciple of Christ, was extended to the beginning of the second century after Christ. By God's good Providence he was still living, and governing the Asiatic Church, when those heresies sprung up, like tares sown by the Enemy, in the field of Christ. By the inspiration of the Holy Ghost he wrote his Gospel, in which the doctrine of the Divinity of Christ is asserted in clear language?, and in which the evidences of His Humanity in life and death, particularly in the shedding forth of the Blood and Water from His side when pierced on the cross, are displayed to the world 5.

By the same holy guidance, St. John was moved to write Epistles, in which he has delivered an Apostolic verdict on those who deny or undermine those verities of the Gospel.

St. Paul, writing at Ephesus to the Corinthians, and having drawn a divine picture of Christian Love', concludes the Epistle with the solemn words, "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema Maran-atha ";" and he closes his Epistle to the Ephesians, "Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity 6," i. e. in incorruptness of doctrine, and holiness of life. St. Paul's warnings are repeated by St. John.

He who was the beloved disciple, and who was taught by the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of Love, has dwelt more at large than any other writer of the New Testament on the duty and blessedness of Christian Love.

Yet he, the divinely inspired Apostle of Love, the aged Evangelist, has pronounced the sternest sentence of reprobation upon those who impugn the doctrine of Christ's Godhead, or of Christ's Manhood and of His propitiatory sacrifice on the cross. He has spoken of them in the strongest terms of censure, and has condemned them as deceivers, as fulse prophets, as antichrists. He forbids his disciples to receive them into their houses, or to bid them God speed. And why? Because he well knew, and has taught in his Epistle", that those doctrines display the Love of God to Man in its true light; and because they are the genuine source and well-spring of Love to God and of Love to Man in God; and because wheresoever any of those doctrines are denied, the life of Love soon vanishes away.

Such considerations as these may serve to place in a clear light the enormity of the guilt of heretical teaching on these doctrines.

They may also guard the faithful, in our own days and in all ages, against those erroneous and strange notions, in whatever form they may present themselves; and establish their minds in a firm belief of the truth.

With the Epistles of St. John in our hands, we are enabled by God's grace to stand proof against all assaults, however violent, of the enemies of the Gospel. We are empowered to overcome all who impugn the doctrine on which the Church of Christ is built', and on which our hopes of salvation rest; the doctrine of the unity of the two Natures, the Divine and the Human, in the one Person of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and Son of Man<sup>1</sup>. In controversies concerning the Godhead and Manhood of Christ our appeal is not to the words of human wisdom, but to the words of the Holy Spirit of God, speaking by the mouth of St. John.

On the style and structure of this Epistle.

In some respects this Epistle occupies almost an unique place among the Epistles of the New Testament.

It does not bear the writer's name, or title, and can hardly be said in strictness to have the character of an epistolary address.

It stands in striking contrast to St. Paul's Epistles. They, for the most part, have a rhetorical vehemence combined with logical vigour. They are Epistles, inasmuch as they were sent in writing to those persons to whom they were addressed. They have also the freshness and vigour of speeches.

The present work of St. John has the character of a theological homily, poured forth, ever and anon, in the quietly-flowing effusions of sacred Poetry. Evidence of this character may be observed almost at the beginning, in some of the verses of the first chapter. The antithetical structure and rhythmical cadence of these sentences seem to have been designedly framed in such a manner as to commend themselves both to the car and the memory of the hearers. To Greek readers, familiar with the lyrical arrangements of the Greek Drama, this mode of writing would have had a peculiar charm; and Jewish readers would recognize in it a correspondence to the style and diction of their own Prophetical Books; to which the Biblical student's attention has been drawn by Bishop Lowth, Bishop Jebb, and others.

The following specimen is from the first chapter (vv. 5-7):-

This then is the Message,
Which we have heard of Him, and declare to you,
That God is Light,
And Darkness in Him is none.

If we say that we have fellowship with Him, And walk in the darkness, We lie; And do not the Truth.

But if we walk in the Light,
As He Himself is in the Light;
We have fellowship one with another;
And the Blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin.

There is a similar antistrophical character, and musical flow, in what follows (vv. 8-10):-

If we say that we have no sin, We deceive ourselves, And the Truth is not in us.

If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, And to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

If we say that we have not sinned, We make Him a liar; And His Word is not in us.

<sup>1</sup> It is well said by Bp. Bull, referring to this characteristic use of this Epistle, "The doctrinal criteria of this Epistle (1 John ii. 18, 19; iii. 23; iv. 1, 2; v. 10—13. 20) enabled the Faithful to discern those heretical Teachers who diffused false and impious doctrines in the Apostolic age concerning the person of our Saviour."

The sum of these criteria is this: "Every Teacher who confesses one Christ Jesus, verily Son of God, verily made Man, for the salvation of men, is of God; in so far, that is, as he makes this confession. But, on the other hand, every one is to be held to be a false prophet and an Antichrist, who does not confess this."

terize as heretics those who deny the Saviour to be very man, or to be very God, as Tertullian has observed (de Præser. c. 33). It is therefore abundantly clear from the Apostolic writings, as well as from other early testimony, that there existed some persons, in the age of the Apostles, who denied the Divinity of Christ, and who on that account were regarded by the Apostles as Heretics and Antichrists; so far were they who held such doctrines from being considered as brethren, and true members of the Church. Hence also it is clearly evident, that the doctrine concerning the Incarnation of the Son of God, and concerning Christ, Very God and very Man, was maintained by true Pastors of the Church from the beginning as the very root and groundwork of Christianity." Bp. Bull, Jud. Eccl. Cath. ii. 10.

We may compare the following specimens in the second chapter (vv. 9—11):—
He that saith that he is in the light,
And hateth his brother,
Is in darkness until now.

He that loveth his brother, Abideth in the light, And there is no stumbling-block in him.

But he that hateth his brother, Is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, Because the Darkness blinded his eyes.

And the following, in the fourth chapter (vv. 7—11):—
Beloved, let us love one another;
For Love is of God:
And every one that loveth, is born of God

And knoweth God;

He that loveth not, knoweth not God: For God is Love.

In this was manifested the Love of God in us, That God hath sent His only-begotten Son into the World, In order that we might live through Him.

Herein is Love;
Not that we loved God,
But that He loved us,
And sent His Son a propitiation for our sins.
Beloved, if God so loved us,
We also ought to love one another.

The same remark may be applied to other portions of this Epistle, which would probably be found to gain much in beauty and clearness, if these portions of it were displayed to the eye in this antistrophical arrangement.

The date of the Epistle may probably be assigned to the close of the first century. The question concerning the persons to whom it was in the first instance addressed, will be considered in the Introduction to the Second Epistle.

CH. I. 1.] St. John begins this Epistle without any mention of himself, or of those to whom it is addressed. He appears to be unconscious of his own individuality, and that of his readers, and to be absorbed in the contemplation of the Divine Glory and infinite love and condescension of Christ. His heart is hot within him, and he speaks with his tongue.

So it had been in his Gospel. There also he is full of the subject; and gives utterance to the great truths which struggled within him for vent, and exclaims, "In the beginning was the Word."

In like manner, the Apostle St. Paul, in writing on the same subject to the Hebrews, does not begin the Epistle with any mention of himself or of them; but withdraws himself and them from the eye of the reader, and displays Christ.

In the language of the commencement of this Epistle, and in that of the Gospel, St. John appears to revert to the opening words of the Old Testament. "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth" (Gen. i. 1). There was the beginning of the visible world. St. John had described in his Gospel the spiritual Genesis. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. All things were made by Him." (John i. 1-3) And now in his Epistle he begins with Him Who had no beginning, but is and has been from Eternity.

S. Clement of Alexandria (Adumbrat. p. 1009) observes, that "this Epistle begins with a spiritual proem, following that of the Gospel of St. John, and in unison with it." He therefore supposed the Epistle to have been written after the Gospel. See

The harmony subsisting between the beginning of St. John's Gospel and that of his Epistle, in declaring the doctrines of the Pre-existence, Divinity, and Creative Power of the Everlasting WORD, and of His Incarnation,-in opposition to the Heretics of Apostolic times, who denied those doctrines, - was observed also, in ancient times, by Dionysius, Bishop of Alexandria, in Eusebius, vii. 25.

 $-\delta$  ην ἀπ' ἀρχης] That which was from the beginning (cp. 2 Thess. ii. 13). A statement directed against the false doctrines of those who said, as the Ebionites did, that Jesus was a mere man; or, as the Cerinthians, that he was merely inhabited by Christ as a spiritual emanation for a time.

The clue to the right understanding of this proæmium, and of the other doctrinal portions of St. John's Epistles, is to be found in a reference to the errors of those false Teachers to whom St. John alludes as antichrists (ii. 18), who endeavoured to seduce his disciples (ii. 26; cp. iii. 7), and denied that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh (iv. 1-3), and that Jesus is the Christ, and who denied the Father and the Son (ii. 22). See Tertullian, c. Marcion.; Præscr. c. 15, and c. 33. S. Jerome, Prolog. in Matt. S. Athanas. c. Arian. Orat. iii. vol. i. p. 539; and compare the remarks of Bp. Bull, Jud. Eccl. Cath. cap. ii. vol. vi. pp. 33-47, ed. Oxon. 1827, and above, Introduction to this Epistle, pp. 98-103, and the preliminary note to 2 Pet. ii. 1, p. 86, and Dr. Water-land on the Trinity, ch. vi. vol. v. ed. 1823, where this subject is well treated with reference to this procemium and other portions of this Epistle, as directed against Ebion, Cerinthus, and the Docelæ; and cp. Dr. Burton, Bampton Lectures, Lect. vi. p. 168.

- δ ἀκηκόαμεν] what we have heard, what we have seen with our own eyes. Having declared the eternal pre-existence of Christ, St. John next proceeds here, as in his Gospel, to assert the reality of His Humanity. See John i. 1—14.

— δ ἐθεασάμεθα] what we looked at: spectavimus, as a θέαμα or spectaculum; attracting and riveting our attention. See John i. 14; iv. 35; the word θεᾶσθαι is applied to the action of the Apostles gazing at our Lord ascending into heaven, Acts i. 11.

— καl αί χεῖρες ἡμῶν ἐψηλάφησαν] and our hands did handle, or feel. Observe the aorist. He refers to his own act and that of the Apostles after the Resurrection, in obedience to Christ's words, "Handle Me, Feel Me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see Me have." (Luke xxiv. 39.) Heretherefore is an addition to the statement concerning the humanity of the Everlasting Word. He had a true body, and the same body before and after His Resurrection; and we felt that Body.

Here then is a reply to the false teaching of the followers of Simon Mayus and the Docetæ, who said, that our Lord's human body was a visionary phantom. This notion is confuted by St. John's scholar, S. Ignatius (ad Smyrn. c. 1 and c. 2), who says that οἱ ἄπιστοι λέγουσιν αὐτὸν (i. e. Christ) τὸ δοκεῖν πεπονθέναι, αὐτοί τὸ δοκεῖν ὅντες, where see Bp. Pearson's note, p. 433, Jacobson, and ibid. c. 3, where S. Ignatius relates that our Lord Jacobson, and ibid. c. 3, where 3. 19mm related states said to St. Peter and others after His Resurrection, "λάβετε, ψηλαφήσατ έμε, καὶ ἴδετε, ὅτι οὐκ εἰμὶ δαιμόνιον ἀσώματον, καὶ εὐθὺς αὐτοῦ ήψαντο, καὶ ἐπίστευσαν, κρατηθέντες τῆ σαρκὶ αὐτοῦ, καὶ τῷ πνεύματι, c. 4, and c. 5, and ad Trall. c. 10, and c. 11; and cp. S. Polycarp, ad Philipp. c. 7, and S. Irenœus, i. 20. On the word ψηλαφάν, see Gen. xxvii. 12. 21, 22, and Dean περί τοῦ Λόγου τῆς (ωῆς] concerning the Logos, or Word, of Life; that is, concerning the Word, whose essential quality is Life. For in Him is the Life, He "is the Way, the Truth, and the Life" (John i. 4; xiv. 6). He is "the Resurrection and the Life" (John xi. 25).

This appears to be a prophetic protest against those false

Teachers, who separated the Life (ζωή) from the Logos, and made them to be like two Emanations or Eons, distinct from, and subordinate to, the only-beyotten Son of God; as was done by some Gnostic Teachers. See Irenæus, i. 1, and cp. Waterland, vol. v. p. 183.

The preposition  $\pi\epsilon\rho l$ , concerning, defines the subject of the whole sentence, and has a connexion with  $d\pi\alpha\gamma\gamma\epsilon\lambda\lambda\rho\mu\epsilon\nu$  in v.~3.

On this use of περὶ, cp. ii. 26; v. 9, 10. 1 Thess. i. 9.
2. καὶ ἡ ζωὴ ἐφανερώθη] and the Life was manifested. St. John uses καl to introduce a parenthesis here, as in the beginning of his Gospel (i. 14). The word ἐφανερώθη had been employed by St. Paul in the same sense as here, with reference to the Incarnation; see on 1 Tim. iii. 16. St. John saw the φανέρωσις, or Epiphany of the Life, when he beheld Christ raising Lazarus and others from the Dead, and when he saw Christ risen from and others from the Dead, and when he saw Christ risen from the Grave, by His own power, according to His own Word, John ii. 19; and he heard Him say, "I am the Resurrection and the Life" (John xi. 25); "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life" (xiv. 6); "I am He that liveth, and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore" (Rev. i. 18).

This verse is parenthetical: cp. Winer, § 63.

— τὴν ζωὴν τὴν αἰώνιον] the Life eternal: said in opposition to those Heretics who denied the eternal pre-existence of Christ. Dr. Waterland, v. p. 183.

- προις τον Πατέρα] with the Father. There is no exact equivalent in English to προις here; its meaning is best explained by St. John's own words,  $\delta \Lambda \delta \gamma o s \dot{\eta} \nu \pi \rho \delta s \dot{\tau} \partial \nu \Theta \epsilon \delta \nu$ , i. e. united to God and ever abiding in and with Him. This statement is made in opposition to those false Teachers, who separated Jesus from Christ, as Cerinthus did, and said that the Logos was the Son of the Only-begotten, but was not the Only-begotten of the Father; and that the Logos was a separate Æon, estranged from God. Cp. Greg. Nazian. Orat. xliv. Dr. Waterland, v. pp. 181. 188, and Tillemont, ii. p. 17.

3. δ έωράκαμεν] what we have seen—a word here repeated thrice, for greater assurance of the truth of the reality of Christ's Humanity, in opposition to the Docetæ; and of His distinct Personality. See Tertullian, c. Praxeam, c. 15.

καl ὑμῖν] to you also. Elz. omits the καl, which is in

- ка) n кончина! and our communion is with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ : a declaration of the truth against those who divided Jesus from Christ, and who denied His Divine Sonship, and rejected the doctrine of the Incarnation of the Son of God, by virtue of which He dwells in us (John i. 14), and we have communion with Him and with the Father. Not one of these false Teachers acknowledged that the Word was made Flesh. S. Irenœus, iii. c. 11. See Introduction, p. 100.

The δè, but, in this clause, is not to be unnoticed. The καl, and, adds something, and the de is slightly adversative. Cp. 2 Pet. i. 5. The sentence may be thus paraphrased, And, remember, our communion is not like an ordinary human association, and much less like an heretical association, but our communion is even with the Father, and with His Son Jesus Christ. So glorious

See Irenæus, i. 6; iii. 11, and above, note on John i. 16. Col. ii. 9.

— δ Θεδς φῶς ἐστιν] God is Light, and in Him is no darkness at all: a sentence opposed to the error of most of the ness at all: a sentence opposed to the error of most of the Gnostics, who asserted the existence of two hostile Deities, one a God of Light, the other of Darkness. S. Irenæus, i. 25. 28, Grabe. Theodoret, Hæret, fab. procem. S. Epiphan. Ilær, xxvi. Cp. Ittig, Hæres. p. 34, and note above, John i. 5, and Bp. Andrewes, iii. pp. 371—376. Almost all the Gnostics adopted the theory of Dualism, derived from the Magians, and afterwards have the Magians of the Magians of the Magians of the Magians. developed by the Marcionites and Manichæans

6. ἐἀν εξπωμεν] if we say—as many of the Gnostics do—that we have communion with Him, and if we walk in darkness, we lie. They alleged that, by reason of the spiritual seed in them, and of their superior spiritual knowledge, and communion with the light, they were free to act as they chose, and were not polluted thereby, and were not guilty of sin. (Irenæus, i. 6. 20.) Some of them even ventured to extol the workers of the most audacious acts of darkness, such as Cain, Korah, and Judas, as persons gifted with superior freedom of thought, and intrepidity of action (see on Jude 11); and to affirm that, since the soul could not attain to perfection except by knowledge, it was even requisite for men to make themselves familiar with all manner of evil, in order that by an universal empiricism of evil they might arrive the sooner at their ultimate consummation. See Irenœus (i. 25. 4, ed. Stieren; p. 103, ed. Grabe: ii. 32, ed. Stieren; p. 187, Grabe), and cp. Blunt on the Heresies of the Apostolic age; Lectures, ch. ix. p. 179, and below on ii. 3; iii. 9.

7. αὐτός] ipse, He Himself,—emphatic: He Himself Who is our Head is (ἔστιν, exists) in the Light; consequently we His members ought to be in the Light also.

— κοινωνίαν έχομεν μετ' ἀλλήλων] we have communion with one another. Here is a reply to those who would restrain Catholic communion to their own sect. St. John says that, " If we walk in the light we have communion one with another; and truly our communion is with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ," If we walk in the light, and communicate with the Father and the Son, in the Catholic Faith, "once for all delivered to the Saints" (Jude 3), and in the Christian Sacraments, we hold com-munion with all the Saints of every age and every nation in the Church. This is true Catholic communion, and those who are members of it are the true Catholics. Cp. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. ix. p. 357, and the authorities quoted in Theophilus Anglicanus, part ii. ch. viii.

- και τὸ αίμα 'Ιησοῦ] and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin. Some MSS., e. g. B, C, and Versions omit Χριστοῦ, but it is found in A, G, H, and in most Cursives, and the Syriac and Vulg., and it imparts completeness to the doctrinal statement here, which declares that Jesus is the Christ -against the Cerinthians - and that He is the Son of God-against the Ebionites - and that He shed His blood on the crossagainst the Simonians and Docetæ-and that it cleanseth from all sin-against those who deny pardon on earth to deadly sin after Baptism (see on Heb. vi. 4)-and it cleanseth us if we walk in the light-against the antinomian Gnostics, who changed the grace of God into lasciviousness (Jude 4), and alleged that a man might walk in darkness, and yet be clean from all guilt of sin.

Tertulian (de Pudicitia, c. 18) cites this passage from v. 5, and part of ch. ii. 1, and connects it with v. 16, expounding it in somewhat a Montanistic sense; to which he had been tempted by the vicious use made by some of God's grace in Christ.

But St. John himself affirms, that he declares the all-sufficient efficacy of Christ's cleansing blood, not in order that any one may sin, or be at ease when he has sinned, but in order that men may not sin (ii. 1); inasmuch as no less a sacrifice than the death of the Son of God was required to propitiate the offended justice of God for sin (see below on ii. 2, and iv. 10); and no less a price than His blood, to ransom us from the bondage of Satan, to which we were reduced by sin. Thus he shows the heinousness of sin in God's sight; and displays the ingratitude of those who continue in sin, which cost the Son of God such bitter sufferings.

He says that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us; that is, it is ever cleansing us from all sin: that blood which was shed once for all on the cross for the sins of the World, is always being effectually opplied to individuals, in the washing away of the guilt of original sin by the Sacrament of Baptism; and in the cleansing of them from actual sin, on the condition of their faith and repentance, in the administration of the Sacrament of His

8. έαυτους πλανωμέν] we are leading ourselves astray from the right road in which we were,-if we say that we have not sin, and therefore do not need the application of Christ's cleansing blood, mentioned in v. 7.

9. πιστός ἐστὶ He is faithful in fulfilling His promises of forgiveness through Christ, (See Luke xxiv. 47. Acts ii. 38, 39; v. 31. 1 Cor. i. 9; x. 13. 1 Thess. v. 24. Heb. x. 23; xi. 11.) And He is also just, in order to forgive us our sins. this sense of va, not used for  $\omega\sigma\tau\epsilon$ , but in its natural meaning, in order that, see Winer, § 53, p. 409, and declaring the gracious truth, that God's attributes of faithfulness and justice, or righteousness, are exercised in order to our pardon. He in His love to us has provided a ransom for us (see iv. 10), by which His justice is fully satisfied, by reason of the infinite value of the price paid for our redemption, namely, the blood of His well-beloved Son, Whose death was the reconciliation of an offended God, and the satisfaction made to a just God, Who is therefore able to justify the sinner, without any impeachment of His own justice. See above on Rom. iii. 26, and below on iv. 10. And on the sense of δίκαιος, righteous, cp. 2 Thess. i. 5. 2 Tim. iv. 8. 1 Pet. ii.

10. ὅτι οὐχ ἡμαρτήκαμεν] that we have not sinned, and are not sinners. On this sense of the perfect, see below, iii. 9.

 — ψεύστην ποιοῦμεν αὐτόν] we make Him a liar; we constitute and treat Him as such; because He has given His Son for the purpose of tasting death for every one (Heb. ii. 10), which could not be said, if there was any one who was not liable to the penalty σo sin, which is death. Rom. v. 12; vi. 23. On this use of ποιῶ, see on 2 Cor. v. 21, and below, v. 10.

Hence it appears that the Church of Rome, in its new dogma of the Immaculate Conception, ascribing sinlessness to the blessed Virgin Mary, is chargeable with this sin among others, that it imputes falsehood to God. Cp. notes above on Matt. xii. 48. Acts xx. 27. Gal. i. 8, 9. Rom. viii. 3.

Cπ. II. 1, 2. τεκνία μου] My little children. An address of endearment;—" diminutivum, amoris causâ." (Bengel.) It is not expressive of littleness in them, but of his tender love toward them; a love like that of a Mother for her offspring. Cp. John xiii. 33, and St. Paul's words, Gal. iv. 19. This term of endearment is used seven times in this Epistle, ii. 1. 12. 28; iii. 7. 18; iv. 4; v. 21. And this appellation τεκνία μου, "my little children," is addressed to all St. John's hearers and readers of every age. Cp. Bengel here, and below on ii. 12. It comes with special propriety from him who was now aged, and survived all the Apostles; who said to his fugitive scholar,  $\tau l$   $\mu \epsilon \phi \epsilon \dot{\nu} \gamma \epsilon i s$ ,  $\tau \dot{\epsilon} \kappa \nu \sigma \nu \tau \delta \nu \sigma \epsilon a \nu \tau \sigma \hat{\nu} \pi \alpha \tau \dot{\epsilon} \rho a$ ; (Clem. Alex. ap. Euseb. iii. 23,) and whose often-repeated sermon in the Church was "filioli, diligite alterutrum " (S. Jerome in Galat. vi.).

I write these things, not in order that you may presume on God's grace, and pervert it into an occasion for sin, and abuse your Christian liberty, as the heretical Teachers and their disciples do (1 Pet. ii. 16. 2 Pet. ii. 19. Jude 4); but in order that ye may not sin; and yet, since the flesh is weak, we have the comforting assurance that if any man shall have sinned (αμάρτη, zorist; not ἀμαρτάνη, present) we have an advocate with (πρόs, see i. 2, "apud") the Father, Jesus Christ; being righteous, and prevailing by His righteousness (see 2 Cor. v. 21), and He Himself (αὐτὸs) is propitiation for our sins; but not for ours only, but for the whole world.

"Observe the tense of the verb here; he does not say έἀν τις αμαρτάνη, "si quis peccet," if any one sin; but he says, ἐἀν τις ἀμάρτη, "si quis peccaverit" (Vulg.), if any one have sinned:

he does not give encouragement, or afford security, to the future sinner, but he comforts the penitent, who is sorry for his sin.

On the meaning of the word παράκλητος, a word only used by St. John in the New Testament, see above, John xiv. 16, and compare Heb. vii. 25.

This doctrinal statement concerning Jesus Christ our Advo-cate with the Father, is made by St. John in opposition to the tenets of the Cerinthians and others, -especially in Asia, St. John's province,-who invoked Angels as Mediators between God and Man, and thus derogated from the dignity of Christ our only Mediator and Advocate. 1 Tim. ii. 5. See above on Col. ii. 18.

Lest any should become careless by hearing that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseih from all sin, the Apostle quells their presumption and inspires them with fear. God is faithful and just to forgive you your sins, if you grieve over your sins, and confess and repent of your sins. My little children, he adds, I write these things unto you, in order that ye may not sin. But if, through human infirmity, ye have been betrayed into some sin, ye may not therefore despair. No. Ye have an Advocate with the Father. First, then, take heed that ye do not sin; and if ye have fallen into sin, condemn yourselves, and fly to your Advocate, cry to Him. He will plead for you to the Judge. S. Augustine, Tract. i. on this Epistle, in the third volume of S. Augustine's Works in the Benedictine Edition.

Observe St. John's meekness. He had lain in the bosom of Jesus, and had imbibed heavenly mysteries from His mouth; but he humbleth himself. He does not set himself apart from sinners, and represent himself as their advocate, but he puts himself in the number of sinners, and says, "we have an Advocate with the Father." S. Augustine.

Compare the words of St. James, iii. 2, "In many things we all offend," and Bp. Andrewes, v. 430.

Observe abros here, emphatic, as used in the nominative. He Himself, He and He alone, is the propitiation for our sins: see above, Matt. i. 21; viii. 17: here i. 7; ii. 6.

On iλασμός, "a propitiatory sacrifice implying offence and indignation in God, Who was to be appeased" (Bengel), see Rom. iii. 25. Eph. i. 7. Heb. ii. 17, and the note below on iv.

On the use of περl, for, on account of, see on Gal. i. 4. Rom, viii. 3; below, iv. 10.

St. John says, that Christ Himself is the propitiation for our sins; not that the sacrifice offered once for all on the cross is now repeated; but that its efficacy never ceases. See on Heb. x. 12, and the note even of a learned Roman Catholic Expositor, Estius, here, who does not hesitate to allow, that Christ is the sacrifice once offered upon the cross; and that by this sacrifice He propitiates God, inasmuch as He applies this sacrifice—which is sufficient to take away the sins of the whole World—to those persons to whom it pleases Him to apply it, for the pardon of their sins. "Christus est hostia, per quam, semel in arâ crucis oblatam, Deum nobis placat, in quantum videlicet hostiam illam, pro omnium salute sufficientem, continuè quibus vult applicat, ad remissionem peccatorum." See above, i. 7.

St. John here declares the doctrine of Universal Redemption through Christ. "Quam latè peccatum, tam latè propitiatio" (Bengel). Sin was universal in its extent, and the sacrifice is universal in its application. Here therefore is a strong assertion of the doctrine of Universal Redemption, against Calvinistic error. Cp. above, Heb. ii. 9. 1 Tim. ii. 4, and 2 Pet. ii. 1.

3. καὶ ἐν τούτφ γινώσκομεν] And by this we know that we have known Him, if we keep His commandments. We may infer our knowledge of Him from our obedience to Him. Christian Practical Health of the Christian Health of the Health of the Christian Health of the Health tian Praxis is the test of Christian Gnosis. A condemnation of the heretical presumption, and licentious depravity of the Gnostics. As is well said here by Bengel, St. John here censures those c ch. 1.6. & 4.20. 4 c O λέγων, Έγνωκα αὐτὸν, καὶ τὰς ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ μὴ τηρῶν, ψεύστης ἐστὶ, καὶ ἐν τούτω ἡ ἀλήθεια οὐκ ἔστιν.

who vaunted knowledge, and despised obedience. Cp. 1 Tim. vi. 20. 2 Pet. i. 5.

Hence the frequent occurrence of the word γινώσκω in this Epistle, where it is found about twenty-five times; see ii. 4, 5. 13, 14. 18; iii. 16. 19, 20. 24; iv. 2. 6, 7, 8. 13. 16; v. 2. 20; and of olda, which occurs about twelve times: see ii. 20, 21; iii. 2. 5. 14, and passim. St. Peter repeats the word ἐπίγνωσις for a like reason; see 2 Pet. i. 2.

Throughout the Epistle St. John assures those who are trained in the saving verities of the Christian Faith, and who bring forth the fruits of Faith in holiness of life, that they know all things; they are the genuine Gnostics. Indeed, knowledge in the full Christian sense of the word implies love. See Didymus here, who observes that to "know the Lord" means in the language of Holy Scripture, "to fear, to love, to obey Him."

St. John also declares, that those persons, who vaunt knowledge, and pervert the truth of Christ, and do not keep His com-

Redge, and pervert the truth of Christ, and do not keep this commandments, know nothing, but are blind, and walk in darkness. See ii. 11. 2 Pet. i. 9; and cp. Dr. Hammond here, p. 824.

The word γινώσκω, signifying experimental knowledge, is distinguished from οίδα, which has a wider signification. The Gnostic heretics asserted it to be a duty, γινώσκειν πάντα, to have experimental knowledge of all things evil as well as good; see on i. 6: and they professed εἰδέναι πάντα, to have scientific knowledge of all things, however transcendental and mysterious. Compare below, ii. 29, as to the distinction between the two words, είδέναι and γινώσκειν.

- ἐὰν τὰς ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ τηρῶμεν] if we keep His commandments. The word Typelv, to keep, implies watchfulness, as an essential requisite for obedience.

5. ἐν τούτω] by this we know that we are in Him. How do we know that we are in God? The answer is, by obedience,

6. δ λέγων ἐν αὐτῷ μένειν] he who saith that he abideth in Him. Observe the frequent occurrence of the word μένω, to abide, to wait with patience and perseverance,—in this and in the Second Epistle of St. John. It is repeated twenty-six times. The duty of abiding patiently in God, by faith and obedience in evil days, is characteristically inculcated by this beloved disciple, who survived his brother Apostles, and whose life was prolonged for near forty years after the destruction of Jerusalem, even to the age of a hundred years and more, and who, in days of persecution from without, and of rebuke and blasphemy from within (see v. 18), waited patiently and stedfastly as a faithful witness to the true faith in Christ's Incarnation and Godhead, and who had received a special charge from Christ to tarry (μένειν) till He came, and took him to Himself. See above on John xxi. 22, 23.

καθώς ἐκεῖνος περιεπάτησε] as He walked. Observe the emphatic ἐκείνος, He, spoken with feelings of reverence and adoration. "The Name" is the Name of Christ (3 John 7), "the Way" is the Way of Christ (Acts ix. 2, and note, Acts xx. 25); so, in this Epistle, the pronoun HE, is CHRIST. See iii. 3.

5. 7. 16; iv. 17.

Mark also the use of the aorist, περιεπάτησε. Christ's walking was one act of undeviating obedience to God.

7. ἀγαπητοὶ, οὐκ ἐντολὴν καινήν] Beloved (so the best MSS. and Editions. Elz. has ἀδελφοὶ), I write not a new commandment to you, but an old commandment, which ye had from the beginning. Do not listen to those false guides and Judaizing Teachers, who traduce the Gospel as a novelty; and who would limit the mercies of God, and the offices of Love, to their own sect or nation. The Christian Doctrine of Love of God, and of Love of all men in God, is the true doctrine from the beginning. Cp. Matt. v. 17. 2 John 5, "I beseech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, that we love one another." Cp. Clemens Alex. in Adumbrat. here, and Didymus, who say that Love is the Law of God from the time of the Law and the Prophets, and even from the beginning of the world; and so S. Cyril in Catenâ, and Cassiodor., Complex. p. 127, and Ecumen., and Theophylact, and Bp. Andrewes, v. 468, where he shows that the commandment of Love delivered in the Gospel is also in the Law of Moses and of Nature: it is in fact a necessary consequence of the Attributes of God Himself. And see Bp. Sanderson, iii. p. 315, and Dr. Hammond here.

8. πάλιν Again; said with some intimation of correction of what has been just spoken. In another respect the commandment of Love to God, and of all men in God, is a new one,  $\kappa \alpha \nu \dot{\eta}$ , not  $\nu \dot{\epsilon} \alpha$  (see on Eph. iv. 23, 24. Col. iii. 10), that is, it is made new, renewed, by Christ the second Adam, the Son of God, Who came from heaven to make all to be one new man in Himself (Eph. ii. 15), and Who has made all things new (2 Cor. v. 17. Rev. xxi. 5), and in Whom each of us is a new creature (Gal. vi. 15), and Who has given us the Holy Ghost in the Sacrament of the New Birth (John iii. 5), to renew us in the spirit of our minds (Tit. iii. 5), and Who is the Mediator of the New Covenant, and writes it by His Spirit in our hearts (Heb. viii. 8; ix. 15), and gives us a new name (Rev. ii. 17), and has made us citizens of the new Jerusalem (Rev. iii. 12; xxi. 2), and has encouraged us to look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness (2 Pct. iii. 13), and has thus given us new obligations, new motives, and new powers, to fulfil the law of Love, and has displayed new measures of largeness in its fulfilment, by His own precepts and example.

Therefore, as St. John relates in his Gospel, our Lord Himself had said, A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.

John xiii. 34.

- δ έστιν άληθες εν αὐτῷ καὶ εν ὑμίν ] which thing is true in Him (Christ) and in you.

What is it that is here declared to be true?

Not the commandment (erroln); the difference of gender precludes that interpretation. Nor is it simply the substance of the commandment that is asserted to be true; but the substance of it as new. Cp. Lücke, 2nd edition, and Huther here.

This new life of love is not a deceit, as the novel knowledge of those is, who say that they know God, and yet do not keep His commandments, especially this great commandment of all—Love; and who therefore lie (see v. 4), and do not the truth (see i. 6). Cp. v. 27, where  $\lambda \lambda \eta \theta \dot{\epsilon}$ s is put as here in contrast to the  $\psi \epsilon \bar{\nu} \delta \delta s$ , or lie, of the Gnostic pretenders to illumination, whose works of darkness belied their professions.

But this new life of Love to God and of Love to man in God is true, genuine, really and vitally subsisting, and visibly manifested, and effectually energizing in Christ, Who is the New Man, and in you, who are new creatures in Him; in Him Who is the Head, and in you His Members; for Love is the element which knits all together in one another and in Him, and is therefore the bond of perfectness. Col. iii. 14.

— δτι ή σκοτία παράγεται] because the darkness is passing away (see v. 17), and the true light already shineth. Therefore this old commandment which ye have from the beginning is, in a certain sense, new: it is renewed and restored in Christ and the Gospel; because the darkness of error and sin which usurped its place and clouded it over, is now passing by (παράγεται), being dispersed by the sunshine of the Gospel, as mists and clouds are by the sun's rays; and the light that is true shineth.

Observe the adjective ἀληθινόν, true, as opposed to what is counterfeit and false; see above on John xvii. 3, and below, v. 20. The Gnostics pretended to have light, to have special illumination; but their light is a false light, it is the light of "wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness" (Jude 13).

The darkness is the darkness of the Old Man; the light is that of the New Man. As the Apostle says, "Ye were sometime Darkness, but now are ye Light in the Lord. Walk as Children of the Light." Eph. v. 8. 14. I Thess. v. 5, 6. S. Augustine.

At your Baptism ye were enlightened (ἐφωπίσθητε. See on Heb. vi. 4; x. 32). Ye became children of Light (see on Eph. v. 8); ye were engrafted into Christ; and if any man is in Christ, says St. Paul, he is a new creature; the old things passed away  $(\pi \alpha \rho \hat{\eta} \lambda \theta \epsilon)$ : behold, all things are become new. See on 2 Cor. v. 17, which text affords an excellent comment on St. John's meaning here.

Hence we see how natural is the transition to what follows in this place concerning the baptismal duties, consequent on the baptismal privileges, of all those who by their baptismal burial of the old man, and by their baptismal incorporation into the New Man, passed from the world of Darkness to that of Light.

10. και σκάνδαλον έν αὐτῷ οὐκ ἔστιν] and there is no stumbling-block in him. A significant saying. Observe ἐν αὐτῷ, in him. Whosoever hateth his brother, walketh in darkness, and carrieth his own stumbling-blocks in himself: he hath them in his own heart, in his own evil passions, envy, hatred, and malice. Therefore he must fall: so to speak, he carries his fall along with him. As S. Cyprian well says (de Zelo, § 4), He who hates his brother is his own enemy. He is the enemy of his own soul. If you hate your brother he may avoid you, but you cannot fly from yourself. Wherever therefore you are, you have an adversary within you, you have an enemy always in your own bosom; but whosoever loveth his brother, abideth in the light, and there is no s/umbling-block in him. He has the element of light around him, and he has no stumbling-block in him.

Compare the prophetic declarations of Ezek. xiv. 3. These men have set up their idols in their own heart, and put the stumbling-block of their iniquity before their own face; cp. v. 7. Idols and stumbling-blocks are usually external, and erected by others, but these men bring forth idols and stumbling-blocks for themselves out of their own hearts. So great is their sin and

The beauty and force of these expressions are obvious: and the preposition èv is to be taken in its literal sense; which is well expressed by Bengel: " he who hates his brother is a stumbling-block to himself. But he who loves, walks at ease and has a clear road before him."

12. γράφω ὑμῖν, τεκνία] I write to you, my little children, whom I have begotten in Christ (cp. note above, ii. 1). The word τεκνία, little children, is to be distinguished from the word παιδία in v. 18.

The word τεκνία describes the spiritual relation in which all his hearers and readers stand to the Apostle, their spiritual father. See v. l. Cp. I Cor. iv. 14, τέκνα μου ἀγαπητά. 1 Cor. iv. 17. Eph. v. l. 1 Thess. ii. 7. 11. Philem. 10.

But the word παιδία, children, describes their childhood as compared with the maturer age of others here mentioned, viz.,

young men and fathers.

This distinction may be marked in English by prefixing "my" to the translation of τεκνία.

Observe now the order of the address here;

He first says,  $\Gamma \rho \dot{\alpha} \phi \omega \ \dot{\nu} \mu \dot{\nu} \nu$ ,  $\tau \epsilon \kappa \nu l \alpha$ . This is the general address, applicable to all. They are all dear to him as his little

Next this arrangement follows:

Γράφω ύμιν, πατέρες. Γράφω ύμιν, νεανίσκοι. Έγραψα ύμιν, παιδία.

Then the following:

Έγραψα ύμῖν, πατέρες. "Εγραψα ὑμῖν, νεανίσκοι.

Παιδία, ἐσχάτη ὥρα ἐστὶ, ν. 18.

Lastly, the series is summed up by the same address as that which began the series,— $\kappa al \ \nu \hat{\nu} \nu$ ,  $\tau \epsilon \kappa \nu l a$ ,  $\mu \dot{\epsilon} \nu \epsilon \tau \epsilon \dot{\epsilon} \nu \ a \dot{\nu} \tau \hat{\phi}$ , v. 28. Thus the whole series takes the form of seven, and is closed by an eighth, the octave of the first. Compare the note on the Beatitudes (Matt. v. 3); and on the symbolical meaning of the number seven and eight, see on Luke xxiv. 1, and on 2 Pet. ii. 5, and Jude 14.

- ὅτι ἀφέωνται ὑμῖν] because your sins have been forgiven you for His Name's sake. This is the ground of his general address to all his spiritual children; the forgiveness of their sins through Christ. That forgiveness had been imparted to them by Christ at their Baptism. See Matt. xvi. 19. Acts ii. 38; xxii. 16. Eph. v. 26, and Bp. Pearson, Art. ix., "those who are received into the Church by the sacrament of Baptism, receive the remission of their sins of which they were guilty before they were baptized." Cp. Bp. Wilson here.

Thus the beloved disciple, the Apostle and Evangelist, St. John, instructs Christian Preachers to build their addresses, in Sermons and Exhortations to their spiritual children, on the foundation of the "One Baptism for the remission of sins."

Accordingly, the Church of England says by the mouth of her Bishops, in the Order for Confirmation of her τεκνία, "Almighty and everlasting God, Who hast vouchsafed to regenerate these Thy servants, and hast given unto them forgiveness of all their sins."

13. γράφω ὑμῖν, πατέρες] I write to you, fathers, because ye have known Him Who is from the beginning,—the Everlasting Word, the Son of God, made flesh for us. He repeats this statement, for greater emphasis and assurance, against the delusions of the false Teachers, who in their professions of superior know. ledge, pretended to reveal a temporal origin of Christ: some of them asserting that Jesus was a mere man; and others, that Christ was an emanation who resided only for a season in Jesus. They pretend to know, and they disseminate their false knowledge; and they profess to instruct you, who are wiser than they are; for ye have known Him that is from the beginning (1 John i. 1. John viii. 25), whereas they in their ignorance impute a beginning to Him Who is from Eternity.

St. John condemns those who under a pretence of knowledge separated Jesus from Christ, and divided Christ from the Only-begotten; and severed the Only-begotten from the Word. S. Irenæus, iii. 18, ed. Grabe.

St. John here begins with fathers; then descends to young men; and from them to children.

He declares the important truth, that the highest degree of knowledge to which Christian fathers can attain, is the knowof knowledge to which Christian fathers can attain, is the knowledge of the everlasting Son. And the beginning of all knowledge in which all Christian children are to be instructed, is the knowledge of God as their Father. God the Father is the Original of all blessings which descend through God the Son, by God the Holy Ghost (see on 2 Cor. xiii. 13). His Name is first spoken in Baptism. That name begins the Creed. And every Christian soul, made God's child by adoption, cries Abba, Father (Gal. iv. 6), and all say with one voice, "Our Father, which art in heaven." Matt. vi. 9.

— γράφω ὑμῖν, νεανίσκοι] I write to you, young men, because ye have overcome the Wicked one. This saying is also repeated (see v. 14), for the same reason as the former. "Flee youthful lusts," says St. Paul to his son in the faith when young (2 Tim. ii. 22); and divine grace triumphs in young men, when by its means they, young as they are, conquer the Old Serpent (Rev. xii. 9; xx. 2).

In the seven Epistles of the Apocalypse there is a sevenfold promise to him that overcometh. See on Rev. ii. 1.

This address of St. John to young men comes with special force and beauty from him who was the youngest of Christ's Apostles, and the Disciple "whom Jesus loved," and who proved his own love for young men in a remarkable manner, as is recorded by Clemens Alexandrinus, quoted by Eusebius, iii. 20, and Chrysostom, Parænesis ad Theodorum lapsum, i. 11.

— εγραψα ὑμῖν, παιδία] I write to you, children, because ye have known the Father: see above, the last note but one.

Elz. has γράφω, I write, here; but ἔγραψα, I wrote, is in Λ, Β, C, G, and in many Cursive MSS., and in the Syriac, Coptic, Æthiopic, Arabic Versions, and Origen, Cyril, and other Fathers; and so Lach., Tisch.

This word  $\xi\gamma\rho\alpha\psi\alpha$  does not imply that any former letter had been written to them by St. John. It is the epistolary acrist used often by the writers of the N. T. (see 1 Cor. ix. 15. Philem. 21. 1 Pet. v. 12), when they would put themselves in the place of the recipients of their Epistles, and look back on the writing of the Epistles as a thing past.

By its use St. John condescends to his readers, and he begins with condescension to children. And it is not unworthy of remark, that having used the present tense (I write) seven times in this Epistle, i. 4; ii. 1. 7, 8. 12, 13 twice; he now adopts εγραψα (I wrote), and continues to use it to the end of this Epistle, where he employs it six times: see ii. 13, 14 twice, 21, 26; v. 13.

15. μηδέ] no, nor yet-

16. ἡ ἐπιθυμία τῆς σαρκός] the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the rainglory of life, its self-vaunting and ostentation (see Rom. i. 30. 2 Tim. iii. 2. James iv. 16), are not of

The carnal Appetite, Covetousness, and Pride, these were the things by which the Devil endeavoured to overcome Christ at the Temptation; and these are the things, in which Christ conquered Satan, and has taught us to conquer him. These also were the things, which specially characterized those Guostic deceivers, the filthy dreamers, against whom the Apostle warns his disciples. See above on 2 Pet. ii. 10. 18; and below, Jude 3. 16.

18. παιδία, ἐσχάτη ώρα ἐστίν] Children, it is the last time. Do not therefore be deceived by those Teachers who now propound new doctrines. The Son of God has been revealed in the last time (see on Heb. i. l. Acts ii. 17. 1 Pet. i. 20). The Gospel which he has preached is God's last message to men. You are not to look for any new revelation. Whatever is new, is false. They therefore who now bring to you new doctrine are not followers of Christ, but of Antichrist. See above on Gal. i. 8, 9.

We are not to infer, with some Expositors, from this expression (the last time), that the Apostle believed that the end of the World was close at hand. The appearance of Antichrists in considerable number ( $\hat{\pi}o\lambda\lambda ol$ ) was an evidence—not, that the end is immediate, as those Expositors allege to be St. John's meaningbut that the present dispensation is the last. Satan now musters all his forces for a struggle; for, when that conflict is over, he will have no other opportunity of contending against Christ.

— καθώς ἡκούσατε ὅτι ὁ ἀντίχριστος ἔρχεται] as ye heard that Antichrist cometh (on this use of the present tense, see Matt. ii. 4), even now many Antichrists have arisen, whence we know that it is the last time, or season.

The coming of Antichrist is a sign of the last time; for the coming of Antichrist is to be followed by the coming of Christ. "Venit Antichristus, et supervenit Christus," S. Cyprian, Ep. 58. But how long "the last time" will be, it is not for us to know (see Acts i. 7). Time, which may seem long to us, is but an hour to God (see 2 Pet. iii. 8). Hence St. John uses the word ωρα, It may seem long now, but when it is past, it will seem only like a watch in the night (Ps. xc. 4).

Elz. has the article δ before αντίχριστος, and so Λ, G, K;

but it is not in N, B, C.

(1) St. John alone uses the word Antichrist, and he uses it only in his Epistles, where it occurs five times (ii. 18 twice, 22; iv. 3. 2 John 7). It is never used by St. John in the Book of

The word 'Autl-xpiotos signifies one who opposes Christ: έναντίος τῷ Χριστῷ (Theophylact); "Christi rebellis" (Ter-tullian, Præscr. c. 4); "contrarius Christo" (Augustine); see Lücke, p. 190. Huther, p. 105, and Dean Trench, Synonyms N. T xxx. pp. 120-125.

Every one who sets himself against Christ, is an Antichrist - he may, or may not, set himself in the place of Christ.

Cp. Wetstein, p. 717, and Suicer on the word 'Aντί-χριστος, i. p. 390. It is not necessary that he should do so, in order to be an Antichrist. And indeed the character assigned by St. John in his Epistles to Antichrist properly so called, is one of open hostility to the Divinity and Humanity of Christ; but is not one of assumption of His attributes.

The general opinion of the Fathers was that a personal Antichrist would appear a short time before the second Coming of Christ. See Irenaus, v. 25. 30, Stieren; pp. 437—425, Grabe. S. Hippolytus, de Christo et Antichristo, pp. 1—36, ed. Lagarde. Origen c. Cels. vi. p. 499, and in Matt. xvii. S. Chrysostom in Matt. xvii. S. Hilary in Matt. xx. S. Cyril. Hieros. Cat. xi. S. Greg. Nyssen in Eunomium, Orat. xi. S. Jerome in Dan. vii. and xi., and Quæst. xi. ad Algasiam. S. Augustine in Ps. ix.; de Civ. Dei xx. c. 19; c. 20. S. Gregory, Moral. in Job xi. 9; xiv. 11; xx. 25. Homil. vii. and xxix. in Evangelia.

This opinion, commended by such authorities, is entitled to respectful attention; but it is our duty to be circumspect in the acceptance of any interpretations of unfulfilled prophecy. See on John xxi. 23, and note on 2 Pet. i. 20, whence it appears that even the inspired Prophets were not able to interpret their own prophecies. See also below, on Rev. xvii. I.

St. John's argument is this, It is the last time ( $\text{$\omega\rho\alpha$}$ ), and as ye heard that Antichrist cometh (i. e. in the last time), and as ye see that many Antichrists are already come, therefore we know that this is the last time.

St. John therefore recognizes the fulfilment of the prophecy concerning the coming of Antichrist, in the appearance of many Antichrists who are already come. He therefore appears here to represent Antichrist as an incorporation of those who set themselves against Christ. Cp. Œcumen. in iv. 3. Damascen. de Orthod. fide, iv. 27. And this opinion is confirmed by what he Father and the Son." See also iv. 3, and 2 John 7.

The same is the doctrine of St. John's scholar, S. Polycarp, in the only passage of the Epistles of the Apostolic Fathers, where the word Antichrist is found. "Whosoever doth not confess that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is Antichrist." Polycarp, Philipp. c. 7.

This is also in accordance with St. Paul's prophecy concerning the "Lawless One," or "the Man of Sin," which represents a form of evil, displaying itself in a continuous series of persons, who are, as it were, incorporated and personified in one; see the note above on 2 Thess. ii. 3—12.

In like manner, it seems that the word Antichrist represents a succession of persons in different times, animated by a spirit of violent hostility to Christ. So Lange, Baumgarten-Crusius, and Bengel, who says, Where St. John speaks of Antichrist, or the Spirit of Antichrist (iv. 3), he signifies the enemies of the truth united together—"sub singulari numero omnes mendaces et veritatis inimicos innuit"—that is, he comprises in this term all the enemies of the Christian truths which he is inculcating.

It is however consistent with such a proposition to believe, that the Spirit of Antichristianism may develope and consummate itself eventually in some extraordinary personal antagonism to Christ. Time,—the great Interpreter of Prophecy,—will show.

(2) It has been supposed by some, that Antichrist, as described by St. John in his Epistles, is the same Power as that which is delineated by St. Paul as "the Man of Sin."

But in interpreting the prophecies of Scripture, care must be taken to adhere to the language of Scripture. The assumption of identity where it does not exist has been a fruitful source of error. St. Paul never uses the word "Antichrist;" and the attributes of Antichrist and those of the Man of Sin, as described by St. John and St. Paul respectively, do not correspond accurately to each

In the character of Antichrist, St. John describes an Infidel opposition to Christ, an open, impious denial of the Father and of the Son. There is nothing secret, no Mystery, there. But is the description of the Man of Sin, or the Lawless One, St. Paul represents a Mystery (2 Thess. ii. 7), something secret and sacred; a spiritual power, working miracles, and sitting in the Church of God. See above, on 2 Thess. ii. 3-12.

It is by no means impossible that the two Powers, described by the two Apostles respectively, may eventually coalesce. will show. But the Apostolic descriptions of them are definite and distinct; and it is the duty of an Expositor of Scripture not to "be wise above what is written" (1 Cor. iv. 6), and to compare spiritual things with spiritual (1 Cor. ii. 13), and not to confound things which are dissimilar, especially in the interpretation of Prophecy; lest the benefit be lost which might otherwise be derived from its warnings, and from the evidence it affords to the truth of the Gospel.

Further, there is reason to believe that St. Paul in his Prophecy (in the second chapter of the Second Epistle to the Thessalonians) is describing the same power as that which is described by St. John in another place, viz., in the Book of Revelation; where the word Antichrist never occurs. remarkable similarity of features and language in those two descriptions: see Rev. xvii. 5. 7, compared with St. Paul's words, 2 Thess. ii. 7; and Rev. xiii. 11. 13 with 2 Thess. ii. 9; and Rev. xvii. 8. 11 with 2 Thess. ii. 3; and Rev. xiii. 4. 8 with 2 Thess. ii. 4; and see the notes below on Rev. xvii. 7, 8.

The resemblances between those two descriptions of St. Paul and St. John strengthen the belief that they refer to the same power; and they also confirm the argument derived from the discrepancies in the other descriptions which have just been mentioned, that the powers delineated by them are not the same.

19.  $\dot{\epsilon}\xi$   $\dot{\gamma}\mu\bar{\omega}\nu$   $\dot{\epsilon}\xi\bar{\gamma}\lambda\theta\alpha\nu$ ] They went out from us, but they were not of us.

St. John here announces the fulfilment of what had been prophesied by St. Paul in his farewell address to the Ephesian Presbyters at Miletus, "that out of their own selves would men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away the disciples after them" (Acts xx. 30).

The many Antichrists here described are the Heresiarchs of St. John's age. He says that they went out from us; and this was specially applicable to the father of the Gnostics, Simon Magus, who was baptized by St. Philip the Deacon at Samaria (see on Acts viii. 9–18), and who is called an Antichrist by the ancient Fathers; see S. Cyril. Hierosol., Catech. vi. p. 53, and

Dr. Hammond here, and Tillemont, Hist. Eccles. ii. p. 19.

The same was true of another Heresiarch of the same age, Ebion, to whom Tertullian applies St. John's words. In his Epistle, St. John calls them Antichrists, who deny that Jesus is come in the flesh, and that Jesus is the Son of God. The former proposition is denied by Marcion, the latter by Ebion; see Tertullian, Præscr. Hæret., c. 33.

St. Jerome affirms that St. John directed this censure also against another Heresiarch of the Apostolic age, Cerinthus, who arose within the Church, and opposed the Apostles (see on Acts xv. 1), and of whom there is an historical record, that he was personally known to St. John at Ephesus; and that when St. John had gone into a bath there, and heard that he was within it, he quitted it immediately, saying, "Let us depart, lest the bath fall on us, now that Cerinthus, the enemy of the truth, is there." See S. Irenœus iii. 3. Euseb. iii. 20. Theodoret, Hær. Fab. ii. 3. Cerinthus made a distinction between Jesus and Christ.

See also the important testimony of S. Irenœus (iii. 18, Grabe), who cites this passage (vv. 18—22), and applies it to the Graphic Trackers of that care (vv. 18—22), and applies it to the Gnostic Teachers of that age who arose within the Church, viz., Simon, Ebion, and Cerinthus. Cp. Estius here, p. 1217. Dr. Hammond here, p. 828. Bp. Bull, Jud. Eccl. Cathol. ii. 6, p. 44. Dr. Waterland on the Trinity, vol. v. chap. vi. p. 187, and above, — μεμενήμεισαν ἄν] they would have remained with us. If they had been really of us—living and sound members of the mystical body of Christ—they would have continued in it. destinarian notions of final perseverance. The terms here used, viz., going out, and abiding, are significant of free will. See Didynus here, who observes that they who went out, went out Vol. II.—Part IV. This saying of the Apostle gives no countenance to the pre-by their own choice, not by any fatal necessity. They who remained, remained, not because they were forced, but because they availed themselves willingly of God's grace which enabled them to do so.

— ἀλλ' ἴνα φανερωθώσιν] they went out—i. e., their going out was permitted—in order that they might be manifested that they are not all of us. The emphatic word is φανερωθώσιν, and the use of &-denoting origin from, and appurtenance to-may be illustrated by I Cor. xii. 15, ὅτι οὐκ εἰμὶ χεὶρ, οὐκ εἰμὶ ἐκ τοῦ σώματοs, and see below, iii. 12, Κάῖν ἐκ τοῦ πονηροῦ ἦν. Compare the words of St. Paul (1 Cor. xi. 19), "There must also be heresies among you, in order that they, who are approved, may be made manifest among you;" where the conjunction  $\tau \nu \alpha$ , as here, marks the design of God in permitting Heresies and Schisms to exist (cp. note above on 2 Cor. iv. 7), and suggests the uses which the faithful ought to make of heresies and schisms. Cp. Tertullian, Præscr. 3, where he cites these words of St.

A special benefit accruing from the going out of these Heretics, and from their overt opposition to the doctrine of Christ, and from the public manifestation of them to the world in their true character (as Simon Magus was made manifest in his opposition to St. Peter at Rome. Euseb. ii. 15. S. Cyril, Catech. c. vi. Arnobius, ii. p. 50. Maxim. Taurin., Hom. 54, p. 231. S. Epiphan. hær. 21. Philastr. c. 29. Tillemont, i. p. 76), was this, that the Heathen were thus disabused of their notion, that the Christian Church herself was identified with these Heretics, and was accountable for their erroneous teaching and profligate living. St. Peter says, that through them the Way of Truth would be evil spoken of (2 Pet. ii. 2); and Theodoret asserts (hær. fab. ii. præf.) that "the Teachers of those heresies" (such as Simon Magus and Cerinthus, whom he specifies) "were called Christians, and that many persons imagined that all Christians were guilty of their enormities."

Some expositors suppose that οὐ πάντες here is equivalent to none: cp. Matt. xxiv. 22. But this appears to be an incorrect rendering, and is not authorized by the ancient Interpreters.

St. John says that their going out was the proof that they are not all of us: cp. 2 Thess. iii. 2. They all pretend to be of us, and the Heathen confound them with us. But their secession from us, and opposition to us, clearly prove that they are not all of us. Some false teachers there are still, who propagate heresies in the Church. They are Tares in the Field, but as long as they are in the field, it is not easy to distinguish them from the wheat. They are not of us, but they are manifested as such by going cut from us. And the going out of those who have left us, and who resist us, is a manifest token to all men, that they and their associates are not all of us, as they profess to be, and as the Heathen suppose them to be; and as even some of the brethren in the Church imagine that they are, and are therefore deceived by them. By their going out they are manifested in their true light; and by their opposition to us, Truth is distinguished from Error, and Error from Truth.

20. ὑμεῖς χρῖσμα ἔχετε] ye have an unction from the Holy One, Who is anointed with the oil of gladness above His fellows. See Heb. i. 9. Cp. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. ii. p. 178. His unction flows down on you His members, and therefore, when a name was to be given to the disciples to distinguish them from all others, they were called Christians. Acts xi. 26.

Ye have a chrism from the Christ. They, the heretical teachers, are members of Antichrist.

Ye are anointed in Him Who has consecrated you with His unction, and made you kings and priests to God. Rev. i. 6.

This language of St. John is the more remarkable, because it is addressed to παιδία, pueruli, children. Children have an unction from the Holy One, in their Baptism, when they were made members of Christ. "Eam unctionem spiritualem habent pueruli, namque cum baptismo conjunctum erat donum Spiritûs Sancti" (Bengel), and in their Confirmation, called χρίσις τελειωτική. See Bp. Wilson here.

— καὶ οίδατε πάντα] and ye know all things. Ye, even though children in age, are the true Gnostics, for ye know Christ; whereas they who pretend to know every thing are mere babes. Cp. John xiv. 26. They, the so-called Gnostics, pretend to knowledge and to teach you; but they know nothing, and walk in darkness, v. 11. See above, 1 John ii. 3, and below, vv. 21. 27 of this chapter, and on Jude 5.

This language is adopted by St. John's scholars, S. Ignatius

— οὖτός ἐστιν ὁ ἀντίχριστος] This (i. e. he who denieth that Jesus is the Christ) is the antichrist, who denieth the Father and the Son. Cerinthus and his followers denied that Jesus was the Christ, dividing Jesus from Christ; and they denied the Son, because they did not acknowledge that Jesus was personally united with the Word, the Eternal Son of God; nor that the Word was the only-begotten of the Father; and so they disowned the divine Sonship of Jesus and Christ, and thus they denied the Father and the Son. See S. Irenaus, iii. 18, Grabe, and Dr. Waterland, v. p. 188, and above, Introduction, p. 100.

Ebion denied the divinity of Jesus. Simon Magus affirmed that he himself was the Father and the Son in different manifestations, and he denied the reality of Christ's humanity. See above on 2 Pet. ii. 1, and Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. iii. p. 301, note. Thus they were Antichrists, denying the Father and the Son.

Ye are members of Christ, ye are one body in Him. Ye are one man in Him (see John xvii. 11. 21. 1 Cor. x. 17); they are members of Antichrist, and make one body in him: they are the Antichrist. See on v. 18.

They are called Antichrists, who fall away from the Church of Christ, and teach what is false concerning Christ, in order to be leaders in Heresy. Didymus.

23. πας δ αρνούμενος τον Υίον] Every one who denieth the Son hath not even the Father, because the essence of a Father is to have a Son; and if the filial relation of Jesus Christ to God is denied—as it is denied by these Antichristian teachers—the paternity of the Father is denied also. See above, Introduction, p. 100.

The words of the Apostle here manifestly refer to the dogmas of Cerinthus and Ebion. Bp. Bull, Jud. Eccl. ii. sect. 5.

— δ δμολογῶν—ἔχει] he that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also. These words are printed in italics in the Authorized English Version; but they are found in the text of the oldest Greek MSS., e. g. A, B, C, and in many Cursives, and in Clement, Origen, Alhanasius, Cyril, in the Syriac, Vulgate (many MSS.), and Arabic Versions; and are received by Griesh. Scholz, Lach., Tisch.

28. καl νῦν, τεκνία] and now, my little children, abide in Him. He returns to the general term of address, little children (see ii. 12), and assures all his spiritual children that they have no need of learning any new doctrine (see vv. 21-27), but it is their duty to abide stedfast in the old. See Jude 3, and Rev.

άγνίζει έαυτόν] halloweth Himself, as Christ is holy. Cp. John xvii. 19 (ἀγιάζω ἐμαυτὸν), 24, and Rom. xii. 1. 1 Pet. i. 16. Every one who hath the hope of beholding Him sanctifieth himself, by separation from the world and by self-dedication to God; halloweth himself, as He is holy; for "without holiness no man shall see (δψεται) the Lord," Heb. xii. 14.

Bp. Sanderson, iv. 74. 94. 190.

"Every one who worketh sin, worketh also lawlessness." This assertion is directed against the Ebionites (see Irenœus, p. 103, Grabe) and Cerinthian Gnostics, who professed a reverence for the Law of God. St. John argues, that it is vain for them to allege that they revere the Law, when they commit sin. Therefore, let them not deceive you by this allegation, see v. 7

5, 6. καl οίδατε] and ye know that He was manifested in order to take away our sins (see John i. 29), and in Him sin doth not exist. Every one that abideth in Him sinneth not; does not live in sin; does not allow himself in the wilful and habitual practice of sin. See below, v. 9, and above, 1 Tim. v. 20, and Bp. Wilson here: every one that sinneth hath not seen Him, nor known Him.

St. John's meaning here is illustrated by the language of his disciple, S. Ignatius. "No one who professeth faith, sinneth; and no one who hath love, hateth. They, who profess themselves Christians, will be manifested by what they do." S. Ignatius, ad Ephes. 14; and this is the sense assigned to St. John's words by S. Jerome in Jovinian. ii. c. 1, and contra Pelagianos, i. c. 3.

Here then is another caution against the Gnostic Teachers, who professed to believe in Christ, and pretended to superior knowledge of divine things, and yet indulged themselves in the

i. 16. 2 Tim. ii. 19; iii. 5. 7. τεκνία] my little children, let no one deceive you; as these Gnostic teachers endeavoured to do. Cp. ii. 26, "These things I write concerning those who are endeavouring to deceive you. Here is the clue to the interpretation of these verses, which cannot be understood without reference to their tenets and practices. See the next note, and the formula  $\mu \dot{\eta} \pi \lambda \alpha \nu \hat{\alpha} \sigma \theta \epsilon$ , James i. 16.

— δ ποιών τὴν δικαιοσύνην] he that worketh righteousness is righteous, like as He (Christ) is righteous: a sentence directed against those deceivers, such as the followers of Simon Magus, who said that they could please God without righteousness; and that, whatever might be the case with others, who had not their spiritual gnosis, they themselves had no need to work righteousness, but that they would be saved by grace, whatever their works might be. "Liberos agere quæ velint; secundum enim ipsius (Simonis) gratiam salvari homines, sed non secundum operas justas." S. Irenæus, i. 20, Grabe. S. Hippolytus, Philos. p. 175. Epiphan. hær. xxi. Theodoret, hær. fab. i. c. l, who testifies that on the presumption of the indefectibility of special grace within themselves, they fell into all kinds of lasciviousness. Here is a warning to many in modern times, especially to the followers of Methodism.

8. δ ποιών τ. άμαρτίαν] he that worketh, or maketh sin ; ποιών, a strong word describing habitual design and actual habit of life, not an occasional lapse on the road, but a wilful and presumptuous self-surrender to sin, as a trade or profession; like that of Ahab, "who sold himself to work wickedness." 1 Kings xxi. 25.

— είs τοῦτο ἐφανεράθη] for this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the Devil. A third argument against these Gnostic deceivers, who are doing the work of the Devil (v. 8), and opposing the purpose of the Advent of Christ, and thus proving themselves to be Antichrists. This use of the word  $\lambda \dot{\nu} \epsilon i \nu$ , applied to the destruction of what is evil, is found in the Epistle of St. John's scholar, S. Ignatius, to St. John's Church of Ephesus (ad Eph. i. 3), λύεται ὅλεθρος, Wilson), because His szed (God's) abideth in him: a sentence directed against the deceivers who called themselves an elect seed, and incapable of sin. Cp. Irenæus, i. 12;

Observe also he uses here the present infinitive, not the aorist. He says, οὐ δύναται ἁμαρτάνειν, i. e. he cannot be a sinner. He does not say, οὐ δύναται ἁμαρτεῖν, he cannot fall into sin, by ignorance, error, and infirmity. Such an assertion would be inconsistent with the whole tenor of Scripture, for in many things we offend all (James iii. 2), and with St. John's own doctrine in this Epistle, where he says, "If we say that we have not sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us; but if we confess our sins, God is faithful and just in order to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness," i. 8, 9.

On this difference of the present infinitive and aorist infini-tive, see Winer, § 44, pp. 296, 297, and Stallbaum there quoted, p. 295. Thus, for example, πιστεῦσαι is to make a profession of faith, or to do an act of faith at a particular time; but πιστεύειν is to believe, to be a believer; δουλεῦσαι is to do an act of service; δουλεθείν, to be a slave: οὐδεὶς οἰκέτης δύναται δυσί Κυρίοις δουλεθείν, no servant can be a slave to two masters: so άμαρτεῖν is to commit a sin, but ἀμαρτάνειν is much more than this, it is to be a sinner.

He that hath been born of God, and liveth as a son of God, cannot be a sinner. It is inconsistent with the essential conditions of his spiritual birth, by which he is dead to sin. contrary to the nature which he has as a child of God. This is well expressed by Didymus here, who says, "St. John does not assert that the man who has been born of God will never commit sin; but he asserts that he does not work sin-Non scriptum est non peccabit, sed non peccatum facit; non idem est peccare ct peccalum facere; a child of two days old, by reason of his natural childhood, cannot sin, but a child of God cannot be a sinner." Whoever is born of God doth not allow himself in any wilful sin. Dr. Waterland, Serm. xxvii. on 1 John iv. 1.

Therefore, they who commit sin, on the plea, that being elect children of God, they must be saved, whatever they do, contravene the fundamental law of their existence, and disinherit them-selves. See this plea handled by St. Paul, Rom. vi. 1—4, and cp. Waterland, Serm. xxvii.

The word δύναμαι here, as often, does not signify a physical, but a moral, impossibility. They that are evil cannot speak good things. (Matt. xii. 34.) Christ could not do any miracle at Nazareth because of their unbelief. (Mark vi. 5.) How can ye believe, who receive honour one of another? John v. 44. Cp. John vii. 7; viii. 43; xii. 39; xiv. 17. Gen. xix. 22; note on Luke xvii. 1; and on Heb. vi. 4. Compare also what St. John himself says below, v. 18, "We know that every one who hath been born of God sinneth not; but he that was born of God keepeth himself, and the Wicked One toucheth him not."

St. John's meaning here, which is of a controversial and polemical character, and must be viewed in reference to the errors which he is refuting, is well illustrated by the words of his disciple, S. Ignatius, speaking to St. John's Church, "Let no one deceive you. They who are carnal cannot do the things which are spiritual; nor can they who are spiritual do the things which are carnal. Faith cannot do the works of Unbelief, nor can Unbelief do the works of Faith. The works which ye do in the flesh are spiritual, because ye work all your works in Jesus Christ." S. Ignatius, ad Eph. 8.

The notions of the Gnostic Teachers and their Votaries are thus described by Justin Martyr (c. Tryph. p. 370), "Ye deceive yourselves and such souls as are like you, who say, that although they are sinners, and if they have knowledge of God, God will not count their sin to be sin." Compare Epiphanius, hær. xxi.

10. καὶ δ μὴ ἀγαπῶν ] and he who loveth not his brother. This lack of love was noted by the earliest Christian writers as a distinguishing characteristic of these deceivers to whom St. John refers. Thus S. Ignatius says of them, "Observe those who are heterodox with regard to the grace of Christ, how contrary they are to the mind of God. They have no regard for love, -περλ άγάπης οὐ μέλει αὐτοῖς, they do not care for the widow, or the orphan, or the hungry, or the thirsty." And he adds as a remarkable characteristic, that they abstain from the Feast of love, the holy Eucharist, because they did not believe in the reality of Christ's flesh; which was the heresy of Simon Magus and his followers. S. Ignatius ad Smyrn. 6. See also S. Irenæus, i. 20, Grabe, and cp. Dr. Waterland, viii. p. 31, ed. 1823.

12. οὐ καθώς Κάῖν] not as Cain was of the wicked one, and slew his brother. Let it not be so with you. Be not ye imitators of Cain, whom some of these false Teachers extolled. See on Jude 11, and Theodoret, hæret. fab. i. 15, who testifies of some heresiarchs of sub-Apostolic times, that they asserted that Cain had been freed from subjection to the higher power; and they asserted the same of Esau, Korah, and even the Sodomites, and Judas: and he says that in their practice of sins they invoked the names of Angels, to whom those sins were dedicated by them. Cp. Epiphan. hær. xxxviii.

Cp. Epiphan. hær. xxxviii.

14. μεταβεβήκαμεν] we have passed from death unto life; and abide in life. On this use of the perfect, see v. 9, and compare John v. 24, "He that heareth my word and believeth on Him that sent Me hath everlasting life, and hath passed from death into life." Elz. has τὸν ἀδελφὸν after ἀγαπῶν, but this is not in A, B, nor in K, and is rejected by Lach., Tisch.

16. καὶ ἡμεῖς ὀφείλομεν ὑπέρ τῶν ἀδελφῶν τὰς ψυχὰς θεῖναι] and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren: a remarkable saying on the duty of Christian Martyrdom. It was probably suggested by the seductive tenets of the false teachers (οἱ πλανῶντες, mentioned by St. John ii. 26; iii. 7), who courted popularity in times of Persecution, by alleging that provided a man had knowledge of the doctrines of Christianity as delivered by them, and adopted their theories, it was not necessary for him to expose himself to any danger in the maintenance of the faith, much less to endure martyrdom, and to lay down his life for the brethren; but that he might freely associate with the heathen in their worship, and eat things offered to idols. This was particularly the doctrine of the Simonians (see Origen c. Cels. vi. p. 282. Euseb. ii. 13), and of the Nicolaitans (see Rev. ii. 15. S. Irenæus, i. 23), and of the Cerinthians: see Philastr. hær. c. 36.

Tertullian wrote his book called Scorpiace against these notions, and he refers to this passage in St. John's Epistle, in proof of the duty of Martyrdom, c. 12.  $\theta \in \mathcal{P}$  and  $\theta$  so so that  $\theta$  so other accounts preferable to the present,  $\tau_1\theta \notin \nu_{\alpha_1}$ , the reading of Elz.; see on v. 9.

The words seem to be imitated in the Epistle of the Church of Vienne and Lyons in Euseb. v. 1, speaking of a Christian Martyr, εὐδοκήσαs ὑπὲρ τῆς τῶν ἀδελφῶν ἀπολογίαs καὶ τὴν έαυτοῦ θείναι ψυχήν.

17. του βίον τοῦ κόσμου] the world's good things. See Mark xii. 44. Luke xv. 12. Remark the contrast between βίος and ζωή, and this world and the other. He who is not ready to bestow a part of the βίος τοῦ κόσμου in love to his brethren, has no reasonable hope of the ζωη αἰώνιος, mentioned v. 15.

· καλ ἔμπροσθεν αὐτοῦ πείσομεν τὰς καρδίας ἡμῶν] and we shall assure our hearts before Him, in His sight, we shall satisfy them, and set them at ease, when we examine them, as in the presence of Him Who searcheth the hearts. On this use of  $\pi$ είθω cp. Matt. xxviii. 14. Acts xii. 20. Gal. i. 10. This assurance will be produced in us by the visible evidence of Love working in our lives. We may not reason from our hearts, and draw assurances from them as to the goodness of our lives; but the evidence which we see in our lives, when tested by the rule of God's law, may afford a comfortable assurance to our hearts; and such an assurance from our hearts will give us confidence towards See on Acts xxiii. 1. Rom. ii. 15.

When we find by experience that we love the brethren, not in word and in the tongue only, but in deed and truth, then we may assure our hearts before Him. If we forgive our brethren, we may be assured that God will forgive us. Cp. Bp. Andrewes,

The word heart here is equivalent to Conscience; as is observed by Bp. Sanderson (Lectures on Conscience, Lect. i. § 3, vol. iv. p. 2), who remarks that the Hebrew language has no precise term for Conscience, but the Hebrew writers in the Old Testament generally use either בי (leb), heart, or מון (ruach), spirit (cp. 1 Cor. ii. 11), for Conscience. See Prov. iv. 23, Keep thy heart, i. e., watch over thy conscience: cp. Prov. xviii. 15, and Eccl. vii. 22, "thy heart knoweth;" i. e., "scit conscientia tua;" and so St. John here uses the word heart; and cp. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, chap. i. art. 8, and Bengel here.

20. δτι έαν καταγινώσκη] because,—if our heart condemn us, this is because (671) God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things. The condemnation, which our Conscience pronounces, derives its force from the greatness of God, Who is Lord of our Conscience, and knoweth all things.

A remarkable declaration concerning the office of Conscience. The power of human Conscience proceeds from divine Omniscience. Conscience is God's oracle in the human soul. Its verdicts receive their force from His Law, which regulates Conscience; and from His judgments, of which the sentences of Conscience are but a rehearsal. Conscience speaks to man; but it hearkens to God, Who is greater than our heart, or Conscience, and knows all things; and because Conscience listens to the voice of the Omniscient, and is the obedient minister of the Almighty Lawgiver and Everlasting Judge, Who alone can save and destroy (James iv. 12); therefore it is, that (871) the judgments of Conscience have such as a Deputy and Vicegerent of the Almighty, and as a Preacher of His eternal Law, and as a Herald of His Judgments, and dictates what man ought to do, and calls him to a severe scrutiny for whatever he has done, and as a just Judge dispenses rewards and punishments, censures or approvals, according to the merits of men's actions, and rehearses to them the future verdicts of the Great Day of Assize.

Every man has received a Conscience from God, which acts

The state of Conscience is this, that it is placed in the middle between God and man; as a servant to obey God, Who is greater than the heart, that is, Who is Lord supreme over the Conscience; and also as His minister, to issue His commands to man, and to take cognizance of his acts (see Bp. Sanderson, Lect. ii. vol. iv. pp. 22, 23).

Conscience is like the Centurion in the Gospel, a man under authority, and also having soldiers under him. (Matt. viii. 9.) So Conscience is under the authority of God, but it has man's actions under itself. Hence its Power.

These considerations may solve the difficulties which have been supposed by many to exist in this passage, and which some have endeavoured to remove by cancelling the second  $\delta \tau \iota$ , or by resolving it into  $\mathcal{S}$ ,  $\tau\iota$ , or by reading  $\check{\epsilon}\tau\iota$  for it, or by supposing that the second  $\mathcal{S}\tau\iota$  is redundant. See the notes of Weistein, Bengel, De Wette, Lücke, Düsterdieck, and Huther, Winer, § 64, p. 513, note. Before the second 571 there is only a common ellipsis, instances of which may be seen in Mark iii. 20. Luke i. 25; xi. 18. John ii. 18. Cp. Winer, § 53, p. 395.

The word κατα-γινώσκειν is a middle term between κατηγορείν, to accuse, and κατακρίνειν, to pronounce a formal judicial condemnation; and is to be explained from γινώσκειν, to know and take cognizance of, and from its opposite συγ-γινώσκειν, to pardon, and it signifies to know or to determine by an act of the judgment (γνώμη) against. Cp. Gal. ii. 11, and Deut. xxv. 1, where it is opposed to δικαιοῦν, to pronounce just, to acquit. Ecclus. xiv. 2, "Blessed is the man whom his soul doth not condemn,—οὐ κατέγνω."

There is a remarkable paronomasia in the words here used, γνωσόμεθα,— ἐὰν καταγινώσκη ἡμῶν ἡ καρδία— γινώσκει Θεδs  $\pi \acute{a} \nu \tau \alpha$ , which assists us to the true sense, as above declared.

21. ἐὰν ἡ καρδία] if our heart, or Conscience, doth not condemn us, we have confidence toward God: because our Conscience is His Vicegerent within us, and pronounces judgment according to His laws; and therefore its approval is a pledge to us of His favour. See the preceding note.

The word παβρησία, freedom of speech, expresses here the assurance which a suppliant, who has a powerful advocate and a good cause, has, that his request will be granted. See ii. 28; iv. 17; v. 14. Heb. iv. 16.

On the use of πρδs here, cp. Rom. v. l, εἰρήνην ἔχομεν πρδs τον Θεόν.

23. αὕτη ἡ ἐντολὴ—Ίνα πιστεύσωμεν] This is the commandment, that we should believe the Name of His Son Jesus Christ. See our Lord's words, recorded by St. John in his Gospel, vi. 29.

The Heretics to whom St. John refers, either separated

Jesus from Christ, as the Cerinthians did, or denied that Jesus is the Son of God, as the Ebionites, Cerinthians, and Simonians, and Docetæ did. Cp. Waterland, v. p. 189, and Bp. Bull, Jud. Eccl. ii. 9, and note above on 2 Pet. ii. 1, and Introduction to this Epistle, pp. 99-103.

In opposition to these erroneous and strange doctrines, St. John declares that this is God's commandment, that we should believe the Name (observe the dative case, cp. iv. 1), that is, give credence to, and place our trust in, the name of Jesus Christ Ilis Son; i. e. in the man Jesus, acknowledged to be the Christ and the Son of God. See iv. 15, and v. 1 u John 14, 23, & 15, 10, Rom. 8, 9, ch. 4. 13.

Ch. IV. 1. μη παντί πνεύματι πιστεύετε] believe not ye every spirit, but prove ye the spirits whether they are of God; for many false Prophets, or false Teachers (see Matt. vii. 15), have gone forth into the world; they have gone forth, not being sent gone forth into the world; they have gone forth, not being sent as true Prophets are (see on John x. 8). He refers especially to the followers of Simon Magus, Ebion, Cerinthus, and the Nicolaitans. See Introduction, p. 98, and on 2 Pet. ii. 1, 2, and above, i. 1; ii. 18. 22; below, iv. 3, and 2 John 7.

St. John had just said, This is the commandment of God, that we should believe the Name of His Son Jesus Christ; he now warns them against believing those spirits which would seduce

 δοκιμάζετε] try ye the spirits. Test them and prove them (1 Thess. v. 21), as metals or coins are tried. False Prophets, false Christs, are to be expected to arise, and to work miracles, so as to deceive many (Matt. xxiv. 24. work miracles, so as to deceive many (Matt. xxiv. 24. 2 Thess. ii. 9). The criteria, βάσανοι, or touchstones, by which they are to be tested, are these. Ye shall know them by their fruits—not only the fruits of their lives, but by the fruits of their doctrine. See above on Matt. vii. 16. Though they may have the gift of tongues and prophecy, and miracles, yet if they have not Charity, which proves itself by Unity, they are not to be received. (See 1 Cor. xiii. 1—5.) Even if they work miracles, and deliver prophecies and the prophecies cape to pass yet if and deliver prophecies, and the prophecies come to pass, yet if they would lead any of you astray, to worship idols or any being but God (Deut. xiii. 1—5), and even if they are Angels from heaven, but bring not this doctrine (2 John 10) which the Apostles brought, but add any thing to it, or take any thing from it, they are to be accursed, Gal. i. 8.

See the excellent Sermon of Dr. Waterland on this text:

2, 3. ἐν τούτφ] by this—that I am about to specify—ye know the Spirit of God: every spirit that confesseth Jesus Christ having come in the flesh, is of God: and every spirit that doth not confess Jesus Christ, is not of God. Observe μη here, bringing out the non-confession as the essence of alienation from God. And this is the spirit of Antichrist, of which ye have heard that it cometh; yea, now it is in the world already.

In v. 3 Elz. omits  $\tau \delta \nu$  before 'In $\sigma o \hat{v} \nu$ , but  $\tau \delta \nu$  is in A, B, G. Some MSS., G. K., and several Cursives, add Xpioroby after Ingoov, and so Elz.; but it is not in A, B, nor in Vulg., Coptic, Syriac, or Armenian Version, nor in Origen, Irenœus, and Cyril, who quote this passage; and is not received by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch.

Some MSS., Λ, Β, and a few Cursives and Versions, omit ἐν σαρκὶ ἐληλυθότα, but these words are in G, K, and in most Cursives, and the Syriac Version, and they appear to be recognized by Polycarp, Origen, Cyprian, Ecumen., Theophylact.

κ has ὁ μὴ ὁμολογεῖ Ἰησοῦν Κύριον ἐν σαρκὶ ἐληλυθότα.

Some ancient and modern interpreters render γινώσκετε as if it were the imperative mood—know ye; and this translation has something to commend it. Cp. πιστεύετε, δοκιμάζετε, v. 1; but cp. also ii. 20, 29.

The words τοῦτό ἐστι τὸ τοῦ ἀντιχρίστου are generally rendered,—this is the spirit of Antichrist. It is however to be observed, that πνεῦμα, spirit, is not in the text here; and the expression seems to be framed purposely to be as large and general as possible; this is the essence, character, work-of Antichrist. On this generalizing use of the article, cp. James iv. 14.

A question arises here, If "every spirit that confesseth Jesus Christ having come in the flesh," is of God,—may not some Teachers who preach erroneous and strange doctrines, but yet acknowledge that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, be said to be of God? To put the question in the words of S. Augustine, "Arius, and Eunomius, and Macedonius, and Nestorius, own that Jesus Christ came in the flesh; are not they therefore of God?"

To that question S. Augustine himself replies, -That those Heresiarchs did not in fact confess Christ to have come in the flesh, because, whatever they might do by words, they in their works denied Him. (Titus i. 16.) "They have not charity," he says, "because they have not unity; and therefore all their other gifts are of no avail." (1 Cor. xiii. 1—3.)

Similar to this is the exposition of Didymus here: "Sapiendo ct agendo, quæ Christus in humanitate docuit et egit, hic Spiritum habet à Deo."

Another reply is made to the question by others, who say that St. John speaks only with reference to the heresies of his own age. See Estius and Bengel here.

But the true answer appears to be this: St. John does not say that every spirit is of God, which acknowledges that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh; but he says, that every spirit is of God which confesses Jesus Christ having come, and being come, in the flesh: that is, which confesses Jesus to be the Christ, and to be no ideal phantom, but a real Person, - which, in a word, confesses Jesus Christ as Him that should come, i.e. as the Messiah (see above on John x. 8, "all who came," i.e. who professed to be the Messiah, the  $\delta$   $\ell\rho\chi\delta\mu\epsilon\nu\sigma$ s, before Me, "were thieves and robbers"), and as having come in the flesh; and having done and suffered in the flesh, what the Christ was to do and suffer; and especially as having joined all men together in one by His Incarnation, and as having thus bound all men in love, to each other, in God; and as having become capable of suffering, by taking their flesh, and as having made an Atonement for the sins of all whose flesh He came to take, being "God manifested in the flesh." Every spirit which makes this good confession, and lives in the spirit of this creed, is born of God. Jesus Christ, confessed to be God and Man, is the Rock on which the Church is built. See Matt. xvi. 18.

The participle (ἐληλυθότα) is used in the same way as in the statement of St. Paul, "we preach Jesus Christ and Him crucified" (ἐσταυρωμένου, 1 Cor. ii. 2).

The doctrine of the passage is thus enforced by one of St. John's disciples, Bishop of Smyrna and Martyr. "Let us serve Him with fear and all reverence, as He Himself commanded, and His Apostles who preached to us; let us do this, being zealous for that which is good, and shunning the stumbling-blocks of false brethren, and of those who wear the Name of the Lord in hypocrisy, and seduce (ἀποπλανῶσι) foolish men from Him. For every one who does not confess that Jesus Christ is come in the Flesh, is Antichrist; and whosoever does not confess the testimony of the cross, is of the devil (cp. above, iii. 8-10)." S. Polycarp, Ep. ad Phil. 6 and 7.

One of S. Polycarp's scholars, S. Irenœus, writes in similar terms against those who said that Jesus was a mere man, and that Christ was not the Everlasting Word of God, but only an Æon, who came forth from their ideal pleroma, and dwelt only for a season in Jesus, and only suffered in semblance; in opposition to the true doctrine of the Catholic Church of Christ, that the two Natures of God and Man are indissolubly united in the One Person of Jesus Christ, the Eternal Word, the Only-begotten of the Father, Who was made Man for us, and by dying for us in our stead, is the Saviour of the world.

Therefore, adds Irenœus, all they are without the pale of the Evangelical Dispensation, who, under a pretended show of knowledge, say that Jesus is one, and Christ is another, and that the Only-begotten is another, and that the Word is different from these; and that the Saviour is different also, whom some of them assert to be an Emanation; as those disciples of error feign, who appear outwardly like sheep-for in words they bear a likeness to -but inwardly they are wolves: whom St. John, the disciple of the Lord, commands us in his Epistle to shun, where he says that many deceivers are gone forth into the world, who do not confess many deceivers are gone forth into the world, who do not confess Jesus Christ as coming  $(\partial p\chi \delta \mu \epsilon \nu \sigma \nu)$  in the flesh (2 John 7, 8). And again, in his Epistle, John says (iv. 1—3), By this know ye (cognoscite) the Spirit of God. Every spirit which confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God: and every spirit which separates Jesus (solvit Jesum, i. e. divides Jesus from Christ) is not of God, but of Antichrist. And again, in his Epistle, John says (v. 1), Every one that believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God. S. Irenæus (iii. 18, ed. Grabe; iii. 16, ed.

S. Irenœus-whose words here are preserved only in the old Latin Versions-appears to be quoting from memory and paraphrastically, for he cites these passages as from the same Epistle of St. John, and he inserts the words, "solvit Jesum;" and this paraphrase may have led to the opinion expressed by some ancient writers (see Socrat. Eccles. hist. vii. 32, and others in Tisch., p. 222), that the words λύει Ίησοῦν were once in the text here, and they are found in the Vulgate, but in no other ancient Version, or in any extant Manuscript. These objections have taken the following form. God, it is sail, is Line 1 John iv. 6. He lives us and He lives like . Nalegorithm Son. Origen also says (nomil 4, in Num.), "Si non fuisset peccatum,

If it be said, that according to this statement the Just suffered for the unjust, and that the beloved Son of God was delivered to death for the offences of those who did not love Him, but were at enmity with Him, this is perfectly true; it is the assertion of God Himself in Holy Scripture, Christ hath suffered for us, just for unjust, to bring us to God (1 Pet. iii. 18). nade Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be the righteousness of God in Him (2 Cor. v. 21). Ye were redeemed with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot (1 Pet. i. 19).

The Just suffered for the unjust. Yes, suffered for a time.

But this is not at variance with daily experience. Parents suffer for children; brethren for brethren; friends for friends; subjects for sovereigns; and sovereigns for subjects. And if we are to reject the doctrine of the Atonement on the plea that vicarious sufferings are not reconcileable with Justice, we cannot stop short of Deism, nor even of Atheism. Cp. Bp. Butler's Analogy,

Part ii. ch. v.

If any victim was to take away sin, that victim must be innocent. In order to take away infinite guilt, it must be infinitely innocent. The price paid for the satisfaction of Infinite Justice must be infinite in value. In order to suffer for men, the victim must be human; and in order to satisfy God, it must be divine.

Be it remembered also that the Son of God suffered willingly. He gave Himself a ransom for all. (1 Tim. ii. 6.) The good Shepherd giveth His life for the Sheep. (John x. 11.) Cp. Matt. xx. 28. Gal. i. 4; ii. 20. Eph. v. 2. Titus ii. 14. Heb. ix. 14.

They also for whom He gave Himself are His own flesh and blood. He is their Head, they His members. They are one with Him.

Still further. By his meritorious sufferings in that human nature, which He has taken, and joined for ever in His own Person to the Nature of God, He has delivered that Nature from sin and death, and has exalted it to the right Hand of God. Therefore He suffered joyfully. To do evil is indeed evil; and to suffer evil in eternity, is dreadful; but to suffer evil in time, in order that others by our means may be happy in eternity, is not evil, but glorious. Earthly conquerors die with joy in the hour of Victory. Much more Christ. He knew, that suffering was His path to glory. He knew, that because He was obedient to death, even to the death of the cross, therefore God would highly a realt. His good with Him. highly exalt Him, and give Him a Name above every name. (Phil. ii. 8, 9.) He saw of the travail of His soul and was satisfied. (Isa. liii. 11.) Doubtless, in His human flesh He shrank from the cup of Agony, and from the anguish of the Cross. But even in the glorious hour of His Transfiguration He had talked with Moses and Elias of His Death. (Luke ix. 31.) His divine eye pierced through the cloud of suffering, and saw the visions of glory to which it would lead, victory over Satan, a World rescued from his grasp, God's justice satisfied, His wrath appeased, His love glorified; and so the Cross became a triumphal Chariot, in which the Conqueror rode in Victory (see Col. ii. 14), and mounted to heaven, and bore Mankind with Him through the gates of the heavenly Palace of the Everlasting Capital, and was greeted by the song of Angels, Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in. (Ps. xxiv. 7.)

It has been alleged, that if by sin we were prisoners to Satan, therefore the price of Christ's blood which He paid upon the cross for our liberation from Satan was paid to Satan. But this we deny; see Gregor. Nazianzen, Orat. xlv. p. 862, ed. Paris, 1778. It might as well be said, that the ransom paid for the delivery of prisoners from a king's prison, is paid to the gadler in whose custody they are. We, by our sins, had made ourselves slaves of Satan; and as a just punishment for our sins, we were made prisoners of Satan. Satan was God's executioner against us. He of God's instruments of death. (Ps. vii. 14.) But Christ, by dying for us, delivered us from death. He rescued us from the hands of Satan, and paid the price of our ransom, not to Satan, but to God. He delivered us from Satan by offering Himself to God.

26, and note above, ii. 2, and on 1 Cor. vi. 20.

Compare St. Paul's argument on this subject, Rom. iii. 23-

They who contravene the doctrine of the Atonement often claim the credit of exercising their Reason, and deny that the belief of the doctrine of the Atonement rests on the foundation of Reason. Nothing can be accepted by reasonable men which does not rest on the foundation of Reason. But a right use of Reason leads to a firm belief in the doctrine of the Atonement; and a denial of it proceeds from an abuse of Reason.

The doctrine of the Atonement cannot be discovered by Reason. No; but we can prove by Reason that the Holy Scriptures are from God; and we can prove by Reason, that the doctrine of the Atonement is clearly revealed in the Holy Scriptures. And thus this doctrine rests on the foundation of Reason. Being a portion of supernatural truth revealed by God in Scripture to the world, it is not to be discovered by Reason, or fully comprehended by Reason, but it is to be heartily embraced and surely held fast by Faith, which implies a right use of Reason. And Reason teaches us, that it would be very unreasonable to expect, that what is contained in a Revelation from such a Being as God to so frail a creature as man, in his present state upon earth, should be fully comprehended by Reason; and that, if Reason could understand every thing, there would be no use in Reve-lation, and no place for Faith. Right Reason itself teaches us, that to deny the Lord who bought us (2 Pet. ii. 1), because we cannot understand why God allowed sin to prevail, which required the Sacrifice of the Death of His own ever-blessed Son, would be to renew the indignities of the crucifixion, and to smite our Redeemer with a Reed-the Reed of our unregenerate Reason,-when we ought to fall down and worship in Faith. Reason itself teaches us, that it is very reasonable to expect mysteries in Revelation; and that they are our moral discipline, and exercise our humility, patience, faith, and hope, and teach us to look forward to that blessed time, when we, who now see through a glass darkly (1 Cor. xiii. 12), shall behold the clouds removed which now overhang these mysteries, and shall see God face to face, and rejoice for ever in the sight.

Thus Reason leads us to the door of the Holy of Holies; and then we pass within the veil by Faith; and there we stand, and with the eye of Faith we behold God enthroned on the Mercy-

Seat, sprinkled by the blood of Christ.

Further, as reasonable men, looking at the cross of Christ, we see there the most cogent reasons for presenting ourselves, our souls and bodies, a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, which is our reasonable service (Rom. xii. 1).

This doctrine of the Atonement is the root of Christian practice; and they, who impugn that doctrine, are not only undermining the foundations of Christian Faith, but also of Christian Morality. This was clearly evinced even in the Apostolic age, by the licentiousness and profligacy engendered by heretical doctrines, against which St. John contends in his Epistles, concerning the Incarnation and Death of Christ.

We cannot adequately estimate the moral heinousness of sin, without considering the sacrifice which it cost to redeem us from its power and guilt. We cannot duly understand the obligations of love and obedience, under which we lie to Christ, and the motives which constrain us to holiness, without remembering that we are not our own, but have been bought with a price-the blood of Christ-and are therefore bound to glorify Him in our bodies which are His. See 1 Cor. vi. 20.

Accordingly, St. John, having here stated the doctrine of the Atonement, proceeds, and continues to the end of the Epistle, to enforce the moral duties consequent on this doctrine. "Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another." He teaches us to contend earnestly for the doctrine of the Atonement, as the groundwork of Christian Duty to God and Man.

On the doctrine of the Atonement compare Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. x. pp. 670-688. Bp. Butler, Anal. Pt. ii. ch.

vi., and my Occasional Sermon, No. 56.

12. Θεόν οὐδεὶς π. τεθέαται] no one hath yet seen God at any time. How then can we love Him who so loved us? By loving those whom we can see (cp. v. 20), whose nature the Son of God bath taken, and whom He has united to God, and for whom He vouchsafed to die; so great was His love to them. We must love those whom God loves in Christ; and thus, though as yet we see not God with the bodily eye, yet He dwelleth in us.

— ἐὰν ἀγαπῶμεν—ἐν ἡμῖν] if we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and His love hath been perfected in us. His Love to us hath been ripened into Love to Him, and into Love to all men in Him; and thus His Love hath been perfected into its full maturity in us.

14. καὶ ἡμεῖς τεθεάμεθα] - We have not seen God (see v. 12), but God dwelleth in us by Love (vv. 12, 13), and we have beheld, and do testify that the Father (in opposition to the heretical doctrine, see ii. 22) hath sent the Son to be Saviour of the World. John had beheld this personally, and to this he bears with the Gonal See John viz 25, viz 24 witness in his Gospel. See John xix, 35; xxi. 24.

15. Ἰησοῦς] Jesus. Observe the word Jesus thus placed, and stating the true doctrine, that Jesus-the Man Jesus-is not, as the Ebionites said, a ψιλός ἄνθρωπος, a mere man, nor, as the Cerinthians alleged, a mere temporary recipient of the indwelling of an Æon called Christ; nor as the Docetæ said, a shadowy unsubstantial phantom, but is the Son of God, such as St. John declares Him in the Gospel. Cp. Bp. Bull, Jud. Eccl. Cath. ii. 9.

The confession of this truth (viz. of the Manhood and Godhead of Christ) is, St. John declares, essential to our indwelling in God.

16. καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐγνώκαμεν] and we have known-known by our own personal experience (ἐγνώκαμεν), and we have believed, and do believe (πεπιστεύκαμεν, the perfect tense, cp. John vi. 69), the love which God hath in us. By a personal and experimental faith, that the same Jesus, Who is Man, having the common nature of us all, is also God, we dwell in God, and God in us. For, by the Incarnation of the Son of God, God is in us, He is our Emmanuel; and by this faith we know and realize the Love which God hath, not only to us, but in us. For, by virtue of the Incarnation, God unites us to Himself, and to each other in Him, in the closest bonds of Love. God sees us and loves us in Christ, who, by virtue of His Incarnation and our incorporation in Him, dwelleth in us, and we in Him (John vi. 56), and God loves us in the Beloved (Eph. i. 6), and as Christ Himself says in two sentences recorded in St. John's Gospel, which afford the best exposition of this text, "At that day (i. e. after the Ascension and reception of the Holy Ghost) ye shall know that I am in the Father, and ye in Me, and I in you," and, "O Father, I made known to them Thy Name, and I will make it known, in order that the love with which Thou lovedst Me may be in them, and I in them." (Tolor and I will make it known, in order that the love is the may be in them, and I in them." (Tolor and I will make it known). in them" (John xvii. 26). Hence follows the relative duty, αγάπην έχειν εν αλλήλοις, John xiii. 35.

17. ἐν τούτω] By this hath love been perfected, and is perfected, with us. By our union with God, through the Incarnation of His Son, Who has taken the Nature of us all, and has knit us together as one man in Himself, and joined us to God, who were once aliens from Him, Love hath been perfected with us. Christ is  $\mu \epsilon \theta' \dot{\eta} \mu \hat{\omega} \nu \Theta \epsilon \delta s$ , "God with us" (Matt. i. 23). By His Incarnation and Passion, God is at peace with us, and we with God, and with our own consciences; and by the Reconciliation and Atonement which Christ hath made, we are justified by faith in Him, and are accounted righteous as He is righteous, for He is the "Lord our Righteousness" (cp. 1 Cor. i. 30), and we have access to the Father. See St. Paul's words to the Ephesian Church, Eph. ii. 13—18, and Heb. x. 19—23, which supply the best comment on this passage.

VOL. II .- PART IV

It follows as a consequence, that we may now have assurance (see ii. 28) in the Day of Judgment, when Jesus Christ shall appear again; because as He (Christ) is, Who is our Head, even so we, who are His Members, are in this world. He is exalted to God's Right Hand, by His Obedience and Suffering in our Nature: His Exaltation is our Exaltation. We, even now in this world, even in the midst of this evil world, which lieth in subjection to the Wicked One (v. 19), are citizens of heaven (Phil. iii. 20). He, our Divine Head, at God's Right Hand, is ever pleading the Virtue of His sacrifice, for us His Members. ever liveth to make Intercession for us (Heb. vii. 25). We have already been made to sit in heavenly places in Him. See note above on Eph. ii. 6; and though we are in the world, and the world is  $\hat{\epsilon} \nu \tau \hat{\varphi} \pi \nu \nu \eta \rho \hat{\varphi}$ , yet the Wicked One toucheth not us (v). 18), for we are in Christ; and no one can pluck us out of His hand (John x. 28).

To be in this world, even as Christ is, implies the practice of charity, so that we love our enemies, as Christ loved us, and died for us, when we were enemies (Rom. v. 8-10); and it implies the practice of holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord (Heb. xii. 14), who says, "Ye shall be holy, for I am holy" (1 Pet. i. 16), and every one that hath this hope (of glory) settled upon Him (Christ), purifieth himself even as He is pure (1 John iii. 3), and walketh as He walked (ii. 6), upon whom the Prince of this world had no hold (John xiv. 30).

18. φόβος οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν τῆ ἀγάτη] Fear—which is the opposite of the παβρησία or assurance just described—doth not exist in Love, but the Love that is perfect casteth out Fear: as Sarah the true wife cast out the bondwoman and her son; for the son of the bondwoman must not be heir with the son of the freewoman (Gen. xxi. 10. 12. Gal. iv. 30). Love, that is perfect, casteth out Fear, because Fear hath punishment: but He who is fearing-he whose characteristic is fear, and not love-hath not been perfected in love.

"Fear is the beginning of wisdom" (Ps. cxi. 10. Cp. on Matt. viii. 34). Fear first enters, and opens the door for Love, and prepares the house for its reception; but, when Love has taken up its abode in the house of the heart, Fear leaves it. Fear is the παιδαγωγός to bring us to Christ, in Whom we receive, not the spirit of servile fear (ανεθμα δουλείας εἰς φόβον, Rom. viii. 15), but the spirit of filial adoption, by which we cry, Abba, Father (Gal. iv. 6). When we have been brought to Him, and Father (Gal. 19. 6). When we have been brought to Him, and dwell in Him, the work of Fear is done, and we are perfected in Love. See Augustine here, and Epistle 140, Sect. 21.

Fear hath punishment (κόλασυ). It has punishment as its moving principle, and as that which is ever present with it. "Mala conscientia tota in desperatione est, sicut bona in spe." Augustine, in Ps. 31. Fear is like a slave, who lives and moves with the sight of the whip over before his eyes. He that is with the sight of the whip ever before his eyes. He that is fearing (ὁ φοβούμενος), he whose moving principle is fear (on which use of the present participle with the definite article, so as When almost a substantive, see Matt. iv. 3. Eph. iv. 28. Winer, § 45, p. 316), the fearer (as opposed to  $\delta \alpha \gamma \alpha \pi \hat{\omega} \nu$ , the lover) hath not been perfected in love. But when he has been perfected in love, he will no longer act from constraint, and from fear of punishment, as a bondservant; he will no longer be an Ishmael who is cast out of the house; but he will live and move with the joyful alacrity of an Isaac, who abideth in the house for ever (John viii. 35).

19. ἡμειs ἀγαπῶμεν] we love because He first loved us. The 13.  $\eta \mu \epsilon i s \alpha \gamma \alpha \pi \omega \mu \epsilon \gamma$  we sove vecause He first invea us. The Vulg., Syriac, and other Versions render  $\dot{\alpha} \gamma \alpha \pi \dot{\omega} \mu \epsilon \nu$  as an imperative, "Let us love:" compare vv. 7 and 11; and so Lange, Lücke, De Wette, Besser, Düsterdieck, Huther, and others; see Huther, p. 186. But the  $\dot{\eta} \mu \epsilon i s$  prefixed to the verb, and the general tenor of the argument, seems to favour the other rendering, that of the indicative. We should be only like those who fear, like slaves, if God had not loved us; but now we are they with love are dear children because He first loved us, as our who love, as dear children, because He first loved us, as our reconciled Father in Christ.

Elz. adds αὐτὸν, Him, after ἀγαπῶμεν, but it is not in A, B, and is not received by Lach. and Tisch., and the sense seems Ότι ἀγαπῶ τὸν Θεὸν, καὶ τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ μισῆ, ψεύστης ἐστίν ὁ γὰρ μὴ άγαπων τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ, ὃν εωρακε, τὸν Θεὸν, ὃν οὐχ εωρακε, πως δύναται αναπαν: 21 9 καὶ ταύτην την έντολην έχομεν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ, ἴνα ὁ ἀγαπῶν τὸν Θεὸν άγαπα καὶ τὸν άδελφὸν αὐτοῦ.

better without it. Here is the ground of our love generally; first to God, and then to man in God, -He first loved us.

The main difference between the old, or Levitical, and the new, or Evangelical, Law is this-Do it, says the one, Servus meus es tu; Do it, says the other, Filius meus es tu; here is the perfect law of Love and liberty (James ii. 12); and the Law of Fear, which prepared the way for the Gospel of Love, hath now given way to the Gospel of Love which abides for ever in God's house (1 Cor. xiii. 8-13), the Church of Earth and Heaven; for Love that is perfected casteth out Fear. See Bp. Andrewes, i.

CH. V. 1-4. πας δ πιστεύων] every one who believeth that Jesus is the Christ, hath been born of God. A doctrine opposed to the heresy of the Cerinthians who separated Jesus from Christ. Because of the growth of that Heresy, the Apostle specially inculcates this faith, that Jesus is the Son of God. Bp. Bull, Judic. Eccl. ii. Sect. 9.

St. John adds, that every one who loveth Him that begat, loveth Him that has been begotten of Him; and (v. 5) he asks, Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?

Thus our Regeneration is derived from the Generation of the Son of God, and His Incarnation. We cannot be born of God, unless we believe that the Jesus, Who is really and truly Man, is personally united to the Christ-the begotten of the Father-the Son of God.

St. John himself, in his Gospel, has developed his own argument. He has there affirmed that the Logos, or Word, is God, and that He gave power to all who receive Him, to become children of God, and that He was made Flesh, and took up His abode in us, and that of His fulness we all receive (John i. 1—16). He has also declared, that it is necessary for us to be born again (John iii. 3), and that the instrumental means by which we are to be regenerate, or born anew, as sons of God, are Water and the Holy Spirit (John iii. 5); and that the benefits of our union with Christ, and of the grace of His Unction, and the fruits of His Incarnation, and communion with God the Father in Him, are to be maintained by feeding on Him, and that "except we eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink His blood, we have no life in us" (John vi. 53). See the Introduction to St. John's Gospel, pp. 258, 259, and the Notes at the end of the Third and Sixth chapters of that Gospel.

Thus St. John in his Gospel has prepared us to understand the doctrine of his Epistle.

3. kal ai evrolai] and His commandments are not grievous: because His Grace makes His yoke to be easy, and His burden to be light. See Matt. xi. 30. Phil. iv. 13. 1 Cor. xv. 10, and S. Augustine's saying, "Da quod jubes, et jube quod vis" (Confess. x. 29); and Ausonius (ad Theodos. 13), "Juvat qui Jubet;" and Bp. Sanderson, Sermon iii. p. 316.

4. πᾶν τὸ γεγεννημένον ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ] every thing that hath been begotten of God, and continues to energize by the principle of the new life imparted in Regeneration. This is the force of the perfect tense γεγεννημένον, as usual. See above, iii. 9.

— αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ νίκη] this is the Victory which conquered the world, your Faith. The Faith which you professed in Christ not only does conquer (νικᾶ), but did conquer (ἐνίκησε) the world; for by it the Elders conquered, as has been shown in the eleventh chapter to the Hebrews; see especially Heb. xi. 33. Faith is called the Victory, as Christ is called "the Resurrection and the Life" (John xi. 25); because Faith,—which unites men to Christ, the Universal Conqueror and Giver of Victory (John xvi. 33. 1 Cor. xv. 57. Rev. vi. 2), is the only way to Victory, and the instrument by which it is gained; and whosoever has Faith, has Victory; whosoever believed in Christ, conquered by belief in

6. οὖτός ἐστιν δ ἐλθὼν δι' ὕδατος καὶ αΐματος, 'Ιησοῦς Χριστός]

This is He Who came by Water and Blood, Jesus Christ.

He Who came is He Who proved Himself to be "the Coming One;" δ ἐρχόμενος, the Messiah; see Matt. xi. 3; whence our Lord says, "all who came before Me were thieves and robbers." See note on John x. 8.

Jesus Christ came, as the Messiah and Son of God, in various ways.

1. He came, in all the purifications that were made by Water and Blood under the Old Law, which was dedicated with Blood and Water, Heb. ix. 22; because all those purifications were typical of, and preparatory to, His Sacrifice on the Cross, and derived all their efficacy from it.

It was the Water and the Blood afterwards shed on Calvary which imparted all the virtue to the Water and Blood poured out in the sacrificial rites of the Temple at Jerusalem, and of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness; and also to the Patriarchal Sacrifices at Bethel, at Mamre, and on Ararat; and even to the sacrifice of Abel on the borders of Faradise. Thus this is He Who came by Water and Blood; the Lamb of God slain from the foundation of the world. Rev. xiii. 8.

2. Again; Christ came by Water in His Baptism; and by Blood in His Circumcision, and especially in His Agony and Bloody Sweat in Gethsemane, and by the blood shed in His scourging before His Passion, and in the Crown of Thorns, and the piercing of His Hands at the Crucifixion.

3. Further; Christ came both by Water and Blood at once, in a special manner, on Calvary after His Death. St. John saw, and bare witness of what he then saw. "One of the soldiers pierced his side, and forthwith came there out Blood and Water; and he that saw it hath borne, and beareth, witness (μεμαρτύρηκε, perfect tense), and his witness is true, and he knoweth that he speaketh truth, in order that ye also may believe. For these things were done, in order that the Scripture might be fulfilled, A bone of Him shall not be broken (Exod. xii. 46, concerning the Paschal Lamb). And again, another Scripture saith, They shall see Him whom they pierced;" Zechariah xii. 10, speaking of Jehovah Himself. See John xix. 34-37.

Thus St. John in his Gospel prepares us to understand the words of his Epistle; and in his Epistle also he elucidates what had been recorded in his Gospel. His words therefore may be thus paraphrased. This is He Who came—that is, proved Himself to be robet by self to be what He was pre-announced to be by the Types and Prophecies of the Old Testament, and what He proclaimed Himself to be in the New-the "Coming One," "The Comer" (& έρχόμενος), the Messiah, the true Paschal Lamb, and Very Man, a true Sacrifice for sin; and yet Very God, the Everlasting Jehovah, of Whom the Prophet Zechariah spoke, when he prophesied of His being pierced at His Death.

He came by Blood and Water. He proved thereby the reality of His Humanity and of His Death; and thus He has given a practical refutation-which St. John himself saw with his own eyes-to the heretical notions of those in the Apostolic age, such as Simon Magus, and the Docetæ, who alleged that Jesus Christ had not a real human body, but was merely a spectral phantasm, crucified in show; and therefore S. Irenœus in the next age after St. John, urges this fact of the piercing of οὐκ ἐν τῷ ὕδατι μόνον, ἀλλ' ἐν τῷ ὕδατι καὶ ἐν τῷ αἴματι καὶ τὸ Πνεθμά ἐστι τὸ μαρτυροῦν, ὅτι τὸ Πνεῦμά ἐστιν ἡ ἀλήθεια:  $\frac{7}{6}$  ὅτι τρεῖς εἰσιν οἱ μαρτυ- $\frac{6}{3}$  Matt. 28. 19.  $\frac{1}{10}$  Cor. 12.  $\frac{4}{4}$ -6 ροθντες, 8 τὸ πνεθμα, καὶ τὸ ὕδωρ, καὶ τὸ αίμα· καὶ οἱ τρείς εἰς τὸ εν εἰσιν. Rev. 19. 13.

the side, and the flowing out of the blood and water, recorded by St. John, as conclusive against their heresy. S. Irenœus, iv. 32. 23, ed. Stieren; p. 357, Grabe. Cp. Bp. Pearson, Art. iv. p. 405, and Dr. Waterland, v. p. 190.

In the words, "not by water only," there seems also to be a reference to another heresy of the Apostolic age, that of Cerinthus, who said that Christ came in the water of Baptism, and descended into the man Jesus; and afterwards departed from Him, when He shed His blood on the Cross. In opposition to this notion St. John says, "This is He Who came by Water and Blood; not by Water only, but by Water and Blood." Cp. Dr. Burton's Lectures, pp. 188-190.

4. Further it is to be observed, that in this passage of his Epistle St. John is speaking of Christ's Generation, and of our

.Every one who believeth that Jesus is the Christ hath been born, and is born of God; i. e., is regenerate; and every one who loveth Him that begat, loveth Him that is begotten of Him; i. e., whoever loveth God the Father, loveth Him Who by Generation is the only-begotten Son of God; and every thing that is born of God (i. e., is regenerate) overcometh the World; and who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus-the Very Man Jesus-is also the Son of God?

St. John then proceeds to describe the means by which our Regeneration, or New Birth, is communicated to us from God, through His Son Christ Jesus, Very Man, and Very God; and how the new life so communicated is sustained in us. He does this by saying, This is He Who came-came to us-by Water and Blood, Jesus Christ; not by Water only, but by Water and Blood.

The natural life which was imparted to Eve—the Mother of all living, the type of the Church, the Spouse of the Second Adam, Jesus Christ-was derived from the First Adam's side, opened when he was asleep in Paradise. In like manner, the spiritual Life is given to the Spiritual Eve, the Church, and to all her faithful members, from the side of the Second Adam, Jesus Christ, sleeping in death on the Cross; and it is communicated through His death by means of the Water and Blood of the two Sacraments, which derive their quickening, cleansing, and invigorating virtue from the Divinity, Incarnation, and Death of our Crucified Lord and Saviour, and by which the benefit of that Death is applied to our regeneration and revivification; and which were visibly exhibited in the Water and Blood flowing from His precious side, pierced on the Cross.

This doctrine is implied by the Church of England in her Office for the Ministration of Baptism,-"Almighty, Everliving God, whose most dearly Beloved Son Jesus Christ, for the forgiveness of our sins, did shed out of His most precious side both Water and Blood; and gave commandment to His disciples, that they should go teach all nations, and baptize them . . . sanctify this Water to the mystical washing away of sin;" a formulary adopted from Ancient Liturgies; see Palmer, Origines Liturgieæ,

ii. 187.

It is observable, that our Lord Himself has assured us of this truth by the instrumentality of the same Apostle, St. John, who testifieth these things, and who alone of the Apostles saw our Lord's side pierced, and the Water and Blood coming forth from it.

It is in the Gospel of St. John that Christ says, " Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of Water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (John iii. Again, it is in the Gospel of St. John that Christ declares, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the Flesh of the Son of Man, and drink His Blood, ye have no life in you. Whose eateth my Flesh and drinketh my Blood hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last Day. For My Flesh is Meat indeed, and My Blood is drink indeed." (John vi. 53-55).

This therefore "is He Who came to us by Water and Blood, Jesus Christ; not by Water only, but by Water and Blood."

He came by Water, which is our λουτρόν, and by Blood, which is our λύτρον. His Baptism of Blood is our λύτρον, or ransom from death; and His Baptism by Water is our λουτρόν, or laver of Birth. And the Water of the λουτρόν derives its efficacy from the Blood of the λύτρον, shed on the Cross, which works in and by the Water of Baptism. He has washed us from our sins in His own blood (Rev. i. 5). His blood cleanseth us from all sin (1 John i. 7). In Baptism we pass through the Red Sea of His Blood, and are delivered from our enemies thereby.

"Hæc sunt gemina Ecclesiæ Sacramenta," says Augustine

of the Church, in which Christ comes. By them He came to us, He is ever coming in them.

At the first Institution of the Sacrament of the Eucharist, the pitcher of water and he that carried it, were not in vain given for a sign by Christ (see on Mark xiv. 13), it went not before for nothing. Cp. Bp. Andrewes, iii. p. 359.

Christ is ever coming by the Water and Blood of the Sacraments, to quicken and cleanse all of every age in the Church (see Titus iii. 5), and He animates and unites them all in the bonds of holiness and love, as fellow-members communicating with Him their Head, and knit and woven together by veins and arteries, in

One Body, the Body of Christ.
Some ancient testimonies to the above exposition may be seen in note above, on John xix. 34, to which may be added S. Augustine, Serm. v., referring to this passage, as follows: "Quid profluxit do latere nisi sacramentum quod acciperent fideles? Spiritus, sanguis et aqua; Spiritus quem emisit; et sanguis et aqua quæ de latere profluxerunt; de ipso sanguine et aqua significatur nata Ecclesia; cum jam dormiret Christus in cruce, quia Adam in Paradiso somnum accepit, et sic illi de latere Eva producta est." Compare Cassiodorus here, and Bp. Andrewes, Serm. xiii. vol. iii. pp. 345-360.

- καί το Πνεθμά έστι το μαρτυροθν] and the Spirit is that which is bearing witness to the doctrine that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God. The Holy Spirit, promised by Christ, and given by the Father to the Church, in consequence of the Passion, Resurrection, and Ascension of Christ, bare witness by His own descent on the Day of Pentecost, and by the supernatural powers of Tongues and Prophecy which He then bestowed on the Apostles, and on others who believed and were baptized in Christ's Name, that all which Jesus Christ had preached was true: and that He is, what He declared Himself to be, the Son of God (cp. John xv. 26; xvi. 14). And the Holy Spirit by His presence and operation in the Water of Baptism, and in the Blood of the Holy Eucharist, bears witness to the Verity and Virtue of the Incarnation and Death of Christ, the Son of God, from which the efficacy of the Sacraments is derived.

7. ὅτι τρεῖς εἰσιν οἱ μαρτυροῦντες] because three are they who are bearing witness.

After these words Elz. has this addition, ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ ὁ Πατήρ, ὁ Λόγος, καὶ τὸ άγιον Πνεθμα καὶ οθτοι οἱ τρεῖς έν εἰσι, και τρείς είσιν οι μαρτυρούντες έν τῆ γῆ, in heaven the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit, and these three are one (i. e. one substance, neuter, cp. John x. 30), and there are three who are bearing witness on earth.

But this addition is not found in A, &, B, G, K, or in the cursive MSS. of this Epistle—with the exception of three MSS. of comparatively recent date—nor in the Lectionaries, nor in the best editions of the Ancient Versions, nor in the Greek Fathers of the first Four Centuries, nor in the Latin Fathers of those centuries, with the exception of a single passage in S. Cyprian de Unit. Eccl. c. 5, the tenor of which is doubtful.

The earliest Author by whom these words are clearly cited is Vigilius Thapsensis at the close of the Fifth Century. See the statement of the evidence on this subject in the editions of Wet-stein, Griesbach, Scholz, and Tischendorf.

The words in question are not received by Griesbach, Scholz, Lachmann, Tischendorf. Nor need any one be disturbed by their non-appearance in the text. It is certain, as has been observed by Dr. Bentley (Correspondence, vol. ii. p. 530), that the Ante-Nicene and Nicene Fathers confuted Arianism without the aid of this passage, to which they never refer, because it was not in their copies of this Epistle; and the doctrine of the Trinity has been clearly established by other Scriptures, and by the consentient voice and concurrent practice of the Church, especially in the administration of the Sacrament of Baptism, with which every child of God has been admitted into the Church of Christ by His express command, in the Name of the Ever-Blessed Trinity (see above, on Matt. iii. 16. Cp. 2 Cor. xiii. 14. Eph. ii. 18), and also in her Liturgical formularies in the Administration of the Holy Communion, and in her solemn Doxologies and Bene-

The passage therefore according to the best authorities stands thus, Because three ( tpeis, masculine, not tpla, neuter) are those who are bearing witness, the Spirit, and the Water, and the Blood, and these three ( $\tau p \epsilon i s$ , masculine, not  $\tau \rho i a$ , neuter) are (joined) into the one ( $\tau o \epsilon \nu$ , the one Substance, neuter; not masculine eva).

The gender of the words here used is very remarkable. St. John speaks of three Persons (τρείς) and one Substance

9 ε Εὶ τὴν μαρτυρίαν τῶν ἀνθρώπων λαμβάνομεν, ἡ μαρτυρία τοῦ Θεοῦ g John 5, 37, & 5, 17, 18. μείζων ἐστίν ὅτι αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ μαρτυρία τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὅτι μεμαρτύρηκε περὶ τοῦ h John 3. 16, 33. (Ex), and affirms that these three Persons bear witness, and these three Persons (Tpeis) are united into the one substance. the masculine toeis, before the three neuter substantives; and after them also.

This declaration may be best explained by our Lord's words as recorded by St. John himself, in the Gospel, "I and my Father are one:" where one is expressed, as here, by the neuter  $\tilde{\epsilon}\nu$ ; and our Lord there affirms that He and His Father, being two Persons (masculine) are one substance (neuter). See the note there, and compare our Lord's words, John xvii. 11. 22, in which the unity of the Persons is described by the neuter gender.

So St. John declares here that there are three Persons (Tpeis, masculine) who are bearing witness (μαρτυροῦντες, masculine), and that these three (Persons) who are bearing witness are joined into one (êv one substance, neuter).

There is therefore good ground for the ancient opinion, that St. John in this passage is declaring the Unity of the Three Persons of the Trinity in one substance. This appears to be the meaning of Tertullian (c. Prax. 25), where he says, that "the union of the Father in the Son, and of the Son in the Father, makes three Persons joined in one: which three Persons are unum (one substance) non unus (not one Person), as Christ says, 'I and (one substance) non unus (not one Person), as Christ says, 'I and My Father are One;' declaring Oneness of substance, and not singleness of number.' And his scholar, S. Cyprian (de unit. Eccl. c. 5), writes thus, 'The Lord says, I and the Father are one (unum), and again it is written" (i. e. in the passage now before us of St. John's Epistle), concerning the Father and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, "three are one" (tres unum sunt).

And so the ancient Scholium in Matthais says that "John uses the number three in the masculine gender, because those three are symbols of the Trinity," and by using the word  $\hat{\epsilon}_{\nu}$ , "he designates the unity of the Godhead;" and so S. Augustine (c. Maximin. 22) says, "If we desire to examine what is signified by these words, the Trinity itself may reasonably occur to us; which is One God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, concerning which it may be most truly said, 'Three are the Witnesses,' and 'Three are one substance (unum)."

St. John himself appears to authorize this exposition, by adding, "If we receive the witness of men (especially of three men, see Matt. xviii. 16. 2 Cor. xiii. 1. Heb. x. 28), the witness of God is greater," thus intimating that the testimony of the lhree witnesses here mentioned is the witness of God in three Persons.

Our Lord Himself in St. John's Gospel has prepared the way for this exposition. He thus speaks to the Jews, "In your Law it is written that the witness of two men is true. I am He that beareth witness (δ μαρτυρῶν) concerning Myself; and the Father who sent me beareth witness" (John viii. 18).

This was spoken by Christ before His Ascension; but He promised that after He Himself had gone away He would send a third witness. " When the Comforter is come whom I will send unto you from the Father, namely, the Spirit of Truth who proceedeth from the Father, He shall bear witness of Me" (John

By that Coming of the Holy Ghost, the testimony of the three Witnesses was completed.

Therefore St. John, writing in this Epistle after the Ascension of Christ, and the Giving of the Holy Spirit, might well say that Three are those who are bearing witness, and these three are united into One . . . and this is "the witness of God."

These three are designated here as "the Spirit, the Water, and the Blood."

Firstly, the Spirit; who begins the Work of Regeneration

by applying all quickening grace to Man.

Secondly, the Water; the symbol and instrument of the New Birth derived from God the Father, Who is the Original Wellspring and Fountain of all Life and Grace to man. natural heavens and earth were formed out of the Water. was their Origin (see on 2 Pet. iii. 5). So it is with the spiritual Life; it is formed from out of Water. Water therefore is a proper symbol of the Paternity of God.

And thirdly, the Blood, symbolizing the Incarnation and Passion of God the Son, through Whom all grace descends from the Father, by the Holy Spirit. See on 2 Cor. xiii. 13.

These Three Persons are joined consubstantially into one

Godhead; and their Witness is the witness of God. Cp. Bp. Andrewes, iii. p. 354, who observes that " Water notes Creation; Blood notes Redemption by Christ; the Spirit notes Unction, to complete all."

There is an image of the Trinity in the Christian Sacraments. There is, baptismus fluminis, the Baptism of Water, the work of Creation by the Father; there is baptismus sanguinis, the Baptism of Blood, the work of Redemption by the Son; but these are not enough, unless there be also the baptismus flaminis, the Baptism of the Spirit. Thus the work of the Ever-Blessed Trinity is done in the soul. Cp. Bp. Andrewes, iii. 248.

The above considerations may explain the addition which has found its way into the text of some few Manuscripts here, "in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one, and three are they who are bearing witness on earth." These words were probably originally only an expository gloss. They are a correct exposition of St. John's meaning, and there is no reason to suspect that they were interpolated de-signedly. They were probably written originally by some expositor on the margin of his manuscript; perhaps they were derived by him from S. Cyprian, and were adopted by some subsequent transcriber, who supposed them to belong to the Text; as was sometimes the case with marginal glosses; cp. Valcknaer, de Glossis in N. T.1

1 Dr. Bentley's opinion concerning the genuineness of this passage,

1 Dr. Bentley's opinion concerning the genuineness of this passage, is matter of interest on account of the special attention which that celebrated critic gave to it. It is thus expressed in a letter dated 'Jan. 1, 1716-17:—

"In my proposed work" (his edition of the Greek Testament) "the fate of that verse will be a mere question of fact" (i. e. it will depend on the testimony of the MSS). "You endeavour to prove (and that's all you aspire to) that it may have been writ by the Apostle, being consonant to his other doctrine. This I concede to you; and if the fourth century knew that text, let it come in, in God's name; but if that age did not know it, then Arianism in its height was beat down without the help of that verse; and let the fact prove as it will, the doctrine is unshaken." Ric. Bentley.

Bentley delivered his famous Prelectio on this verse, May 1, 1717, four months after the date of this letter. See Whiston's Memoirs, p. 314. Bentley's Works, iii, 485. Bp. Monks Bentley, i. pp. 16—19. What the tenor of that Prelection was—which is lost—may be gathered from the remarks on the subject in Casley's Preface to his Catalogue of the Royal Library, p. xxi, ed. Lond. 1734, where, from conversations with Dr. Bentley, be vindicates Bentley's xsertions on this and other questions of Biblical Criticism. The person who speaks as follows is surely not Casley, but Bentley, p. xxi,—"But how to account for this verse being first inserted is the difficulty; and some have not stuck to call it a forgery. But I hope better things, and that it may be made to have appeared by a mistake of a Latin Scribe, in the eighth or ninth century, on the following occasion; S. Cyprian, a famous Latin father, has the words of that verse in his works; and it is no wonder if they were transcribed thence into the margin, or between the lines of the eighth verse, of a book of some one who had a great veneration for that Father, as a gloss, which is very common in MSS; as it is not improbable that Cassiodorus in his Complexiones in Epistolas, and others who have the words, took them from Cyprian. Next, a copyist, being employed to write out this particular book, and finding the words so inserted, imagined that the former copyist, by mistake, had omitted them, and therefore put them in the text. Such insertions of explanatory words or sentences from the margin into the text are common in MSS. Jerome, in one of his letters, says, that an explanatory note, which he had made himself in the margin of his Psalter, had been incorporated by some transcriber into the text. And thus this insertion might rest till a long time after, and then the sham Preface to the Catholic Epistles must be made, complaining of the unfaithful Translators for leaving it out! Whereas, it is matter of fact, that no Greck Copics of this Epistle had that verse, save one at Berlin, which is thence into the margin, or between the lines of the eighth verse, of a lators for leaving it out! Whereas, it is matter of fact, that no Greek Copies of this Epistle had that verse, save one at Berlin, which is discovered to have been transcribed from the printed Biblia Complutensia, and another modern one at Dublin, probably translated or printed from the Latin Yulgate, neither the Author of the Preface, nor any friend for him, having searched for it in any Greek copy." See also p. xxiv, "To return to 1 John v. 7, when the foresaid Preface was made, then was the Text also inserted in other copies that had it not, several of which are now to be found in Libraries."

Some few unimportant omissions and alterations have been made in the above extracts.

- Ίνα εἰδῆτε] in order that ye may know. Observe the word οίδαμεν, we know, repeated five times in the following verses, contrasting strongly the nature of true Christian γνωσις or knowledge, with that of the ψευδώνυμος γνωσις, of the Gnostics. See the like use of οίδαμεν, we know, at the close of St. John's Gospel, xxi. 24.

- οἱ πιστεύοντες] So A.-B has τοῖς πιστεύονσιν-and so Griesh., Scholz, Lach., Tisch.-Elz, has καὶ Ίνα πιστεύητε.

14. παρδησία] confidence, especially in prayer. See iii. 21, 22.

— ἐάν τι αἰτώμεθα] if we pray for any thing, observe, according to His Will, He heareth us, and if we know that He heareth us, we know that we have the things which we have prayed for; for, either we receive the very things themselves, or, something better than the things which we ourselves desire; and since our prayers are always framed according to His will, we do receive the things for which we pray. See the case of St. Paul's prayer, notes above on 2 Cor. xii. 9.

16. ἔστιν ἁμαρτία πρὸς θάνατον] there is a sin unto death. I am not speaking concerning that, in order that he, the Christian brother, should ask (ἐρωτήση).

The distinction between sins unto death, and sins not unto death, is grounded on Hebrew Law and Language (Lev. xvii. 6. Schoettgen, Horæ, here), but it takes a spiritual form under the Gospel; and death is not used in the sense of capital punishment, but as opposed to the ζωη, or life, of the soul.

Observe the change of the word from αἰτεῖν, pelere, to έρωτᾶν, rogare: the one signifying to pray, as an inferior suitor to a superior, the other expressing rather a general act of an inquirer, or the request of an equal, who has a right to ask and obtain. See John vi. 22 and on vi. 23 and Reveal here and obtain. See John xi. 22, and on xvi. 23, and Bengel here, and Dean Trench, Synonym. N. T. xi.

By using the word  $\epsilon \rho \omega \tau \dot{\eta} \sigma \eta$  here, and by placing the word emphatically at the end of the sentence, St. John appears to intimate, that no interrogatory questions are to be addressed to God, concerning the person who is sinning a sin unto death, and that this would be to deal presumptuously and to tempt God.

**Clemens Alexandrinus** (Strom. ii. p. 389) cites this passage in treating of the difference between sins of infirmity, and sins of presumption. The sin unto death is wilful resistance of the Holy Ghost; obstinate denial and rejection of Christ, who is the Life (cp. v. 12); deliberate and open Anti-christianism; presumptuous sin (such as that described in Matt. xii. 31. Heb. vi. 4-8; x. 28-30), persisted in, after warnings and censures of the Church. He who continues obstinately in such sin, is not a fit subject for any inquiries of God; God has spoken clearly concerning him; he is not to be received into our houses (2 John 10, 11), he is to be separated from the holy offices of the Church, in order that by excommunication-which is a rehearsal of future and eternal judgment-he may learn not to blaspheme, and be alarmed and terrified, and so his soul may be saved in the day of the Lord. See above on Matt. xviii. 17. 1 Cor. v. 5. 1 Tim. i.

God Himself has declared His will that prayers should not be made for certain desperate sinners (see Jer. vii. 16; xi. 14; xiv. 11); and if a man is deprived of the prayers of the Church, this very denial may have a salutary influence with him in such a case, where no milder medicines will avail.

Besides, the bodily afflictions and other temporal chastisements which may overtake him in consequence of such suspension and privation, when by the withdrawal of God's good Spirit for a time Satan may chastise and torment him (see 1 Cor. v. 5), may have a wholesome effect in making him feel "how bitter a thing it is to forsake God" (Jer. ii. 19), and may bring him under the operation of fear and anguish, and soften his heart, and lead him to repentance, and by repentance to pardon and grace, and in the end to everlasting salvation.

Therefore St. John does not prescribe prayer in such a case, but he implies that other means are to be used.

18. οὐχ ἀμαρτάνει] he sinneth not, is not a sinner; see on iii. 9. He that was born of God, keepeth himself, takes heed to his ways (1 Tim. v. 22. James i. 27). That is his true character and proper condition; and the evil One layeth not hold of him, —ουχ άπτεται αυτοῦ. On the sense of ἄπτομαι, to grasp and cling to, see above on John xx. 17.

19. και ὁ κόσμος ὅλος ἐν τῷ πονηρῷ κεῖται] and the world wholly lieth in the dominion of the Wicked One, v. 18; ii. 13; it lieth as a captive beneath his feet. On the use of èv, see

Winer, § 48.

There is a contrast here between  $\tau \circ \hat{v} = 0$  and  $\tau \hat{\varphi} = 0$  and  $\tau \hat{\varphi} = 0$ . The saints are born of God and stand firm and erect  $\hat{\epsilon} v = 0$ . Κυρίω, ἐν Χριστῷ (cp. on Rom. xvi. 9), and we are in Him, have our life in Him, Who is the true One, ἐν τῷ ἀληθινῷ, see v. 20;

but the world lieth altogether (δλος) ἐν τῷ πονηρῷ.

20. τὸν ἀληθινόν] Him that is true: the true God as opposed to the so-called, and false gods, the idols of the heathen, mentioned below, v. 21.

On ἀληθινδs, as used in this sense, see above on John xvii. 3.

Cp. 1 Thess. i. 9.

— καί ἐσμεν ἐν τῷ ἀληθινῷ] and we are in Him that is true, in His Son Jesus Christ. By being in His Son Jesus Christ we are in Him Who is the true God.

— οῦτός ἐστιν ὁ ἀληθινὸς Θεός] He—namely, Jesus Christ—is the true God and Life eternal. Thus St. John closes his Epistle, as he had begun his Gospel, with asserting that Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is Himself the true God, and Life Eternal. See John i. 1-4, which is the best exposition of this passage, and there St. John says expressly that the "Word was God, and that in Him was Life." Cp. above, v. 11, and Dr. Waterland, v. p. 193, who says, "The title of the true God is here given to 11 Cor 10, 14.

21 τ Τεκνία, φυλάξατε έαυτοὺς ἀπὸ τῶν εἰδώλων.

The Son of God, not of Joseph and Mary, nor the Son of the Only-begotten as some said, but the Son of God His Father, is come in the flesh; not merely to reside in it for a season, as the Cerinthians held, and then to fly off from it, but to abide in us, to be clothed for ever with the humanity He has taken: and we are in Him that is true, the true God, by Jesus Christ Who is the true God, not an inferior power or Angel, such as Cerinthus supposed the Demiurge, or Creator of the world to be, nor a created Æon, the offspring of the Monogenes or Only-begotten, or of Silence, as Cerinthus imagined the Logos or Word to be; but the true God, one with the Father. See also Bp. Pearson, Art. ii. p. 247, who says, "Christ is not only here termed God, but the true God:" and cp. p. 259, and Bengel here.

St. John's words seem to have been in the mind of his scholar, S. Ignatius, who confirms the above interpretation, and writes concerning Christ, as ἐν σαρκὶ γενόμενος Θεός, ἐν θανάτφ (ω) ἀληθινή: co. Tertullian, de carne Christi, § 5.

Ye are the temple of the living God." (2 Cor. vi. 16.) Those so-called gods are dead. You live among the Heathen; be on your guard against the allurements of their idolatrous worship. And be not led astray by some who call themselves Christians, such as the Nicolaitans, who would inveigle you to eat things offered to idols (Rev. ii. 2. 15), and lead you into idolatry; or by the followers of Simon Magus, who even worship idols (see Irenœus, i. 20, Grabe, and Euseb. ii. 13); or by others, such as the Cerinthians (Philastr. hær. 36), who would persuade you that you need not bear witness to God and Christ, but may safely offer incense to the idols of the Heathen, rather than suffer martyrdom. Therefore, little children, keep yourselves from idols.

Here is a farewell admonition from St. John to the Church of every age. He warns her against that danger, of which later generations have had mournful experience, and which he foresaw and foretold in his Apocalypse. See Rev. ix. 20.

The admonition of St. John, keep yourselves from idols, is the more remarkable, on account of its juxtaposition with his teaching here that Jesus Christ is God. If Jesus Christ is not God, then the Christianity, which St. John himself teaches, is idolatry. But Jesus Christ is the true God, and therefore that form of religion which hath not the Son, as the Son is revealed by St. John, hath not the Father. (1 John ii. 23.) "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." John ii. 36.

INTRODUCTION

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF ST. JOHN.

THE method adopted by St. Peter and St. Paul in their teaching on the Nature and Person of Christ, is employed also by St. John. First, they established the Truth; next, they refuted Error. The work of construction was effected by St. Peter in his First Epistle; in his Second Epistle he denounced the heresies of false Teachers. St. Paul performed the first of these Apostolic acts in his Epistle to the Ephesians; the latter was done by him in his Epistle to the Colossian Church.

1. St. John had executed the former of these tasks—that of establishing the Truth—in his Gospel. He afterwards proceeded to complete his plan by accomplishing the latter—that of cen-suring and correcting Heresy—in his Epistles 2.

2. This Second Epistle of St. John, brief as it is, is ministered to this end; and it conduces to it even by its brevity.

Let us consider how this appears to be the case.

3. This Second Epistle opens with the words ὁ πρεσβύτερος Ἐκλεκτῷ Κυρία καὶ τοῖς τέκνοις αὐτῆς, "The elder to an elect Lady and her children;" and it ends with the words, "The children of thy sister who is elect greet thee." In the former case the word elect has not the definite article; in the latter it has.

4. The question here arises,—Who is this ἐκλεκτὴ κυρία, to whom St. John writes?

Many Expositors are of opinion, that St. John is writing here to a private person; and it has been supposed by some <sup>3</sup>, that her name was Κυρία, Κητία, and by others <sup>4</sup>, that her name was Electa.

But it appears more probable that under this title St. John is addressing a Christian Church.

This interpretation is suggested by the words used by St John's brother Apostle St. Peter, at the close of his Epistle, "The co-Elect with you, that is at Babylon, saluteth you "." There the word "co-elect" signifies "a Church'," and it is probable that the word ἐκλεκτὴ (elect) here used by St. John, has a like meaning.

Besides, at the end of the present Epistle, we read a salutation which seems to be formed on that of St. Peter. St. Peter's words at the end of his Epistle are 'Ασπάζεται ὑμᾶς ἡ ἐν Βαβυλῶνι συνεκλεκτή. Let us compare St. John's final salutation, sent in this Epistle to the Elect one, whom he addresses from the Children of her Elect sister: 'Ασπάζεταί σε τὰ τέκνα τῆς ἀδελφῆς σοῦ τῆς έκλεκτης, "The children of thy sister, who is Elect, greet thee."

St. Peter had written from Babylon to the elect in Asia's, and saluted them in the name of a co-elect one at Babylon; and that co-elect one at Babylon was a Church.

St. John, whose residence was in Asia, writes to an Elect one, and sends to her the greetings of an elect sister. Hence it appears probable that the elect one and her elect sister are not private individuals, but Churches.

The word Ἐκλεκτὴ, elect, is used by the Septuagint in the Canticles as the characteristic of Christ's spouse, the Church's. And in an ancient painting at St. Maria in Trastevere, at Rome,

Christ is represented as enthroned with the Church as the Queen on His right hand ', and in His right hand a book with the words inscribed "Veni, Electa Mea, et ponam te in thronum Meum."

The word Κυρία, Lady, here used with ἐκλεκτή, elect, is descriptive of a Church. Jesus Christ, the Lord, is Κύριος; His spouse, a Church, is Κυρία<sup>2</sup>. This is declared by the very name Church (Κυριακή).

In the Old Testament the Churches of Israel and Judah are designated as sisters 3.

Besides, it is not likely that St. John should have written to a private woman and to her children, and have sent a salutation from the children of a woman, and not have made any mention of the Husband of either of these two women. They may have been both Widows: but there is no evidence of this.

Still further, St. John does not say, "Thy elect sister and her children greet thee." He would probably have written so, if he had been writing from the household of one woman to another woman. But he says, "The children of thine elect sister greet thee."

This circumstance also confirms the opinion, that the sister is a Church. Her children are the members of the Church. They are the Church. And if the Elect sister whose children's salutations are sent, is a Church, the Elect Lady whose sister she is, is probably a Church also.

Besides, St. John describes the children of her to whom he writes as "loved by all persons, who have known the truth '.' This could hardly be applicable to the children of a private womanparticularly a widow: but it might be true of the spiritual children of a Church 5.

To personify a Church, is also in harmony with the manner and mind of St. John. In his Apocalypse, the Christian Church is represented as a Woman 6, and the Church triumphant is described as "the Bride, the Lamb's Wife ?."

Accordingly, we find that in early times this Epistle was supposed by some Interpreters * to be addressed to a Church, or to the Church.

This exposition has also been adopted in recent times by many learned writers.

5. If this Epistle was addressed to a Church, it may be next inquired;— To what Church?

For a reply to this question, let us consider the brotherly relation of St. Peter to St. John 10; and that it is a distinguishing characteristic of the Catholic Epistles, that they are interwoven 11 with one another, in thought and language; and that there was an intimate connexion and sympathy between the Jewish Christians of Asia, where St. John resided, and those of Babylonia, from which St. Peter wrote 12; and that the Parthians, Medes, and Elamites, and dwellers in Mesopotamia, that is, the inhabitants of Babylonia and its neighbourhood, are mentioned the first among those who were evangelized by the Apostles on the day of Pentecost 13, and that almost immediately after them are mentioned the dwellers in Asia; and that the Parthians then occupied the second place among the nations of the world, and that they inhabited the region of Babylon and the adjacent countries.

Let us also bear in mind, that St. Peter's First Epistle was written to the elect of St. John's own province, Asia, and that he sends in it the greetings of a co-elect Church 14.

When these circumstances are duly weighed, it will not appear improbable, that St. John's Epistle, which was written to an elect Lady, and that Lady a Church; and which conveys the salutations of the children of an elect Sister, and that sister a Church; was of the nature of an Apostolic reply from a sister Church of Asia,—such as that of Ephesus the capital of Asia and the residence of St. John,—to that other Church, from which his brother Apostle, St. Peter, had written to the Churches of Asia,—namely, the Church at Babylon.

Such a sisterly communication, from one Church to another, would come with peculiar grace

pretation is mentioned also by Ecumenius (ad finem Epist.) and Theophylact, and in Cramer's Catena, p. 146, and Cassiodorus in the sixth century (Complexiones, p. 136) says here, "Joannes electæ Dominæ scribit Ecclesiæ fillisque ejus." And at the end of this Epistle the elect sister (in v. 13) is described by some MSS. as the Church at Ephesus. See Tischendorf, p. 233.

from a Church of St. John to a Church of St. Peter. St. John and St. Peter had been united by the tenderest and most endearing ties of love, as brother Apostles in Christ. They had been together with Christ in His Transfiguration and Agony; they were together at His sepulchre; they were together at the Sea of Galilee after His Resurrection; they were together at the day of Pentecost, and in the Temple after His Resurrection; they were together in Prison at Jerusalem; they went together from Jerusalem to Samaria to lay hands on those who had been baptized <sup>2</sup>.

Some confirmation is afforded to this opinion by the following facts.

This second Epistle, as well as the first 3 Epistle of St. John, is described by some ancient authorities 4 as addressed to the Parthians.

It seems probable, therefore, that this Epistle was addressed to the Church at Bubylon.

There would be a peculiar interest and beauty in such an address as this from St. John to a Murch at Babylon.

The City of Babylon had said, in the day of her heathen pride, "I shall be a Lady for ever "," and she had been called the Lady of kingdoms ". Babylon had fallen from her high estate; but St. Peter had preached on the Day of Pentecost to the Parthians, the inhabitants of Babylonia, and they had been baptized into Christ ". Thus there was an elect Church at Babylon; a Sion even at Babylon ". And there would be a happy coincidence in the circumstance, that the great Assyrian Babylon, that persecuting city which had boasted that she should be "a Lady for ever," and was rejected, and then fell, should have risen again in Christ, and have been espoused to Him as a Church, and become an elect Lady in Him, and be addressed as such by the Apostolic brother of St. Peter, the beloved disciple, St. John.

6. If the above opinion is well grounded, we may recognize here a special use of this Epistle. It is indeed a very short one, but it serves an important purpose.

St. Peter, in his two Epistles addressed to the Christians of Asia, had inculcated those Articles of the Christian Faith which St. John laboured to defend; and St. Peter had delivered a prophetic warning against those Heresiarchs, who in the age and country of St. John, were endeavouring to destroy the foundations of the Faith in the Incarnation of the Son of God, and in the Godhead of Jesus Christ: and who, as St. Peter had predicted, were denying the Lord that bought them <sup>9</sup>, and were walking after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness <sup>10</sup>.

In the present Epistle St. John delivers a clear statement of the truth on those great articles of Christian Faith and Morals; and pronounces a stern condemnation of those heretical and antinomian Teachers who assaulted them, and whom he calls Antichrist<sup>11</sup>.

This profession and protest would be more easily transcribed, and be more readily circulated, on account of the brevity of the Epistle, in which they are contained. It may seem surprising at first, that so short an Epistle should be received into the Canon of the New Testament. But, under the circumstances of the case, one of its strongest recommendations was, that it was short. It was a symbol of Faith, and safeguard against Error,—from the hands of St. John.

The Christians of Asia, and of the East, would be confirmed in their Faith and Practice by receiving the Apostolic witness of St. John to the same truths as those which they had heard from St. Peter. And the Church of every age may derive comfort from seeing the two Apostles, St. Peter and St. John, associated for ever in their writings, as they had been associated in their lives, in preaching the Truth, as it is in Jesus Christ, and faithfully feeding His flock, and guarding it valiantly against the wolves, who endeavour to destroy it 12.

7. The facts and considerations now submitted to the reader have some bearing on the question which was briefly mentioned at the close of the Introduction to the First Epistle of St. John.

4 Cp. Tisch. p. 233. In the Latin Translation of S. Clement's Adumbrationes (p. 1011) we read "Secunda Joannis Epistola, quæ ad Virgines inscripta est, simplicissima est." Here the word Virgines is a translation of Παρθένους, which was probably only a corruption of Πάρθους, the Parthians, who had the rule of Babylonia in the age of St. Peter and St. John (see Kirchofer, p. 239). Indeed, S. Clement himself seems to have preserved Vol. II.—Part IV.

something of a tradition to this effect. For while he says that this Second Epistle is written to a Babylonian, he says that the word Electa signified the Election of a Church.

That Epistle also, as we have seen 1, is described by some Ancient Writers and Manuscripts as having been addressed "to the Parthians."

There is nothing improbable in this statement. In the Apostolic age, as has been already observed, the Parthians were second only to the Romans among the nations of the world. Many Jews dwelt in Parthia. The Parthians are placed first in the catalogue of the Jews who heard St. Peter preach at Jerusalem<sup>2</sup>. Babylon was in Parthia. St. Peter, it is probable, had gone thither in person, and had thence written an Epistle to the Churches of St. John<sup>3</sup>.

Bearing in mind these circumstances, and considering the testimony of some ancient writers and Manuscripts specifying the Parthians in the inscription of the Epistle, and that there is no evidence to the contrary, and that no other name is mentioned by any ancient writer in that inscription, we cannot reject that testimony as altogether incredible; and we may at least be permitted to suppose it probable, that the First Epistle of St. John, written in all likelihood from Asia, was addressed to the same country as that in which his brother Apostle, St. Peter, was, when he wrote his first Epistle, which he sent to the Churches of Asia.

- 1. δ πρεσβύτερος] The elder. The beloved Disciple and Apostle, St. John, thus designates himself in modesty; so St. Apostle, St. John, thus designates himself in modesty; so St. reter calls himself συμπρεσβύτερος, 1 Pet. v. 1. Cp. 3 John 1. St. John was eminently "the elder," because it is probable, when he wrote his Epistles, he was the only survivor of those who had been ordained by Christ; and this title may also have been adopted by him because he was advanced in years. Christ had declared His will, that St. John "should tarry till He came" (John xxi. 21; see also on 1 John ii. 6); and his life was continued to upwards of a hundred years. so that there was a pent. tinued to upwards of a hundred years, so that there was a peculiar significance in this appellation, as applied to him. Here also is an evidence of genuineness. A writer personating the Apostle would not have withheld the Apostolic title, which the true Apostles sometimes do: see James i. l. Jude 1. In the Apocalypse St. John in his modesty calls himself only John: i. l. 4. 9;
- ἐκλεκτῆ κυρία] to the elect Lady and her children. On
- the sense of these words, see above, Introduction to this Epistle. obs  $\hat{\epsilon}\gamma\hat{\omega}$   $\hat{\alpha}\gamma\alpha\pi\hat{\omega}$   $\hat{\epsilon}\nu$   $\hat{\alpha}\lambda\eta\theta\epsilon(\hat{\alpha}]$  whom I love in Christian truth, which is the only genuine foundation and element of Christian love; cp. 3 John 1. Truth is here opposed to the deceits of the false Teachers who are called liars, ψεῦσται (see 1 John ii. 22; cp. ibid. ii. 4; iv. 20), and whose heresies impugn the doctrine of Christ's Divinity and Incarnation, and are destructive of Christian Love and Christian Morality; see above, pp. 103, 104. Observe, therefore, how St. John dwells on the word  $\lambda\lambda\eta\theta\epsilon\iota\alpha$ , truth, Truth of Christian doctrine. That word Truth is repeated five times in this short Epistle; and six times in the Third Epistle, consisting only of thirteen verses.

3. χάρις, ἔλεος, εἰρήνη] Grace, Mercy, Peace. Both St. Peter's Epistles begin in like manner with the salutation, χάρις ral elphyn; and so St. John, Rev. i. 4.

— παρὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ] from Jesus Christ the Son of the Father—a profession of the true Faith against the heretical doctrines of the Gnostic Teachers; see above, Introduction to the First Epistle; on 2 Pet. ii. 1; and on 1 John i. 1—3; and

4. εχάρην λίαν] I rejoiced exceedingly: on this use of λίαν see 3 John 3. Matt. ii. 10; xxvii. 14. Luke xxiii. 8. Cp. Barnabas, Epist. c. 1; Avete, filii et filiæ, in nomine Domini Nostri Christi in pace, supra modum exhilaror beatis et præclaris spiritibus vestris.

- εθρηκα έκ των τέκνων σου] I have found some of thy children. Here is another evidence in favour of the opinion-stated above in the Introduction-that he is writing to a Church. He had said that "all Men love the Elect Lady and her children" (v. 1), and he now says that he himself has found some of them walking in the truth. These assertions are hardly applicable to the children of a private woman, but they are suitable to the case of a Church. The Church to which he writes was known as a Church to all, and some of its members had come to the place where the Apostle was, and he had found them to be walking in
- 5. êρωτῶ σε] Ientreat thee,—as one who has a right to ask this of thee; see on 1 John v. 16.
- οὐχ ὡς ἐντολὴν γράφων σοι καινήν] not as writing to thee (who art already well instructed) a new commandment: sec above on 1 John ii. 8; iii. 11.
- 6. αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ ἀγάπη] this is love, that we walk according to His commandments. A protest against the false teachers who pretended to gnosis, but set at nought praxis: see on 1 John i.
- 7. πολλοί πλάνοι] many deceivers went forth into the world. Even from out of the Church herself, the house of God, some have gone forth into the World, which "lieth under the Wicked one" (1 John v. 19); and have made the World more wicked than it was. See on I John ii. 18, 19.

Elz. has εἰσῆλθον, but A, B have ἐξῆλθαν and ἐξῆλθον, and so the Syriac, Vulgate, and Irenæus (iii. 16. 8), who quotes these words as from the First Epistle of St. John, and applies them to the Gnostics, who, under pretence of superior intelligence, separated Jesus from Christ (as the Cerinthians did), and separated Christ from the Only-begotten of the Father, and from the Eternal Word.

— οἱ μὴ ὁμολογοῦντες] those who do not confess—but deny— Jesus Christ coming in the flesh. See above on I John iv. 3. He says ἐρχόμενον, coming, because Jesus Christ is ever coming in the flesh to those who receive the benefits of His Incarnation by their baptismal Incorporation into Him, and by the reception of the Holy Sacrament of His Body and Blood; by which, when received with faith, their bodies as well as souls are preserved unto everlasting life. This the Gnostics denied: see Ignatius, ad Smyrn. 6, and note on 1 John iv. 2.

- ουτός έστιν δ πλάνος] this is the deceiver and the Antichrist: who now specially desires and endeavours to seduce you, and against whom I specially warn you: see above, I John ii. 22. 26; iv. 3.

8. Γνα μη ἀπολέσητε] in order that ye may not lose what ye wrought, but may receive a full reward. Elz. has these verbs in the first person plural, "in order that we may not lose;" but the second person, "Ie," is authorized by A, B, and Irenæus (iii. 16, 8), and by many Cursives and Versions; and so Lach., Tisch. As to the meaning of the words, see above, 2 Cor. v. 10. Eph. vi. 8. Col. iii. 25, and note on 1 Cor. iii. 12-15.

9.  $\pi \hat{a} \hat{s} \hat{o} \pi \rho o \hat{a} \gamma \omega \nu$ ] errey one who goeth before, and doth not abide in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. Every one that goeth before,  $\pi \rho o \hat{a} \gamma \omega \nu$ : so A, B, and Vulgate, and so Lach., Tisch. Elz. has  $\pi a \rho a \beta a \hat{a} \nu \omega \nu$ .

There seems to be a gentle touch of irony in the word  $\pi \rho o d \gamma \omega \nu$ . These False teachers are not content to abide in the doctrine of Christ, but they set themselves up as leaders; and on the specious plea of making progress they carry men away from their stedfastness (2 Pet. iii. 17), and lead them astray  $(\pi \lambda \alpha \nu \hat{\omega} \sigma \nu)$  from the right path. They who are wolves, set themselves up as shepherds, and lure Christ's sheep away from the spiritual pastures in which they ought to abide, and from the spiritual fold in which alone they can have rest and safety: προάγων is a pastoral word. Mark x. 32, and John x. 4. Cp. Matt. xxvi. 32;

10, 11. εἴ τις ἔρχεται πρὸς ὑμᾶς] If any one cometh to you and bringeth not this doctrine, do not receive him into your rouse, nor bid him God speed; for he that biddeth him God speed communicateth in his evil deeds.

St. John here treats heresy as an ἔργον πονηρόν, a wicked work; as sound faith is a good work, see John vi. 29. Vain therefore is the notion of those who separate practice from faith, and say that a man may lead a good life without a sound belief. A sound faith is the only root of virtuous practice; and heresy is the source of immorality. Cp. 2 Pet. ii. 1—14, and the remarks of Dr. Waterland on the Trinity, chap. v. St. John, the beloved disciple, the Apostle of love, and who (as Dr. Waterland expresses it, v. p. 108) was all love, meekness, and charity, yet searched condemns the herefore of his own times either such as severely condemns the heretics of his own times, either such as denied Christ's Humanity, or impugned His Divinity. He calls them Antichrists (1 John ii. 18. 22; iv. 3. 2 John 7), liars (1 John ii. 22), seducers (1 John ii. 26), false prophets (1 John iv. 1), deceivers (2 John 7). See above, Introduction, pp. 103, 104. And St. John here forbids to entertain or salute a man who perverts the doctrine of Christ as these heretics did.

This precept may be illustrated by St. John's own example, who one day—as is recorded by S. Irenœus—having met Cerinthus at the bath, retired without bathing, "for fear lest the bath should fall, because Cerinthus, the enemy of the truth, was there." Iren. iii. 3. Euseb. iii. 28. Theodoret, Hær. fab. ii. 3; and Bede here.

A like story is told by S. Irenœus of S. Polycarp, St. John's disciple; who, when he was accosted by Marcion, the Archheretic, and was asked by him, "Dost thou not know me?" replied, "Yes, I know thee the first-born of Satan" (S. Irenœus iii. 3. Euseb. iv. 14). So cautious (adds Irenœus) were the Apostles and their followers to have no communication, no not so much as in discourse, with those who adulterated the truth. Dr. Waterland on the Trinity, ch. iv. vol. v. p. 91; see also p. 108; and compare note above on 1 Cor. v. 11.

12. χάρτου] paper. The Egyptian βύβλος or πάπυρος. It therefore seems that the original of this Epistle was not written on parchment (pergamena).

On the supposition that this Epistle is addressed to a Church, and that the Church to which it is addressed was a Church in Babylonia (see above on v. 1), there is no reason for surprise that St. John should intend a journey thither. The inhabitants of that country had come up to Jerusalem, and had inhabitants of that country had come up to Jerusalem, and had been evangelized by the Apostles there on the day of Pentcost (Acts ii. 9). St. Peter in his old age had gone to Babylon, and thence to Rome; see pp. 37—40. And if St. John was now in Asia, as is probable, he was at about a middle point between Babylon and Rome; and if he had "many things to write," he would not consider a journey from Asia to Babylon as long.

INTRODUCTION

THE THIRD EPISTLE OF ST. JOHN.

This Epistle is of a moral and disciplinarian character. In it the holy Apostle, who has revealed to the Church the sublimest mysteries of Christian doctrine, applies those principles to matters of practical detail in the regimen of the Church.

"Gaius," or Caius, "the beloved" is commended for walking in the Truth, and for bringing forth the fruits of the Truth, in a life of love to the brethren and to strangers. Especially does St. John confide in his Christian charity towards the Ministers of the Gospel, who go forth preaching to the Gentiles, without claiming maintenance from them.

The character of Gaius is contrasted with that of Diotrephes, who had resisted the authority of St. John, and would not receive the brethren, who were probably recommended by the Apostle himself, but even ejected from the Church those who received them.

But St. John announces his intention of bringing Diotrephes to a sense of his duty by a speedy visitation, and by an exercise of his Apostolic authority.

Even in Apostolic times, the spirit of pride and the lust of power made themselves felt in the Church of Christ. God suffered His holy Apostles to be tried by the unruly temper and refractory conduct of false brethren. St. Paul had to contend with an Hymenæus, an Alexander, a Philetus 1, an Hermogenes, and a Phygellus 2; even St. John had a Diotrephes. No wonder that a like spirit should show itself in later days. Here is the test of loyalty and love. "Beloved, do not imitate that which is evil, but that which is good. He that doeth good is of God, but he that doeth evil hath not seen God 3." The Divine Lord and Master of St. John will come and call all men to account, who, in despising those whom He has sent, have despised Him 4; and He will salute "His friends by name," with a greeting of everlasting peace.

1. δ πρεσβύτερος] The Elder: on this title adopted by St. John, see 2 John 1.

- Γαίφ τῷ ἀγαπητῷ] to Gaius, or Caius the beloved. He seems to have borne much resemblance in character and acts (see v. 5) to Gaius of Corinth (Rom. xvi. 23), and to Philemon the Colossian friend of St. Paul (Philem. 7). A Gaius was appointed by St. John to be Bishop of Pergamum. Constit. Apost. vii. 46.

by St. John to be Bishop of Pergamum. Constit. Apost. vii. 46. The word  $\dot{\alpha}\gamma\alpha\pi\eta\tau bs$ , beloved, is repeated four times in this short Epistle; the word  $\dot{\alpha}\gamma\alpha\pi\bar{\alpha}\nu$ , to love, occurs twenty-eight times, and the word  $\dot{\alpha}\gamma\alpha\pi\eta$ , eighteen times in St. John's First Epistle. The sternness of his language in condemnation of the Heretics of his age, is made more striking by its contrast with this inculcation of the duty of love; which shows that the words of rebuke are uttered in a spirit of love for the souls of those committed to his care, and of those also whom he reproves. Cp. St. Stephen's language. Acts vii. 60, and above, pp. 104, 105.

St. Stephen's language, Acts vii. 60, and above, pp. 104, 105.

2. περὶ πάντων] in all respects. This translation seems preferable to the other rendering, "above all things;" for which sense of περὶ there is no authority in Prose writers. Cp. Winer, sense of περl there is no authority in Prose writers. Cp. Winer, § 47, p. 334. Lücke (2nd ed.), and Huther, p. 246.

— εὐοδοῦσθαι] prosper, literally, on a journey (ὁδός). Cp. Rom. i. 10. 1 Cor. xvi. 2. St. John wishes that in all things the affairs of Gaius may go well, as they do in spiritual respects.

3. ἐχάρην γὰρ λίαν] for I rejoiced greatly. See 2 John 4.

4. μειζοτέραν] On this form of the comparative, see Eph. iii. 8. Winer, § 11, p. 65. Greater joy have I not, than these things, that I hear my children are walking in the truth. On the use of ἵνα, compare Luke i. 43. Cp. John xv. 8. 13; xvii. 3. 1 John iv. 17. Winer, § 44, p. 303.

5. πιστὸν ποιεῖς] thou art doing a faithful part in whatever thou mayest have wrought (ἐργάση, the reading of B, C, G, K) towards the brethren, and that also towards persons who are strangers to thee.

g 2 John 4.

This is the only example of miordu moielu in the New Testament. Cp. το καλόν ποιείν, Rom. vii. 21; xiii. 3, 4. Gal. vi. 9; and the combination used by St. John of ποιεῖν with a substantive, such as δικαιοσύνην: 1 John ii. 29; iii. 7. 10; and Rev. xxii. 15, ποιών ψεύδος.

St. John expresses his confidence that whatever labours Gaius may have performed, or may be performing, toward the brethren, they are done by him as a faithful workman and servant of Christ.

On έργάζομαι είs, cp. Matt. xxvi. 10.

The tense of ἐργάση, thou mayest have wrought, implies, that though St. John has heard enough of the good deeds of Gaius to justify his general confidence in his character, yet he is aware that Gaius may have done much more good than has reached his ears.

The words και τοῦτο, and this too (the reading of A, B, C-Elz. has  $\kappa al$  els  $\tau obs$ ), enhance the praise of Gaius. He was affectionate and helpful toward the brethren, and that also to strangers who were unknown to him. On this use of kal τοῦτο and και ταῦτα, see Rom. xiii. 11, and on 1 Cor. vi. 6. 8, και τοῦτο and ka tarries, see Introduction to his Gospel, pp. 266, 267.

6. ἐνώπιον ἐκιλησίας] in the presence of the Church; in the public congregation; probably at Ephesus, where St. John dwelt; see Introduction to his Gospel, pp. 266, 267.

— οὐς καλῶς ποιήσεις] whom if thou speedest on their journey in a manner meet for God (whose servants they are), thou shalt do well. On προπέμπειν, cp. Titus iii. 13; on άξίως τοῦ Θεοῦ, cp. 1 Thess. ii. 12. Col. i. 10.

7. ὑπὲρ γὰρ τοῦ ὀνόματος ἐξῆλθον] for they went forth on behalf of the Name—the adorable Name of Jesus Christ, "the Name that is above every Name," Phil. ii. 9. See on Acts v. 41, ὑπὲρ τοῦ ὀνόματος ἀτιμασθῆναι, and the words of St. John's disciple, S. Cp. Ignat. ad Philad. § 10, δοξάσαι τὸ ὅνομα. These words of St. Ignatius seem to have been suggested by St. John's words of St. Ignatus seem to have been suggested by St. John's language in these two verses, vv. 6, 7.

— μηδέν λαμβάνοντες] taking no wages from the Gentile (plural, adjective); i. e., the Gentile Christians. Elz. has ἐθνῶν, but ἐθνικῶν is in A, B, C, and received by Lach., Tisch.

On the purport of these words—intimating that they, to whom St. John refers, demanded no ministerial maintenance from the Gentile Christians, to whom they ministered the Word and Sacraments-see note above, on 1 Cor. ix. 6.

8. ὑπολαμβάνειν] to receive, entertain, and treat them hospitably, with reverence and love. There seems to be a slight paronomasia between λαμβάνοντες and ὑπολαμβάνειν: cp. Philem. 20. Elz. has ἀπολαμβάνειν; but ὑπολαμβάνειν is in A, B, C*, and is received by Lach., Tisch.

— Ίνα συνεργοί γινόμεθα] in order that we may be fellow-labourers with them in the Truth. By receiving God's Ministers we become fellow-workers with them in the Truth which they preach, and "he that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet shall receive a prophet's reward." Matt. x. 41.

13 ο Πολλά είχον γράψαι σοι, άλλ' οὐ θέλω διὰ μέλανος καὶ καλάμου σοι ε 2 John 12. γράφειν 14 ελπίζω δε εὐθέως σε ιδείν, και στόμα προς στόμα λαλήσομεν. 15 Εἰρήνη σοι ἀσπάζονταί σε οἱ φίλοι ἀσπάζου τοὺς φίλους κατ' ὄνομα.

9. ἔγραψά τι] I wrote somewhat to the Church. Elz. omits

TI, which is in A, B, C, and so Lach., Tisch.

The purport probably of this writing was to exhort those of the Church, of which Gaius was a member, to receive the brethren who laboured in the Gospel. But Diotrephes, who aspired to have the pre-eminence there, took advantage of St. John's absence, and conducted himself in a very different temper to that of Gaius (see v. 5), and would not obey St. John's commands, and would neither receive the brethren commended by St. John, nor would he allow others to receive them, and was casting out of the Church those who did receive them. Wherefore, says the Apostle, if I come, as I intend to do very soon (see v. 14) to the place where you and he are, I will call to remembrance (see John xiv. 26) his works which he doeth, prating vainly against us with wicked words.

On the word φιλοπρωτεύων, see Wetstein, p. 731; and on φλυαρῶν, see ibid., p. 343, and on 1 Tim. v. 13. It has properly a neuter sense, to prate idly, but like some other neuter verbs in the New Testament, it is here put intransitively (Winer, 5 38, p. 225), and so it implies that the idly and the interpretation of the contraction of § 38, p. 225); and so it implies that the idle words are uttered by the speaker in a contemptuous tone against another.

What St. John wrote to the Church is no longer extant. Cp. note on 1 Cor. v. 9, where St. Paul refers to an Epistle written by himself which is not now in existence.

10.  $\epsilon \kappa \tau \eta s \epsilon \kappa \kappa \lambda \eta \sigma (as \epsilon \kappa \beta \dot{a} \lambda \lambda \epsilon i)$  he casteth out of the Church, by excommunication. S. Hippolytus, Bishop of Portus, speaks of some who were  $\epsilon \kappa \beta \lambda \eta \tau o i \tau \dot{\eta} s \dot{\epsilon} \kappa \kappa \lambda \eta \sigma (as, by his own spiritual)$ authority. Philosoph. p. 290.

It seems that Diotrephes was a Minister of the Church in which Gaius resided; and that this Epistle was written to maintain in that Church the authority of St. John as an Apostle and Metropolitan of Asia, in which character he was commissioned by Christ to write the Epistles to the Asiatic churches in the Apocalypse, Rev. i. 11, and chaps. ii. and iii.

11. μἡ μιμοῦ τὸ κακόν] Do not imitate that which is evil, as the example of Diotrephes is; but that which is good. Cp. Heb. xiii. 7. 1 Pet. iii. 13, and Martyr. Polycarp. 19, τδ μαρτύριον μι-

12. Δημητρίω A good testimony hath been given to Demetrius by all men, and by the Truth itself. A contrast to Diotrephes. St. John, as their spiritual superior, dispenses praise and blame to each respectively.

The Truth here is no other than the Spirit of Truth abiding in St. John. Christ promised to send to His Apostles, "the Spirit of Truth to guide them into all Truth" (John xvi. 13), and He did send the Spirit to them on the Day of Pentecost, and that Spirit enabled them to discern the spirits of men (1 Cor. xii. 10), as St. Peter discerned the spirit of Ananias (Acts v. 3), and to pronounce judgment upon them.

The Spirit, says St. John, is Truth (1 John v. 6). And since St. John himself had the Spirit, he asserts, that "whoever knoweth God heareth us; and whoever is not of God heareth not us." (1 John iv. 6.) Hence St. John was able to bear testimony to Demetrius, who perhaps carried the Epistle, and the testimony which St. John bears, was the testimony of the Truth

— καὶ ἡμεῖς δὲ μαρτυροῦμεν] and not only so, but we bear testimony, and ye know that our testimony is true.

The Spirit of Truth in us bears testimony, and we, the human ministers by whom the Spirit speaks, bear testimony. So the Apostles speak at the Council of Jerusalem, "It seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us." Acts xv. 28.

13. διὰ μέλανος καὶ καλάμου] with ink and pen, properly reed.

Cp. above, 2 John 12. It does not follow from these expressions that St. John wrote his Epistle with his own hand. He may have done so. Cp. note above on Gal. vi. 11. 2 Thess. iii. 17. Col.

γράψαι σοι] to write to thee now at this time.

So A, B, C.—Elz. has γράφειν: and vice versá, at the end of the paragraph Elz. has γράψαι, and A, B, C have γράφειν, which expresses a habit.

I had many things to write to you now, but I am not willing to write them with ink and pen, under such circumstances as these, when I hope very soon to see you to whom I am writing. Cp. 2 John 12.

15. ἀσπάζονται—ὄνομα] salute the friends by name. The good pastor imitates that Good Shepherd, who "calleth His sheep by name." John x. 3. Cp. Phil. iv. 21.

INTRODUCTION

THE EPISTLE GENERAL OF ST. JUDE.

I. THE Epistle of St. Jude bears a remarkable resemblance in matter and language, and also in order of arrangement, to the Second Epistle of St. Peter; as will appear from the passages placed at the foot of this page 1.

1. From a comparison of these passages it seems most probable that the Epistle of St. Jude was subsequent to that of St. Peter.

For example, St. Peter speaks prophetically of the false Teachers who would "privily bring in destructive heresies, denying the Lord that bought them 2." But St. Jude describes these false Teachers as already in existence and full operation. "Certain men (he says) crept in, who were long ago foreordained to this condemnation "."

2. Besides, St. Jude appears to make a special reference to St. Peter's Second Epistle. "Beloved, remember the words that were spoken before by the Apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ, that they told you, that in the last time there shall be scoffers walking according to their own lusts of unholiness '."

Hence, as was observed by Œcumenius in ancient times, this Epistle appears to have been written after the Second Epistle of St. Peter.

- 3. This opinion has been adopted by many learned men of later days 6. If it is correct, then the Epistle of St. Jude cannot have been written before A.D. 66 or 67, the date of St. Peter's Second Epistle.
- 4. Indeed, on an examination of internal evidence, it seems to be later than that time. The picture which is drawn in this Epistle, of the heretical doctrines and licentious practices of the false Teachers, represents them as developed in the fulness and boldness of inveterate and dominant malignity, after a previous growth of some years.

5. At first sight, it may perhaps seem surprising, that an Epistle should have been written so similar to the Second Epistle of St. Peter, as this Epistle of St. Jude is; and have been received into the Canon of the New Testament.

But, on consideration, it will be perceived, that such a procedure as this is in perfect harmony with the general structure of Holy Writ.

It would be erroneous to assert, that St. Jude had merely copied a large portion of the Epistle of St. Peter. It ought rather to be said, that the Holy Spirit often repeated by one Prophet what He had said by another, and that He often repeated by a third Evangelist what He had written before by the other two 1; and that He does this for greater confirmation of what He has said, and in order to authenticate the writings in which His words are contained, and to show their great importance to the world, and to inculcate them more forcibly on the mind of the Church; and so, for like reasons, He repeats by St. Jude, not however without some modifications and additions, what He had already declared by St. Peter. He has thus set His seal on St. Peter's Second Epistle, and has shown that the prophecies, which He Himself there uttered, have been fulfilled.

Besides, in opposition to the various forms of false and conflicting doctrines, which are there condemned, He has displayed to the world an exemplary pattern of Apostolic unity in confuting heresy and maintaining the Truth.

The forms of heretical Teaching and Practice which were present to the mind of St. Jude, when he wrote this Epistle, have already been described in the Introduction to the Second Epistle of St. Peter', and in the notes on the parallel passages of that Epistle.

II. On the authorship of this Epistle, it may be observed, that the writer calls himself "Jude the brother of James 3."

He would not have used such a designation, unless James had been a well-known person, and unless the James to whom he refers was the person who was best known by that name at that time.

It has therefore been rightly concluded by ancient and modern authors 4, that the James who is here mentioned by St. Jude, was James "the Lord's brother" or cousin5, the Bishop of Jerusalem.

This conclusion is confirmed by the testimony of the Gospels, where we find that our Lord had a brother called Jude, as well as a brother called James 6.

The question, whether James the Lord's brother, or cousin, was also an Apostle, and the same person as "James, the son of Alphaus," in the catalogue of the Apostles, has been already considered'; and an opinion has been expressed that the balance of probabilities is in favour of their identity.

This conclusion is confirmed by the fact, that, after the mention of "James the son of Alphæus," in the catalogue of the Apostles, we have two persons placed next in order, Simon Zelotes, or the Cananite (a word which has the same sense as Zelotes), and Jude—of James.

III. A question has been raised, what word is here to be supplied after Jude-whether it is to be son, or brother, of James?

But on this point there seems little reason for doubt. The James who is connected in the Apostolic Catalogue with Jude, cannot be a different person from "James, the son of Alphæus," who is mentioned just before in the catalogue. And none of the Apostles of Christ, as far as we find, were far advanced in years when they were called to the Apostleship; and it is not probable that James the son of Alphæus (who is probably the same as Clopas, whose wife was living, and a follower of our Lord 8), was old enough, when he was called to the Apostleship, to have a son of sufficient age to be an Apostle. It is therefore most likely that the words Ἰούδας Ἰακώβου signify, as our Translators render them, "Jude brother of James"."

Accordingly, we find that Jude, the author of this Epistle, is designated as an Apostle by very early Christian writers ', and this Epistle is described as the Epistle of St. Jude the Apostle, in the Vulgate and Syriac Versions; and St. Jude is designated as an Apostle by the Church of England, in common with the rest of the Western Church, and the majority of the Greek Fathers <sup>2</sup>.

And so Winer, Gr. Gr., § 30. 3, p. 171; and R. W. B., p. 655, art. Judas. It is observable that all the three Evangelists prefix the definite article,  $\delta$ , to the genitive, when they mean "son" of; but there is no definite article before 'IakáSov here.

This being the case, it would follow from a comparison of the catalogues of the Apostles in St. Matthew and St. Mark, with the catalogue in St. Luke's Gospel and the Acts 3, that St. Jude had two other names, Lebbæus and Thaddæus.

Accordingly, we find in ancient writers that Jude the author of this Epistle, is sometimes called trinomius, or trionymus, i. e. bearing three names '.

The belief in the identity of St. Jude the Apostle and Jude the Lord's brother, is strengthened by the sameness of temper evinced in the only speeches recorded in Holy Scripture, as uttered respectively by Jude the Apostle, and by the brethren of our Lord.

St. John relates that Jude the Apostle said to Christ, "Lord, how is it that Thou wilt manifest Thyself to us, and not to the world?" St. Jude was eager for the public display of Christ's earthly glory; in which, probably, he himself, as an Apostle, expected to share.

Compare this speech with that of our Lord's brethren, recorded also by St. John 6, "His brethren said unto Him—If Thou doest these things, show Thyself to the world."

This coincidence confirms the opinion that Jude the Apostle was one of our Lord's brethren.

IV. It is observable, that in St. Luke's catalogue of the Apostles, both in the Gospel and the Acts, James is separated from his brother Jude by an intervening name, that of Simon Zelotes, or Cananite; and that in the lists of the Apostles, in the Gospels of St. Matthew and St. Mark, James is separated from Simon, the Cananite, by an intervening name, that of Thaddaeus or Jude.

This is remarkable.

What can be the reason of this arrangement?

May it not be, that St. James, St. Jude, and St. Simon, were three brothers?

It is not likely, that in a list of Apostles a brother should be parted off from a brother by a person who was not a brother. The separation of St. Peter from his brother St. Andrew by the two brothers St. James and St. John, who were eminently distinguished by Christ, does not invalidate this statement. That severance is only made by St. Mark, who justifies it by a suggestion of the reason '; and in the Acts of the Apostles', after the evidence of Christ's special favour to James and John,—but not in St. Luke's Gospel'. In all the lists of the Apostles, James, Jude, and Simon are grouped together.

We find also that "our Lord's brethren" were called "James, and Joses, and Simon, and Jude," as the names are arranged by St. Matthew 10; or, according to the order in which the names stand in St. Mark's Gospel 11, "James, and Joses, and Jude, and Simon." In the one Gospel Simon stands before Jude, in the other Gospel he stands after him; in both Gospels James stands first of the three brothers. James, being the first Bishop of Jerusalem, would rightly have the precedence among the Lord's brethren.

Here, then, are precisely the same three names as in the Apostolic catalogues; here also, one name, that of James, stands always first in order; and there is precisely the same modification in the arrangement of the other two names, Simon and Jude, as in the catalogues of the Apostles.

We have, therefore, some ground for supposing, that the three persons who are called James, Jude his brother, and Simon, who were Apostles, are the same persons as the James, Jude, and Simon who are called "brethren of our Lord".

This consideration is confirmed by the fact recorded by ancient Writers, that after the martyr-

Matt. xiii. 55.

In the Festivals of the Church of England, and of the Western Church, "Simon and Jude, Apostles," are commemorated together on the same day. There is a propriety in this union; the more so, if they were brothers by blood, as well as brother Apostles.

dom of James the Lord's Brother, and Bishop of Jerusalem, the person who was chosen to succeed him was Symeon, or Simon, a son of Clopas, and therefore brother of James, and also brother or cousin of our Lord; and that he was chosen on account of this relationship, in addition to other considerations; as was the case even with the grandsons of St. Jude, who were chosen to fill Episcopal chairs for a similar reason.

This Symeon, or Simon, the successor of St. James, lived to the age of 120, and suffered martyrdom under Trajan 3.

If Simon Zelotes, the Apostle, was, as we have reason to believe, the same as this Simon or Symeon, cousin of Our Lord, and brother of James the Bishop of Jerusalem, and of Jude the author of this Epistle, then in this double connexion with Christ, both by virtue of Apostleship and kindred, and in the long duration of his life and Episcopate at Jerusalem, where St. James had lived and died, and finally, in his faithful vigilance and courageous martyrdom for Christ, we have an assurance, that the Epistles which have come down to us, bearing the names of his brothers James and Jude, were carefully kept by him and his Church and are genuine and authentic writings of those whose names they bear.

St. Jude himself was married and had children '; and he is probably one of those to whom St. Paul refers, when he says, "Have we not power to lead about a sister, a wife, as well as the other Apostles, and the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas '?" Some of St. Jude's grandchildren are mentioned by Hegesippus', as having borne testimony to the truth in the presence of the Emperor Domitian; and as having had spiritual rule over Christian Churches, and surviving to the time of Trajan.

This continuation of ecclesiastical eminence, and of faithful confession, in that holy family, affords a further guarantee to the integrity of those writings of which they were the depositaries and guardians.

1. 'Ιούδαs'] Jude, a servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of Thaddeus and Lebbaus at the end of the Armenian Version of this Epistle; and so Bede and Estius here. See above on Matt. z. 3. 12; xii. 46, and 1 Cor. ix. 5, and Introduction, pp. 137-139. He calls himself "brother of James;" but neither he nor St. James call themselves "brethren of the Lord," but both call themselves "servants of Jesus Christ." Clemens Alexandrinus says (Adumbrat. p. 1007, ed. Potter), "Judas extans valde reli-giosus, quum scirct propinquitatem Domini (i. e. his own relationship to Christ), non tamen dixit seipsum fratrem Ejus esse: sed quid dixit? Judas, servus Jesu Christi."

Nor do either of them call themselves Apostles. Nor does St. John in his Epistles or Apocalypse. See above on James i. 1. But the writer of this Epistle is expressly called "an Apostle" by Tertullian in the second century (de Cultu femin. i. 3), and by Origen (on Rom. lib. v. p. 549, and on Matt. tom. i. p. 223), who says, "Jude wrote an Epistle consisting of a few lines, but full of says, "State which are empowered by heavenly grace."

— ἡγαπημένοις] beloved. So A, B, and Origen, iii. p. 607, and Lach., Tisch.—Elz. has ἡγιασμένοις. The sense is, to those who have been, and are, beloved in God the Father: that is, beloved in God the Father, Who is the original of all blessing, and in Whom ye are, as His children by adoption in Christ. Ye were sometimes alienated from Him (Eph. iv. 18), but now ye are beloved in Him. Ye are all one in the Father and the Son. John xvii. 21, 22.

The perfect participles here, ηγαπημένοις and τετηρημένοις, not only express a past act, but a present state. See above, 1 John ii. 29; iii. 9; iv. 7; v. 1. 4. 18.

- και 'Ιησού Χριστφ τετηρημένοις and who have been and are preserved, or kept, for Jesus Christ. The evil Angels are preserved or kept (τετηρημένοι) for judgment (2 Pet. ii. 4); the heavens are preserved or kept for fire (2 Pet. iii. 7); but ye are preserved and kept for Jesus Christ, as a peculiar people (1 Pet. ii. 9), and there is an everlasting inheritance preserved or kept in heaven for you (1 Pet. i. 4).

Hence he says at the close of the Epistle, v. 21, "Keep yourselves (eautods τηρήσατε) in the love of God, waiting for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life."

2. εἰρήνη—πληθυνθείη] peace be multiplied. A salutation found in this Epistle and in both St. Peter's Epistles, and in them only; and designed perhaps to call the reader's attention to those two Epistles, and to connect this Epistle as a sequel with them.

3. αγαπητοί] Beloved, when I was exercising all diligent desire to write to you concerning the common salvation, I was constrained to write to you, exhorting you to contend earnestly for the Faith that was once for all delivered to the

St. Jude here states the cause of the controversial character of this Epistle.

He had been earnestly desirous to write (γράφειν, present James: probably the same person who is called Thaddaus and tense, indicating generally the act of writing) concerning the Lebbaus, and one of the Lord's brethren; and he is called common salvation; and he would have been glad to have concommon salvation; and he would have been glad to have confined himself to that subject; but he was forced to write (γράψαι, aorist, indicating a special act for a particular purpose, urgent occasion) against those who were trying to lead them to destruction.

> He was constrained by the prevalence of false doctrines, to frame his address in such a manner, that it should take the form of an exhortation to his readers to contend for the faith which had been once for all delivered to the Saints; and which was assailed by the false Teachers. For (he adds) "some men crept in unawares," and are now endeavouring to corrupt the

> Hence his Epistle is written in an antagonistic tone; but he does not forget the hortatory portion of his design. He commands his disciples here to fight for the faith; but he also exhorts them in the sequel to build themselves on it. See v. 20.

> St. Jude does compendiously, and in one short Epistle, what had been done by other preceding Apostles more at large in several longer Epistles. St. Paul, and St. Peter, and St. John, had written with a twofold design; first to establish the Truth, secondly, to refute error. See above, Introduction to St. Peter's Second Epistle, p. 70, and Introduction to St. John's Second Epistle, p. 127. St. Jude refers to their labours, and reiterates their admonitions and warnings (v. 17), and sums them up in one concise and energetic address.

> "The faith had been once for all delivered to the Saints;" and for this faith St. Jude's disciples are earnestly exhorted to contend. Here therefore is an Apostolic protest against all sub-sequent additions to it, such as those of the Gnostic systems in earlier times, and of the Trent Creed of the Church of Rome in > later days. Cp. note above on Gal. i. 8, 9. "To contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the Saints." Divine words, few in number, but rich in meaning. If rightly understood and duly obeyed, these words would put an end to all modern controversies, and restore Peace to the Church. Do we desire to know what the true Faith is? St. Jude here tells us—that which was once, and once for all, de-livered to the Saints. Every doctrine, which can be shown to be posterior to that Faith, is new; and every doctrine that is new is false. Isaac Casaubon (Dedication to his Exercitationes Ba-

St. Jude here announces the fulfilment of the prophecy of the Apostle St. Peter, who had foretold in his Second Epistle that false Teachers would arise, and "would bring in privily destructive heresies." See 2 Pet. ii. 1. Here is an evidence of the priority of that Epistle. See above, Introduction, p. 136. Cp. below, vv. 17, 18.

— οί πάλαι] they who were long ago publicly declared in the writings of the Holy Scriptures to be destined for this punishment; of which St. Jude is about to speak in what follows

On the sense of  $\pi\rho\rho\gamma\rho\dot{\alpha}\rho\omega$ , to write before, or to display publicly, as in a writing or picture, see Rom. xv. 4. Eph. iii. 3. Gal. iii. 1, where see note. The  $\pi\rho\dot{\alpha}$  may have, and probably has here, the sense of previous designation.

The word κρίμα does not signify sin, but punishment (see 2 Pet. ii. 3), and what St. Jude says, is, not that these men were predestined to commit sin (heaven forbid !), but they were warned beforehand of the punishment (κρῖμα) they would incur, If they were guilty of the sins which they are now committing. The words  $\tau \tilde{v} \tilde{v} \tau \tilde{v}$   $\tau \tilde{v}$   $t \tilde{v} \tilde{v} \tilde{v} \tilde{v}$  as ignify this punishment, which he is about to specify in the sequel; a frequent use of  $\tilde{v} \tilde{v} \tau \tilde{v}$ . See Kühner, § 626. Matthiæ, § 470.

The doom which they would incur had been προγεγραμμένον, written publicly beforehand, in the prophecy of Enoch (v. 14), and visibly displayed in the punishment of the Israelites (v. 5), and in that of the rebel Angels (v. 6), and had been graven indelibly in letters of fire on the soil of Sodom and Gomorrha

Since God is unchangeably just and holy, all who sin after the manner of those who have been thus punished, must look for like punishment to theirs. They have been publicly designated beforehand for it, by the punishment of those whom they imitate in sin. Therefore, these false Teachers cannot plead ignorance of the consequences of their sin; and you will be without excuse, if you are deceived by them.

The false Teachers here specially noted were the Simonians, Nicolaitans, and Ebionites. See Ecumen. and Theophylact, and

cp. below, v. 7, and above on 2 Pet. ii. 1.

 τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ] turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness: as the Gnostic Teachers did, by perverting the doctrine of Christian liberty into a cloke of maliciousness. καὶ τὸν μόνον Δεσπότην καὶ Κύριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν άρνούμενοι] and denying our only Master and Lord Jesus Christ. The word δεσπότης, Master, here designates Christ; as may be inferred from the place in St. Peter's Epistle (2 Pet. ii. 1), where it is said that these false Teachers deny the Master  $(\delta\epsilon\sigma\pi\delta\tau\eta\nu)$  IV ho bought them; that is, they deny Him Who purchased them with His own blood, 1 Pet. i. 19. Cp. Rev. v. 9,  $\eta \gamma \delta \rho \alpha \sigma as \tau \varphi \otimes \epsilon \varphi$   $\delta \mu as$ , and the note above, 2 Pet. ii. 1, for a detailed account of the various modes in which the Gnostic and other false Teachers of the Apostolic times "denied the Lord who bought them.

After δεσπότην Elz. writes Θεόν: but this is not in A, B, C, and is cancelled by Griesh. Scholz, Lach., Tisch. It is found in G, K, and many Cursives, and in the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic Versions, and in Theophylact and Ecumen. Cp. note

St. Jude wrote this Epistle against the Gnostics, who (as their name declares) professed superior gnosis or knowledge; and under pretence thereof beguiled their hearers into corrupt doctrines and licentious practices. See above on 2 Pet. i. 2, 3.

St. Jude assures his disciples that they themselves have all necessary knowledge, that they know all things. Compare 1 John ii. 20, οίδατε πάντα.

Ye need not any new doctrines from these Teachers; nor do ye require any further teaching from me, since ye have been fully instructed already by the other Apostles. But (be) my desire is to remind you of what ye already know, and therefore I τοw write. Cp. 2 Pet. i. 12, μελλήσω ύμᾶς ἄεὶ ὑπομιμνήσκειν περί τούτων καίπερ εἰδότας.

They knew all things once for all  $(\tilde{a}\pi a\xi)$ , for they had received "the faith once for all delivered to the Saints," v. 3. The sense of  $\tilde{a}\pi a\xi$  is precisely the same here as there. Cp. Benyel, Stier, Huther.

 Stier, Huther.
 - ὅτι ὁ Κύριος] that the Lord having saved the people (of Israel, cp. 2 Pet. ii. 1) out of the land of Egypt.
 It is observable that A, B have 'Iŋσοῦς, Jesus, here for Κύριος. According to this reading, Jesus Christ is represented as having delivered the Israelites. And this reading is supported by several Cursives, and the Vulg., Coptic, Sahidic, Æthiopic, and Armenian Versions; and by Didymus, Cyril, Jerome, Cassian; and is received by Griesh and Laghmann. and is received by Griesb. and Lachmann.

This doctrine had been already taught by the Apostle St.

Paul, in his commentary on the history of the Exodus, where he speaks of Christ as present with the Israelites in the wilderness.

See I Cor. x. I—11. Heb. iii. 7—19; iv. 1, 2. St. Jude "the servant of Jesus Christ" (v. 1), refers to the deliverances of the Exodus, described by Moses, as the act of the Lord; and to the prophecy of Enoch concerning the future Advent of the Lord (v. 14), and also to the Apostles of the Lord (v. 17), and thus he reminds his readers, against the allegations of the false Teachers, that the God of both the Old and the New Testament is One; and that in both Christ is the Lord. Cp. Theophylact here.

This passage is cited by S. Clement of Alexandria, in the second century. Pædag. ii. p. 239.

6. ἀγγέλους τε] and not only men did He thus punish, but Angels also, namely, those who did not keep their own first estate (their original bliss and dignity in heaven which God gave them as their own), but left (by their own voluntary act of sin) their proper habitations, He hath kept under darkness with everlasting

The Fall of the Angels is here declared to be due to their own deliberate will and deed; it was due to pride. See I Tim.

Their chains may well be called ἀίδιοι, everlasting; for, though their chain now permits them to visit this nether region, yet they always carry that chain with them, and are restrained from injuring God's servants; and by attempting to do so they are aggravating their sin and punishment; and they will never be free, but are kept for ever from recovering their first estate, and original habitation; and at the Judgment of the great Day they will be cast into the Lake of Fire. S. Clement of Alexandria says here (p. 1008), that the chains in which the evil angels are now confined are the darkness of the air near this earth of ours ("vicinus terris locus, caliginosus aër"), and that they may well be said to be chained, because they are restrained from recovering the glory and happiness they f Gen. 19. 24. It is observed in the valuable Ancient Catena on this Epistle, published by Dr. Cramer, p. 157, that St. Jude, in this and the following passages, is warning his readers against the false doctrines, and licentious practices, of the following heretics of the Apostolic, and sub-Apostolic age, namely, the Simonians, Nicolaitans, Ebionites, Cainites, Borborites, Valentinians, Sethians, Marcionites, Manichæans. The Epistle cannot be rightly understood without reference to their tenets.

πρόκεινται δείγμα πυρός αίωνίου] are set forth as an example of everlasting fire. Cp. 2 Pet. ii. 6, πόλεις Σοδόμων και Γομάρδας κατέκρινεν, ὑπόδειγμα μελλόντων ἀσεβεῖν τεθεικώς. Cp. 1 Maccabecs ii. 5. Wisdom x. 7, and S. Irenæus, iv. 70, "pluerat Deus super Sodomam et Gomorrham ignem et sulphur de cœlo, exemplum justi judicii Dei."

If this is the correct rendering of St. Jude's words, then he does not say, that these Cities are suffering the penalty of everlasting fire, but that by their punishment and perpetual desolation (δίκην ὑπέχουσαι), they are a specimen of that fire which awaits the ungodly, and which is everlasting. Cp. Cassiodorus, Estius, Stier, and Huther here.

Or, if, with the English Version, De Wette, and others, we render the words thus, "are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire," then they are to be thus expounded; "As Sodom and Gomorrha suffer the vengeance of a fire that consumed them finally, so that they will never be restored, as long as the World lasts, so the bodies and souls of the wicked will suffer, as long as they are capable of suffering; which, since they are immortal, will," as Tertullian says, "be for ever," "erimus iidem, qui nunc, nec alii post resurrectionem; Dei quidem cultores, apud Deum semper, profani verò in pænam æquè jugis ment, chap. ii. Num. xciv.

8-16.] This passage is referred to by Clemens Alexandrin. Strom. iii. p. 431, where he speaks of this description as prophetic, and as applicable to false Teachers also of the age after the Apostles.

8. δμοίως μέντοι] in like manner however, notwithstanding these warnings, these false Teachers proceed, with wilful and presumptuous recklessness, in the same course as those, whose example of suffering ought to have deterred them from sinning. The Sodomites are specially mentioned by St. Jude, because some of the Gnostics in their unclean recklessness of living even honoured them as free, and as proficient in superior knowledge! A fearful warning against the flagitious results of Heresy. See Irenaus, i. 35, and above, Introduction to St. Peter's Second Epistle, p. 72, and to St. John's First Epistle, p. 104, and 1 John

i. 6, and below, note on v. 11.

— ἐνντιαζόμενοι] dreaming, they dream evil things, and fondly deem them to be good. Clem. Alex. They profess superior knowledge, and they are insensible to all that is really good and wise, they are slumbering in the deadly sleep of sin, and are dreaming away their lives in a swoonlike trance of error, from which they will awake to woe.

On this word see the fearful comment and recitals of Œcu-menius and Epiphanius, hæres. xxvi.

σάρκα μὲν μιαίνουσι] they defile the flesh with filthy lusts, in which they are led to indulge by their denial of Christ's Incar-nation and Passion, and of the Resurrection of the flesh. See above, on 2 Pet. ii. 2. 10-12.

The μèν, indeed, on the one side, with its correlative δè, which follows (σάρκα μèν μιαίνουσι, κυριότητα δè ἀθετοῦσι), suggest by a slight but significant touch, that there is a moral and metaphysical connexion between sensual defilements of the flesh, and contumelious outrages against lordship. The reason is obvious. They who pollute the flesh, which has been consecrated by Christ's Incarnation, will not scruple to revile His dominion and dignity, and that of those who are His Representatives. Sensuality and Lawlessness are joined together in the same manner by St. Peter (2 Pet. ii. 10).

κυριότητα δε άθετουσι] they reject lordship. See on 2 Pet.

- δόξας δὲ βλασφημοῦσιν] and speak evil of glories or dignities.

See on 2 Pet. ii. 10.

9. δ δè Μιχαήλ] but (in a very different spirit from that of these men, who imitate the rebel Angels and the men of Sodom), Michael the Archangel, when contending even with the devil, he was disputing about the body of Moses.

Michael = מיכאל = who is as God? who is like God? Cp. Rev. xiii. 4, with Dan. x. 13. 21; xii. 1, and Rev. xii. 7; and the word Archangel occurs 1 Thess. iv. 16.

The Gnostic false Teachers, against whom St. Jude writes, professed to revere Angels: they said that the World was made by Angels; and they even worshipped them. See above, on Col. ii. 8. 18, and 2 Pet. ii-1. 10.

St. Jude therefore refers to the example of an Archangel, and thus puts them to shame. These false Teachers despised lordships and reviled dignities. But the Archangel Michael, although contending even with a fallen Angel, the leader of fallen Angels, the Devil,—διαβόλφ, the calumniator, or railer,—and disputing with him concerning the body of Moses, which God had buried and concealed (Deut. xxxiv. 6), in order, as is probable, that it might not become an object of worship to the Israelites; and which, it seems, the Devil desired to possess, in order that God's purpose in this respect might be frustrated, and that the mortal remains of that faithful servant of God might be made to be an occasion of creature-worship to the Israelites,-as the brazen serpent set up by Moses was made to be (2 Kings xviii. 4), and as the relics of holy men have been made in later times, -yet even against him, the Arch-enemy of God, and even on such an occasion, the Archangel Michael did not venture to bring a railing sentence, but reserved all Judgment to God, and said, The Lord rebuke thee.

The Archangel was courteous in his language even to the Devil; so was Abraham to Dives in torment (Luke xvi. 25), and Christ to Judas the traitor (Matt. xxvi. 50).

The Jews themselves, from whom the Gnostics for the most part arose (see Introduction to St. John's First Epistle, p. 99, and on 2 Pet. ii. 1), had a tradition, that Sammael, the prince of the Devils, had a contest with the Archangel Michael, concerning the body of Moses, at the time of his death and burial (Liber de Morte Mosis, p. 161, and the Rabbinical testimonies in Wetstein, p. 735; in the Targum of Jonathan on Deut. xxxiv. 6, it is said that Michael was appointed to guard the burying-place of Moses. Origen, de princip. iii. c. 2, says that St. Jude is here citing a δὲ, ὄσα μὲν οὐκ οἴδασι, βλασφημοῦσιν ὄσα δὲ φυσικῶς, ὡς τὰ ἄλογα ζῶα, έπίστανται, έν τούτοις φθείρονται.

That the devil's design was to defeat God's purpose with regard to that body, may be concluded from Michael's words, as recorded by St. Jude, "The Lord rebuke thee!" words like those which God Himself addressed to Satan, when he stood at clothe Joshua with fair raiment, instead of filthy garments (Zech. iii. 2, 3).

Hence some ancient Expositors conjecture, that Satan claimed the body of Moses, on the plea that he had killed the Egyptian (for which they refer to the testimony of some Apocryphal books), and that Satan resisted Michael, when he was about to divest Moses of his garment of mortality, and to clothe him in that glorious brightness in which he appeared at the Transfiguration. These false teachers boast of their superior knowledge, but they revile such things as they know not, spiritually and intellectually; and as many things as they, like the irrational animals, understand, i. e., have experience of, and sensible acquaintance with, such as the objects of the carnal appétite, "comedere et bibere, et rebus venereis indulgere, et alia perpetrare quæ sunt communia cum animalibus ratione carentibus" (Clem.  - ἐξεχύθησαν] they poured themselves out in a torrent: they rushed after, in a foul, headlong cataract of sin and recklessness. Compare the metaphor in 1 Pet. iv. 4, ἀσωτίας ἀνάχυσιν. On this use of the word, see Clem. Alex., p. 491, εἰς ἡδονὴν ἐκχυθέντες, the examples in Loesner, p. 503; cp. Tacit. Ann. i. 54, "Maecenate effuso in amorem Bathylli."

- τ $\hat{\eta}$  ἀντιλογία τοῦ Κορ $\check{\epsilon}$  ἀπώλοντο] and they perished in the gainsaying of Korah: that is, in gainsaying, like that of Korah and his company (Numb. xvi. 33). "The doom of those who rise against the True Faith, and excite others against the Church of God, is to be swallowed up by the Earth, and to remain in the gulph with those of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram." Irenœus (iv.

43, Grabe). Korah and his company perished by fire.

This warning of St. Jude, a Christian Apostle, is a proof that the sin of Korah and his company, rising in schismatical opposition to their Rulers temporal and spiritual, may be committed in Christian times. And the words of S. Irenæus explain what that sin is, and what its punishment. Cp. Dr. IV. H. Mill's Sermon, "On the Gainsaying of Korah;" preached on the 29th of May. Cambridge, 1845. Cp. above, on Num. xvi. 40.

Some of the Gnostics professed even to regard Korah with admiration. See Iren. i. 34, Grabe. Theodoret, Hæret. fab.,

c. 15; and above, on v. 11, and on 1 John i. 6.

St. Jude here adds a new circumstance to what had been before said on this matter by St. Peter. See 2 Pet. ii. 11. 13, and the next note. S. Hippolytus (Ref. Hæres., p. 175) describes the Simonians as saying that their promiscuous μίξεις were τελείαν ἀγάπην, and μακαρίζοντας έαυτους έπὶ τῆ μίξει: cp. what he says of the Nicolaitans, p. 258.

σπιλάδες] rocks, shoals. So Œcumen., Theophylact, Etymol., where the word is explained by rocks under the surface of the sea, υφαλοι πέτραι; and this sense has been adopted by Lightfoot, Wetstein, Whitby, Meyer, De Wette, Schleusner, Huther, Peile, the American Revisers, and many other recent Expositors. Indeed, this is the only sense in which the word  $\sigma\pi_i\lambda\lambda$ s is found in ancient authors; and it is a word of frequent occurrence. See Homer, Odyss. iii. 298; v. 401. 405; and the authorities in Wetstein, p. 736.

Besides, St. Jude is comparing these false Teachers to objects in the natural world, viz., clouds, trees, waves of the sea, wandering stars. Therefore the word rock, reef, or shoal, seems to harmonize better with the context than spots, which is indeed the sense of  $\sigma\pi i\lambda oi$  (2 Pet. ii. 13), but not of  $\sigma\pi i\lambda ds$ . False Teachers in a Church may well be called σπιλάδες, shoals or rocks, as well as waves and wandering stars; and this figurative expression seems to add completeness to the picture. In Heretical Teaching there are the wandering stars above, beguiling the mariners in the ship of the Church, from the right course; there are the raging waves dashing against it; and there are the hidden shoals on which it may strike unawares, and be wrecked.

It is probable that these false Teachers introduced themselves clandestinely into the Love-feasts ( $\dot{\alpha}\gamma\dot{\alpha}\pi\alpha s$ ) provided by the Churches in the exercise of hospitality for strangers, and thus inculcated their errors (Lightfoot, ii. p. 776). And so they were like dangerous reefs and shoals, on which some made shipwreck of the faith: cp. 1 Tim. i. 19, and which were to be carefully shunned by the Christians. See above, on Rom. xvi. 17.

These σπιλάδες may be well said to be έν ταῖς ἀγάπαις, where the Church looks only for peace and safety, as in a deep and placid harbour. The words scopulus, φάραγξ, Charybdis, Euripus, barathrum, &c., are thus applied frequently to persons. See Florus iv. 9, where Antony is called a scopulus; and Aristoph., Equites 248, φάραγγα και Χάρυβδιν άρπαγῆs, and Anthol. ii. 15. 1, εἰς δολίους, where treacherous persons are compared to υφαλοι πέτραι. Horat., Ep. i. 15. 31, Pernicies et tempestas barathrumque macelli, Quicquid quæsierat ventri donabat avaro.

This passage of St. Jude affords another specimen of the characteristic of this Epistle, adopting, or alluding to, what had been said by St. Peter in his Second Epistle; and also adding some new feature to it. As St. Peter's word ἀπάταις may have suggested St. Jude's  $\alpha\gamma\delta\pi\alpha ais$ , so St. Peter's word  $\sigma\pii\lambda ai$  may have produced St. Jude's  $\sigma\pii\lambda\delta\delta\epsilon s$ . Thus St. Jude shows his knowledge of that Epistle; he recognizes, illustrates, and confirms it; and he also contributes to it new incidents of his own. See above, on 2 Pet. ii. 11. 13, and note here on v. 12, and pp. 136, 137.

After elow A, B, G insert of, and so Lach., Tisch. And this reading is confirmed by the identification of the persons with the emblems which represent them in what follows, viz. Trees, and Waves, and Stars. See the notes there.

- δένδρα φθινοπωρινά] autumnal trees—trees in the fall of the year (Didymus, Vulgate, Bede, &c., Hammond, Bengel); as they appear in the season called φθινόπωρον, when the autumn is verging into winter. It means, therefore, trees without fruit, or even leaves (Œcumen. and Calena, p. 166). These Teachers are too reckless in sin even to be hypocrites, like the barren leafy fig-tree; cp. Matt. xxi. 19, 20. Mark xi. 13. 20. Cp. Plutarch, Symp. viii. 10, φθινοπωρινδς άλρ, ἐν ῷ φυλλοχοεῖ τὰ δένδρα, Welstein, p. 736; and Dean Trench on the Authorized Version, p. 125. This translation seems preferable to that which renders the words δένδρα φθινοπώρινα, trees, whose fruit withereth; from p. 123. This ransation seems pretraine to that which there is the words δένδρα φθινοπώρνα, trees, whose fruit withereth; from φθίνω, to perish, and ὁπώρα, fruit. St. Jude does not, it seems, mean to say that their fruit perishes, but that they have no fruit. - ἄκαςπα] not only without fruit, but unfruitful, incapable

— δις ἀποθανόντα, ἐκριζωθέντα] which died twice, and have been uprooted. Trees may be said to be twice dead, when they are not only in appearance dead, as in winter, but also in reality, so as never to revive in the spring. It seems that St. Jude applies to the Trees what is true of the Persons represented by the Trees, as our Lord in cursing the Fig-tree spoke to Jerusalem, represented by the Tree which He cursed. See on Matt. xxi. 19.

In like manner, in the verse following, St. Jude speaks of these false Teachers as wild Waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame (cp. Isa. Ivii. 20); not that Waves do this, but the Men do it, who are likened to the Waves. He also calls them wandering Stars—erratic Meteors or Comets—to whom the gloom of the darkness has been reserved for ever; and he applies to the Stars what is true of the men who are represented by the Stars. Cp. Catena here, p. 165; and Clem. Alex., p. 1008, "apostatas

So these men are Trees which died twice, because these men having been once dead in trespasses and sins, and raised to life in baptism, have relapsed and apostatized into the death of sin, and so have died twice; and because by their sins they have incurred the second death. See Rev. ii. 11; xx. 6. 14; xxi. 8, where it is said that the second death is the penalty of the unbelieving,

They are uprooted, because Christ has said, "Every tree which My Father hath not planted shall be rooted up" (ἐκριζω-θήσεται), Matt. xv. 13. Their doom is described as already executed, because it is certain. Compare in v. 14 here, ῆλθε Κύριος, "the Lord came." His coming is certain; cp. Isa. xxi. 9. Jer. li. 8. Babylon is fallen. Rev. x. 7. Winer, § 40, p. 248.

14. προεφήτευσε δὲ καὶ τούτοις] But Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied also to those. His warning is addressed to the same say well as to those of his own and future ages; let them to them, as well as to those of his own and future ages; let them then profit by it. And it was for these, that is for their warning and benefit, as well as for those of Enoch's own time.

St. Jude here notes, that Enoch was the seventh from Adam.
The Jewish doctors say, "The number seven is sacred above all; Enoch is seventh from Adam, and walks with God; Moses is seventh from Abraham; Phineas is seventh from Jacob our father, as Enoch was seventh from Adam; and they correspond to the seventh Day which is the Sabbath, the day of rest. Every seventh age is in the highest esteem." See the Rabbinical authorities cited by Wetstein, p. 737.

Seven is the sabbatical number, the number of Rest. Enoch, the seventh from Adam, having finished his course after the labours of this world, in an evil age, was like a personified Sabbath. God rested in him, and he rested in God. Cp. notes above, υγδοον Νωε, 2 Pet. ii. 5.

Enoch, the seventh from Adam, walked with God in a corrupt age (Gen. v. 22), and pleased God, and, as St. Jude here states, stellivered a Prophecy concerning the Second Coming of Christ to Judgment, and the Sabbath of Eternity; and he was translated and taken to his rest (Gen. v. 24. Heb. xi. 5). He was a personal type of those holy men, who will be found alire at that Second

Coming, and will be caught up to meet the Lord in the air; and so be ever with the Lord (1 Thess. iv. 17).

Almighty God created the World in Six Days, and rested on the Seventh Day. Enoch, in the seventh Generation of Mankind from the Creation of Adam, was taken up by God to his rest. And some of the Fathers supposed that the World will run its course for Six millenary periods, and then have its rest in the Seventh Millennium. See above, on 2 Pet. iii. 3.

It is worthy of remark, that Enoch lived as many years as there are days in a Solar year, viz. 365, and was then translated (Gen. v. 24). Cp. Bede (bomil. in Ascens. p. 449), who, as others of the Fathers, remarks, that Enoch was a signal type of Christ in obedience, and in pleasing God, and in His Ascension; and the fact that Enoch was seventh from Adam, and that he lived as many days as the Earth takes in revolving round the Sun, may also have a relation to the fulfilling of the course of the humanity in Christ upon Earth; and to its constant illumination by the Light of God: and in this respect Enoch represents the Christian life of the Saints of all ages who fulfil their course in obedience upon earth, and will be translated hereafter into heaven.

Cp. the description of Enoch in Milton, Par. Lost, 665;-

" Of middle age one rising, eminent In wise deport, spake much of right and wrong,

Of Justice, of Religion, Truth, and Peace, And Judgment from above; him old and young Exploded, and had seized with violent hands, Had not a cloud descending snatched him thence Unseen amid the throng; so violence

Proceeded.

 λέγων] saying, Behold the Lord came with His holy myriads. Enoch therefore, used the word Jehovah or Lord. See note on Gen. ii. 4.

He says "the Lord came," because the Lord's Coming is certain. Enoch, who lived 5000 years ago, saw in the spirit Christ's Advent as an event that had already happened. A noble specimen of divine Inspiration. Enoch, the seventh from Adam, saw Christ—who is the true Rest of the righteous (Matt. xi. 28, 29)—already come to Judgment. Cp. the prophetic use of the aorist in Rev. x. 7, ἐτελέσθη, and note above, v. 12.

This citation is found in the second chapter of the Book of Enoch, which was probably compiled by a Jew, in the first century of the Christian era, from traditionary fragments, ascribed to Enoch (compare Origen here, in Num. 28; c. Cels. v. p. 267.

Augustine, de Civ. Dei, xv. 23. S. Jerome, Script. Eccl. c. 4), and appears to have been seen by Tertullian, de idol. 4, de cultu fem. i. 3, where he refers in a remarkable passage to this citation, by "Jude the Apostle" (ii. 10). The "Book of Enoch" has been translated into English from the Æthiopic by Dr. Lawrence, Oxford, 1821, who published the Æthiopic Text, Oxf. 1838, which corresponds with the Greek Fragments cited by the ancient Fathers. It has been reprinted by Dillman, Leipzig, 1853. The "Book of Enoch" is supposed (by Lawrence, Hofmann, Wieseler, Gieseler, and others) to have been mainly compiled in the time of Herod the Great. An analysis of the Book of Enoch may be seen in Fr. Lücke's Commentary on the Apocalypse, Erste Abtheilung, pp. 89–144. Cp. Winer, R. W. B. i. 477; and Mr. Westcott's Article, Dr. Smith's Dict. of the Bible, and note there en a Bet iii. 12 above on 2 Pet. iii. 13.

This citation by St. Jude from the Book of Enoch, which was not canonical, was probably a reason why some persons had doubts concerning the authority of this Epistle. See Jerome, Script. Eccl. c. 4; but S. Jerome says that in his age this Epistle was authorized by general reception among the Holy Scriptures; and he observes in another place, that St. Paul also, in his canonical Epistles, cites from books not canonical (see 2 Tim. iii. 8, concerning James and Jambres), and that he also quotes heathen poets. See note there, and Hengstenberg on the Apocalypse, Introd. p. 19 (Berlin, 1849), who observes that this verse is decisive on the question of the priority of St. Peter's Epistle.

There seems also to be a reference here to the description of the Last Days in St. Paul's last Epistle, 2 Tim. iii. 1-6, èv έσχάταις ημέραις έσονται άνθρωποι φίλαυτοι κ.τ.λ. There is a special propriety in this admonitory reference in this Epistle-one of the last of the Catholic Epistles-to the last warning in the Epistles of the Apostles of the Circumcision, and of the Gentiles, St. Peter and St. Paul. Cp. Ecumen. on v. 1. Compare the admonition in Hebrews xiii. 7, "Remember your Rulers, who spoke to you the word of God," where St. Paul appears to be exhorting the Hebrews to remember especially St. James, the Bishop of Jerusalem (see note there); and St. Jude, the brother of James, here appears to be exhorting his readers to remember St. Peter and St. Paul.

On these verses, 17-21, see Hooker, Sermons v. and vi. vol.

19. οἱ ἀποδιορίζοντες] the separatists. The definitive article joined with the participle describes more than an act, it represents a habit and state. Cp. ὁ πειράζων, Matt. iv. 2, and note, ὁ βαπτίζων, Mark vi. 14, and Luke iii. 14, οἱ στρατευόμενοι.

St. Jude uses an active verb here (the pronoun eaurous, which is in Elz., is not in the best MSS.), because these false teachers seduced and separated others from the Church, as well as themselves: cp. Winer, § 38, p. 225, and note above, on Mark xiv. 72. Cp. the precept in Barnabas, Epist. c. 4, "Non separatim debetis seducere vos, sed in unum convenientes, inquirite, quod communiter dilectis conveniat et prosit." And see also the ancient Catena, p. 168, where this word is expounded, "making schisms and rending the members of the Church." Cp. Hooker, Sermon v. § 12.

— ψυχικοί] animal; not πνευματικοί, spiritual, as they professed to be; and they branded others as merely animal, and not spiritual. They are πνεῦμα μὴ ἔχοντες, not having πνεῦμα, i. e. the influence of the Holy Spirit. See Clem. Alex. p. 1308, "non habentes spiritum, qui est per fidem secundum usum justitiæ superveniens," and Bp. Middleton on Matt. i. 18; and John iii. 6. Acts vi. 3. Gal. v. 5. 16. 18. 25, 26.

Some of the Gnostics of the sub-Apostolic age said, as S. Irenœus relates, "that animal men (ψυχικοί) are conversant only with animal things (ψυχικά), and have not perfect gnosis; and they describe us who are of the Church, as such; and they say Vol. II.—Part IV.

that as we are only such, we must do good works, in order to be saved; but they assert, that they themselves will be saved, not by practice, but because they are spiritual (πνευματικοί) by nature, and that as gold, though mingled with mire, does not lose its beauty, so they themselves, though wallowing in the mire of carnal works, do not lose their own spiritual essence. And therefore, though they eat things offered to idols, and are the first to resort to the banquets which the heathen celebrate in honour of their false gods, and abstain from nothing that is foul in the eyes of God or man, they say that they cannot contract any defilement from these impure abominations; and they scoff at us who fear God, as silly dotards (cp. v. 10), and hugely exalt themselves, calling themselves perfect, and the elect seed: and they even make lust a virtue, and call us mere animal men (ψυχικούς), and say that we stand in need of temperance, in order to come to the pleroma, but that they themselves, who are spiritual and perfect, have no need thereof." S. Irenæus, i. 6. 2—4.

He had exhorted them to contend earnestly upon and for the Faith once for all delivered to the Saints (v. 3), he now exhorts them to build themselves vp vpon it. The Christian Soldier must also be a Christian Builder. He must have a sword in one hand and a trowel in the other. See above, Introduction to 2 Peter.

This Faith is called most holy in opposition to the unholy doctrines and practices of the heretical Teachers. Cp. v. 14.

Elz. has ους μέν έλεειτε διακρινόμενοι, ους δέ έν φόβφ σώζετε ἐκ τοῦ πυρὸς ἀρπάζοντες. Against this reading it may be also observed that διακρίνομαι in the New Testament never signifies to make a difference, or to discriminate one thing or person from another, with a view to the preference of the good; but it always signifies either to doubt (see Acts x. 20; xi. 12. Rom. xiv. 23. James i. 6), or to contend, and dispute, as in this Epistle, v. 9, and Acts xi. 20; xi. 12. Acts xi. 2; cp. note above, on James ii. 4; and often in the LXX. Jer. xv. 10. Ezek. xx. 35. Joel iii. 2; and it is therefore expounded in this sense here by the ancient Greek Interpreters Œcumenius, Theophylact, and Catena, p. 170.

The phrase, plucking from the fire, seems to be from Zech.

to that passage above, v. 9, The Lord rebuke thee! ### INTRODUCTION

TO

THE BOOK OF REVELATION.

On the Design and Structure of the Apocalypse, or Book of Revelation.

I. 1. To understand the design of the Apocalypse, or Book of Revelation, we must consider the circumstances of the Author at the time when it was written.

The writer was the beloved disciple, St. John, the Apostle and Evangelist of Christ. At the date of the Apocalypse he was left, as is most probable, the last survivor of the Twelve. Many of his brother Apostles had died as martyrs for Christ. Jerusalem had been destroyed by the armies of Rome, according to the prophecies that he had heard from His Divine Master?. Thus the Truth of Christ's words had been manifested; and the Majesty of His Power in that Judgment, executed on those who rejected and crucified Him, had been displayed.

But now the Roman Power, which had been employed by Almighty God to punish Jerusalem for its sins, was persecuting Christianity. Under the Emperor Nero, it had slain the Apostles St. Peter and St. Paul; and now in the last years of the reign of Domitian it was raging against the Church with greater violence. It had banished St. John in his old age to the Isle of Patmos, "for the word of God and for the testimony of Jesus Christ's." Other conflicts were at hand. The faith of the Church was to be tried in a succession of Persecutions breaking forth at intervals for the space of more than two centuries.

When these Persecutions had ceased, Christianity would have to pass through a severer ordeal. In the fourth and fifth Centuries, the Church would be distracted by dissensions, and the True Faith would be deprayed by heretical adulterations. Intestine Discords and Corruptions would expose it to the assaults of adversaries from without, who would be suffered by Almighty God to chastise Christendom.

Such calamities as these might perplex many. Many might be tempted to faint and falter in the faith, and to sink into despondency and despair. Century after century would pass away. The darkness would seem to be growing thicker and thicker around the vessel of the Church, and the tempest to be rising higher and higher; and Christ would not yet be seen walking on the waves, coming to the ship, and stilling the storm.

We, who live at a distance of more than seventeen hundred years from the date of the Apocalypse, and look back from our own age to that of St. John, know what the prospect was, which was seen by Him who dictated the Apocalypse—"the Revelation of Jesus Christ "."

We also know, that some things lie still beyond us, which were foretold by Patriarchs and Prophets, and were clearly foreseen by Christ. His Second Advent, the General Resurrection, the Universal Judgment, the joys of Heaven, and the pains of Hell, these things lay open to His eye.

2. If now we proceed to examine the contents of the Apocalypse, we find that it is adjusted in a remarkable manner to these circumstances.

An uninspired Christian writer, living at the date of the Apocalypse, the end of the First Century, and contemplating the divine Origin of the Gospel, and the miracles wrought by Christ and His Apostles; and reflecting on the Destruction of Jerusalem, and on the Dispersion of the Jews for their rejection of Christ according to His prophecies, and observing the marvellous extension of the Gospel at that time, would have augured for the Christian Church a speedy and complete Victory. He would have anticipated, that after a short struggle it would have triumphed over Heathenism, as Christ had triumphed over Jerusalem. And if such a writer had also been informed, that after a conflict of little more than two centuries, with the Heathen Power of Rome, Christianity would have been accepted by the Imperial Masters of the World, he would have been strongly confirmed in that cheering anticipation.

But this is not the tone of the Apocalypse.

It reveals a long train of future sufferings, failings, and chastisements in the History of the Church. And yet it cheers the reader with the consolatory assurance, that Christ is mightier than His enemies; that He went forth in the first age of the Gospel like a royal warrior, "conquering and to conquer';" and that He enables all His faithful servants to overcome 2; that they who die for Him, live; that they who suffer for Him, reign's; and that the course of the Church of Christ upon Earth, is like the course of Christ Himself; that she is here as a Witness of the Truth, that her office is to teach the world; that she will be fed by the Divine hand, like the Ancient Church 4 with manna in the wilderness; that she will be borne on eagles' wings in her missionary career throughout the world; and yet that she must expect to suffer injuries from enemies and from friends; that she too must look to have her Gethsemane and her Calvary, but that she will also have her Olivet; that through the pains of Agony and Suffering, and through the darkness of the Grave, she will rise to the glories of a triumphant Ascension, and to the everlasting joys of the new Jerusalem; that she, who has been for a time "the Woman wandering in the wilderness "," will be for ever and ever "the Bride" glorified in heaven 6.

It will be readily acknowledged by those who contemplate the course of the Church from the days of St. John to the present age, that such a representation of it is in perfect accordance with the facts of the case; that it bears evidence of divine foresight; and that it was well adapted to serve the purpose of rescuing the minds of Christians in every age from the dangers of despondency and unbelief, and also from the snare of indulging in illusory hopes and visionary dreams of perfect spiritual unity, and religious purity upon earth; and that it was admirably framed to instruct and prepare them to encounter trials and afflictions with constancy and courage, and to endure hardness as good soldiers of Christ; and to strengthen their faith, and quicken their hope even by those trials and afflictions, as having been foretold by Christ in this Book; and that it thus affords a pledge that the other predictions of this same Book, which reveals the full and final Triumph of Christ and the eternal Felicity and Glory of all His faithful servants, and the destruction of all

His Enemies, will not fail of their accomplishment.

The Apocalypse is therefore a Manual of Consolation to the Church in her pilgrimage through this world to the heavenly Canaan of her rest.

II. In another respect also it is fraught with spiritual comfort and edification.

1. At the time when the Apocalypse was written, Jerusalem was trodden under foot by the Heathen. Her temple had been burnt by Roman armies; her Sacred Vessels had been carried to Rome; no sacrifices were offered on her altars, the sound of her holy songs had ceased; her Festivals were no more frequented by Jews from every region under heaven; her inhabitants had been scattered abroad among the nations of the earth. Almighty God seemed to have hidden His face from His people, and to have rejected them for ever. Here then was an urgent need of comfort to those who mourned, in the spirit of Jeremiah, amid the ruins of their Sion, and wept over her desolations, and remembered the city of their solemnities 7, and all the pleasant things that she had enjoyed in the days of old 8.

This comfort is supplied by the Apocalypse.

2. It carries the reader back to the first ages of Israelitish history. It places him in Egypt 9, and teaches him to recognize there, in the Ancient Church of God, a type and figure of the Church of Christ. Or rather, since there is but one Church of God from the beginning of the world to the end, we may boldly say that the Apocalypse identifies the Catholic Church of Christ with God's ancient People in Egypt. It takes up the history of the Plagues of Egypt, and teaches the true Israelites of the Christian Sion to regard them as prophetical shadows of those judgments which Christ, Who was typified by Moses, and who acted by the hand of Moses, will execute on all the Pharaohs of this world, who persecute His Church.

The Apocalypse adopts the scenery of the Exodus, and renews the Song of Moses 1, the servant of God, and puts it into the mouth of the Israel of God, standing in safety on the shore of a sea of glass, the calm sea of everlasting peace. It appropriates the history of the Ancient Church in the Wilderness, and teaches us to regard it as a prophetic representation of the pilgrimage of Christ's Church on Earth on her way to her land of promise; it takes the trumpets of the Priests, and blows a prophetic blast against the Jerichoes of this world; and makes us hear, with the ear of faith, the last trump of the heavenly Joshua coming to judge the earth, and leading the armies of Israel to their heavenly inheritance.

3. The Apocalypse also dwells on a later period of the Jewish History, the captivity of Babylon<sup>2</sup>, and christianizes that.

The Assyrian Babylon was taken by Cyrus in the hour of its pride and revelry, and of its sacrilegious contempt of God; the waters of its great river Euphrates were drained off, and the besieging armies entered into the city by the dry channel of the stream; and in consequence of the Fall of Babylon, the People of God were delivered, and were restored to their own land.

Here was another prophetic intimation of what the true Israelites might expect to see in the History of the Church.

Many of the Jews returned to Jerusalem after the fall of Babylon, and the Temple was rebuilt. But the Ten Tribes were still scattered abroad. They have not returned to this day. But there is comfort for them in the Apocalypse. The Gospel is preached to all Nations 3. The true Jerusalem is every where. The Christian Sion is "the Mountain of the Lord's House, which shall be established in the top of the Mountains, and shall be exalted above the Hills, and all Nations shall flow into it; for out of Zion shall go forth the Law, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem "." That Word, that Law, has gone forth from Sion; it has been carried by the Apostolic Patriarchs of the true Israel unto all Nations. The true Israelite finds a home every where in the true Sion, the Catholic Church of Christ. Therefore, God hath not cast off His People's, but He has received them to Himself in Christ, the Seed of Abraham. Christ crucified stretched His arms on the Cross to all the World. God embraced all nations in His well-beloved Son, Who is the Everlasting Word in the bosom of His Father 6, and vouchsafed to allow the beloved disciple to lean on His bosom at supper, in token of that love with which He is ready to embrace all, especially in His feast of Love.

This love of God for His Ancient people, the Jews, is declared in the Apocalypse of the beloved disciple, even by the tone and structure of its sentences.

The diction of the Book of Revelation is more Hebraistic than that of any other portion of the New Testament. It adopts Hebrew Idioms and Hebrew words 7. It studiously disregards the laws of Gentile Syntax, and even courts anomalies and solecisms *; it christianizes Hebrew words and sentiments, and clothes them in an Evangelical dress, and consecrates them to Christ 9.

Thus, for instance, it never uses the Greek form Hierosolyma, but always employs the Hebrew Hierusalem; and by this name it never designates the literal Sion, but the Christian Church 10. It rescues the sons of Abraham from narrow, exclusive, rigid, judaizing notions; and teaches them to praise God that He has fulfilled His gracious promise to Abraham, that all nations should be blessed in His Seed, which is Christ 11. It consoles the true Israelite by the joyful assurance, that although not to Hebraize Christianity, but to Christianize Hebraism. Cp. Lücke's valuable remarks in his Einleitung, pp. 440—448.

<sup>7</sup> E. g. Abaddon, ix. 11. Armageddon, xvi. 16. Hallelujah, xix. 1. 3, 4. 6. Some Critics have been led by these considerations, to imagine that the Apocalypse was originally written in Hebrew. But such a theory is inconsistent with the character of those to whom it was originally addressed, the Churches of Asia, and with many internal phenomena, e.g. the name of the Beast noted in Greek Letters, xiii. 18. The design of the Apocalypse is

<sup>9 &</sup>quot; Hebraisms (says Bengel, Apparat. Crit. p. 778) pervade this Book; at first they seem rough and strange; but when you have become accustomed to them, you will think them delightful, and worthy of the language of the courts of heaven."

<sup>10</sup> The considerations stated above may suggest a reply to the allegations of those recent writers (Lücke, De Wette, Düsterdieck, and others), who, on the ground of internal discrepancies of style, have denied that the Apocalypse was written by the Evangelist St. John. There is doubtless great difference in the diction of those two writings, and doubtless that difference of style, which arose from the very nature of the difference of subject, was designed for good reasons, some of which are stated above. On the other hand, there are some striking essential resemblances between the Gospel of St. John and the Apocalypse.

This topic has been well treated by Hengstenberg on the Jerusalem is in ruins, and is trampled by heathen feet, yet he himself may have an enduring mansion, and a glorious inheritance in another Sion, far more magnificent than the earthly City; that he may enjoy peace and happiness under the royal sceptre of Him, "Who has the key of David 1," and Who is "the Root and Offspring of David 2," and is the royal "Lion of the Tribe of Judah 3;" and that such glories, as were never seen in the brightest days of the old Jerusalem in the age of Solomon, will be displayed to his eyes by the Prince of Peace, and may be enjoyed by every citizen of the "New Jerusalem, coming down from Heaven adorned as a Bride for her Husband," and espoused in everlasting wedlock to the Lamb of God.

In a similar spirit of genuine Catholicity, expanding the mind, and spiritualizing the language of the Jewish Nation, and investing them with the light of the Gospel, the Apocalypse designates the Universal Church of Christ under the terms of a Hebrew nomenclature by the names "of the Twelve Tribes of Israel '." Thus it extends the view of the Hebrew People, and enlarges the walls of Sion and the borders of Palestine till they embrace within their ample range the whole family of mankind, and unites them as a holy people under the universal sway of Christ.

The Apocalypse also elevates the heart and voice of the Hebrew Nation, even to the courts of the Church glorified. Here the Hebrew language sounds in the solemn service of the heavenly Ritual, in which the Angelic quire sing praises to God, Amen, Hallelujah 5!

III. It deals in a similar way with Hebrew Prophecy. It is a characteristic of Hebrew Prophecy to repeat the same predictions at different times. The Apocalypse proceeds on a similar plan 6. It does not, indeed, mention any one of the Hebrew Prophets by name. It knows nothing of Isaiah, or Daniel, or Zechariah, as individuals. But nearly in every line it breathes their spirit, and almost utters their words. Or rather we may say, that the Holy Spirit, writing here by St. John, repeats the language which had been uttered by Himself many centuries before, in the prophecies of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, and Zechariah, which were read in the Synagogues of the Jews every Sabbath Day 7. He declares that those words had not become obsolete, that they had lost none of their force and beauty after the destruction of the Temple and City of Jerusalem. On the contrary, they are instinct with new life, and clothed with fresh glory, and are receiving that fulness of accomplishment for which the Ancient Prophets and Kings had yearned, and they are yet to have a wider expansion, a nobler development, and to bring forth fairer fruit unto perfection in the glories of Christ's Kingdom, and in that heavenly City wherein is the Tree of Life watered by the River of Life proceeding from the Throne of God *.

IV. Thus in reading the Apocalypse, the true Israelite is carried up to a holy mountain where the Law and the Prophets appear in glory with Christ. He ascends a hill of Transfiguration, on which the Hebrew Prophets shine, as Moses and Elias did on the Mount, with more than earthly splendour', and do homage to Christ; and he enjoys a vision of that future glory into which the faithful members of the Church of God from the beginning will be admitted by virtue of the merits of that death accomplished at Jerusalem, of which Moses and Elias then spoke 10, and of which all the Prophets wrote, and to which all the Saints looked, even from righteous Abel, whose blood prophesied of Christ.

On the one hand, the Jewish Church was taught by the Apocalypse to look forward to the Gospel as the fulfilment of the Law and the Prophets, and, on the other hand, the Gentile Christian is encouraged to look backward to the Law and the Prophets as his own Teachers; and the Law and Prophets are recognized by both Jew and Gentile, as harmonizing with the Gospel; and Jew

Bp. Andrewes (c. Bellarmine, p. 324) says, "You will hardly find any phrase in St. John's Apocalypse that is not taken from Daniel or from some other Prophet." And Bengel observes (in Rev. i. 3) that "this Book reaches forward from the Old to the New Jerusalem, and is a compendium and consummation of Hebrew Prophecy." Cp. Dr. W. Lee on Inspiration, Lect. iii.

There is a learned dissertation in Dr. F. Lücke's "Einleitung in die Offenbarung" (Bonn, 1852), on "Apocalyptic Literature" (pp. 40-342). Cp. Gieseler, Ch. Hist. § 31. But it seems a precarious assumption to imagine that St. John was indebted for any of the materials of the Apocalypse to Apocryphal sources, such as the Sibylline Books, the Book of Enoch, or the Fourth Book of Ezra. Such a theory would destroy the objective reality of the Visions revealed by God to St. John, and reduce them into mere subjective creations and imaginative inventions of his own mind and that of others.

St. John beheld in the Visions of God things which other holy men before him, such as Ezekiel, Daniel, and Zechariah, had been permitted to see. He was "in the Spirit" (i. 10), and so was enabled to see and hear; and he was commanded to write what he saw and heard (i. 19).

and Gentile are brought together as fellow-citizens, to dwell for ever in the "Jerusalem that is above, which is the mother of us all '."

This work of universal reconciliation in Christ, which had been exhibited by St. Paul with didactic clearness in his Epistles to the Galatians and to the Romans, is manifested in the Apocalypse with the glowing imagery of divine Prophecy. But it is not to be imagined, that the language of the Apocalypse is therefore less distinct on the doctrinal and practical truths of the Gospel. Indeed the Book of Revelation may be called a divine summary of the Christian Faith.

It teaches that God is One, and alone to be worshipped?; that He is the Creator, Preserver, and Governor of all things 3; that in the One Godhead are three Divine Persons, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit '; that the honour due to the Father is to be given to the Son 5; that the Son of God is perfect Man<sup>6</sup>; that He is the firstborn of the dead, and liveth for ever<sup>7</sup>; and that we are justified by His blood "; that He is our Great High Priest and King"; and that by virtue of our baptismal incorporation into His mystical body, we rise from the death of sin by the first or spiritual Resurrection, and are made Kings and Priests to God 10; that if we continue firm and stedfast in the faith unto the end, then Death is not Death to us, but is the Gate of Life "; and that they who suffer with Him and for Him do indeed reign with Him, Who is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, and Who will judge every one according to their works 12, and award to every one either bliss or woe eternal, and will reign for evermore 13.

V. Such being the character of the Apocalypse, we may now proceed to consider what is the method in which its prophecies are delivered.

The true Exposition of the Apocalypse depends on the right understanding of this question.

A careful examination of the Apocalypse, and a comparison of it with other books of Inspired Prophecy, will supply the following canons or rules for its interpretation.

- 1. Anticipation.
- 2. Repetition.
- 3. Amplification.
- 4. Recapitulation.
- 5. Verbal identity.
- 1. Anticipation. Even at the beginning of his prophecy the writer anticipates the end. "Behold, He cometh with the clouds, and every eve shall see Hi n 14." This consideration will aid us in interpreting the whole book.

In modern times, many persons have supposed that the Book of Revelation presents a series of Visions, proceeding onwards in a regular chronological order from beginning to end. For example, they are of opinion, that all the events which are pre-announced by the Trumpets in the Eighth and Ninth chapters, are later in time than the events forctold by the Seals in the Sixth and Seventh chapters. Many recent Expositions of this Book have been constructed on this principle.

But this theory contravenes all the Expositions of the Apocalypse that have been preserved to us from the earlier ages of Christianity. The uniform judgment of the ancient Interpreters has been correctly represented in our Authorized Version in the heading of the sixth chapter, where it is said that the Seven Seals contain "a Prophecy to the end of the world 15."

2. Repetition, 3. Amplification.

It was the universal opinion of the Ancient Expositors, that after the opening of the Seven Seals, which anticipate the end, and reveal the sufferings of the Christian Church from St. John's age to the day of doom, the Prophecy re-ascends, and returns to the first age of the Gospel, in order to start afresh, and to declare, in the seven Trumpets, the Judgments which would be executed by Almighty God on the Enemies of Christ and His Church.

This principle of exposition appears also to be confirmed by another consideration.

The Apocalypse is, as has been observed already, a sequel to Hebrew Prophecy. It is the continuation and consummation of the Prophecies of Daniel and Zechariah. It is the Work of the same Divine Author. It may therefore be presumed to have been composed on a plan similar to that of those Prophecies.

Now, if we examine the prophecies of Daniel and Zechariah, we find that they are not progressive prophecies. The predictions and visions in the Book of Daniel are not riveted together like links in a continuous chain. They form a system of collateral chains, not, indeed, all of equal length.

Or, to adopt another figure, they are like a succession of Charts in a Geographical Atlas.

The first vision in the Book of Daniel anticipates the end. It represents a prophetic view of all the Four great Empires of the World, following one another in succession, and ending in the consummation of all things, and in the glorious sovereignty of Christ 1. It is like the Map of the two Hemispheres which stands first in our books of Geography.

By a process of repetition and amplification, the same Four Empires are afterwards displayed under another form, and are delineated with great minuteness of detail; and this representation is also closed with a prophetic view of the establishment of Christ's kingdom, and the overthrow of all

His enemies 2.

These comprehensive Prophecies are followed by other Visions, displaying, in greater fulness, portions of the same periods as those which had been comprised in those comprehensive Prophecies; just as the Map of the two Hemispheres in an Atlas is followed by separate Maps, on a larger scale, exhibiting the several countries contained in the habitable Globe.

The Prophecies of Zechariah are framed on the same principle.

It might have been anticipated, that the Apocalypse, which was dictated by the same Divine Spirit who inspired the Hebrew Prophets, and Who is a Spirit of order, would be constructed in the same method as those other Prophecies of Daniel and Zechariah, of which it is the sequel and the completion. "As Daniel," says Dr. Lightfoot', "gives a general view in his second chapter, of his own times to the coming of Christ, and then handles the same thing in another scheme in the seventh chapter, and then doth express at large and more particularly, some of the most material things that he had touched in those particulars, so does St. John in the Apocalypse."

On examination of the Apocalypse, we find our anticipation realized; we find also that, as was already observed, all the ancient Interpreters of the Apocalypse adopted this principle as the groundwork of their expositions; and there is good reason to believe, that the Apocalypse will be better understood, in proportion as this principle is more generally accepted.

The first Visions of the Apocalypse were displayed to the Evangelist on the First Day of the Week, the Day of Creation, the Day of Christ's Resurrection, the Day of the Coming of the Holy Ghost. "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day," says St. John 6. The prophetic Visions of the Seals and the Trumpets are grouped in the two sets of sevens. They begin as it were with the first day of the week of the Church's existence, when she arose to new life in the Resurrection of Christ; and they proceed through a week of labour and suffering till she comes to the Sabbath of her Rest, and to the glorious Octave of Resurrection to Immortality?

4. Recapitulation. After the unfolding of the prophetic roll, the writer pauses for a short time before the conclusion of all things, and recapitulates summarily what had been revealed s.

5. Verbal identity. The points of approximation, coincidence, and contact of contemporaneous chains of prophecy will be found to be marked by St. John in the Apocalypse by certain words, which may be called catchwords, which rivet them together at those particular points, and indicate to the reader the place at which he has arrived in the chronological train of the prophecy, and which also serve to connect his prophecies with those of Daniel and St. Paul on the same subject.

VI. Recognizing these principles derived from ancient Expositors, and from the character of the Apocalypse itself as connected with Hebrew Prophecy, we may proceed to observe, that the Church in the present day enjoys greater advantages for the elucidation of the Apocalypse than were possessed by any previous age.

1. First, we may here advert with thankfulness to the benefits we enjoy in the collations of ancient Manuscripts of the Apocalypse which were little known to the last century 1; and in a large collection of critical helps which have given to the text of the Apocalypse a certainty and clearness which it had not for more than a thousand years '.

The present generation enjoys an inestimable benefit in possessing a correct text of the Apocalypse 3. In order to a right interpretation of the Apocalypse, the best help is to be found in the Apocalypse itself. S. Augustine has well observed, that this Book is composed in such a manner as to exercise the diligence of the Interpreter; and that by comparison of one passage with another, the obscure parts may be illustrated and made clear '. Indeed there is scarcely a phrase or sentence in the Apocalypse, however difficult it may seem to be at first, which may not be elucidated by means of some other phrase or sentence in the same book.

- 2. This aid is enhanced by the light derived from the language of Hebrew Prophecy, especially as read in the Septuagint Version of the Old Testament, the Version which was read by the Churches to which St. John wrote. The very words of Daniel and Zechariah, as presented by that Version, reappear in the Apocalypse 5; and thus the prophecies of the Old and the New Testament stand side by side like the Two Candlesticks in the Apocalyptic Vision, and blend their rays together and illumine the eyes of those who study them by the aid of that united light.
- 3. Another great advantage which we enjoy, as compared with earlier ages of the Church, for the right understanding of the Apocalypse, is the exposition afforded by the best Interpreter of prophecy, -TIME.

Time, and Time alone, reconciles the seeming antecedent discrepancies which are characteristics of true Prophecy; its hand unties the prophetic knots, which human sagacity could never loose; it refutes the vain conjectures and rash speculations of Expositors who would make themselves into Prophets; it demolishes and removes what is false, and establishes and perpetuates what is true.

The holy Prophets themselves could not interpret their own prophecies. They were inspired to prophesy; but were not empowered to expound what they prophesied. "No Prophecy is of its own interpretation," says St. Peter 8. "The Prophets searched diligently, what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify 9." Prophecy was "a light shining in a dark place 10." It glimmered faintly at first, like the dim morning twilight, but as it approaches its fulfilment, it becomes more clear, till at length the day dawns, and the future becomes present, and the prophecy is illumined by the event.

The Prophets did indeed preach plainly, that Almighty God will hereafter raise the Dead and judge the World, and reward the righteous with everlasting life. They proclaimed these things in clear language; for these were moral truths which all were concerned to know. But the future

It is much to be regretted, therefore, that some English Expositions of the Apocalypse should have been based on the English Version of this Book, without careful reference to the Original. Some grave errors,-which need not be specified,have thus found their way into many vernacular popular Commentaries on this Book, and have been widely disseminated to the great detriment of the Study of Prophecy.

It may also be noticed here, that some important words in the Apocalypse have been received from the English Version, in a sense which, at the present day, affords no adequate notion of their meaning, e.g. beasts for (ωa living creatures (iv. 6-9, &c.); λυχνία, candlestick, a word which does not suggest the idea of the infusion of oil, and does not correctly represent the  $\lambda \nu \chi \nu l \alpha$  of the Temple (Rev. i. 12, 13, 20; ii. 1; xi. 4);  $\rho \iota d \lambda \eta$ , vial (v. 8; xv. 7; xvi. 1—4), and other words which will be specified hereafter in the following notes.

I think it clear that the Prophets did not understand the full meaning of their predictions."

actions of Men, and Nations, and Churches, were described by the Prophets in a very different manner from this. They were couched in enigmas, which Time only could solve 1. They were wrapped in a mantle of obscurity which Time only could take off. And with good reason. For otherwise Divine Prescience might seem to fetter the Human Will; whereas the characteristic property of God's Foreknowledge is, that it foresees every thing, and forces nothing. It leaves the liberty of the Human Will untouched. Whatever is foretold by God will be done by man; but nothing will be done by man, because it is foretold by God.

Prophecy has a probationary office; it tries the faith, and excites the vigilance, and exercises the patience, of the faithful who give heed to it. But it does not apply any constraint, it allows itself to be neglected; and, as a penalty for the carelessness or blindness of those persons who neglect or misinterpret it, it often permits them to become witnesses of its truth by fulfilling it?

But, if the Interpretation of a Prophecy had been declared at the same time as the Prophecy itself was delivered, then Prophecy would not have had this disciplinarian character, and doctrinal and moral use.

The fulfilment of Prophecy in a manner at variance with previous human expectation constitutes the essence of the proof, that Prophecy is not the work of man, but of God; and it makes Prophecy to be what it is, an invaluable auxiliary to the cause of the Gospel of Christ.

4. Hence it is clear, that those persons are in error, who look to the Early Fathers of the Church for interpretations of prophecies which were not fulfilled in their age.

Every thing which has happened since their time, is beyond their province, and appertains to those who live now. Indeed, as far as the Interpretation of Prophecy is concerned, the earlier Christian writers, who lived in the childhood of its growth toward fulfilment, were the moderns; and we, who live now, are the ancients. We live in the old age of the world; and may profit by the wisdom which length of days gives. And it is our duty to use the benefits of our vantage-ground, by applying History to interpret Prophecy.

The Ancient Christian Expositors had a correct view of the general design and method of the Apocalypse. But even the inspired ancient Prophets were not Interpreters of Prophecy; and uninspired ancient Expositors were not Prophets. The early Christian Expositors could and did interpret those prophecies which had been fulfilled in their days, and their expositions of those prophecies are of great value.

The fact, that none of the Fathers, who lived before the sixth century, were of opinion that the prophecies of the Apocalypse concerning the struggle of Babylon the Great against Christ, and the overthrow of its power, had been fulfilled in that period, presents a very strong presumptive objection to the theory of those interpreters, who suppose that those prophecies were exhausted in primitive times<sup>3</sup>, particularly by the destruction of Jerusalem, and of heathen Rome.

But the early Fathers could not expound unfulfilled Prophecy. They themselves have taught us that "Prophecy is an enigma before its fulfilment'," and that it is to be interpreted by the And we, who live in later times, should be ungrateful and undutiful to Almighty God, and should be acting very unwisely, if we were to close our eyes to the noonday light which the History of a thousand years has, by the dispensations of His Providence, poured upon the pages of the Apocalypse; and if we were to go back to the vague guesses of those who lived in the dim twilight of fifteen hundred years ago. We should do the Ancient Christian Expositors much wrong, if we did not suppose, that they themselves, if they lived now, would be the first to set us the example of profiting by the light of History, which Almighty God has vouchsafed us for the interpretation of Prophecy.

5. The Apocalypse is the last work of Divine Prophecy. It is the only Prophetic Book of the New Testament; and it continues and consummates the prophecies of the Old Testament; and its range extends from the first Advent of Christ to His Second Advent, and to the Day of Judgment.

Nearly two thousand years have passed since the Apocalypse was written. It may therefore be anticipated, that diligent study of the History of the Christian Church will throw much light on the prophecies of the Apocalypse; and this anticipation is fully realized by a careful examination of this Divine Book, which, when read by the light of the History of Christendom, is fraught with instruction, encouragement, and warning.

The Apocalypse is a sacred text-book for the devout Christian in the study of Church History. It is a holy manual of comfort in times of trial, and of guidance in times of difficulty. It is like those Living Creatures, which it describes as "full of eyes"." It is gifted with spiritual foresight, and adjusts itself with more than human flexibility, and with ever-living and ever-moving pliancy, to the circumstances of the Church, and supplies prophetic cautions against varying forms of error. It is like a holy Oracle, a divine Urim and Thummim, ever uttering a divine voice, and ever showing a Divine light, according to the needs of the Church.

VII. These uses of the Apocalypse are not frustrated or impaired, because there are, and ever will be, many persons, who refuse to recognize the fulfilment of its prophecies in the annals of History.

1. The fact, that many persons do not acknowledge the fulfilment of prophecies, does not prove that those prophecies have not been fulfilled. We know assuredly, that the prophecies of the Old Testament concerning the Messiah, have been fulfilled in the actions, teaching, and sufferings of Jesus Christ. But the fulfilment of those prophecies is not universally acknowledged; although the evidence of that fulfilment has been open to the world for nearly two thousand years? The Jews themselves, to whom those Prophecies were given, and who heard those Prophecies every week in their Synagogues, did not recognize their accomplishment in Jesus Christ. They themselves "fulfilled them by condemning Him"." Some even who are called Christians do not own that fulfilment. Even those prophecies which have been most clearly fulfilled do not exercise much practical influence over a great mass of Mankind. And to Heathen Nations, who make the greater part of Mankind, the fact of their fulfilment is unknown.

The Prophecies also, which related to the destruction of the Old World by the Flood; and of Sodom and Gomorrha by fire; and of the City of Jerusalem by the Roman armies, have been fully accomplished. Those fulfilments are pledges and warnings of the universal Judgment to come. They therefore concern the eternal interests of all men. And yet they seem to have little effect upon the practice of the world at large.

The fact is, that many men pass their lives in a dream. They do not duly reflect on what it most concerns them to consider. They do "not discern the signs of the times"." They do not meditate upon them. They are engrossed with the affairs of this world; absorbed with its cares, and allured by its pleasures. They do not apply themselves with an attentive mind, and a teachable spirit to examine the evidence of the case. And it is the nature of Prophecy that it requires such examination. Otherwise, it is like music to the deaf, or pictures to the blind. It is therefore an admirable instrument of moral discipline in God's hands. It proves men, whether they have those moral qualifications of forethought, seriousness, earnestness, patience, docility, meekness, obedience, self-denial, love of God, and perfect submission to His Will, which are requisite for admission into the Kingdom of God.

They who are endued with these gifts and graces, will not be perplexed and staggered by the fact, that many persons, even among those who are eminent in learning, and intellectual ability, but are wanting in the moral qualifications, and spiritual graces, which constitute the Christian character, do not acknowledge the fulfilment of prophecies, which may be proved to have been

Rather they will remember, that those prophecies would not be true, if all persons acknowledged their fulfilment. The Prophets of the Old Testament predicted, that many would not believe their report <sup>6</sup>. That report has not been believed by many persons celebrated for crudition, such as were some of the doctors of the Jews, who were well versed in the letter of those prophecies, and were principally concerned in them; to whom also they were originally delivered, and who heard them recited habitually in their ears, and read them in their native tongue. They did not understand those prophecies; they even fulfilled those prophecies by not believing them; for their unbelief was predicted by those prophecies; they fulfilled them by denying their fulfilment, and by doing those very things which the prophecies predicted they would do. And thus the

Incredulity of those who did not believe those prophecies is an argument for the Credibility of those prophecies; and confirms the faith of the Church which receives them, and which believes in Him as the Messiah, of whom those prophecies speak.

2. In like manner, it has been prophesied in the Apocalypse, that many persons will neglect its warnings, and that they especially, whose sins it describes, will not be brought by them to repent.

The Apocalypse has foretold the existence of a great City exercising a dominant sway over many nations ; it has predicted, that this City would be smitten with spiritual blindness, and will not believe the report which is uttered by the Holy Spirit in this divine Book; but will fulfil these prophecies by its sins, and by its destruction; and that, even after its destruction, many of its adherents will still despise the warnings of the Apocalypse; and that Nations will rise in rebellion against Christ, and will recklessly rush on to their own ruin, and will fulfil the words of this prophecy which they have despised; and will prove the truth of the Apocalypse by their own utter discomfiture 3.

Therefore in reading the Apocalypse we need not curiously inquire, whether all persons are agreed that its prophecies have been fulfilled, or are now in course of fulfillment. Such an agreement is not to be expected. The Apocalypse would not be true, if all recognized its fulfillment.

But the question to be carefully considered, and calmly examined, is this—whether there is sufficient evidence to satisfy well-instructed, reflecting, and judicious persons, that some of these prophecies of the Apocalypse have been fulfilled, and that others are now in course of fulfilment.

Such an examination, candidly, calmly, and patiently conducted, will probably lead the inquirer to the conviction that this is the case.

But on this proposition it would be premature to dwell here. Rather let us appeal to the Book itself. Let us examine its prophecies, and consider the evidence which will be adduced in the following notes in elucidation of them; and let us rest assured, that, as years pass on, the value of the Apocalypse will be more and more generally acknowledged, and that the truth of its divine words will be more deeply felt by the wise and faithful in heart; "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy: blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book 4."

VIII. On the Date of the Apocalypse.

1. S. Irenœus affirms that the "Revelation was seen not long before his own day, but almost in his own age, at the close of the reign of Domitian'."

The Emperor Domitian died on the 18th day of September, A.D. 96.

The common era Anno Domini begins about four years too late , and therefore the date of the Apocalypse is about the one hundredth year after the birth of Christ.

The authority of S. Irenœus, who was probably an Asiatic by birth, and who had conversed with S. Polycarp, the scholar of St. John, seems almost sufficient of itself to determine this question of date. It is also confirmed by other evidences.

S. Irenœus states that the Revelation was seen at about the close of the reign of Domitian. We learn from Tertullian, contemporary with Irenœus, that Domitian persecuted the Christian Church. Nero, he says, was the first Emperor who used the sword against the Church, and the next who imitated him was Domitian? Eusebius relates that some of the Christians were banished by that Emperor, and confined as prisoners in a small island soff the coast of Etruria; and then he proceeds to relate that St. John was banished to the Isle of Patmos by Domitian. St. John describes himself as a companion of the Asiatic Churches in tribulation, and as having been brought to the Isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God and for the testimony of Jesus Christ.

He also refers in the Apocalypse to persecutions of Christians, especially of Antipas, who had been slain as a Martyr for Christ at Pergamos 11, one of the Seven Churches of Asia.

See on Rev. i. 9. There is a beautiful mildness in the expression, which is very characteristic of the spirit of a holy Martyr when speaking of his own sufferings for Christ. Cp. the use of  $\dot{\epsilon}\gamma\dot{\epsilon}\nu\epsilon\tau\sigma$  in John vi. 21; x. 35.

This reference confirms the testimony of Irenæus. As was before said, no Roman Emperor except Nero had persecuted the Church of Christ before the reign of Domitian. evidence that any Christian suffered death under Nero, except at Rome 1.

It is much more probable, that, as ancient writers affirm<sup>2</sup>, Antipas was martyred at Pergamos in the age of Domitian.

The testimony of Irenaus on the date of the Apocalypse is confirmed by writers in the age next to his. Clement of Alexandria says that, "After the death of the tyrant, John went from the Island of Patmos to Ephesus";" and he also says, "that John remained with the Presbyters of Asia to the times of Trajan."

This statement harmonizes with the assertion of Irenœus, that the Revelation was seen by St. John at the end of the reign of Domitian, who was succeeded by Nerva, the predecessor of Trajan.

Origen, the scholar of Clement, observes that, in accordance with the prophecy of Christ, both the Sons of Zebedee, James and John, drank His cup of suffering; for "Herod," he says, "killed James, the brother of John, with the sword ';" and the King of the Romans, as tradition informs us, condemned John, when bearing witness as a Martyr, to the Isle of Patmos, on account of the word of Truth: and John himself informs us concerning his own martyrdom, not telling us who it was that condemned him, but using these words in his Apocalypse, "I, John, your brother and fellowcompanion in the tribulation and kingdom and patience in Jesus, became a sojourner in the island that is called Patmos on account of the word of God 5."

Victorinus, Bishop of Pettau in Pannonia, who wrote a commentary on the Apocalypse at the close of the third century, and suffered as a martyr in A.D. 303, affirms in that commentary, that when John saw the Apocalypse he was in the island of Patmos, being condemned by Domitian Cæsar to the mines there; and that when John, on account of his old age, supposed he would have a release by death, Domitian was slain, and his decrees were rescinded, and John was liberated from the mines 6.

After him Eusebius relates as a fact commonly believed in his age, that St. John was condemned under Domitian to the island of Patmos on account of his testimony to the divine word, and that he there saw the Apocalypse in the 14th year of the reign of Domitians, that is, in

After him S. Jerome, at the close of the fourth century, says, that "John wrote the Apocalypse in the island of Patmos, to which he was relegated in the 14th year of the Emperor Domitian, who was the second Roman Emperor that persecuted the Christians, Nero being the first "."

Thus then we find a consistent and uniform series of testimonies from S. Irenæus to S. Jerome -that is, from about A.D. 170 to A.D. 390-affirming that the Apocalypse was written by St. John in the Isle of Patmos about A.D. 95 of the common era.

2. The only evidence of any weight which may be adduced in opposition to these conclusions is that of Epiphanius, who died A.D. 403.

In his work on Heretics 10 he says that "St. John in the Apocalypse, writing to the Seven Churches of Asia, predicts the rise of Heresies which did not then exist, and foretells that a woman would appear at Thyatira who would call herself a prophetess 11; and he adds that these things came to pass long after the death of John, inasmuch as he prophesied in the times of Claudius Casar, when

If this passage is genuine, and the text is not corrupt, it may be said without presumption, that through human infirmity, from which the most learned men are not exempt, the memory and judgment of the Author failed him when he wrote it.

This appears from the following considerations:

In speaking to the Angel of the Church of Thyatira, St. John is not censuring him for errors and corruptions which would prevail after his time, and for which he would not be responsible; but he is reproving the Angel, or Chief Pastor, for abuses which actually existed there under his government, and which he ought to have corrected.

Besides, if St. John had written, as Epiphanius supposed, in the days of Claudius, he could not have described himself as suffering exile at Patmos "for the Word of God," for no such punishment was inflicted by the Roman Power on Christians in the days of Claudius, or till the time of Nero 1; nor could be have then referred to the days in which Antipas was slain at Pergamos, as a faithful martyr for the Truth?. Nor would be then have censured the Angel of Ephesus for having lost "his first love";" for, in the days of Claudius, the Church of Ephesus was flourishing in the fresh spring-time of the Gospel, which it had just received from St. Paul.

Under these circumstances we may almost feel disposed to think that there is some error in our present copies of this passage of Epiphanius, and that it was hardly possible for him to have written—at least to have written deliberately—that the Apocalypse was composed in the times of Claudius 4.

However this may be, certain it is that this opinion of Epiphanius—if it were really his—never gained ground in the Church; and that the general belief of all the best ancient writers of Christendom was the same as Irenœus had expressed in the century in which St. John died, that he wrote the Revelation at the close of the reign of the Emperor Domitian 5.

This opinion is strongly confirmed by the internal evidence of the Apocalypse itself.

The Epistles in it to the Seven Churches of Asia betoken a condition of things later than St. Paul's age; and similar to that which we know from other sources to have prevailed in Asia, at the close of the first century of the Christian era.

In these seven Epistles we see Churches settled with Angels or Chief Pastors at their head; we see that some years have clapsed since they were planted; that time has passed away, in which they have been tried, and some have stood the trial, as Smyrna and Philadelphia; that some of them have declined from their primitive standard, as Ephesus, under fear of persecution, or through worldliness and lukewarmness, as Laodiceas; that others have a name to live and are dead, as Sardis o; and that heresies have grown up among them, as at Thyatira to; and that they have been visited by forms of heretical pravity and moral libertinism, such as the doctrines and practice of the Nicolaitans and Judaizers 11, which were the scourges of the Asiatic Churches at that time.

Such being the case, the received opinion of Ancient Christendom will not easily be disturbed by that spirit of scepticism which has unhappily shown itself in some quarters in recent times 12; and which has, however, overreached itself. It is not content with rejecting the date assigned to the Apocalypse by ancient testimony, but has proceeded to set itself against the universal consent of ancient Christendom, and to deny that the Author of the Book of Revelation was the Evangelist

These two theories will probably soon share the same fate, even in that country which gave them birth. They have already been encountered there with learning and ability 13, and their unsoundness has been exposed, and the ancient consent of Christendom has been vindicated.

<sup>4</sup> We may almost be inclined to think, that, instead of  $\epsilon \pi l$ ΚΛΑΥΔΙΟΥ, he may have written ¿πὶ ΦΛΑΒΙΟΥ, and that the copyist did not remember that the Emperor Domitian was sometimes called Flavius; as he is by Juvenal, iv. 37:

> "Cum jam semianimum laceraret Flavius orbem Ultimus, et calvo serviret Roma Neroni.'

This passage will also remind the reader that Domitian was also called Nero, and it may serve to explain what is said by some other still later writers, that St. John was banished by Nero, which is another name for Domitian.

The argument which has been derived for a later date of the Apocalypse than Domitian's reign, from the words of the Apocalypse itself (xvii. 10): "And they are Seven Kings; Five are fallen, and One is, and the other is not yet come," will be examined in the note on that text.

And so Bede in Rev. i. 9, speaks of this opinion as generally received in his day: "Historia nota, Joannem à Domitiano Cæsare propter Evangelium in hanc insulam relegatum; cui tunc congrueret cœli penetrare, cum certa terrarum spatia nequiret excidere." All antiquity (says Lampe, Prolog. ad Joann. 61, 62) agrees in this, that St. John was banished by Domitian. See also Vitringa on Rev. iv. 1; vi. 1.

Einleitung, p. 90.

We may therefore hold fast the belief, that the Book of Revelation was written at the close of the reign of Domitian, who died in the year of our Lord 96.

IX. On the Authorship of the Apocalypse.

1. In order to establish the Genuineness of the Apocalypse, it will be sufficient to refer to the testimony of the next age after it was written, and especially of that Country to which it was originally sent.

The first witness here is Papias, Bishop of Hierapolis, a city at a few miles' distance from Laodicea, one of the Seven Churches. He was a disciple of St. John, and in a certain sense a colleague of the Seven Angels whom the author of the Apocalypse addressed. He was very diligent in collecting memorable facts concerning the Apostles and their works: and he received the Apocalypse as the work of the Evangelist St. John '.

His testimony is of greater value, on account of his nearness to Laodicea; for the Church of Laodicea could not have been ignorant of the authorship of a book addressed to itself; and if the Apocalypse had not been the work of St. John, we cannot imagine that the Laodiceans would have allowed such an unfavourable character of their Church, as is given in the Apocalypse, to be circulated throughout Christendom, in the name and with the authority of St. John. If the Apocalypse had been a forgery, they must have known it to be so; and knowing it so to be, they would have exposed it to the world.

This observation applies to others of the Seven Churches, who are addressed in similar terms of rebuke; and it adds weight to the facts, first, that there is a considerable amount of primitive testimony from the Seven Churches, assigning the Apocalypse to St. John; and that there is none from that quarter which ascribes it to any one else.

The next testimony is that of Justin Martyr. About the middle of the second century he came to the city of Ephesus, where he held a two days' conference with Trypho, one of the most learned Jews of his day. In the narrative which he published of this dialogue, Justin Martyr quotes the Apocalypse, and affirms that it is written by one of the Apostles of Christ, whose name is

This assertion was made only about half a century after the death of St. John, and it was made at Ephesus, the mother city of Asia, the principal of the Seven Churches, the city in which St. John passed a great part of his life, in which he died, and was buried 3. This testimony, therefore, of Justin Martyr is of great value, and confirms the belief, that St. John was the Author of the

Apocalypse

We next come to Melito. He was Bishop of one of the Seven Churches, Sardis, in the second century; a successor, therefore, of one of the Seven Angels addressed in the Apocalypse. The witness of Sardis and its Bishop cannot be suspected of partiality; for Sardis, again, is one of the Churches which is rebuked with great severity in the Apocalypse. Thou hast a name that thou And the character of Melito stands pre-eminently high both for piety and livest, and art dead 4. learning. He showed a laudable zeal with regard to the Canon of the Old Testament. In order to assure himself and the Church of Sardis concerning the Books of the Ancient Scriptures, as received by the Churches of Palestine, he visited that country in person, and he has given the result of his critical inquiries in an interesting and valuable Epistle 5. And it cannot be supposed that he who was so diligent and circumspect in his inquiries concerning the Old Testament, would have been less careful respecting the New, and especially concerning that Book of the New Testament, the Apocalypse, which contains an address to his own Predecessor, and to his own Church; and to which, on other grounds, his best consideration must have been given, for he wrote a Commentary upon the Apocalypse 6.

The evidence, therefore, of Melito is important. He also received the Apocalypse as the work of St. John.

The latest witness to whom we shall appeal is S. Irenæus. He was probably a native of Asia Minor, whence he migrated to France, where he became Bishop of Lyons towards the close of the second century. In his youth he had been acquainted with S. Polycarp, who was placed in the see of Smyrna by the Apostles, and, as some affirm, by St. John himself; and is supposed by some learned men 2 to be no other than the Angel of the Church of Smyrna, who is addressed in the

In his work against Heresies, published only about ten years after S. Polycarp's martyrdom, S. Irenœus refers to the Apocalypse 3. He mentions ancient Manuscripts of it, which he had examined; and he speaks of a particular reading of a passage in the Apocalypse (that concerning the number of the Beast), as being confirmed by the authority of those "who had seen St. John face to face." In this work he quotes the Apocalypse no less than twenty times; he makes long extracts from it; and speaks of it unhesitatingly as inspired Scripture, and as the work of St. John.

The testimony of S. Irenæus is of more value, because it was probably derived from Asiatic Bishops; for example, from Papias, whom he mentions; and from S. Polycarp<sup>6</sup>, whose life, like that of his Master, St. John, seems to have been providentially prolonged to almost a patriarchal duration, in order that he might be a witness of the living Voice of Apostolic Teaching, till the Written Word was generally diffused.

2. Such, then, is the testimony from the country to which the Apocalypse was originally sent; such is the witness of the Asiatic Churches to which it was addressed. No evidence of a contrary kind can be adduced from those Churches, and from that age.

No doubt was entertained by the Apocalyptic Churches concerning the inspiration and genuineness of the Apocalypse. On the contrary, those were condemned as holding heretical opinions, the Alogi, for instance, of the second century, who denied the Apocalypse to be St. John's s. "We can appeal," says Tertullian, at the close of the second century, "to the Churches which are the fosterchildren of St. John; for though Marcion, the heretic, rejects his Apocalypse, yet the series of the Asiatic Bishops derives its origin from St. John 9." All the Apocalyptic Churches ascribe the Apocalypse to St. John.

3. Let us consider now the facts before us.

A Writing, claiming to be from Heaven, dictated in solemn and sublime language, predicting future events, presenting, as it were, a series of pictures of the World's History to the end of Time, is sent to Seven Apostolic Churches of the most distinguished Cities of Asia; to Ephesus, the rich emporium of the East; to Smyrna, the nurse of Poets; and to Sardis, the ancient residence of Kings. It purports to come from an exile on the barren rock of Patmos, an isle almost within sight of Ephesus, and therefore accessible to those to whom the book is sent. It speaks in the voice of authority to those Churches, and to their spiritual Rulers; it pronounces judicial sentence upon them; it rebukes their failings, and commends their virtues; it promises blessings to those who receive the words of its prophecy, and denounces eternal woe on all who add to, or take away from, It speaks to men as being itself from God.

And what is the result?

This Book—with these claims, reproofs, promises, and threats—is received by all these Churches as the Word of God; and is ascribed by them to the beloved Disciple, the blessed Apostle and Evangelist, St. John.

Such is their testimony; and they could not have been deceived in this matter. St. John was no stranger to them. He lived and died among them. If then the Apocalypse is not from God, and if it is not the work of St. John, it cannot be imagined that the Apostolic Churches of Asia would have conspired to receive it. Their duty, both to God and to the Apostle, required them not to do so. So far from receiving it, the Angels of these Churches, with one voice, would have protested against it. Not only they would not have recognized it as divine, not only they would not have received it as the work of St. John, but they would have condemned it as falsely ascribed to the Apostle, and impiously laying claim to the incommunicable attributes of God. It would have taken a place among those spurious Revelations which were ascribed by heretics to Peter, Paul, and Thomas; and the World would have heard no more of the Apocalypse of St. John.

4. If now we open the Book itself, every thing there harmonizes with this belief 1.

The Author calls himself John. "I, John, who am also your brother, and companion in tribulation 2." "John to the Seven Churches which are in Asia 3." "I John saw these things, and heard them '." Whom would this name suggest, placed thus by itself, without any epithet or accompaniment? Whom but the Apostle and Evangelist, St. John? He, and he alone, was John; their brother, their pastor, and their guide: and no one else in his age, writing to St. John's own Churches, would have ventured to assume the name of John, in this bold and unqualified simplicity.

Again; the Author writes from the isle of Patmos, where he was, "for the testimony of the Lord Jesus;" and we know that St. John was banished to that island by the Emperor Domitian. when he persecuted the Church 5.

It may be asked, perhaps, Why then does he not call himself an Apostle? We may ask, in reply, Why does not St. John himself, in his Epistles? Why does not St. James? Why does not St. Jude? The name John would suffice to identify him; and, by withholding the title of Apostle, and calling himself only a servant of God, and their brother in tribulations, he would show, that though he had "the gift of prophecy, and was permitted to understand all mysteries, and to speak with the tongue of Angels 6," yet he was not elated above measure "by the abundance of his Revelations 1;" and the more he was exalted by God, the more he would humble himself with men. "The secret of the Lord is among them that fear him 8;" "and mysteries are revealed unto the meek 9."

Further; the Author of the Apocalypse, modest as he is in the description of himself, speaks, as we have seen, to the Angels of Asia with all authority: he distributes praise and blame like a Ruler and a Judge. Now, there was only one person then alive in the whole world who was entitled to use this language; and that one person was not only entitled to use it, by his double character as the last surviving Apostle, and as Metropolitan of Asia, but he was most solemnly bound to use it. By reason of his office, he was obliged, in duty to Christ, Who called him to it. to "speak, and exhort, and rebuke with all authority 10." He was bound to be no respecter of persons; to "be instant in season, out of season; to reprove, rebuke, exhort"." This person was St. John.

Again; we find that the Author of the Apocalypse, who writes to the Seven Angels, or Bishops, gives them an Apostolic Benediction,—The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you 12. "And without all contradiction," says the Apostle, "the less is blessed of the better," or greater 13. Therefore we may infer that the writer of the Apocalypse is some one greater than the Bishops of Asia. He is some one entitled to bless them. Now, there was one person in the world, and one alone, who, in a spiritual sense, was greater than the Bishops of Asia, and so was entitled to bless them, and might justly be expected to do so; and that person was St. John.

Lastly; the Catholic Church from primitive times, which is the Body of Christ, and to which He has promised His Spirit and His presence ", receives the Apocalypse as Canonical Scripture and as the work of St. John 15. Her testimony is the testimony of Christ, Who is present with her; it is the testimony of the Holy Spirit, Whom Christ sent to be in her 16.

5. There was a remarkable fitness in the selection of St. John, particularly of St. John at Patmos, for writing the Apocalypse.

He was the beloved disciple; he had been with our Lord in His Agony and when on the

As the winds blew, and the waves dashed on the rocky shores of Patmos, so the winds and waves of persecution were now beating on the Church. But the aged Apostle, who was confined within the narrow limits of Patmos, was admitted in the glorious visions of the Apocalypse to the presence of God. The Exile of earth became a Citizen of heaven; the cliffs of Patmos appeared more beautiful than Paradise. He was "in the Spirit on the Lord's Day." The Man of sorrows, Whom St. John had once seen crowned with thorns before Pilate, and bleeding on the Cross at Calvary, was now seen reigning in heaven adored by myriads of Angels, and coming on the clouds of heaven to judge the Quick and Dead.

This is very appropriate; it harmonizes well with the tender care of Christ for those who love Him, and suffer for Him. It is expressive of His love for His Church, left a widow for a while in this world. When on the Cross, He committed His Mother to St. John's care. By St. John, He reveals to His Church the future glory which will be hers, when she will be reunited to Him, and be the Bride in heaven.

Here, therefore, is a source of comfort to all Christians. Here on earth we are exiles; we are in Patmos. Especially, in these latter days, the heavens are dark; the sea is high; the waves dash upon the rock: "the floods are risen, O Lord; the floods have lift up their voice." This is an age of storms. The beach is strewn with wrecks. Yet in the gloom of this world, in this solitude and exile, we may have inward peace, and light and hope and joy. Loving Christ with St. John, suffering for Christ with him, we, like St. John, shall be visited by Christ. St. John's vision will be ours. His Revelation will be ours. Our Patmos will be Paradise. And we may pass from the storms of earth to the sunshine of heaven; and from the solitude of our worldly banishment to the mansions of our Father's House.

X. On the Text of the Apocalypse.

The History of the Original Greek Text of the Apocalypse is very remarkable.

Erasmus, its first Editor after the invention of printing, had only one MS., and that an imperfect one, of the Apocalypse. He supplied the last six verses, which were wanting in that MS., from the Latin Vulgate, translated by himself into Greek; and some words of Erasmus, not authorized by any MS., still remain in some editions of the Apocalypse printed at this day 2.

The second edition of the New Testament was that of the Complutensian Polyglott, so called from Complutum, or Alcala in Spain, the place at which it was printed. This was in the year 1520. The Complutensian Editors, says Wetstein , had only one MS. of the Apocalypse. They were followed in the Apocalypse by Erasmus in his fourth and fifth editions in 1527 and 1535, and by Robert Stephens in the year 1546, and again in 1549, 1550, and 1551. Wetstein affirms that Robert Stephens had only two MSS. of the Apocalypse, and that these were not accurately collated. The third edition of Stephens formed the basis of those of Theodore Beza, which appeared at Geneva in 1565, 1576, 1589, 1598, and also of the Elzevir edition, or received text, as it is commonly called, published at Leyden in 1624.

Beza's edition of 1598 was the groundwork of the English Authorized Version of the New Testament, published in 1611, and "appointed to be read in Churches."

Here two remarks may be made. The English Authorized Translation of the Apocalypse does not rest upon the same sound foundation of MS. authority as the Authorized Translation of the other books of the New Testament. It stands in a place by itself, and ought to be regarded accordingly.

No one need be startled by this statement. If the Apocalypse now existed only in the single MS, of Erasmus, no article of Christian doctrine would be in the least degree different from what it is. The numerous MSS, of the Apocalypse which have been collated since it was first printed, have not affected any doctrine of Christianity; but they have placed the received Articles of the Faith on a more solid basis.

In the interval of time which has elapsed between the publication of the Authorized Version and the present day, much has been effected for the confirmation and establishment of the Original Text of the Apocalypse by the labours of Bishop Fell, Dr. John Mill, Bentley, Wetstein, Bengel, Matthæi 1, Alter 2, Birch 3, Woide, Griesbach 4, Scholz 5, Ford 6, Barrett 7, Lachmann, Tischendorf, Tregelles 8, Mai, Scrivener, Kelly, and others 9; and little now remains but to use diligently and faithfully the materials collected by them.

Their attention has been devoted mainly to the critical examination of Manuscripts; and it is due to them that at this time, nearly a hundred MSS. of the Apocalypse have been collated, some of which are of great antiquity and value.

Of these the four most ancient are,

R. The Sinaitic MS. brought from Mount Sinai by Tischendorf; of the fourth century: see above on the MSS. of St. Paul's Epistles.

B. The Basilian, in the Vatican at Rome, No. 2066; of the sixth or seventh century. transcript of it was published by Tischendorf, in 1846; and another has been published at Rome, as a Supplement to Mai's edition of the Codex Vaticanus, No. 1209.

This Basilian MS. is not to be confounded with Codex B, in the Vatican, No. 1209, containing other portions of the Greek Testament, but not comprising the Apocalypse. See above, on the Gospels, p. xxxiv.

C. The Palimpsest MS. of S. Ephraim the Syrian; so called from its having certain works of S. Ephraim written over the Greek Testament; probably of the fourth century. A transcript was published by Tischendorf in 1843.

By the goodness of Divine Providence these invaluable MSS. containing the Book of Revelation have been preserved to our own age, and have been made generally accessible at this day by means of transcripts. In this respect we of the present generation enjoy a privilege which was not granted to our forefathers, the English Translators, nor indeed to any of our predecessors. This circumstance will appear the more striking, when we recollect that one of these Ancient Manuscripts, the Ephraim Palimpsest, which, about a century ago, was almost illegible 10, has now, within the last few years, been restored, as it were, to life by a chemical process, so that the reading of nearly every letter of it has been ascertained 11.

XI. Notice of some ancient Commentators on the Apocalypse, whose Works are extant 12.

I. Victorinus, Bishop of Petabium, or Petavium, Petau, in Pannonia, circ. A.D. 270 (Cave, i. p. 147<sup>13</sup>). He is said to have suffered martyrdom in the Diocletian persecution, A.D. 303. The "Commentarius in Apocalypsim," ascribed to Victorinus, printed in Bibliotheca Patrum Maxima, iii. p. 414-421, and in a shorter form, entitled "Scholia in Apocalypsim," in Biblioth. Patrum Gallandii, iv. p. 52-65, whence it has been recently republished by the Abbé Migne. Patrologia, v. p. 318-348. The work of Victorinus was revised and modified by S. Jerome (see Ambros. Ansbert. in Bibl. P. Maxima; xiii. p. 404).

II. Auctor Anonymus, apud S. Augustinum, tom. iii. pp. 3106-3159, ed. Paris, 1837. This Exposition of the Apocalypse, which is very valuable, is in the form of Homilies or Sermons preached in the Church. It will be designated by Aug.? in the following notes; see on ii. 1.

It has been ascribed by some to Tichonius, the celebrated Donatist Expositor, contemporary with S. Augustine, circ. A.D. 390. (Cave, i. p. 285.) Tichonius is known to have composed an exegetical work on the Apocalypse (see Bede's Commentary, passim 1), and it is probable that these Homilies contain considerable portions of that treatise, adapted to the use of the Church.

III. Primasius, Bishop of Adrumetum in Africa, flourished A.D. 550. His "Commentarius in Apocalypsim" is contained in Bibl. Patrum Maxima, x. pp. 287—340, and has been published by the Abbé Migne in his Patrologia, tom. lxviii. pp. 794-956.

IV. Cassiodorus Aurelius Magnus, "Senator Romanus, deinde Monachus Vivariensis in Calabria." (See Cave, Hist. Lit. i. p. 501.) He wrote his work, "De Divinis Lectionibus," circ. A D. 556. His "Complexiones in Apocalypsim" were published at Rotterdam, 1723, 12mo. pp. 213—243, and are inserted in the Abbé Migne's Patrologia, tom. lxxx. pp. 1406—1418. Cassiodorus, in p. 9 of his work De Divinis Lectionibus, speaks of Primasius as his own contemporary, and refers to his work on the Apocalypse.

V. Andreas, Archbishop of Crete, supposed by some to have been afterwards Bishop of Cæsarea, in Cappadocia<sup>2</sup>, probably in the sixth or seventh century. (Cave, i. p. 467. Fabric. Bibl. Gr. viii. 696, xi. p. 62, ed. Harles.) His Commentary on the Apocalypse is printed in Morell's edition of S. Chrysostom, tom. viii., and a Latin translation of it in Bibl. Patr. Max. tom. v. pp. 589—633. We may here mention the two other Greek Expositors, who derive their materials mainly from Andreas, Arethas and Œcumenius.

VI. Arethas, Bishop of Cæsarea, in Cappadocia, in the tenth century. (Fabric. Bibl. Græc. viii. p. 698, ed. Harles. Cave, i. p. 520, in Œcumenii Opera, ed. Paris, pp. 640—837, A.D. 1631.) A Latin translation of his Exposition is found in Bibl. P. Max. ix. pp. 741—791.

VII. Ecumenius, Bishop of Tricca, in Thessaly, probably in the tenth century. (Cave, ii. p. 112.

Fabric. Bibl. Gr. viii. p. 692.)

Much has been effected recently towards an improved edition of these two Expositors by the late lamented Dr. Cramer, in his publication "Ecumenii et Arethæ in Apocalypsim," Oxonii, 1840. "Nobis," says he in his Preface, "plenissimum forsan Antiquorum Græcorum Patrum Commentarium, qui extat, in Apocalypsim, licuit vulgare." The learned Editor has printed new Scholia of Œcumenius, and has added to those already published of Arethas. The Exposition of Œcumenius commences at p. 497 and ends at p. 582 of Dr. Cramer's volume.

lypseos, inter S. Ambrosii Opera, ed. Bened. tom. ii. pt. ii. pp. 499-589.

XI. Haymo, "Episcopus Halberstattensis, Alcuini discipulus," obiit A.D. 853; an excellent Expositor. Commentariorum in Apocalypsim Beati Joannis libri vii. jam primum in lucem editi, et ad multorum scriptorum Codicum fidem castigati Coloniæ, 1531, 12mo. (Cave, ii. p. 28.) XVII. Joachimus Calaber, Abbas Florensis sive de Flore, fl. a.d. 1200. (Cave, ii. p. 278.) His work on the Apocalypse was first published with the following title:

The date of Joachim's prefatory Epistle is printed "Floris. anno Dominicæ Incarnationis Mc."

It ought to be MCC.

On the duty of reading the Apocalypse publicly in the Church, see the Appendix K in the present Editor's Volume containing the Greek Text of the Apocalypse from the most ancient MSS. It is one of the best characteristics of the "New Lectionary" (1871) that provision is there made for such reading.

CH. I. 1. 'Αποκάλυψις 'Ιησοῦ Χριστοῦ, κ.τ.λ.] The Apocalypse, himself by this title, "the servant of Christ." "Mysteries are Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave to Him, to show revealed unto the meek." Ecclus. iii. 19. CH. I. 1. <sup>2</sup>Αποκάλυψις <sup>1</sup>Ιησοῦ Χριστοῦ, κ.τ.λ.] The Apocalypse, or Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave to Him, to show to His servants what things must come to pass shortly. The Father loveth the Son, and showeth Him all things that Himself doeth (John v. 20); and the Everlasting Son, the Word of God, God with us (Matt. i. 23), God manifest in the flesh (1 Tim. iii. 16), reveals God's will to the world (see Matt. xi. 27. Luke x. 22. John i. 18). Hence the Apocalypse is the Revelation of Jesus Christ (cp. Gal. i. 12. 2 Cor. xii. 1). John (says Bengel) is the writer of this book, but its Author is Christ.

By some English Writers this Rook is sometimes called, in

By some English Writers this Book is sometimes called, in the plural number, "the Revelations," but this is erroneous. The Book is  $^{2}\Lambda\pi\kappa\alpha\delta\lambda\nu\psi$ s, Apocalypse, an unfolding or revealing of what is secret; as Andreas expresses it, it is  $^{4}\eta\tau\hat{\omega}\nu$  κρνπτων  $^{2}\delta\eta\lambda\omega\sigma$ s (see the LXX, in 1 Sam. xx. 30). Hence S. Irenæus (v. 30) says, "the Apocalypse was seen" ( $^{4}\varepsilon\omega\rho\delta\eta$ ); a passage which shows that this title of the book, "the Apocalypse," is very except, we have the form St. Low bireself.

ancient, probably from St. John himself.

It is this act of revealing which the title describes. Compare the use of this word in Rom. ii. 5; viii. 19; xvi. 25. 1 Cor. i. 7; xiv. 6. 2 Cor. xii. 1. 7. Gal. i. 12; ii. 2. Eph. i. 17; iii. 3. 2 Thess. i. 7. 1 Pet. i. 7. 13; it is the office of revealing the future which is assigned to Christ by God, and this truth is declared in the name and contents of the Appendix of Accordingly we shall be appendixed. the name and contents of the Apocalypse. Accordingly we shall see that it is Christ, Who commands John to write the seven Epistles to the Seven Churches, and reveals what some of them will suffer (i. 11. 19); it is Christ, Who opens the Book scaled with the Seven Seals (v. 7. 9), and reveals the future sufferings and final triumph of the Church (vi. 1—17; vii. 1—17); it is Christ, Who offers the prayers of all the Saints, which lead to the sounding of the Seven Trumpets which announce God's Judgments on His enemies (viii. 3-13; ix. 1-21; xi. 15); it is Christ, Who delivers the little Book opened to St. John, and gives him a commission to prophesy again (x. 1-11).

The Divinity of Christ is declared by what follows; "He sent and signified it by His angel to His servant John." Compare xxii. 16. The Angels are Christ's Angels, because He is God.

- à δεί γενέσθαι εν τάχει] which must come to pass shortly. This expression is not inconsistent with the fact that some of these things would seem long in their accomplishment, to human calculation; as is evident from Luke xviii. 8, where Christ says that God is long-suffering (μακροθυμῶν) and yet executes His purposes έν τάχει, and so here He says, xxii. 7, ίδου έρχομαι ταχύ, and still He is not yet come: cp. below v. 3, and v. 7.

2. δs έμαρτύρησε κ.τ.λ.] who bare witness of the Word of God, and the testimony of Jesus Christ, as many things as he saw. St. John thus intimates, that what he writes in the Apocaprivate imagination, but that it is the testimony of Christ; and that he writes whatever he saw in the visions of God. Therefore he adds, "blessed is he who readeth, and who heareth (i. e. hearkens to, and obeys) the words of the prophecy, and observeth the things which are written therein." On the sense of ἀκούω the things which are written therein." On the sense of ἀκούω with an accusative as here, see Acts ix. 7. On the meaning of segments the result of the meaning of segments. is always true, even to the end of time. For since the prophecies in this book extend from the Apostolic age to the Day of Judgment, some of them are continually on the eve of their accomplishment. Besides, since the duration of the present world is but a span when compared with Eternity, the season of Judgment is at hand; the Judge standeth before the door (James v. 9). Cp. 2 Pet. iii. 8, 9. Arethas.

4. Ἰωάννης ταῖς ἐπτὰ ἐκκλησίαις] John to the Seven Churches that are in Asia. The Asia here mentioned is the district more commonly known as Ionia and Lydia, and was called in Roman language Proconsular Asia. It was a province of not more than one hundred miles square, watered on the north by the river Caycus, on the south by the Mæander, and bounded on the east by the Phrygian hills, and on the west by the Mediterranean Sca. See on Acts ii. 9, and Abp. Ussher's Treatise on the Original of Bishops and Metropolitans, Oxf. 1641, p. 53, and following. Its capital was Ephesus, in which city St. John resided, wrote his Gospel, and died, and which is now named after him. See above, Introduction to St. John's Gospel, p. 267.
On these Epistles to the Seven Churches see further below,

The salutation with which St. Peter's two Epistles, and all St. Paul's Epistles to Churches begin (see on 1 Thess. i. 1); and serving as a bond of Christian fellowship between St. John and those two Apostles. The Apocalypse also ends with the final salutation which was characteristic of St. Paul, The Grace of the Lord followed by a nominative case, seems designed to remind the reader, that in the Apocalypse he is to be prepared for combina-tions independent of the ordinary rules of Grammar, and having a Grammar of their own,-the Grammar of Inspiration.

These remarkable structures, frequent in this Book, excite the reader's attention by their singularity, and serve as mementos that the truths which they express transcend the reach of human thought and language. Thus the combination of the preposition מים מולה here with the participle, ל ביי, marks its connexion with the indeclinable. Hebrew יְרִיהָ (Jehovah), and also, if we may so say, bespeaks the indeclinability of the Divine Essence, with which there is "no variableness or shadow of turning."

See below, v. 5, and Winer, Gr. Gr. pp. 64. 164; it indicates that the phrase  $\delta$   $\delta \nu$  kal  $\delta$   $\hat{\eta} \nu$  kal  $\delta$   $\hat{\epsilon} \rho \chi \delta \mu \epsilon \nu \sigma s$  is a proper name reserved to God alone, and that He Who spake to John in Patmos is the same as He Who spake to Moses in the Wilderness, when

He thus described Himself, Έγω εἰμι δ ὢν, "I am the Being One;" "I am the ever Existing One," and ordered Moses to say, δ ὢν ἀπέσταλκέ με, "I am hath sent me." Exod. iii. 14.

The commission given here to St. John resembles that given to Moses; and it will be seen that the Apocalypse presents a continuous series of typical analogies between the Church of Christian States. Christ, whose future fortunes he reveals, and the history of the Israelitish Church led by Moses out of Egypt, in its pilgrimage through the wilderness, toward Canaan, the figure of Heaven. Cp. Arethas here, and see Introduction above, pp. 148, 149.

Elz. has  $\tau o \hat{v}$  after  $\hat{a}\pi \delta$ , but it is not in the best MSS. – ἀπὸ τῶν ἐπτὰ πνευμάτων] from the Seven Spirits which are before His throne. From a comparison of this passage with Zech. iv. 10, speaking of those "seven, which are the Eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro through the whole earth," it has been inferred by some that the Seven Spirits here mentioned, are the Seven principal Angels, of which number Gabriel and Michael are two. Cp. Luke i. 19. The ancient opinion of the Hebrews on this subject is expressed in the book of Tobit, xii. 15, "I am Raphael, one of the Seven Angels . . . . which go in and out before the presence of the Holy One;" and this opinion was entertained by Irenæus, cited by Andreas, and by Clemens Alex. Stromat. i. ad fin., and by Andreas and Arethas, and in later times by Ribera, Viegas, Corn. à Lapide, Mede, Bossuet, Drusius, Bp. Bull (Sermons, i. pp. 291, 292), and others. Cp. below, iii. I, where Christ is said to have the Seven Spirits of God, and the Seven Stars, and iv. 5, where the Seven Spirits are typified by seven lamps, and v. 6, where they are symbolized by the Seven horns and seven eyes of the Lamb.

There would be, doubtless, an appropriate significance in the conveyance of the message of Grace and Peace from God and Christ through the ministry of the Seven Angels of the Church in Heaven to the Seven Angels of the Churches of Asia, who represent the fulness of the Apostolic Ministry of the Church Universal on Earth. See i. 20; ii. 1.

Perhaps, however, inasmuch as the number Seven in the Apocalypse symbolizes completeness (see on xii. 19), and in-asmuch also as Angels are not called Spirits in this book, the Seven Spirits represent the Holy Spirit, in His sevenfold fulness, which rests on Christ, the Holy One of God (Isa. xi. 2; lxi. 1. Luke iv. 18), and which after His Ascension He sent, and is ever sending, to comfort and illuminate His Church, and therefore they may well be called horns, lamps, and eyes. Nor is there any harshness in the expression Grace and Peace be to you from the Seven Spirits; for these seven gifts of the Holy Spirit bestowed by Christ, Who received them from the Father (John xiv. 16), Who is the Wellspring of all good (see on 2 Cor. xiii. 14), are the means of all Grace and Peace to the Church; and so the words are understood by Victorinus, Primasius, Andreas, Bede.

The septenary number (says Aug.) is consecrated to the Holy Ghost in Holy Scripture, and is recognized as such by the Church. And (as is added by Bede here) the One Spirit is here characterized as sevenfold, because in the One Spirit is all fulness and perfection; and this interpretation is sanctioned by Bp.

Andrewes (Sermon "on the Sending of the Holy Ghost," iii. p. 134), and so Bp. Wilson, who says that the salutation is from "the Holy Ghost Who governs the Church of Christ, until His Coming again, and with His sevenfold gifts inspires it."

5. ἀπὸ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, δ μάρτυς δ πιστός] from Jesus Christ, the faithful Witness. The structure of ἀπὸ with a nominative may be compared with that in v. 4; and as in that passage it declared that there is no variableness or shadow of turning in God (James i. 17), so it may here be understood to signify, that whatever vicissitudes may occur in the affairs of Nations, and in the History of the Church, as revealed in the prophecies of this Book, yet "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday and to-day and for ever" (Heb. xiii. 3), and that He Who "came into the world to witness to the truth" (John xviii. 37), is always "the faithful witness;" and whatever corruptions of Christian doctrine may arise in the Church, yet His testimony is always faithful and true.

— δ πρωτότοκος τῶν νεκρῶν] the first-begotten of the dead.

Death has become Birth, through Him Who is the First-born from the Grave. See above, on Acts ii. 24. 1 Cor. xv. 20. Col.

i. 18. Bp. Andrewes, iii. 57.

— δ ἄρχων] the Prince of the Kings of the Earth, an appropriate declaration consequent on the statement of Christ's Victory over the Grave at his Resurrection, when He asserted this Supremacy (see Matt. xxviii. 18), and here it is the preamble of a Revelation which will disclose insurrections of earthly Powers against Christ, and His triumph over them (xix. 19-21).

καl λούσαντι κ.τ.λ.] and Who washed us from our sins by His blood. Some MSS., viz. A, R, C, and several Cursives, and the Syriac and Armenian Versions and Fathers, Andreas and Primasius, and Cassiodorus, have λύσαντι, Who redeemed us, and so Lachmann, and Düsterdieck, but not Ewald, De Wette,

This reading deserves consideration, and may perhaps be preferable. For the Copyists were more likely to alter λύσαντι into λούσαντι than vice verså; and the great proof of Christ's love is, that He redeemed us by pouring forth His Own Blood, as our ransom, λύτρον; and whereas we were held in bondage by reason of our sins, and were liable to everlasting death (Rom. vi. 17-23), our Redeemer delivered us from that captivity by paying that price which alone could satisfy God's justice, and procure our release, and He purchased us at that price for Himself. See Matt. xx. 28. Acts xx. 28. 1 Cor. vi. 20; vii. 23. Eph. i. 7. Col. i. 14. Heb. ix. 12. 1 Tim. ii. 6. 1 Pet. i. 18. On the use of  $\ell \nu$  as the instrument, see vi. 8.

6. και ἐποίησεν ἡμᾶς βασιλείαν] and He made us to be a kingdom, Priests to God and His Father. So the best MSS. Elz. has βασιλεῖs, Kings; but the spiritual character of the Christian privileges is best expressed by the abstract word a Kingdom, which may be designed to be a caution against erroneous and antinomian notions which some have deduced from the declaration of Scripture, that all Christians are Kings. It is a phrase derived from the Ancient Scriptures (Exod. xix. 6; xxiii. 22), "Ye shall be to Me a royal Priesthood," βασίλειον ἱεράτευμα.

Cp. 1 Pet. ii. 9, and Winer, p. 512.

Observe the acrist here, ἐποίησεν, He made; that is, by certain special acts on His part, His Incarnation, and Death, and Ascension. See below, v. 10.

The addition of a finite verb (ἐποίησεν), preceded by καl, to participles (ἀγαπῶντι—λούσαντι), is a Hebraistic peculiarity, as is observed by Delitzsch, quoted by Hengstenberg.

7. ἰδοὺ, ἔρχεται μετὰ τῶν νεφελῶν] Behold, He cometh with the clouds, the clouds of the Last Judgment described by Daniel, vii. 13. St. John, being in the Spirit, already anticipates the end of all things, and sees it as already at hand; as it is to Him to Whom a thousand years are as one day (2 Pet. iii. 8), and by Whose inspiration he writes. See v. 3.

— καὶ οἶτινες αὐτὸν ἐξεκέντησαν] and they also who pierced Him, whether on the Cross, by nails and the spear, and by bitter mockeries and insults; or by their sins. Heb. vi. 6. On the variation here from the Septuagint Version, see the notes on Zech. xii. 10, and also on John xix. 37, where is the same variety; and where it is observed, that the text which speaks of Christ's suffering, affords also evidence of His Godhead.

This deviation from the LXX Version, and this identity of the rendering of this remarkable text in St. John's Gospel (xix. 37; cp. Lee on Inspiration, p. 345), and in the Apocalypse, are confirmatory of the belief that those two writings are from the same hand.

The frequent citations in this, the first chapter of the Apocalypse, from the ancient Hebrew Prophets, especially from Daniel and Zechariah, are doubtless designed to lead the reader to regard the Apocalypse as a sequel to, and continuation of, Hebrew prophecy, and as dictated by the Same Spirit Who spake by its mouth. And since the Apocalypse is the last prophetical Book of Holy Scripture, it may be regarded as the consummation of all God's prophetic Revelations to the world. See above, Introduction to this Book, pp. 150, 151.

- και κόψονται ἐπ' αὐτὸν πᾶσαι αἱ φυλαι τῆς γῆς] and all the Tribes of the Earth will wail at Him: a sentence uttered by Our Lord Himself in the Gospel, Matt. xxiv. 30.

The Tribes of the Earth in this book are they who are of the earth, earthy, and are not like the Tribes of the Israel of God, the heirs of the heavenly Jerusalem, who have their hearts in heaven, their treasure in heaven, and their conversation in heaven (Matt. vi. 20. Phil. iii. 20). See below, iii. 10.

It is a saying of S. Augustine, which is of constant use in expounding the Apocalypse, "Ecclesia Dei cælum est, inimici Ejus terra sunt" (Serm. 57).

The tribes of the spiritual Israel, the Church Universal, are represented as sealed with the seal of God, at the final gathering of all his people, in the seventh Seal. See below, vii. 4-9.

But they who set their affections on things upon earth will wail at Christ's Coming to Judgment; while they who have set their affections on things above (Col. iii. 2) will rejoice at His appearance, and will "lift up their heads, because the day of their redemption draweth nigh" (Luke xxi. 28).

On the use of the verb κόπτομαι, plango, see above, Matt.

xi. 17; xxiv. 30. Luke viii. 52; xxiii. 27; below, xviii. 9.

8.  $\epsilon\gamma\dot{\omega}$   $\epsilon\dot{l}\mu\iota$   $\tau\dot{\delta}$  Alpha and the Onega. The first and the lest letters of the Greek Alphabet are used by Christ in order to declare that He is the Beginning and End of all things. A similar mode of speech, derived from their own alphabet, was employed by the Hebrews, who said that Adam transgressed, and that Abraham observed the whole law "from Aleph to Thau:" see Schoettgen, pp. 1086, 1087. A like usage is found in later Greek writers. See Wetstein, p. 749.

This use of letters of the Alphabet of the Greek or Gentile world, and not of the Hebrew, in the introduction of this Book, as a designation of Jesus Christ, and adopted by Himself as such, is characteristic of the universality of the Dispensation which it reveals, and of the incorporation of all nations of the Earth in the mystical Body of Christ. The numerical value of A is an Unit, and of  $\Omega$  is eight hundred; and eight is the symbol of glory. See on Luke xxiv. 1.

These words, applied by Christ to Himself (xxi. 6; xxii. 13; cp. i. 17, 18), and compared with the declarations of Jehovah, Isa, xli. 4; xliv. 6; xlviii. 12, are also a plain assertion of Christ's Divinity and Co-eternity with the Father. See Athanasius, c. Arianos, Orat. iii. vol. i. p. 317; and cp. Andreas, Ecumen., Arethas, herc. Bp. Andrewes, ii. 162. Bp. Pearson, Art. ii. p. 233. Dr. Waterland, ii. 136. Observe the definite articles prefixed here to Alpha and Omega, indicating that He is the only Beginning and End of all things, and showing His Co-equality with the Father.

This declaration of Christ concerning Himself, "I am the A and the O," was reverently accepted by early Christian Art, and is often seen in ancient Christian Inscriptions, particularly in the Catacombs of Rome, where the symbols A,  $\Omega$  are frequently accompanied by (Χριστός). See Aringhi, Roma Subterranea, cap. xiii. and xv. Bp. Kip on the Catacombs, Lond. 1859, p. 110; and Scott on the Catacombs, p. 100; in one case the symbol is accompanied with the words ES DEIS, probably DEUS, "Thou art God," asserting the GODHEAD of CHRIST.

It is also adopted in Christian Hymnology, e. g. by Prudentius, in the fourth century, Cathem. ix. 10.

Corde natus ex Parentis ante mundi exordium, Alpha et Ω cognominatus, Ipse fons et clausula Omnium quæ sunt, fuerunt, quæque post futura sunt.

9. ἐγὼ Ἰωάννης—Πάτμῳ] I, John, your brother. Observe the humility of the beloved Disciple; see above, v. 1. I, John, your brother and partner in the affliction and kingdom and endurance in Christ Jesus (κ and C omit Χριστῷ. A omits Ἰησοῦ, B has έ. X. 'I.) became (ἐγενόμην, not ῆν) a dweller in the Island called Patmos, on account of the word of God, and the testimony of Jesus Christ. Observe the gentleness with which he speaks of his exile and imprisonment for the Gospel; εγενόμην εν τῆ νήσφ, I became—I found myself—for the sake of God's Word. an inmate of Patmos. He regards his banishment like a voyage and sojourn in a pleasant place; for he was there visited by Christ. There is also something beautiful and touching in the repetition of this word εγενόμην here. I became a dweller in Patmos, for the Word's sake, and I became a dweller in the Spirit, on the Lord's Day. To be in Patmos for the Truth's sake is a proper preparation for being in the Spirit, and for seeing Revelations of heaven.

The agrist ἐγενόμην does not intimate, as some have supposed, that the Apocalypse was not written in Patmos; see v. 11. It is like the epistolary acrist ἔγραψα, by which the writer puts himself in the place of the reader; see 1 Pet. v. 12.

St. John saw and wrote the Revelation in the isle of Patmos, one of the Sporades, in the Ægæan Sea, to which he was banished by the Emperor Domitian about A.D. 95. See Teroanished by the Empelor Bolintan about A.B. 93. See Pertullian, Præscr. Hær. 36. Iren., c. Hær. v. 30. Origen in Matt. tom. xvi. Euseb. iii. 18; and cp. Andreas here, and S. Jerome, Scr. Smaller Islands, especially in the Archipelago, such as Gyaros, Seriphos, Patmos, were used by the Romans for purposes of penal deportation and imprisonment; see Tacit., Annal. i. 53. Juvenal,

i. 73; x. 170.

The island of Patmos still preserves some local traditions of St. John's sojourn there. A cave is shown where he is said to have seen the Revelation. Tournefort, ii. p. 198. Pococke, iii. p. 36. Walpole, Turkey, ii. p. 43.

At the opening of this book, Christ displays a specimen of the providential Scheme which is to be revealed in the Apocalypse. John was banished by the powers of this world; but Christ uses his exile and detention in Patmos as an occasion for revealing to him the glories of His Second Coming, and for commissioning him to write what he could not now preach by word of mouth, and to send the writing to the Seven Churches, so that it might be read by them and by all Churches in every age, even to the Coming of Christ.

St. John, an exile on earth, was admitted to visions of Heaven. Confined within the limits of Patmos, he was received into the courts of the Jerusalem that is above.

He who had been admitted to our Lord's most private retirements; to the most solemn scenes of His sufferings and sorrow; who had been with Him on the Mountain of Transfiguration, in the Garden of Gethsemane, in the High Priest's hall, and at the Cross; was now a prisoner in a lonely island.

All his brother Apostles had been taken away by Death. He was left the last. As the winds blew, and as the waves dashed on the rocky shores of Patmos, so the storms of the world were beating against the rock of the Church. But the aged and lonely Apostle was cheered with glorious visions. He was visited by JESUS CHRIST. The Man of Sorrows, whom St. John had seen in His agony at Gethsemane, He Whom He had seen standing bound before Caiaphas, crowned with thorns, mocked by Herod, condemned by Pilate, dying on the Cross, and pierced by the soldier, was now seen by him enthroned in heaven, and adored by Angels kneeling before Him. "I am the Alpha and the Omega, the First and the Last. I am He that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death."

Here is comfort to all in times of sorrow. They who love Christ with St. John, they who suffer with Christ, and for Him, will be visited by Him, and after the troubles of this world will pass to the peace of heaven. See above, Introduction, p. 162.

10. έγενόμην, κ.τ.λ.] I became in the Spirit on the Lord's Day; the Day of the Lord's Resurrection from the Dead; a very appropriate season for the revelation of Christ in glory, and of the bliss of the Church Triumphant.

By the repetition of the word ἐγενόμην St. John marks his transition from the outer visible world (ἐν Πάτμφ) to the inner invisible world (ἐν Πνεύματι).

The expression—" the Lord's Day"—shows that the First Day of the Week, on which our Lord rose, was now observed by Christians as a day set apart for religious uses. In the words of S. Augustine (Epist. 119), "The Lord's Day being proclaimed to Christians by the Lord's Resurrection, thence became their

festal Day.'

A weekly Day of Rest typifies the Rest or Sabbatism which still remaineth to the people of God (see Heb. iv. 9). The Sabbath commemorated God's Rest after creation, which concerns all men; and the transfer of the Sabbath to the First Day recalls the mind to the blessing of Creation, begun on the First Day, and consecrated anew by those of Redemption and Sanctification, bestowed in the Resurrection of Christ on the First Day, and in the Descent of the Holy Ghost from heaven, on the First Day. The Sahbath of the Jews commemorated their deliverance from Egypt (Deut. v. 15). The Christian Sabbath celebrates the substance of which that national deliverance was a shadow; it celebrates the Exodus of mankind from a spiritual Egypt, in the Resurrection of Christ.

See note above on Matt. xxvii. 62; xxviii. 1. Luke xxiii. 56. Acts xx. 7; Col. ii. 16, and Bp. Andrewes, Sermon on 1 Cor. Acts xx. 7; Col. II. 16, and Bp. Tertullian refers to this passage in his De Animâ, c. 9.

There is also another special aptitude and adjustment in the Visions of the Apocalypse to the first day of the week. For all these Visions—the Seals, the Trumpets, the Vials, are grouped in sevens; they begin on the first day of the Seven, the birthday of the Church, whose history and pilgrimage they reveal, till she comes, after the Hexaemeron of her trial, to the Sabbath of her Rest: an I to the Octave of a glorious Resurrection.

11. δ βλέπεις γράψον] what thou art beholding write forthwith (aorist) into a book.

- καὶ πέμψον ταῖς ἐπτὰ ἐκκλησίαις] and send it to the Seven Churches: that is, primarily to the Seven Churches in Asia here specified.

Hence the testimony of those Churches to the genuineness of the Apocalypse is of great weight. It was sent to them, and they bear witness that it was sent by the Apostle and Evangelist St. John. See above, the Introduction to this Book, pp. 154-6.

Tertullian (adv. Marcion. iv. 5) refers to this passage, and calls these Churches "alumnas Joannis."

Secondly, the message delivered to them was designed by the Great Head of the Church for the perpetual edification of all Churches in every age and country of the World. This is evident from the fact, that each of the Seven Epistles here sent contains the solemn words, "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the Churches" (Rev. ii. 7. 11. 17. 29; iii. 6. 13. 22).

Besides, in Holy Scripture the number seven indicates completeness (see Bahr, Symbolik i. pp. 187-201), and it is specially used in the Apocalypse in this sense. The Seventh Seal, the Seventh Trumpet, the Seventh Vial, is the last in their own series respectively.

There were many more Churches in Asia than Seven when St. John wrote (e. g. Colossæ, Hierapolis, and probably Tralles, Magnesia, and others); and therefore, as is said by all the ancient Expositors (Victorinus, Andreas, Primasius, Bede, Arethas, and others), the design of the Holy Spirit, in adopting the perfect number seven as the number of Churches to whom the Epistles are to be sent, is to declare that in speaking to them He is speaking to all.

The words of Victorinus (Bishop and Martyr in the third century), whose comment on the Apocalypse is the oldest now extant, deserve to be cited here. "There are seven horns of the Lamb (Rev. v. 6), seven eyes of God (Zech. iv. 10), seven spirits Voi. II.—Part IV.

before the throne (Rev. i. 4; iv. 5), seven Candlesticks (i. 13), seven Women in Isaiah (iv. 1), seven Churches addressed in St. Paul's writings, seven Deacons (Acts vi. 3), seven Seals (Rev. v. 1), seven Trumpets (Rev. viii.), seven weeks ending at Pentecost (Lev. xxiii. 15), seventy weeks in Daniel (ix. 25), seven clean animals in the Ark (Gen. vii. 2), seven chastisements on Cain (Gen. iv. 15), seven years followed by a release of debt (Deut. xv. 1), seven Pillars in the House of Wisdom (Prov. xi. 1)." (Victorin. de Fabrica Mundi.)

"Numero septenario Universæ Ecclesiæ significata est plenitudo: propter quod et Joannes Apostolus ad septem scribit Ecclesias, eo modo se ostendens ad unius plenitudinem scribere"

(S. Augustine, de Civ. Dei xvii. 4). St. John, in writing to Seven Churches of Asia, writes to all Churches of the world; and it has been observed by ancient Expositors (Canon. Muratorian. ap. Routh, R. S. iv. p. 2. Victorinus. Cyprian, de Exhort. Martyr. c. ii., and others), that the number of Gentile Churches to which St. Paul wrote Epistles is seven; and that what St. Paul wrote to them he wrote to all.

The Candlestick or Lampstand in the Temple had seven branches, i. e., three on each side and the shaft in the centre (Exod. xxv. 31, 32), and it was a figure of the Church fed by the Oil of Holy Scripture, and illuminating the World (see Zech. iv. 2, and below, i. 20, and especially xi. 4); whence S. Irenæus says, v. 20, that "the Church is the Seven-branched Lamp, holding the Light of Christ."

There are Seven Golden Candlesticks in the Apocalypse, and yet there was but one Seven-branched Golden Candlestick in the Temple, and in the visions of Zechariah. So there are particular Churches throughout the World; but all these together make One Church Universal; being fed with the same Oil of pure doctrine, and all constructed of the same pure material of fine

Any one Candlestick may be removed (see on Rev. ii. 5), but the sevenfold unity is not disturbed by its removal. Any particular Church may fail, but the promise of Christ to the Church Universal is, that "the Gates of Hell shall never prevail against it" (Matt. xvi. 18).

— είs Έρεσον, κ.τ.λ.] to Ephesus, and to Smyrna. The Churches here mentioned are situated in a circular group (see v. 4), and are specified in the geographical order in which they would occur to the mind of a person writing from Patmos. See above, on 1 Pet. i. 1.

Some learned Modern Expositors (Vitringa, p 31. Venema, p. 55. Henry More, p. 720, and others) regard the Seven Epistles as having a prophetical character, and as representing Seven successive states of the Christian Church in seven consecutive periods of time, dating from the Apostolic Age to the end.

But this is a notion which is not sanctioned by ancient Expositors, and seems to be unfounded.

It cannot be doubted that in writing to the Seven Churches St. John (as has been already observed) is writing to all; and that every Church of Christendom may see itself reflected in one or other of these Epistles. Indeed (as Victorinus says), in these seven Churches we see an image of the faithful of the whole Catholic Church. But the Epistles have an historical character (see ii. 6. 13. 15), and the arrangement of their order, as before said, appears to be geographical. Ephesus is fitly placed first, as being nearest to Patmos, and as being the Chief City and Church of Asia, where St. John himself lived and died.

— Πέργαμον] Pergamum; rarely called Pergamus (Strabo, xiii. p. 924. Winer, ii. p. 224. Trench, on the Authorized Version, p. 44). But the Greek Expositors have ἡ Πέργαμος here (in Caten., p. 208), and so Diog. Laert., in Arcesida, iv. 30. It was in Mysia, on the Caycus. For further particulars concerning

 12. εἶδον ἐπτὰ λυχνίας χρυσᾶς] I saw Seven Candlesticks (or rather Lamps, or Lampstands) of Gold.

On the symbolic meaning of the number Seven, see below, note on xi. 19.

The word Candlestick has taken root in the English language as an emblem of a Church, and it seems almost impossible to eradicate it; but it must be borne in mind by the English reader that the word Candlesticks does not rightly represent those λυχνίαι, which were similar to the Seven-branched λυχνίαι, or Lampstands, which were to be kept continually burning in the Levitical Tabernacle, or Temple (Exod. xxv. 31; xxvii. 20. Lev. xxiv. 1-4. 1 Kings vii. 49. Heb. ix. 1, 2); and (as before observed, see v. 11) were fed with oil (cp. Exod. xxvii. 20) supplied through their branches, or tubes, into their bowls, and thus were very apt emblems of Churches (see v. 20), which have no *inde*pendent light in themselves (as Andreas here observes), but are only vehicles  $(\partial \chi' \eta \mu \alpha \pi \alpha)$  of light derived from above; being supplied by the Holy Spirit with a perennial stream of pure oil (see Caten. pp. 194, 199) flowing from the Word of God, and enabling them to enlighten the world-even the Angels of heaven-with the pure light of the Gospel (see Eph. iii. 10), and ever tended by Christ, and under him by the Christian Priesthood; as the Seven-branched Lamp-stand was tended by the Levites in the Temple. In like manner the Priests of the Church of Christ are bound to keep watch and ward by day and night, and to take good heed that the wicks of the Spiritual Lamp in the Christian Sanctuary are duly trimmed, and that the pipes are not clogged and obstructed by the clotted corruptions of unsound doctrine, and that the oil is not adulterated, and that the lights burn clearly; and they are responsible to Christ for the discharge of this duty, and He will remove their Candlestick if they neglect to perform it. See next note, and below on xi. 4.

13. καὶ ἐν μέσφ τῶν ἐπτὰ λυχνιῶν] and in the midst of the 10. και εν μεσφ των επτα λυχνιων η and in the midst of the seven golden Lamps one like the Son of Man, clothed with a long garment, reaching down to His feet. After ποδήρη the word χιτώνα is to be understood. "One like the Son of Man," so Daniel describes Christ, Dan. vii. 13; x. 5. Christ is arrayed in a long garment, as the High Priest of the Church Universal. Compare Ezek. ix. 2. 11, and the description of the High Priest's robes in Josephus, Ant. iii. 8. 4; viii. 3. 8; xx. 1. 1, who uses the word ποδήρης, flowing to the feet, as applicable to the Sacred Vesture of the High Priest.

Christ is represented as walking in the midst of the Seven Golden Lamps (ii. 1), because, as the Priests in the Tabernacle and Temple lighted, and watched, and fed the Lamps (Exod. xxvii. 20, 21; xxxiv. 9. Lev. xxiv. 2. 4), so Christ observes the Churches of Christendom, which He illumines with the light of His Word, and feeds with the oil of His Spirit, and trims with His discipline, and guards with His care, and examines with His eye, whether they burn clearly with the luminous flame of true doctrine, and whether the liquid oil of the Spirit is corrupted with human admixtures, and the light of the lamp is dimmed with heresy, superstition, or unbelief.

neresy, superstands of attention of a transfer  $\mu$  and girded around at the breasts with a golden girdle. This also is a sacerdotal attribute, showing that the Son of Man is here presented as the High Priest of the Church. Compare the language of Josephus, Ant. iii. 7. 2, concerning the girdle of the High Priest of the Levitical Dispensation; and see Wetstein here.

14. ἡ δὲ κεφαλή, κ.τ.λ.] and His head and His hair white as white wool. Here the same attributes are ascribed to Christ as are assigned to God by Daniel, vii. 9; x. 6. Cp. v. 8.

It is observed by S. Irenœus (iv. 20. 11), that the imagery by which Christ is here described represents His two Natures and His Sacerdotal Office. The Hair, white like wool, shows the holiness and glory of His Divinity; His attire displays His Priest-hood; His feet of chalco-libanum burning in a furnace represent His permanence, like the Bush in the Wilderness on fire, but not consumed (Exod. iii. 2); and the fire, adds Irenœus, may remind us of that conflagration with which He will execute Judgment at the end of the World.

15. οἱ πόδες αὐτοῦ ὅμοιοι χαλκολιβάνω] and His feet like unto chalcolibanus. The etymology of the last word is doubtful; but inasmuch as the language of the Apocalypse coincides in many respects with that of Hebrew Prophecy, it is probably equivalent to the shining brass, or molten brass or copper, glowing in a state of incandescence and fusion, in Dan. x. 6, and Ezek. i. 7. 13. And this is confirmed by Plin. N. H. xxxiv. 2. The word occurs

It is rendered aurichalcum, or orichalcum (see Cicero de Off. iii. 23. 12. Horat. Ars Poet. 202), by the Vulgate, and is said by Suidas to be the same as electrum, which is a composite metal (Plin. N. H. ix. 65), made of gold and silver. See Winer, R. W. B. ii. pp. 88, 89, and it is rendered by some "brass from Libanus." (Syr., Æthiop., Vatabl., Ebrard.)

stenberg, Trench) suppose that the word is compounded of xahkbs and the Hebrew 175 (laban), while; and that it signifies brass in a state of white heat.

If a conjecture of this kind is admissible, and if λιβανδε may be regarded as an adjective, a Greek root seems preferable to a Hebrew, and (as has been suggested by Schwartz, Monum. Ingen. iv. 283) it may perhaps come from  $\lambda\epsilon l\beta\omega$ , liquo (as  $\sigma\tau\epsilon-\gamma \alpha\nu \delta$ s from  $\sigma\tau\epsilon\gamma\omega$ ,  $\pi\iota\theta\alpha\nu\delta$ s from  $\pi\epsilon l\theta\omega$ , and  $\lambda\iota\chi\alpha\nu\delta$ s from  $\lambda\epsilon l\chi\omega$ ), and thus  $\chi \alpha \lambda \kappa o - \lambda (\beta a \nu os may signify liquid or molten brass; and this would well suit the parallel places of the Old Testament and$ the context here, ώς ἐν καμίνφ πεπυρωμένοι, as heated in a furnace.

Or, the word may be derived from xahkbs, copper, and λίβανος, frankincense, and be a word similar to χρυσό-πρασος, and χρυσό-λιθος, and signify copper in a state of ignition, like frankincense when it is red-hot. Cp. Andreas and Wetst. here, and Salmas. ad Solin. p. 810. Simon is likened to λίβανος, incense, Ecclus. i. 9.

16. καὶ ἐκ τ. στόματος] and going out of His mouth a sharp two-edged sword, the Word of God. Tertullian thus expounds it (c. Marcion. iii. 14), "the Apostle St. John, in the Apocalypse, describes a sword coming forth from the mouth of God, with two edges and sharp at the point, which is the Word of God, sharpened with the two edges of the two Testaments-the Law and the Gospel."

The judicial, punilive Power of God's Holy Word, as an instrument of His retributive Justice and indignation on the guilty, for their disobedience, is displayed in the Apocalypse in awful characters, see ii. 12. 16, and particularly xix. 15. 21. This attribute of God's Word is carefully to be observed, as serving to explain some Visions in this Book which would otherwise be obscure, and particularly xi. 3-6.

This imagery is also derived from the ancient Scriptures, Isa. xi. 4; xlix. 2. Hos. vi. 5; and is adopted by St. Paul, Heb. This sword of Christ is always called foupala in the iv. 12. Apocalypse (i. 16; ii. 12. 16; xix. 15. 21), never μάχαιρα, and perhaps this word may be chosen in order to express more clearly the terror of the Lord (2 Cor. v. 11), and of His Word to those who disobey Him.

17. και έθηκε] and He laid His right hand upon me, as the Angel did on Daniel, viii. 18; x. 10.

18. καὶ ἔχω τὰς κλεῖς] and I hold the Keys of Death and of Tades. Christ holds the Keys of Death, both of natural and spiritual Death; of natural Death, as He proved by raising the Dead, and by giving to His Apostles the power of raising the Dead, and by raising Himself from the Dead. See John v. 21.

He holds also the Keys of Spiritual Death. He quickens the soul, dead in trespasses and sins, by His Word and Sacraments (see on John v. 25); and as the appointed Judge of Quick and Dead, He will condemn the wicked at the Last Day, to that Death. See xx. 6. 14; xxi. 8. "For Hell itself is secunda mors, and is so termed by St. John." Bp. Andrewes, ii. 194.

He it is therefore "that openeth, and no man shutteth; and that shutteth, and no man openeth," iii. 7.

He has also the Keys of Hades-that is, of שאול, Scheol, the region of disembodied spirits (see on Luke xvi. 23, and Andreas here), distinguished from Hell,  $\gamma \epsilon \epsilon \nu \nu \alpha$ , or the Lake of Fire, which is the final abode of the reprobate (see xx. 10. 14, 15), and into which none are cast until the Day of Judgment.

Therefore the word "Aidns is not to be rendered Hell; we may adopt the word Hades, with Hammond and Bp. Wilson, pp. 700, 701, and others. See the notes in the American revised Version, pp. 86, 87, ed. 1854.

Our Lord used this Key on the Cross when He admitted the control of the Parity to the Cross when He admitted the control of the Parity to the Cross when He admitted the control of the Parity to the Cross when He admitted the control of the Parity to the Cross when He admitted the control of the Parity to the Cross when He admitted the control of the Parity to the Cross when He admitted the control of the Parity to the Cross when He admitted the control of the Parity to the Cross when He admitted the control of the Parity to the Cross when He admitted the control of the Cross when He admitted the Cross when He admitted the contr soul of the Penitent into Paradise (Luke xxiii. 43), and He will use it at the Great Day, when He will unlock the gates of Hades, and will call forth the Spirits of all men, and re-unite every soul to its own body, which He will raise from the grave (John v. 28); and summon all men in soul and body to His Judgment Seat, for their final doom of everlasting bliss or woe.

Elz. places τοῦ θανάτου before τοῦ "Αιδου, but A, B, C place τοῦ θανάτου first; and so all the best Editions. This is the order of the words in all the other passages in which they occur in this book, see vi. 8; xx. 13, 14, and with good reason, because Death is the inlet of the soul into Hades.

19. καὶ α είσι] and what they are. The word είσι here may signify what they mean; as is explained by what follows, "the seven stars are, i. e. they represent, the Angels of the Seven Churches; and the seven Lamps are, i. e. they represent, the Seven Churches." This interpretation is mentioned by Arethas, and is adopted by Alcasar, Aretius, Launoi, Eichhorn, Herder, De Wette, Ewald, and others.

St. John was not only admitted to see, and enabled to describe, the mysteries of the Spiritual World and of Futurity, but also to explain them. Compare below, v. 20, and xvii. 9. 12. 15. 18, where the substantive verb eini is used in this sense.

At the same time, in favour of the other interpretation (which is adopted by A Lapide, Grotius, Vitringa, Bengel, Hengstenberg, Ebrard, Lücke, Düsterd., and our Authorized Version), "the things which are," it may be observed, that things present are described in the Seven Epistles (chaps. ii. and iii.), and there seems to be a designed contrast between "the things which are," and "the things which are about to come to pass," by which it is intimated that the present and future condition of the Churches are alike open to the eye of Christ.

20. ἄγγελοι] Angels of the Seven Churches. Angels, that is, their Chief Pastors, Bishops. The word Angel, or Messenger, had been applied to the Ministers of God, by ancient Prophecy. Cp. Mal. ii. 7, where see S. Jerome: cp. Augustine, Ep. Aliji. Ep. Mat. 11. 1, where see S. Jerome; Cp. Augustine, Ep. Mil., Epiphanius, Bede, and Aquinas here; Saravia, de Minist. Eccles. p. 29; and Ussher on the Original of Bishops, p. 53; and Bingham, Antiquities, book ii. cap. ii. sect. 10, who says, "Hence, in after ages, Bishops were called Angels of the Churches." See below on ii. 1, and Trench here.

— λυχνίαι] The Seven Candlesticks—or rather Lamps—are Seven Churches. See on vv. 11, 12.

The Seven Epistles to the Seven Churches.

Cft. II. 1. τψ ἀγγέλω]. To the Angel of the Church that is in Ephesus, write. Christ commands St. John to write to the Seven Angels, as the Representatives of their several Churches. Thus Christ Himself recognizes that form of Church government in which one Person presides, as Chief Pastor, over a City and Diocese, such as that of Ephesus, which, as we know from Holy Scripture, particularly from St. Paul's address to the Ephesian Presbyters at Miletus (Acts xx. 17), and from his two Epistles to Timothy, the Bishop of Ephesus, contained within it many Presrs. See above, the Introductory note on 1 Tim. iii., p. 433.

Tertullian (adv. Marcion. iv. 5) designates these Angels as Bishops. " Habemus Joannis alumnas Ecclesias; nam etsi Apocalypsin ejus Marcion respuit, ordo tamen Episcoporum ad originem recensitus in Joannem stabit auctorem." And Aug. ? (see above, p. 163) says here, "Angeli non debent hic intelligi nisi Episcopi, aut Præpositi Ecclesiarum."

In these Epistles of the Apocalypse, Christ often blames the Angels of the Churches (see vv. 5. 14. 20; iii. 2. 17), but He never blames them for being Angels; that is, for occupying the chief place in their respective churches; which He certainly would have done, if such a pre-eminence in His Church had not been in accordance with His Will. See Matt. xx. 26. Luke xxii. 24 - 26.

On the contrary, Christ recognizes the Angels as the Heads and organs of their several Churches; and sends His Epistles to the several Churches, through them. He recognizes the Seven Angels as the official Representatives of the Seven Churches.

Besides,—what is very worthy of remark,—in the original Greek the various epithets (dead, hot, cold, poor, rich, blind, naked, and the like) which Christ uses in these two chapters to characterize the qualities and condition of these several Churches, do not agree in gender with the feminine word Ἐκκλησία, Church; but they agree with the masculine word Αγγελος, Angel. They are all masculine; not one of them is feminine. The address to the Churches is personal to their several Anyels. As Primasius expresses it, "unam facit Angeli Ecclesiæque personam." He identifies him with it. The Bishop is regarded as "Persona Ecclesiæ" by the Chief Shepherd and Bishop of Souls (1 Pet. ii. 5). The Great Head of the Church lays on the Angels the failings of their Churches; and thereby He not only makes a practical recognition of Episcopal Authority, but also teaches a solemn lesson of Episcopal Responsibility.

This Scripture also supplies a sacred precedent, and divine direction, as to the size of Dioceses, and number of Bishops. The territory, in which these Seven Churches were situated, was not much larger in extent than that of some single modern Dioceses; and each great City had its Bishop (see i. 4). The practical application of this sacred precedent to our own Church and Country at this time deserves serious consideration.

 της ἐν Ἐφέσφ ἐκκλησίαs] of the Church in Ephesus. He does not say "to the Angel of Ephesus," but to the Angel of the Church in Ephesus. Observe this title and style, which is employed by Christ in all His addresses to the Seven Angels of the Seven Churches. The Texts in v. 8, and in iii. 14, which seemed to offer exceptions to this rule, have been now restored from the best MSS.

This mode of address ought to regulate the language to be used by Christians toward Chief Pastors, and Cities, like those of Ephesus, Smyrna, &c. in the age of St. John, where the Civil Authorities are not yet Christian.

Accordingly, in the primitive writings of Apostolic men, the Church in a City is described as παροικοῦσα, that is, as sojourning in that City. Thus S. Clement (Ep. i.) says, "The Church of God that dwelleth at Rome" (ἡ παροικοῦσα Ῥώμην), to the Church of God that dwelleth at Corinth (τῆ παροικούση Κόρμθον). Compare the language of St. John's scholar, S. Ignatius, at the commencement of his Epistles, e.g. ad Ephes.: "To the Church that is in Ephesus," (ad Tralles) "to the holy Church that is in Tralles."

The spiritual authority of Bishops flows from Christ above.

The spiritual authority of Bishops flows from Christ alone. They are Chief Pastors of His Church, by virtue of their consecration to the Episcopal Office instituted by Him. But territorial titles are derived from God through the Power to which He has assigned dominion in this World, in which "He determines the Z 2

τους έπτα αστέρας έν τη δεξιά αὐτου, ο περιπατών έν μέσω των έπτα λυχνιών

bounds of habitation" (Acts xvii. 26). And when the Powers of this world become Christian, they exercise authority, in assigning the territorial limits within which the spiritual power, which is of divine origin and institution, is to be exercised. And when this is done, then the Bishop of the Church in the City becomes the Bishop of the City in which the Church is.

Thus, after the Empire became Christian, the Bishop of the Church in Ephesus became the Bishop of Ephesus, and he is so styled by Historians, Civil and Ecclesiastical. See Hooker, VIII. vii. Abp. Bramhall, i. p. 272. Bp. Sanderson, v. p. 157, and other authorities, quoted in Theophilus Anglicanus, pt. i. ch. xii. and pt. ii. ch. iii.

- Τάδε λέγει] these things saith.
In proof of the exact symmetry and marvellous accuracy with which this divine book is written, it may be observed, that

(1) Each of the Seven Epistles is introduced with these is, "To the Church—write; These things saith;" and then a special title of CHRIST is introduced, suitable to the particular condition of the Church which is addressed in that particular Epistle.

(2) Each of the Seven Epistles then proceeds to proclaim the Divine Omniscience of Christ, and His ever-watchful observation of what is done in the Church. "I know thy works."

See here, v. 2. 9. 13. 19; iii. 1. 8. 15.

(3) Each of the Seven Epistles contains the words, " He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the Churches;" marking the importance of the message; and that though it is addressed to one Church, it is designed for all: vv. 7. 11. 17. 29; iii. 6. 13. 22.

(4) The Seven Epistles are divided into two Parts, by the interweaving of two phrases in a remarkable manner;

The phrase concerning him "that overcometh," is placed first in the first three Epistles, and is placed last in the last four Epistles; and the phrase "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the Churches," is placed first in the first three Epistles, and is placed last in the last four.

(5) All the Epistles contain some special warning or promise from Christ; and that warning or promise is appropriately adapted and adjusted to the attribute under which He presents Himself to each Church in succession. It is also accommodated to the special difficulties and dangers which have been overcome, or are to be overcome by that particular Church. Their respective adaptations to the attributes of Christ Himself may be seen as follows in one view.

(1) To Ephesus. Thus saith He that walketh amid the seven golden Lamps (v. 1), Repent, or I will remove thy Lamp (v. 5).

(2) To Smyrna. Thus saith the First and the Last who became dead, and rose again to life (v. 8), Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life (v. 10).

(3) To Pergamus. Thus saith He that hath the sharp twoedged sword (v. 12), Repent, or I will fight against thee with the sword of My mouth (v. 16).

(4) To Thyatira. Thus saith the Son of God, Who hath His eyes like unto a flame of fire, and His feet like fine brass (v. 18), All shall know that I am He that searcheth reins and hearts (v. 23); that which ye have hold fast till I come (v. 25).

(5) To Sardis. Thus saith He that hath the Seven Spirits of God, and the Seven Stars (iii. 1), that is, Who governs the Angels in the Church in heaven, and upon the earth (see i. 4. 20), He that overcometh I will confess his name in the presence of My Father and of His Angels (iii. 5).

(6) To Philadelphia. Thus saith He that hath the key of David, Who openeth and no one shutteth (iii. 7), I have set before thee a door opened which no man can shut (iii. 8).

(7) To Laodicea. Thus saith the Amen, the faithful and true Witness (v. 14); and this Epistle contains a rebuke for lack of faithfulness and zeal in witnessing to the Faith: Because thou art neither cold nor hot I will vomit thee out of My mouth

There is, also, a gradual scale of ascent in the dignity and blessedness of Christ's promises to the several Churches. See below, on v. 7.

Such are some of the evidences of harmonious symmetry and elaborate accuracy in the composition of the Apocalypse.

S. Jerome well says (ad Paulin. Ep. 50), that the Apocalypse "has as many mysteries as words,—in verbis singulis multiplices latent intelligentiæ." And Henry More observes (v. 15), "that there never was a book penned with that artifice as this of the Apocalypse, as if every word were weighed in a balance before it was set down." These remarkable specimens of careful composition in its earlier chapters may have been designed to remind the reader, that every sentence of it is pregnant with meaning, and that in order to understand its Visions, the best method is to examine diligently every word of the Apocalypse.

- δ κρατῶν] He that holdeth the seven stars in His hand, who walketh in the midst of the seven golden Lamps. In the foregoing note it was observed, that each of the Seven Epistles is introduced with a recital of a particular title of Christ which has a special reference to the condition of the Church to which the Epistle is sent, and the warnings which it needs.

These several titles and their respective relations to the several Churches, will be here exhibited synoptically in one tabular view, which may help to bring out these points more clearly, and to keep them before the eye of the reader;

The Seven Epistles.

Ch. II. To Ephesus. These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, who walketh in the midst of the seven golden lamps; 2. I golden lamps; 2. I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil: and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars: are not, and hast found them liars: 3 And hast pa-tience, and hast borne for my name's sake, and hast not fainted. 4 Nevertheless I have this against thee, that thou hast left thy first thou art fallen,

18 And unto the angel of the church in Thyatira write; These things saith the Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a fame of fire, and his feet are like fine brass; 19 I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and I know thy last works to be more than thy first.

20 Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferthee, because thou suffer-est thy wife Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophet-ess; and she teacheth and ess; and she teacheth and seduceth my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols. 21 And I gave her space to repent: and she will not repent of her fornication. 22 Behold, I cast her into a bed, and them that commit duly them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds.

2. τδν κοπόν σου] thy labour—active energy: see 1 Thess. ii. 9, and he adds-καὶ τὴν ὁπομονήν σου] and thy patience,—a lesson to Pastors and Churches. The Angel is praised because he unites active toil (κόπον) with patient endurance; and because he exercises godly discipline in the correction of errors, and yet practises Christian forbearance towards the cring. See v. 4. Cp. 1 Thess. v. 14. Gal. vi. 2, and here, on v. 1.

- kal êmesparas] and thou didst try (cp. 2 Cor. xiii. 5) them who call themselves Apostles and are not. Cp. 2 Cor. xi. 13. St. Paul had predicted the rise of false teachers among the Pastors of Ephesus (Acts xx. 30), and had warned the Ephesian Presbyters against them. And St. John, who warns his hearers to try the Spirits (1 John iv. 1), had condemned an Asiatic Presbyter for personating the Apostle St. Paul, by a writing published in his name. Tertullian, de Bapt. 17. S. Jerome, Scr. Eccl. 7.
The word εἶναι after ἀποστόλουs is not in N, nor in A, C.

3. καὶ ὑπ. ἔ.] κ adds here καὶ θλίψεις πάσας, a remarkable reading.

— καὶ ἐβάστασαs] and thou didst bear them, and hast patience. "Bear ye (βαστάζετε) one another's burdens," says St. Paul (Gal. vi. 2, see note); and "Bear (βάσταζε) all men (writes one Apostolic Bishop and disciple of St. John to another), as the Lord beareth thee, forbear all in love; bear (βάσταζε) the infirmities of all, as a complete athlete; the more the pain, the more the gain; " όπου πλείων κάπες, πλέον κέοδος. S. Ignatius, Epist. to S. Polycarp, chap. i.

— οὐκ ἐκοπίασας] and thou didst not faint. This is the reading of N and B and numerous Cursives; A, C have οὐ κεκοπίακες. The sense is, "Novi laborem tuum; non tamen laboras" (Bengel). Thou toilest, but dost not feel the toil; such is thy patience.

 την ἀγάπην σου τὴν πρώτην ἀφῆκαs] thou hast left thy first love; "the kindness of thy youth, the love of thy espousals" (Jer. ii. 2). The Church is addressed as a Bride (2 Cor. xi. 2. below, iii. 20, 21), and she is reproved for having abated the fervour of her early love to God, and to man in God (see I John iv. 7); that love, which she had shown by patience and longsuffering for His name's sake, toward weak brethren. See S. Augustine, Epist. 41, vol. ii. p. 146.

This expression bespeaks a later date for the Apocalypse than the age of Nero, and confirms the ancient opinion that it was written in the time of Domitian. See Introduction.

5. μετανόησον] repent. From such passages as these the Ancient Fathers contended for the efficacy of Repentance after deadly sin, against the Novatians and others. See S. Cyprian, Epist. 52, and S. Jerome (contra Lucif. tom. iv. p. 304), who says, "The Angel of Ephesus is charged (in the Apocalypse) with having left his first love: the Angel of Pergamus is censured for eating things offered to idols: the Angel of Thyatira is blamed for suffering a Jezebel to teach. And yet Christ calls all these to repentance; which He would not have done, if He would not pardon them when penitent." Cp. note above, on Acts viii. 22. Heb. iv. 5.

 - ταχύ] Not in A, C, but in B.
 - κινήσω τὴν λυχνίαν] I will remove thy candlestick; or rather thy Lamp. See i. 12, and Introduction, p. 153. However, in consequence of the common use of the word candlestick as a translation of the Apocalyptic  $\lambda\nu\chi\nu i\alpha$ , we can hardly refrain from adopting it. The reader will recollect its meaning.

I will remove thy Candlestick. A remarkable expression, probably derived from the removal of the seven-branched Lamp from the Temple of Jerusalem, at the taking of the City by the Roman Conqueror, who carried it in triumphal procession to Rome; where it may still be seen at this day, engraved on the Arch of Titus, amid other trophies of his victory over the

I will remove thy Candlestick. This warning declares an important doctrinal truth. Any particular candlestick may be removed; that is, any one Church may fail, even though it have been founded by Apostles themselves, and be under their rule. But the light of the whole Catholic Church will never be extinct. because Christ, Who is the Light of the World, is ever walking in the midst of the Candlesticks, and has promised to be with His Church always, even to the end of the world (Matt. xxvii. 20), and to send the Holy Ghost to abide with her for ever (John xiv. 16; xvi. 13), and He has said that the "Gates of Hell shall not prevail against His Church" (Matt. xvi. 18); and she is called by St. Paul "the pillar and ground of the truth." See 1 Tim. iii. 15.

Hence also we may infer, that though it cannot be said à priori that any Church will never err, and though it cannot be said that any man, or set of men in the Church, met in a Council or Synod, are infallible and will not err, yet we may say, and must say, that those doctrines which have been received as agreeable to God's Word by the consent of the body of Christ or

Church Universal, - such as are the doctrines contained in the Creeds,-are not erroneous, but true, and are most surely to be believed. See above, on Acts xv. 7.

Further, we may hence conclude, that whatever doctrine may be shown to have been unknown to, or opposed by, the Churches of Christiandom in the first ages of Christianity, is not true, but false; and is not to be imposed upon any one as an article of faith. See above, Gal. i. 8, 9. Jude 3.

6. μισεῖς τὰ ἔργα τῶν Νικολαϊτῶν] thou hatest the works of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate. Cp. ii. 15. The Nicolaitans are described by S. Irenœus (i. 26), the scholar of Polycarp, the disciple of St. John, as deriving their name from Nicolas, one of the seven Deacons (Acts vi. 5), and as living in a dissolute and licentious state, "nullam differentiam esse docentes in mœchando et idolothyton edere;" and by S. Hippolytus, the scholar of Irenæus, in his recently discovered treatise, Refut. hæres. p. 259, od. Miller. Both these authors refer to the Apocalypse. The Nicolaitans are also described by S. Clement (Strom. ii. 20, and iii. 4); by Victorinus here, S. Hieron. (c. Lucif. c. 43), and S. Epiphan. (her. 25), S. Augustin. (her. § 5); Andreas here, and

S. Clement, however, with some others of the Fathers, denies that Nicolas himself was responsible for their tenets and practhat Alcolas himself was responsible for their teners and practices. Cp. The Nicolaitans did indeed teach some of the doctrines of Balaam (ii. 14), but there seems no reason to believe that their name is derived from Νικόλαος, a Greek form of Balaam, Hebrew בְּלְיֵם Bileam = absorbens populum, or victor populi = Νικό-λαος, as is supposed by some, e. g. Cocceius (apud Iltig, p. 92), Hermann, Vitringa, Wetstein, Eichhorn, in Rev. 1. p. 74; Rosenmüller, Rev. ii. 6; Herder, and others. See Düsterdieck, p. 141.

Observe, Christ praises the Angel for hating the works (not the persons of these heretics). True Christian Charity "amat errantes, odit errores." Even the ancient heathen poet could say, " Pacem cum hominibus, bellum cum vitiis habe," (Publ.

7. ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις] to the Churches. This sentence, repeated seven times (see v. 1), proclaims that what the Spirit says here to seven times (see v. 1), proclaims that what the Spirit says here to any one Church, is said by Him to all the Churches of the world. See on v. 1, p. 172.

— τῷ νικῶντι] to him that overcometh. Another phrase repeated seven times: declaring that every Church will be assaulted by enemies, and will be tried by difficulties and dangers, and must therefore watch and pray: and have its eye fixed on Him Who is represented in the Apocalypse, going forth as a conqueror, "over-coming and to overcome" (vi. 2), and Who enables His soldiers to overcome (xii. 11), and will reward all who overcome (ii. 7. 11. 17. 26; iii. 5. 12. 21); see the tabular view of the Epistles, — τῷ νικῶντι δώσω αὐτῷ] To him that overcometh, I will grant to him to eat of the tree of life, which is in the Paradise of my God. The addition of the pronoun αὐτῷ after the dative νικῶντι, gives emphasis to the sentence. Cp. below, v. 17, and note on Matt. iii. 12, and 1 Pet. ii. 24.

The µov is in B and in many Versions and Cursives; not in A, C.

The language and imagery is from Genesis, ii. 9; iii. 22.

Cp. Ezek. xxviii. 13. Christ the Second Adam promises more to his children than was given to the first Adam. By the eating of the one tree ( $\xi \dot{\nu} \lambda o \nu = \gamma \chi$ , Gen. ii. 9), which was in the midst of the garden, Adam lost the benefit and delight of the other tree -the tree of life. But Christ by dying on the tree (Acts v. 30; x. 39. Gal. iii. 13. 1 Pct. ii. 24) has delivered mankind from the penalty entailed upon them by the eating of the one, and has given them the promise of a joyful fruition of the other.

Observe the adaptation of the reward to the work done. If thou resistest the temptation to gratify the carnal appetite, which indulgence leads to death (Rom. viii. 6. 13), and to cat of dainties offered to idols, and so overcomest the Tempter, I will give to thee to eat of the tree of life.

There is a gradual scale of ascent in the dignity and blessedness of the promises made by Christ in these seven Epistles to them that overcome.

They may conveniently be placed here together before the eye of the reader. Cp. above on v. 1, and the tabular view, pp. 172, 173.

(1) The first step in the heavenly ladder is here in the first Epistle; I will give him to eat of the Tree of Life, which is in the Paradise of My God.

Paradise is the abode of the departed Spirits of the righteous (see on Luke xxiii. 43, and on 2 Cor. xii. 4). And the first promise is to the soul of him that overcometh; his soul on its dissolution from the body will be admitted into Paradise by Him Who has the Key of Hades, and will feed on the Tree of Life in the midst of the spiritual Eden or Garden of delight.

(2) The second promise in the second Epistle (v. 11) to him that overcometh, relates to his body as well as his soul. He shall not be hurt by the second death. He shall be safe from that death—that everlasting death—to which the wicked will be condemned at the final Judgment, both in body and soul, in hell. See above, i. 18, and Matt. x. 28. (15) The third Epistle offer that overcometh. I will give to him, says Christ, of the hidden manna, and a while stone, and on the stone a new name, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it (v. 17).

Here is a promise of intimate union with Christ, perfect remission of all guilt of sin, and of admission to the citizenship and joys of the heavenly Jerusalem—the everlasting abode of saints in glory; and to the fountain of the consummation of bliss, both in body and soul, for evermore. See on v. 17.

(4) The fourth Friette offers a remise of still higher honour.

(4) The fourth Epistle offers a promise of still higher honour. He that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give authority over the nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; and I will give him the morning star (v. 28). Here is a pledge of glorious pre-eminence. See the note there, and above on Matt. x. 15. Luke xix. 17. 2 Cor. ix. 6.

(5) The fifth Epistle rises still higher. He that overcometh shall be clothed in white raiment, like the shining raiment of Christ Himself at the Transfiguration (Matt. xvii. 2. Mark ix. 3. Luke ix. 29), and like the bright raiment of the Angels (Mark xvi. 5. John xx. 12. Acts i. 10), and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life; I will confess his name before my Father, and before His Angels: he shall receive honour from Him Whose name is above every name. (Phil. ii. 9.)

(6) The sixth Epistle declares the everlasting state of felicity and glory of him that overcometh. I will make him to be a Pillar in the Temple of my God, and he shall go no more out. His happiness and honour shall be assured for Eternity, it shall stand fast as long as the heavenly Temple endureth in the New Jerusalem (iii. 12). He shall not only bear a new name, but I will write upon him the Name of My God, and the Name of the City of my God, and My own new Name.

(7) The seventh Epistle contains the consummation of all, enthronization in glory with Christ. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My Throne, even as I also overcame and sate down with My Father in His Throne (iii. 21).

This reference to the Jews in the Epistle to Smyrna is illustrated by the ancient Epistle of the Church of Smyrna, describing the Martyrdom of the Bishop of Smyrna, Polycarp, St. John's own disciple, who may have been the Angel to whom this Apocalyptic Epistle is addressed. See the authorities in Jacobson, Patr. Apost. i. p. lvi. According to Bp. Pearson's calculations, S. Polycarp suffered martyrdom A.D. 147, and he declared in his address to the Proconsul that he had been a Christian for 86 years. See there cap. 9, p. 606, and the note of Abp. Ussher; and Ribera, Alcasar, Corn. à Lapide, and Hengstenberg here.

The ancient Smyrnæan Epistle just noticed relates, that the Jews were specially eager in hastening the death of Polycarp, by collecting wood for his martyrdom by fire (Martyr. Polyc. § 13, p. 617, ed. Jacobson), and even after he had been burnt, the Jews tried to hinder the Christians from gathering up his remains for burial (Ibid. c. 17, 18, pp. 630, 631).

On the phrase "who call themselves Jews, but are not Jews, but a synagogue of Satan," cp. below, iii. 7. 9. 12; and Andreas here, who says well that a Jew, according to the etymology of the name (from הַוֹה, Jaudavit), is properly one who confesses and praises the true God. (Cp. Gen. xxix. 35.) True Jews are they who believe in Christ; and, therefore, they who do not confess Him, are not worthy to be called Jews. Here is evidence of the comparative lateness of the composition of the Apocalypse. The true Jews were then the Christians.

 $-\mu$ έλλει βαλεῖν δ Διάβολος ἐξ ὑμῶν εἰς φυλακήν] the Devil is about to cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried. Thus Christ declares that the instigator of the persecutions against His Church is the Devil, the false accuser. Compare above on Part  $\pi$  and help on  $\pi$  is the Add it is observed in the triangle of the persecution of the persecutions against His Church is the Devil, the false accuser. 1 Pet. v. 8, and below on vi. 3, 4. And it is observable that the aforesaid Epistle of the Smyrnæan Church, describing the martrydom of their Bishop, S. Polycarp, appears to have treasured up this language, addressed to itself by Christ. It thus speaks (c. 3); "The Devil devised many things against them (the Martyrs), but, thanks be to God, did not prevail over them all:" a sentence which shows that he did prevail over some, and illustrates the language of the Acceleration. trates the language of the Apocalypse here, and declares the fortitude of those who overcame him.

— θλῖψν ἡμερῶν δέκα] a persecution of ten days. B has ἡμέραs. Some ancient Expositors suppose that the phrase ten days is used here as a symbolical formula denoting "a few days," a "little while." See Arethas here; and this mode of the context of the supposition of the days. speech seems to be authorized by Hebrew use, see Gen. xxiv. 55. Num. xi. 19. Dan. i. 12. 14, and Wetstein, note, p. 755, who quotes Terent. Heautont. v. 1. 36, "decem dierum vix mihi est

Perhaps, however, the prediction may be interpreted literally. In the Asiatic Cities, such as Smyrna, Persecutions often broke out at particular seasons, especially at the celebration of the Heathen Games. Such was the persecution at Smyrna, in which Polycarp suffered, which was prolonged beyond the days appointed for the games; and perhaps it raged for ten days. See Martyr.

He says  $\gamma$ ivov, become, because He is speaking of something future; and new measures of faith will be requisite to encounter the coming trial. "Polycarp by his patience," says the Epistle of the Church of Smyrna, c. 19, p. 632, "overcame the unrighteous ruler, and received the crown of Immortality."

Immortality.

These and other particulars in that Epistle (see last note but one) show that the Apocalypse was known to the Church of Smyrna, and that the language addressed to it by Christ comforted it in persecution; and if we had other similar letters from the other seven Churches of Asia, we should probably see similar evidence in them. Evidence which is extant in another case may be seen below, iii. 3.

11. τοῦ θανάτου τοῦ δευτέρου] the second death, everlasting misery both of body and soul in hell (Victorinus). See above on i. 18. This term, the second death, was used by Hebrew writers, describing the woe of the wicked in the world to come. See the Rabbinical authorities cited by Wetstein, p. 756, and below vs. 6. below, xx. 6.

The promise here is, that though their bodies may be killed by violence, yet they will not be hurt by that death which is really death (Matt. x. 28); but by being faithful unto death, they will

by death gain a crown of life.

12. ἐν Περγάμφ] at Pergamum. See i. 11.
13. ποῦ κατοικεῖς, ὅπον ὁ θρόνος τοῦ Σατανᾶ] where thou dwellest, namely, where the throne of Satan is. On the construction, see Winer, § 65, p. 539. Thus Christ declares Idolatry to be a really of Satan is. to be a work of Satan. Pergamum was noted for its idol-worship (Andreas), particularly for the worship of Æsculapius, whose emblem the serpent was, and who is so represented on the coins of Pergamum, and is called "Pergameus Deus." Martial, ix. 17. Cp. Tacit. Ann. iii. 63. See Wetstein, p. 756. Pergamum had become the property of Rome by bequest from its childless king Attalus.

Antipas was martyred at Pergamum (see Tertull. Scorpiace, cap. 12) in the persecution under Domitian, according to the Acts which describe his death; which, in part at least, are of a later date, but probably have an historical foundation. See Andreas here, and Tillemont, ii. 244. His day in the Greek and Roman Martyrologies is April 11.

Eusebius (iv. 15), after describing the martyrdom of S. Polycarp at Smyrna, mentions the martyrdom of Carpus, Papylus, and Agathonice, at Pergamum.

Antipas (= Antipater, see above, Introd. to St. Luke, p. 157) is called the faithful Martyr (μάρτυς) by Christ, Who is "the faithful Martyr" (i. 5; iii. 14). And Stephen is called God's Martyr by St. Paul (Acts xxii. 20); thus the word μάρτυς (witness) has been consecrated by God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, to describe the witness of those who remain faithful unto death, and seal their testimony with their blood.

Perhaps the true reading is δ μισῶ δμοίως; οτ όμοίως, δ μισῶ, likewise, which I hate; and one of the readings, ὁμοίωs, may have been absorbed into the other, ὁ μισῶ, or vice versa, by reason of the similarity of the words.

17.  $\tau \hat{\varphi} \nu \iota \kappa \hat{\omega} \nu \tau \iota \kappa \tau \lambda \lambda$ ] to him that overcometh, I will give to him of the manna that is hidden—pure, holy, heavenly food, contrasted with the polluted meats offered to idols. Christ is the manna on which His people, the true Israel, feed: He "is the living Bread that came down from heaven; and they who eat of this bread shall never die." (John vi. 49-58.) He was therefore typified by the manna, as He Himself declared in His discourse at Capernaum, where He taught the necessity of communion with Himself, as the source of life to the world. (See on John vi., and at end of the chapter, and 1 Cor. x. 3.) The manna which is here promised is hidden, because the life of the true Israelites is "hid with Christ in God." (Col. iii. 3.) They are dead to the world, and buried with Him in Baptism (Rom. vi. 4. Col. ii. 12); and are raised together with Him, and have their conversation or citizenship in heaven (Phil. iii. 20); and are unknown to the world (2 Cor. vi. 9); and are strangers and pilgrims upon earth (1 Pet. ii. 11); but they ever dwell in Christ, and He in them, and live in the light of His countenance; and "the world knoweth them not, because it knew Him not." (1 John iii. 1.) And as the Manna was enshrined in the Holy of Holies, and hidden from the public view (Exod. xvi. 33, 34. Heb. ix. 4), so He is hid from those who believe not, because the God of this world has blinded their eyes. (2 Cor. iv. 3, 4.) And even to the faithful the plentitude of their joy is not yet revealed; "Eye hath not seen it" (1 Cor. ii. 9), but it will be manifested in the Revelation of Christ, 1 John iii. 2.

— καὶ δώσω αὐτῷ ψῆφον λευκήν] and I will give to him a white stone. In the Apocalypse white (λευκός, lucidus, candidus) is the colour appropriated to Christ (see below, vi. 1, 2). This consideration, together with the uses made of ψηφοι, calculi, by the ancients, may serve to explain the meaning here. cient Courts of Justice, the acquittal of the criminal was declared by a majority of white stones, cast into the judicial urn. Met. xv. 41, "Mos erat antiquus, niveis atrisque lapillis, His damnare reos, illis absolvere culpá." Christ, the Redeemer of the World, and Judge of Quick and Dead, will pronounce the acquittal of him that overcometh, at the Great Day of Assize. So Victorinus, A Lapide, Vitringa, Wolf, and others.

This white stone is not only a stone of acquittal, but it is a tessera of citizenship, and a passport of admission to the spiritual banquet of the life eternal in the heavenly Jerusalem. See next note. It is observable also that among the ancients joyful days were marked with white stones. Pers. Sat. ii. 1, "Hunc, Macrine, diem numera meliore lapillo." Plin. Ep. vi. 11. 3, "O diem notandum candidissimo calculo!"

Some Expositors have excepted against the admission of these allusions, as foreign to the mind of the Apocalypse. But the Holy Spirit does not disdain such references as these. On the contrary, He loves to Christianize all things. See I Cor. ix. 24. 27. Phil. iii. 14. Heb. xii. 10, and above, v. 10, and James

- καὶ ἐπὶ τὴν ψῆφον κ.τ.λ.] and upon the stone (observe the accusative case) a new name written, which no man knoweth save he that receiveth it.

Here is an allusion to other ancient customs, viz., to the practice of giving tokens (σύμβολα, tesseræ), by which persons bound by ties of mutual hospitality might recognize one another and enjoy offices of friendship (see the authorities in Dr. Smith's Dict. in vv. "Hospitium" and "Tessera"), and also to the usage of giving and receiving tokens of admission to partake in public largesses and banquets. Xiphilin. Epitome Dion. p. 228. Hermann, G. K. F. Alterth. de Griechen, § 50, and so Arethas, Gro-tius, Hammond, Heinrichs.

The name which Christ will give is a new name, promised by ancient prophecy (Isa. lxii. 2; lxv. 15), but revealed under the Gospel by Him Who "maketh all things new" (xxi. 5), and admits to the New Jerusalem (iii. 12), and enables to sing the new song (see v. 9); and it is a name which Christ says that no one knows except the receiver, perhaps with an allusion to the practice above noticed, by which it was provided that no one could use the "tessera hospitalitatis," except the party to whom it belonged, and because no one can enter Christ's presence by means of the merits of others; every one must give an account of himself to God, and be rewarded according to his own works (Rom. xiv. 12); and because no one can feel the joy of remission of sins, except he who "knows the plague of his own heart" (1 Kings viii. 38), and whose sins are not only remitted, but covered (James v. 20; cp. Ps. xxxii. 1; lxxxv. 2); and no one can feel the felicity of communion with Christ and admission to His table in heaven, except the saints who are admitted to enjoy those privileges, which to evil men would have no relish, because they have not the spiritual palate by which they are to be tasted. Compare what is said of Christ's Name, xix. 12.

Some Expositors have supposed that in the white stone and the new name written upon it, there is a reference to the incommunicable Name of God, which they say was written on the Urim contained within the breastplate of the High Priest. (Exod. xxxix. 9.) But there is no evidence to show that any name was written on the Urim (cp. Michaelis in Jahn, Archæol. § 369). If there is any reference to the pectoral of the High Priest, it would seem more probable that the allusion is to the gems upon that pectoral, on which the names of the twelve tribes were written; and then the new name would be the name of the true

Israel, the citizen of the new Jerusalem. See iii. 12.

20. άλλα έχω κατά σοῦ ὅτι ἀφεῖς κ.τ.λ.] But I have this against thee, that thou sufferest thy wife Jezebel, who calleth herself a prophetess, and both teacheth and perverteth My servants to commit fornication, and to eat things offered to Idols.

As to the reading of this text here, apeis is in A, B, C, and is a form authorized by the LXX, Exod. xxxii. 32. See Winer, G. G. p. 75. And την γυναϊκά σου, thy wife (instead of Elz., την γυναϊκα, the woman), is found in A, B (not in N), and many Cursives, and in the Syriac Version, and in Andreas and Arethas, Cuprian and Primasius, and is received by Scholz, Lach., and Tischendorf.

The reading  $\hat{\eta}$ , who, for  $\hat{\eta}$ , the article, is approved by Winer, p. 473, but \u00e4 is authorized by similar examples of abrupt constructions in i. 5; iii. 12; xiv. 12.

The heresy here reprehended is that of those who said that it was not necessary to suffer martyrdom for Christ; and that, provided men had knowledge (γνωσιν), there was no sin in eating things offered to idols, and in complying with all the requirements of the Idolatrous Persecutors of the Church. Cp. Iren. i. 26. 3, and above, Introduction to the Second Epistle of St. Peter, pp. 79, 80, and 2 Pet. ii. 2.

But what is the meaning of thy wife Jezebel?

She is described as calling herself "a prophetess," and as having children, i. e. disciples. See the use of this word τεκνία in 2 John i. 4. 13. 3 John 4.

Doubtless a female false Teacher ("hæretica fæmina," says Tertullian, de Pudicit. c. 18) is here condemned, such as in the next age were Priscilla and Maximilla, the prophetesses of Montanus (Euseb. v. 14. 16. 18), and it is observable that Thyatira was infested by the ravages of Montanism (Epiphan. hær. 51; cp. Tillemont, ii. pp. 195—203). It has been remarked by S. Jerome (ad Ctesiphontem), as a characteristic of heresies, that their promoters have usually associated women with thousalway in promoters have usually associated women. with themselves in propagating them. Simon Magus had his Helena; Nicolas and Marcion had their female votaries. Apelles had his Philumena. Montanus, Arius, Donatus, were aided by women in their heretical and sectarian designs. See note above, on 2 Tim. iii. 6. The act of teaching publicly in the Church had been forbidden to women by St. Paul writing to the Bishop of Ephesus (1 Tim. ii. 12).

We are not able to ascertain whether this false prophetess was actually the wife of the Chief Pastor of Thyatira. Jezebel is doubtless a symbolical one, like Sodom and Egypt (xi. 8), and Babylon, as used in this book; and is adopted to characterize the wickedness of this false prophetess, making herself like to the Sidonian Queen, who perverted the Israelites to Idolatry, and destroyed the true prophets of the Lord (1 Kings xvi. 31. 2 Kings ix. 7), and who, as almost all idolaters did, joined harlotry with false worship (1 Kings xviii. 19; xxi. 25).

This false prophetess, thus symbolically designated, may have been the wife of the Bishop. S. Polycarp, the disciple of St. John, writing to the Philippians, says that he is much grieved for the lapse of a certain Priest, called Valens, and of his wife, to whom (he says) may God give true repentance! Polycarp, ad Phil. c. ii.

If this false prophetess of Thyatira was the wife of the Angel of the Church, then by conniving at the wickedness of a wife like Jezebel, he made himself like unto Ahab, whom Jezebel his wife stirred up (1 Kings xxi. 25); and, if this was the case, here is a warning to Rulers of the Church, not to permit considerations of private affection to interfere with the discharge of public duty. "If the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, which is as thine own soul, entice thee, thou shalt not consent unto him, neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him" (Deut. xiii. 6-8).

But perhaps the word wife is used figuratively here; as the word children is, and as the words "who commit fornication with her" are. And then the word wife would intimate that the Angel of Thyatira, by his weak connivance, and even overweening fondness for this false Prophetess, treated her as if she were endeared to him as his own partner. He, the Ruler of the Church of Thyatira, who was bound to love, and cherish, and protect that Church espoused to himself in a holy union in Christ, he, by his blind partiality and indulgence, made this false teacher to be as his own consort in spiritual wedlock, and he made himself a partner in her sins (1 Tim. v. 22).

This typical use of names, Jezebel and Balaam (v. 14), teaches us to read aright the history of the Old Testament, as figurative of the New. The former is reproduced and amplified in the latter.

21. οὐ θέλει μετανοήσαι] she is not willing to repent,—a strong testimony to the freedom of the human will. Cp. Matt. xxiii. 37. Luke xiii. 34, οὐκ ἡθελήσατε. Elz. has οὐ μετενόησεν; but the important reading of the text rests on preponderating authority, and is received by Bengel, Griesb., Matth., Lach., Tisch.

Observe the preposition & after μετανοείν here, and in v. 22; ix. 20, 21, and xvi. 11, showing a complete change of mind, displaying itself in turning from previous acts, and out of a former mode of life, to a new and different practice and habit of existence.

This Epistle to the Church of Thyatira, and the other six Epistles, displaying different forms of errors prevalent in Churches even in the Apostolic age, are fraught with instruction concerning the necessity of Church-Communion. Vol. II.—PART IV.

At Thyatira the Bishop of the Church allowed a Jezebel to teach; he is reproved by Christ for doing so; but the Communion over which he presides is still called a Church by Christ Himself. Its Lamp is not yet removed; and the Angel of the Church is still a Star in Christ's right hand (i. 19). The same remark may be applied to the other Apocalyptic Churches of Asia, Not one of them is represented as free from errors and blemishes in doctrine and discipline. But none of their members are therefore exhorted by Christ to quit their communion.

No man therefore is justified in leaving the communion of a Church which dispenses the Word and Sacraments of Christ by a lawfully appointed and constituted Ministry. There is no just plea for schism, in the allegation that errors in doctrine and discipline prevail in it. No Church on earth is perfect. Grave errors existed and were observed by Christ in these Apocalyptic Churches; but none of their members are counselled by Him to secede from them. The Churches themselves are exhorted to that remain and are ready to die (iii. 2), or Christ will remove their Lamps (ii. 5). Their members are indeed bound to avoid the leaven of their false doctrine (Matt. xvi. 6. 11), but they are also bound to abide and communicate with those Churches in whatsoever truths of Christ those Churches still continue to hold. and in all His graces that they still continue to minister.

But, if a Church not only tolerates errors in faith and practice, but proceeds to enforce errors as terms of communion with herself; if she requires every one to drink of her cup (xvii. 4); if she makes communion in error to be essential to communion with herself, as the Church of Rome now does; and if she anathematizes and excommunicates those who do not receive those errors as articles of Faith, and as necessary to salvation; then a Schism must ensue, and the sin of the Schism lies at her door. See above, the notes on John ix. 34, and on 1 Cor. i. 2, and vol. i. of the Editor's Occasional Sermons on this text.

and vol. 1. of the Editor's Occasional Sermons on this text.

22. iδού βάλλω αὐτὴν εἰς κλίνην] Behold, I cast her into a bed, i. e. a "bed of sickness and affliction," as contrasted with the bed of sinful indulgence (Prov. vii. 16, 17) and spiritual harlotry. Andreas, pp. 213, 214. Bp. Andrewes, i. p. 315. The verb βάλλω, as the Latin jacto, is specially used in this sense. See Matt. viii. 6. 14; ix. 2, ἐπὶ κλίνης βεβλημένον.

And the Catena (Cramer, p. 214) rightly explains the word by  $\tau \dot{\eta} \nu \ \dot{\epsilon} \pi i \nu \sigma \sigma \nu$ , the bed of disease. Our Lord here first threatens the spiritual harlot and her paramours with sickness, and then with death, v. 23.

τούς μοιχεύοντας μετ' αὐτῆς] those who commit adultery with her; those, that is, who are faithless to Me, and are seduced by her. On spiritual faithlessness, described in the Apocalypse as fornication and adultery, see below, xvii. 1-3. Compare the contrast in 2 Cor. xi. 2.

The literal Jezebel was a type of these false Teachers in both respects; see above, v. 20.

The diseases consequent on literal harlotry are represented as a warning of the consequences resulting from spiritual fornication. In like manner, fire, the punishment of whoredom (Levit. xxi. 9), is, in the Apocalypse, the penalty of the harlotries of the corrupt Church (xviii. 8).

23. καὶ γνώσονται] and all the Churches shall know that I am He Who searcheth reins and hearts: that is, Who seeth what is most secret. There is no article in the original, and it is not to be inserted in the translation; the sense is, "I search all reins and hearts."

Here is a reference to the pretended  $\gamma\nu\bar{\omega}\sigma is$  of these false Teachers; cp. on 1 John ii. 3. They professed to dive into secret mysteries (see v. 24), and thus they seduced Christ's servants. But the time was coming, when, through their punishment, all should know that it is Christ Who reads the secrets of Here is another assertion of His Divinity. They promised to their votaries knowledge (γνῶσις; cp. 1 Tim. vi. 20. 2 Pct. i. 2. 5. 1 John ii. 3. Irenœus, i. 1), and professed to initiate them in the depths of its profoundest mysteries, which they said were not to be fathomed by vulgar minds, or even by Apostles themselves (see on 2 Pct. ii. 2). Such language was used by the Gnostics, who called their mysteries, "the depths of God." See Irenœus (ii. 22. 3), and Tertullian (adv. Valentin., c. 1), "Altum est, aiunt."

Our Lord here sternly rebukes them, and condemns their

Our Lord here sternly rebukes them, and condemns their so-called "depths of God" as "depths of Satan;" and He declares that ignorance of those depths is far more blessed than that vaunted knowledge which they promised to their hearers. The words  $\delta s \lambda \dot{\epsilon} \gamma o \nu \sigma v \nu$ , "as they say," refer to  $\tau \dot{\alpha} \beta a \theta \dot{\epsilon} \alpha$ , "the depths,"—a term often in the mouths of these false teachers. See A Lapide, Grotius, Wetst., Bengel, Herder, De Wette.

Or if, with other Expositors, the words "of Satan" are to be included in the quotation (as seems most in accordance with the structure of the sentence), then we must refer them to the Satanic mysteries into which these Gnostics pretended to initiate their hearers; some of them with impious audacity and fiendlike recklessness did not scruple to say that they could fathom the fearful depths of the Lake of fire; and some of them taught that it was even a duty for the true Gnostic to dive into all the gulphs of sensuality, and that he could not be hurt thereby, any more than gold by mud (see above on 2 Pet. ii. 2), and some of them did not hesitate to adore the Evil One himself, such as the Ophites, or Serpent-Worshippers (Philastr., Hær. 1), and Cainites (Ibid.). See Tillemont, ii. pp. 21. 121—132. Illig, p. 120. Ochler, p. 24; and note above, on 1 John iii. 12; and on Jude

- οι βάλλω εφ' ύμας άλλο βάρος] I cast not upon you any other burden (cp. Acts xv. 28), but what ye have, that hold ye fast, until I am come. Here is a protest from Christ against all additions to the Faith "once delivered to the Saints." See above, Jude 3, and on Gal. i. 8, 9.

The word ήξω signifies " I shall be come " (adero). It not only bespeaks the Coming of Christ, but His Presence, to execute vengeance. The  $a\nu$  bespeaks the uncertainty of the time when that Coming will be.

Observe the contrast between βάλλω here and in v. 22. I cast her into a bed of sorrow and death, but I do not cast any other burden upon you. There is judgment on the one side, and mercy on the other.

7. δ άληθινός the true, as opposed to counterfeits. 1 John

— δ ἔχων τὴν κλεῖν τοῦ Δανίδ] He that hath the key of David. The Church of Philadelphia was infested by Judaizing teachers (see v. 9), who claimed to themselves the promises made by God to the Patriarchs and to Jerusalem. Christ here con-demns them, and consoles the Church by declaring that He Him-self has the key of David, as the Hebrew Prophets predicted of the Messiah, typified by Eliakim (Isa. xxii. 20-22, quoted here by Christ), and that He and He alone can open the door of the by Christ), and that He and He and each open the above of the true Sion, and admit to David's house. He is David's Lord as well as David's Son (Ps. cx. Matt. xxii, 44). He is the Root as well as the Offspring of David (see below, xxii, 16). He, by the administration of the Holy Sacrament of Baptism, and by the preaching of His Holy Word, unlocks the door of His Church, and admits into His Household, which is the depository of all saving grace (see above, on Matt. xvi. 19). He in Whom all treasures of knowledge and wisdom are hidden (Col. ii. 3), opens those treasures to His people; He Who has the keys of the Gate of the Heavenly Jerusalem (v. 12), will admit His faithful servants to the privileges of its glorious citizenship (cp. Gal. iv. 26. Heb. xii. 22; below, xxi. 2. 10). Cp. above, Introduction, pp. 149, 150.

But the literal Jews, who boast of that name, are not really Jews (see on ii. 9), they are not true confessors of God; they are not "true Israelites," are not "the Israel of God" (Gal. vi. 16), are not children of "faithful Abraham" (see Rom. ii. 28, 29; ix. 6, 7); they are not subjects of David's Kingdom and members of his beyended, they are not subjects of David's Kingdom and members of his household; they are not children of Sion; they are indeed a Synagogue—but it is a synagogue of Satan (cp. ii. 9). They who call themselves children of the kingdom, but do not own Christ as their King, will be thrust out of the Kingdom into outer darkness, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth

(Matt. viii. 12; xxii. 13. Luke xiii. 28). 8. ίδου δέδωκα ἐνώπιον σου θύραν ἀνεωγμένην] behold, I have given before thee a door opened, which no one is able to shul. Observe, the door is said to be given, given by Christ, who holds the Key, v. 7; and it is an opened door that is given by Him; cp. on v. 20. The perfect tense indicates that the door has been opened,

The Judaizing false Teachers affirmed that they themselves had the key of knowledge (Luke xi. 52), and that unless men complied with their requirements they were excluded from God's household and from participation in the privileges of His covenant. This exclusive spirit had been censured by St. Paul, describing their arbitrary usurpations over men's consciences, in his Epistle to the Galatians—their will is "to exclude you" (Gal. iv. 17). And now Christ, who has the key of David, affirms that He has opened the door to the Gentile Christians of Philadelphia, and that no one can shut it against them. Christ is the Door (John x. 7.9); and unless these Judaizing Teachers repent and consent to enter by this one Door, they, who would exclude others, will be shut out from the kingdom of heaven. See pre-

St. John's scholar, S. Ignatius, in his Epistle to the Church of Philadelphia, supplies the best commentary on these words of Christ to the same Church. "If any one preaches Judaism, do not ye hearken to him. It is better to receive Christianity from one who is circumcised, than to receive Judaism from one who is uncircumcised. Unless they preach Jesus Christ, they are mere pillars and tombs of the dead, on which the names of men are inscribed" (Ignat. ad Phil. c. 6).

Compare this with what our Lord says here, He that overcometh, I will make him a pillar in the Temple of my God, and will write upon him the name of My God, and the name of the city of My God, the new Jerusalem, which cometh down from heaven, and My new Name.

Priests (i. e. of the Old Law; see Bp. Pearson there, p. 419) were good; but better is He Who is the High Priest, Who is entrusted with the true Holy of Holies, Who alone has the charge of the hidden things of God."

Compare our Lord's words here concerning Himself,—Thus saith the Holy One and the true, Who hath the key of David:

S. Ignatius then proceeds; "Christ alone is the Door to the Father, the Door through which Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and the Prophets, and the Apostles, and the Church, enter in; all these are thus joined together into unity with God. The holy Prophets preached Christ (cp. there, cap. 5), and the Gospel is the Consummation of Incorruption."

These allusions indicate that the language of the Apocalypse was familiar to S. Ignatius; and they are precisely such as might have been expected from one who was a scholar of St. John, and a Bishop of the Asiatic Church. They also confirm the evidence of the genuineness of the Ignatian Epistles themselves. Cp. the remarks of Mr. J. C. Knight on the Apocalypse, Lond. 1842, — ἐτήρησας—οὐκ ἡρνήσω] thou didst keep—and not deny (aorists) at some special time of trial.

9. Tra ήξωσι] that they may come and bow down before thee; quoted from Isa. xlix. 23; lx. 14.

- ηγάπησά σε] I loved thee: see i. 5. Our Lord uses the word φιλώ below, in v. 19: cp. note there, and above, on John xxi. 15, 16.

10. τους κατοικούντας έπι της γης] those who dwell on the earth; a phrase frequently used in the Apocalypse to characterize earth! a pinise requestly used in the hydrayles of chattering earthly men, who "set their affections on things on the earth, and not on things above." See on i. 7, and vi. 10. 15; xi. 10; xii. 12; xiii. 8. 14; xiv. 6; xvii. 2. 8: and cp. note above, on Luke xxi. 35.

11. Γνα μηδείς] that no one take thy crown: a remarkable text, which some have interpreted as if there were a certain number of crowns, which, if some forfeited, others would receive.

See Augustine, de correptione, c. 39.

It rather shows-what is evident from other Scriptures-that God willeth "all men to be saved." God has a crown for every one; and no man can lose his own crown, but by his own fault. See above, on 1 Tim. ii. 4; and 1 Cor. viii. 11; and Heb. ii. 9; and 2 Pet. ii. 1; and Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans, pp. 194—198.

It is also cited by the Fathers as showing that men may fall from grace. See above, iii. 5. Cyprian, de Unit. Eccles. p. 478.

12. ποιήσω αὐτὸν στῦλον] I will make him to be a pillar in the temple of my God. The Lamp in the Temple at Jerusalem was removed, and the Lamp of any Church on earth may be removed (see ii. 5), but he who overcometh shall be like a Pillar fixed in the Temple of God in the heavenly Jerusalem.

The reference here is probably to the two Pillars in the Temple of Solomon (2 Chron. iii. 17. 1 Kings vii. 21), which were called Jachin (pg., he will establish), and Boaz (pg., in him is strength); both names signifying permanence; both there-wrote, and of Greece, Pillars of temples were often sculptured in human shape, such as the Caryatides or Canephoræ now standing in the Erectheum at Athens, and the Atlantes, Telamones, and Persæ, of which some specimens are still visible at Pompeii, and are represented in the paintings on the Baths of Titus at Rome.

Observe the adaptation of the promise and reward to the work done. Hold fast what thou hast, in the Church on earth; and thou shalt be a pillar set fast in the Temple of God.

The city of Philadelphia was very subject to Earthquakes. (Strabo, p. 868 and p. 936. Cp. Tacit. Ann. ii. 47. See Wetstein here.) A promise of stability and permanence has therefore a special significance here. - ἐπ' αὐτόν] upon him; upon his forehead, ix. 4; xxii. 4.

 - καινῆς 'Ιερουσαλήμ] of the New Jerusalem. The ol lileral, Jerusalem had been laid waste by the armies of Rome, and the literal Israel had been scattered abroad throughout the world. But Christ comforts all true Israelites with the assurance that there is now every where, in all parts of the earth, and in all ages of the world, another Jerusalem, a new Jerusalem, the Christian Sion, in which the true Israelites, wherever they may be dispersed, may find a home. See Introduction to 1 Peter,

p. 37, and above, p. 149.

This Jerusalem is also the new Jerusalem in another sense, because it is the royal city of Him Who "makes all things new" (xxi. 3), and in Whom, as the Second Adam, the new regenerate race of mankind has its Father: for whosoever is in Christ, is "a new creature; old things passed away, all things have become new" (2 Cor. v. 17. Cp. 1 John ii. 8. 2 Pet. iii. 13).

In his Gospel St. John never uses the form 'Ιερουσαλημ, but always Ίεροσόλυμα. In the Apocalypse he never uses the form Ίεροσόλυμα, but Ἱερουσαλήμ.

He thus seems to mark the difference between the old and new Jerusalem, even by the sound of the name itself; and he appropriates the Hebrew form to the new or Christian Sion, in order to remind both Christians and Jews that the faithful members of Christ the Son of David throughout the world, without respect to race, are now become the only real Jews, the true Israel

- ή καταβαίνουσα] On the grammatical anomaly (such as frequently occurs in the Apocalypse), see ii. 20, and below, v. 11.

14. δ 'Αμήν] The Amen. See Bp. Andrewes, v. 471.

— δ μάρτυς] the true and faithful Witness, who witnessed before Pontius Pilate a good confession (1 Tim. vi. 13). This is He that came by Water and Blood, and there are three that bear Witness on earth, the Spirit, the Water, and the Blood. 1 John v. 8.

- ή ἀρχὴ τῆς κτίσεως] the Beginning of the Creation. Not as the Arians erroneously taught, the first of God's creatures, but the uncreated Beginning, the initial Cause, and energizing Agent of Creation. See here Andreas, Arethas, Vitringa, Hengstenberg, and above, on Col. i. 15; and cp. above, i. 8, and xxii. 13. Christ calls Himself the beginning of the Creation of God, in this Epistle, especially to the Laodiceans, in order that they may not rely on themselves, or look for any good thing except from Him. He therefore counsels them to buy of Him (v. 18). And there may be some reference to the false teaching of those at Laodicea

15. ὄφελον] would that thou wert cold or hot. On this use of ὄφελον, see 1 Cor. iv. 8. 2 Cor. xi. 1, and Gal. v. 12. It does not here express an absolute wish, but a relative one. Rather than that thou wert lukewarm, I would that thou wert either cold or hot. Heathen ignorance is better than Christian indifference (Luke xii. 43. Cp. xxiii. 34. 1 Tim. i. 13). There is more hope of acting on those who have no knowledge of the Gospel, than on those who have a little knowledge, and are self-satisfied in it. This is more fully explained by what follows: "Thou sayest, I am rich, and have need of nothing, and knowest not that thou art the wretched one." Besides, the lukewarm make some profession of Christianity, which the cold do not; and thus the lukewarm do more harm to others. Men are not so liable to be led astray by open unbelievers as by indifferent Christians. They are on their guard against the former, who avow themselves open enemies; but they are liable to be carried away by the latter, who are false friends.

17. δ ταλαίπωρος] the wretched one. Observe the article. He who is spiritually poor, and yet imagines himself to be rich, is specially the wretched one: because, not knowing his own need, he does not resort to Him Who alone can give him the true

A strong testimony from Christ against the delusive doctrine of those who allege that personal assurance is the essence of Faith. Contrast the case of the Centurion (Luke vii. 6), and of the Publican (xviii. 14), whom Christ Himself commends.

18. ἀγοράσαι] to buy. A word not necessarily implying that the Laodiceans have any equivalent of personal merit to offer as a price for divine grace (cp. Isa, Iv. 1), but that spiritual blessings are to be procured from Christ alone, and not, as they vainly and presumptuously imagined, from themselves. We are to buy by an humble acknowledgment of our own nothingness and of Christ's fulness. They are best qualified to buy who know that they have no purchase-money but the merits of Christ, and who know and feel how precious those merits are.

At the same time the word buy implies an effort and sacrifice on the part of those who come to Christ, and this admonition is therefore understood by the Fathers to imply the duty of works of piety and charity. See S. Cyprian, de Opere et Eleemosynis, κολλούριον] eyesalve. A word probably derived from κολλύρα, a little round cake; in which form the eyesalve was made. See Welstein. Hence the Latin "collyrium," Horat. 1 Ep. i. 29, "collyria lippus inungi." See the note of Doering there; and cp. Juvenal, vi. 577.

19.  $\phi_l\lambda\hat{\omega}$ ] I dearly love. See above, v. 9. A tenderer word than  $\hat{\alpha}\gamma\alpha\pi\hat{\omega}$ , and making this sentence still more emphatic than τη απώ, and making this sentence still more emphatic than  $\dot{\alpha}\gamma\alpha\pi\tilde{\omega}$  would do. Some of those whom the world regards as most wretched, are God's darlings. And some of the World's darlings are "the wretched ones" in His sight.

20. ἰδοὺ ἔστηκα ἐπὶ τ. θύραν] Behold, I stand at the door and am knocking. In all such sentences as that which St. John's Revelation hath, "I stand at the door and knock," the Pelagians' manner of construction was, that to knock is the free external offer of God's grace; to open is the work of natural will, by itself accepting grace, and so procuring or deserving whatsoever followeth. But the Catholic exposition of that, and μου, καὶ ἀνοίξη τὴν θύραν, καὶ εἰσελεύσομαι πρὸς αὐτὸν, καὶ δειπνήσω μετ' αὐτοῦ. 22 ρ Ο ἔχων οὖς ἀκουσάτω τί τὸ Πνεῦμα λέγει ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις.

all such sentences was, that to stand and knock is indeed a work of outward grace, but to open cometh not from man's will without the inward illumination of grace, whereupon afterwards ensueth continual augmentation thereof; not because the first concurrence of the will itself with grace, much less without, doth deserve additions after following; but because it is the nature of God's most bountiful disposition to build forward where His foundation is once laid. The only thing that Catholic Fathers did blame, was the error of them who ascribed any laudable motion, or virtuous desire tending towards heavenly things, to the naked liberty of man's will, the grace of God being severed from it. Hooker, book v. Appendix i. vol. ii. p. 687.

— δειπνήσω μετ' αὐτοῦ] I will sup with him. See John xiv.
23. These promises express the love of Christ for His Spouse the Church. Compare the words of the Bridegroom, Cant. v. 2, "It is the voice of my beloved that knocketh, saying, Open to me, my sister, my love."

21.  $\kappa \alpha \theta i \sigma \alpha i$  to sit with Me in my throne. Observe the preposition  $\partial \nu$ , in (not  $\partial \pi l$ , upon), here twice, the only two places where this preposition is used with θρόνω in the N. T., whereas èπl is used with other cases of θρόνος often. See Matt. xix. 28; xxv. 31. Rev. iv. 2. 9; v. 1. 7. 13; vi. 16, and passim.

This preposition ev appears to intimate admission into and session in the same throne; whereas ent represents the act of taking a seat upon a separate throne.

I will grant to him to sit with Me in My throne. This is the climax and the consummation of glory. See above, on ii. 7.

There is a reference here also to the bliss and glory of the Church as the Queen at the right hand of her Lord and King. See Ps. xlv. 10. Cp. above, pp. 127, 128.

CH. IV.] St. John sees heaven opened, and is called up into heaven. He is in the Spirit, and beholds the Throne of God in heaven, and the Four-and-twenty Elders round about the Throne, sitting in white garments and wearing crowns of gold; and in the midst of the Throne, and round about the Throne, the Four Living Creatures; and when the four Living Creatures sing the Trisagion to the BLESSED TRINITY, the Four-and-twenty Elders fall down and worship.

1. μετὰ ταῦτα] after these things. These words connect this Vision with St. John's age: whence it appears that the Four-andtwenty Elders and Four Living Creatures do not represent the Church Triumphant in that future heavenly glory, which will not be consummated till the end of time. See below, vv. 4—8.
— εἶδον] I saw: not "I looked;" the vision was revealed to him, he did not look for it.

— θύρα ἀνεφγμένη] a door set open in heaven. Observe here the perfect participle, the door had been opened and was standing open. The veil of the heavenly Holy of Holies had been removed by Christ (Heb. x. 19, 20), and heaven was laid open to the view. There is a comparison, and yet a contrast, between the heavenly Temple, and that which had existed upon earth during the Levitical dispensation, when the way into the Holiest had not yet been made manifest. Heb. ix. 8.

In this heavenly Temple, the Throne of God-which had been typified by the Ark and Mercy Seat in the Holiest Place-is visible; and the Sea and Seven Lights, which are allusive to the Molten Sea in Solomon's Temple (1 Kings vii. 23), and to the Seven-branched Lamp which stood in the Holy Place, and symbolized the Church, and was at some distance from the Mercy Seat of the Divine Throne in the Holy of Holies (see Lightfoot, p. 2055), are here brought near to the Throne of God, v. 6. For "we, who were formerly afar off, are now made nigh to God by the blood of Christ." Eph. ii. 13.

— ἡ φωνὴ ἡ πρώτη—λέγων] the voice which I heard at first.

See above, chap. i. 10. This seems to be the meaning. Remark the connexion of the masculine participle  $(\lambda \epsilon \gamma \omega \nu)$ , "speaking," with the feminine substantive "voice." The voice is personified into the speaker. Compare the similar construction, where the laws of grammar are made to give way to the powerful emotion in the writer's mind, v. 11; xi. 15; xix. 14. Winer, § 59, — ἀνάβα ὧδε] Come up hither;—immediately I became in the Spirit. The Evangelist being called up into heaven was in the Spirit; and being inspired by the Holy Ghost, he was transported into heaven, as the Apostle St. Paul in his "visions and revelations of the Lord," was caught up into the third heaven. 2 Cor. xii. 2.

3. καl ὁ καθήμενος κ.τ.λ.] and he that sitteth on the throne like in sight to a Jasper-stone and a Sardine. He Who sitteth is the Triune God (see v. 3). This opinion is not invalidated by the fact that the Lamb is in the midst of the Throne (v. 6), and takes the sealed Roll from Him that sitteth on the Throne (v. 7). It is well observed by A Lapide here, that "the Son as Man can well be said, especially in a sublime Vision like this, to come to God." Our Lord's words on the Cross, Matt. xxvii. 46, and Heb. x. 6, are addressed to the Triune God. Compare the vision of Daniel, vii. 13, where the Son of Man comes to the Ancient of St. John declares in his Gospel (xii. 41) that the parallel Vision in Issiah (vi. 1-3), which also contains the Trisagion, was a vision of the glory of Christ; and it was the glory also of the Father and of the Holy Spirit. See note above on John xii. 41, and the note on Col. i. 19. Cp. note below on v. 1.

- δ καθήμενος υμοιος δράσει, κ.τ.λ.] He that sitteth is in sight like the Jasper and the Sardine Stone. The Jasper is called κρυσταλλίζων, "like crystal," in xxi. 1; and it is the superstructure of the heavenly City (xxi. 18), and the first of the Twelve Stones, which represent the Apostles of the Lamb (xxi.

Jasper was of various colours, purple, blue, green, and distinguished by its brilliancy and beauty (Plin. xxxvii. 5), and almost always veined with white. Compare the treatise of S. Epiphanius on the Twelve oracular Gems on the pectoral of the High Priest, where the Jasper was the twelfth (Exod. xxviii. 20; xxxix. 13); and see Corsi, Pietre Antiche, p. 137. Rom. 1828.

The Sardine stone is red, somewhat fiery and like blood, something similar to Cornelian. See S. Epiphan. 1. c., de lapide Sardio, and Corsi, Pietre Antiche, pp. 159, 160. The Jasper (says Victorinus) is like water; the Sardine is like fire; and thus these stones seem to represent God's Majesty and Justice as seen in His Judgments: that of the Flood, and that of the Fire of Sodom and the Last Day.

Or rather, the union of these two colours, the one of a brilliant and lively hue, the other of a deeper fiery and darker hue, may perhaps be designed to symbolize the union of Mercy and Glory, with Justice and Majesty in the Godhead, especially in the Gospel Dispensation. (Rom. iii. 26.) Similarly there is a combination of brightness and fire in Ezekicl's Vision (Ezek. i. 4). which also displays the Rainbow (i. 28). And this is illustrated by what follows.

- Kal lpis] and a Rainbow, like unto an Emerald, round about the throne. On the gender and declension of the adjective δμοιος, see Winer, G. G. § 11, p. 64. Cp. Luke ii. 13. Acts xxvi. 19. 1 Tim. ii. 8, 9.

The Rainbow, composed by the joint influences of shower and The Kambow, composed by the joint inductees of shower and sunshine, is an emblem of Divine severity blended with Divine Love; a symbol of the dark shower of Divine Judgment illumined by the bright beams of Divine Mercy. Compare the Vision of Ezekiel, i. 28. The Bow is a Record of the Deluge, in which the world was drowned for sin and speaks of sunshine after storm:

4 Καὶ κυκλόθεν τοῦ θρόνου θρόνοι εἴκοσι τέσσαρες καὶ ἐπὶ τοὺς θρόνους

and of the Divine Promise that the world should never more be destroyed by water: and yet it is also a silent memento of another Judgment, by fire (see Gen. ix. 13-16, and on 2 Pet. iii. 7).

The LXX never use the word lpis, but τόξον, perhaps for fear lest a confusion might arise in their reader's mind between it and the Iris of ancient Mythology. And the τόξον is a weapon of war, below, vi. 2.

The word loss occurs again in this book as the characteristic of the Divine Presence in Christ, x. 1. And the Rainbow, formed of sunshine and rain, and also the emblem of Hope, has a fit place in this Vision of the heavenly Church, after the Gospel Dispensation, in which the dark cloud of men's sinful Nature is irradiated by the beams of the Sun of Righteousness (Mal. iv. 2), in the Incarnation of Christ, by which man is reconciled to God, and "Mercy and Truth meet together, Righteousness and Peace kiss each other." Compare the exposition of Aug. (?), who says that "the Bow appears in the sky, when the rain-fraught cloud is illumined by the beams of the sun. So, when the Sun of Righteousness, Who is Light Eternal, irradiated our human nature, then the Bow appeared in the cloud, for the World was reconciled to God, and has Hope of Salvation and heavenly Peace."

The σμάραγδοs, Emerald, of a bright green colour, and one of the most brilliant of gems (Plin. xxxvii. 5. Theophrast. de Gemmis, § 44), is the fourth foundation-stone of the heavenly City (xxi. 19), and the third in the pectoral of the High Priest. (Epiphan. l. c.) How different from the Vision of Mercy and Love was the use made of the Emerald by two emperors of Rome in the age of St. John, in the earthly capital of the world! It is related of Nero that he used the emerald as a specular lens, wherewith he might view with greater delight the bloody conflicts and agonizing struggles of the Roman gladiators in the arena. Plin. l. c. The same is probably true of the Emperor Domitian. One emerald was called Neronian, another Domitian. Corsi,

And the four Living Creatures, each of them having six wings, and they have no rest night or day, saying, Holy, Holy,

As to the translation of this passage, it must first be ob-

(1) That whereas our Authorized Version often introduces the past tense in the rendering of it (e. g. "one sat," v. 2; "He that sat was," v. 3; "about the Throne were, and they had crowns of gold, and voices proceeded," v. 5; and "there were seven lamps and there was a sea; and the first beast was like," &c.); in no instance does St. John use a past tense here. The Vision represents the Everlasting Glory of God, and the ever-present Adoration of Heaven.

(2) The Authorized Version renders the word (wa by beast. But the translation Living Creatures is to be preferred on many accounts. It is more accurate, as declaring the life (ζωή) in these heavenly beings, and as identifying them with the Living Creatures in the parallel Vision of Ezekiel, where they are called Gaa by the LXX (Ezek. i. 20; x. 15. 17. 20), the rendering of the Hebrew and (hayyoth), living creatures, which are all collected into one היה (hayyah), living creature (Ezek. i. 20), a name connecting them with the Ever-Living One, Jehovah Himself, and with Christ who is δ ζων, "the Living One, and the Author of life." (John i. 4. Rev. i. 18.) And it obviates the confusion which, by the use of the word Beasts, might arise between these heavenly Animals and the mystical Beasts (θηρία) in chapter xiii. 1. 11, which are opposed to the Lamb, 'Apvlov, i. e. to Christ (xvii. 14); whereas the Lamb is here in the midst of these Living Creatures, and they adore Him (v. 6. 14).

What then is meant by the TWENTY-FOUR ELDERS and by the Four LIVING CREATURES?

It is probable that in a primary sense the Four-and-Twenty Elders represent the Four-and-Twenty Books of the Old Testament; and the Four Living Creatures represent the Four Gospels.

In a secondary sense it is probable, that the Elders represent the Church of the Elder dispensation, which received the Old Testament; and the Four Living Creatures may represent the Church of the Gospel Dispensation; and so conjointly, the Elders and Living Creatures represent the UNIVERSAL CHURCH of God, building her faith on the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament.

In behalf of this opinion it may be remarked, that the Elders are introduced as forming a definite and well-known body: though they had not been mentioned before, St. John calls them here

"the Four-and-Twenty."

Now, the Hebrews call the Old Testament by this name, " The Twenty-Four." It is the title prefixed to their Bible even to this day. See Hottinger, Thes. Philog. 1659, p. 101, who says, "The Old Testament is called by the Jews' The Twenty-Four," - יְיִיִיִים וְאַרְנָקָה, Viginti quatuor. Accordingly, the Books of the OLD TESTAMENT are so arranged in the Sixth Article of the Church of England as to make TWENTY-Four.

This exposition of the meaning of the Twenty-Four Elders in this Version dates from the third century after Christ. It is given in the Commentary of Victorinus, Bishop of Pettau, who says, "Veteris Testamenti sunt Libri qui accipiuntur Viginti Qualuor," and is confirmed by S. Jerome, who, more than any of the Fathers, was conversant with the Hebrew opinions concerning the Old Testament; and says that "the Twenty-Four Books of the Old Testament are represented in the Apocalypse of St. John under the figure of the Twenty-Four Elders, adoring the Lamb' (Jerome, Prolog. Galeat. tom. i. p. 318 sqq., ed. Paris, 1693); and, speaking of certain Apocryphal books, he says that they are admitted among the Four-and-Twenty Elders" (in Ezram, The same interpretation is adopted by Primasius, Bishop of Adrumetum, "We receive Twenty-Four Books of the Old Testament as the Twenty-Four Elders sitting on their thrones;" and by Ambrosius Ansbertus (Bibl. Patr. Max. xiii. 464), and by the Venerable Bede and Haymo, Bishop of Halberstadt, in their Commentaries on the Apocalypse.

These Four-and-Twenty Books may fitly be called Elders, as belonging to the older dispensation. Compare Heb. xi. 2, where the word elder is used in that sense. And they may well be represented as enshrined here in the heavenly Temple, as the Two Tables of the old Covenant were in the Holy of Holies in the Ark (Exod. xxv. 21. Deut. x. 2. 5. Heb. ix. 4), and as the Five Books of Moses were, by the side of the Ark (see Deut. xxxi. 9. 24-26. Josh. xxiv. 26), which was the Throne of God (Exod. xxv. 18-22. Numb. vii. 89. 1 Sam. iv. 4. 2 Sam. vi. 2. Ps.

Fitly also are they represented as seated on thrones, indicating the permanence of God's Word, which will remain when heaven and carth have passed away (Isa. xl. 8. Matt. xxiv. 35. Luke xvi. 17). The "Word of the Lord endureth for ever" (1 Pet. i. 25), and by it the World will be judged at the Last Day (John xii. 48). And well are they displayed as bearing crowns of Victory; for though the World may rebel against God's τους είκοσι τέσσαρας πρεσβυτέρους καθημένους, περιβεβλημένους έν ίματίοις λευκοίς, καὶ ἐπὶ τὰς κεφαλὰς αὐτῶν στεφάνους χρυσοῦς.

Word, yet it will triumph over all its opponents. See below, on

In confirmation of this exposition it may be observed, that one of the main purposes of the Apocalypse is to console and strengthen the faithful who might otherwise be shaken in their faith by the indignities which the Word of God was to endure at the hands of evil men, some denying its Inspiration, some withholding it from the people, and adding the Apocrypha as of equal authority to the Old Testament, others setting at nought its precepts, and violating its laws, and defying its judgments.

Observe also, the Twenty-Four Elders are represented as sitting on thrones even by the side of the Triune God (v. 4). They have therefore a divine character. And yet they are also represented as falling down and casting their crowns before His Throne (v. 10). They have therefore also a human element. And in accordance with this union Ezekiel describes the Living Creatures as having a "man's hands under their wings" (i. 8; x. 8. 21). Such is Holy Scripture. The Spirit who speaks in Scripture is Divine, but the instrument used by Him is human. Scripture has divine wings, but it has a man's hand under its wings. It is the Voice of God to the world; but it is also the Voice of Man ascribing all praise to God.

This Interpretation is further confirmed by the combination here and in other parts of the Apocalypse of the Four-and-Twenty Elders with the Four Living Creatures. See here and v. 14;

vii. 11; xiv. 3; xix. 4.

The Four Living Creatures, in a primary sense, seem to represent the Four Gospels; and in a secondary sense, the universal Church of Christ, preaching the Gospel of Christ every where, and overcoming the World thereby.

The Four Living Creatures have been generally supposed by Ancient Expositors to signify the Four Gospels.

This Interpretation comes from the school of St. John him-It is found in the writings of S. Irenœus, the scholar of S. Polycarp, the disciple of St. John. Christ is "the Divine WORD," says S. Irenœus (III. ii. 8), "who is the Creator of all, and sitteth upon the Cherubim, and holds all things together; Who, having been manifested to men, gave us the quadriform Gospel, which is held together by one Spirit; as David, praying for his Advent, says, 'Thou that sittest above the Cherubim show Thyself' (Ps. lxxx. 1). For the Cherubim of Ezekiel have four faces, and their faces are emblems of the Son of God. For the first Living Creature (says St. John) is like a Lion, and shows Christ's royal character; the second is like a Calf, and shows His sacrificial and priestly office; and the third has the face of a Man, and shows His Advent in our human nature; and the fourth like an Eagle flying, shows the gift of the Spirit flying down and lighting on His Church. And the Gospels all harmonize with each other; and Christ sitteth upon them . . . . And thus the Living Creatures are Quadriform, and Quadriform also is the Gospel.'

This exposition derives light from the consideration that while in the parallel vision of Ezekiel, each of the four Living Creatures is represented as having the face of a Lion, a Calf, a Man, and an Eagle; in the Vision of St. John, the first Living Creature is described as like a Lion, the second as a Calf, the third as a Man, the fourth as an Eagle. This is applicable to the Gospels. Each has a character of its own; one Gospel describing more minutely the Royal Office, another the sacrificial character of Christ, another displaying His Human Nature more clearly, and another exhibiting His Divine; and yet each of the four Gospels presents Christ as King, and Victim, and Priest, and as Man and God. As S. Gregory says (on Ezekiel), "Whatever is in one Gospel is in all the four, for all proclaim One Christ, God and Man. And yet each Gospel has its own character; and so the Living Creatures, each according to their own special purpose, preach Him Who is Man by being born for us, a Calf by dying for us, a Lion by rising in triumph, and an Eagle by His Ascension into heaven." And S. Victorinus says, in the third century, "that these evangelical declarations of God's Spirit are four and yet one, because they proceed from one Divine Source, like the four Rivers of Paradise flowing from one head" (Gen. ii. 10).

This view had been represented by the language of Ezekiel, who calls the living creatures four, and yet one (p. 182). See above. It had also, perhaps, been typified by the arrangements of the Tabernacle.

The Tabernacle of the Israelites-the figure of the Universal Church—was quadrangular. Encamped on the East side were three tribes, the chief being that of Judah, with the ensign of a Lion. (See the Rabbinical Authorities in Mede's works, pp. 437. 594, and Lightfoot, i. p. 2058, compared with Num. i. 52, and ii. -31.) On the West were three other tribes, the chief being Ephraim, with the ensign of an Ox. On the South were three other tribes, the chief being Reuben, with the ensign of a Man. On the North were three other tribes, the chief being Dan, with the ensign of an Eagle. Cp. below, on vii. 5-8, and on St. Luke, p. 163.

Thus these four Emblems typify the quadriform unity and completeness of the WHOLE CHURCH looking to the four Cardinal points of heaven, and diffused in the four quarters of the Earth; and triumphing over the World by means of the Four Gospels, borne as a Standard by the Army of the spiritual Israel—the Christian Church—to the four corners of the World.

On the whole it may be affirmed, that this exposition, which regards the Four Living Creatures as emblems of the Four Gospels, is sanctioned by the concurrent testimony of ancient Expositors. It may be seen in Victorinus, Bishop and Martyr in the third century, who says, "Quatuor animalia sunt quatuor Evangelia." Or as Victorinus here expresses it. "Christ in the Or as Victorinus here expresses it, "Christ in the Gospels is like a flying Eagle, because He overcame death and spreads out His Wings and soars aloft, and protects His people with His Wings." See below, xii. 14; and the Greek Interpreters in Catená, p. 245, thus speak, "In these Living Creatures we see the offices of Christ; in the Lion His Royalty; in the Calf His Sacrifice; in the Man His Incarnation; in the Eagle His bestowal of the heavenly gift of the Holy Ghost, which quickens all."
S. Jerome says (Epist. 50, ad Paulin., and Procem. ad Matth.), that "the Four Gospels are the Fourfold Chariot of God, and the true Cherubim, full of eyes and mutually interwoven with each other. One is like a Lion, another a Man, another a Calf, another a flying Eagle. Whence," he adds, "it is evident, that we may acknowledge only Four Gospels and no more; and must reject all other books pretending to Evangelical authority." Similar language is used by S. Ambrose, S. Augustine (in passages already quoted in the Introduction to the Four Gospels, p. xli, new edition, and in the Introduction to St. Luke, p. 163, and on St. Luke xv. 23), and S. Greyory (in Ezek. i. and x.), and by Andreas, Primasius, Bede, Haymo, and others. And though there are some discrepancies among these writers as to the particular Gospels which the Four Living Creatures respectively represented (see on the Gospels, Introd. p. xlii), yet these discrepancies show that these expositors do not merely transcribe one another's words, but derive their interpretations from independent sources, and serve to confirm the testimony in which they all agree, that the Four Living Creatures represent the Four Gospels.

If it should be objected, that it is too bold a figure to represent Books as living, it must be remembered that we are contemplating a heavenly Vision; and that the imagery of the Apocalypse. like that of Hebrew prophecy, is characterized by sublime and glowing aspirations; and that our ordinary estimates of Holy Scripture fall short of its true dignity, as pourtrayed by God Himself in Holy Writ. We are accustomed to regard Scripture as a book to be read, and we are too apt to forget its living energy. Our familiarity with it has sometimes tended to its disparagement. And the tone of Criticism with which it has been handled by many in later days, has greatly tended to impair the popular reverence for the Divine Word.

But God Himself describes Holy Scripture as a living agent. The Scripture speaks (Mark xv. 28. Rom. iv. 3; ix. 17; x. 11; xi. 2. Gal. iv. 30. 1 Tim. v. 18. James ii. 8. 23). Especially is this attribute assigned to it in St. John's Gospel (John vii. 38. 42; xix. 37). The Scripture foresees (Gal. iii. 8). God's Word is said to be Life (Deut. xxxii. 47). The Scripture is animated by the breath of God (2 Tim. iii. 16). The Sacred Oracles are alive (ζῶντα, Acts vii. 38), a phrase akin to the Living Creatures of the Apo-Descriptions of the Written Word of God are often blended together with, and run into, descriptions of the Incarnate Word Himself; as in that sentence of St. Paul, "The Word of God is living  $(\langle \hat{\omega} \nu \rangle)$ , and sharper than any two-edged sword" (Heb. iv. 12), and it is said to have the power of quickening or giving life (Ps. cxix. 50; cp. James i. 18).

The truth of this interpretation seems to have been felt by the Church of Christ. The Four Gospels were placed on thrones in the ancient Councils of Christendom. In the Great Council of Ephesus, as S. Cyril says (Labbé, Council iii. p. 1044), "the Holy Gospel was on a throne preaching to the venerable Bishops, 'Judge ye right judgment.'" And Christian Art, both in Sculpture and Painting, has adopted the four Apocalyptic Living Creations of the Council Counc tures as symbols of the Four Gospels. Cp. Thomasius, Thesaurus Theologico-Philologicus, ii. p. 57.

And the Sacred Poetry of the Church has accepted the same interpretation, and regards these Living Creatures as representing the fourfold Gospel, displaying the fourfold character of Christ. Thus, for example, the Ancient Christian Hymn thus speaks :-

" Current rotis, volant alis Visûs, sensûs spiritalis; Rota gressus est æqualis, Ala contemplatio. Quatuor describunt isti Quadriformés actus Christi, Et figurant, ut audisti, Quisque suâ formulâ. Natus homo declaratur, Vitulus sacrificatur, Leo mortem deprædatur, Sed ascendit Aquila."

See Clichtor. Elucid, p. 212, or Daniel, Thes. Hymnol. ii. 84.)

Lastly, the soundness of an interpretation of a passage of Scripture, especially of a prophetical book like the Apocalypse, may be estimated and tested by the practical and doctrinal religious uses which are subserved by the Interpretation.

The uses of the present Interpretation are manifold.

(1) It rescues the mind of the reader from the danger to which he is exposed in modern times of disparaging Holy Scrip-

This Vision confirms the Faith of the Church in the Word of God; and it seems to be a special purpose of St. John in the Apocalypse to render this important service to the Church of Christ. It raises our eyes, and invites us to regard God's Word "as enduring for ever in heaven;" not as a lifeless Volume, but as personified, as enthroned, as wearing a crown of Victory. teaches us to regard the Gospel, as full of eyes, as winged, and as proclaiming the fourfold character of Christ, and as the Throne of God on which He sits, and as His Chariot on which He rides. Lest, however, from the glory thus ascribed to Holy Scripture, we should imagine it to be proposed as an object of our adoration, the Vision represents the Elders and Living Creatures as worshipping the Triune God, and ascribing Glory to the Lamb. What St. John says of the Gaspel, is true of all the Scriptures. "These are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through His Name." (John xx. 31.) One use, therefore, of this exposition, is to remind us of the Divine Inspiration of Holy Scripture, and to guard us against all attacks of the Evil One against God's Word.

(2) Another practical use of this Interpretation is, as was suggested by S. Jerome and others in ancient days, to guard us against receiving any other Books as Scripture, which are not

Scripture.

There are Twenty-four Elders in the Vision; and the ancient Church of God received only Twenty-four Books of the Old Testament; Christ Himself received them, and them only (see on Luke xxiv. 44). But the Church of Rome, although she professes great reverence for S. Jerome, and especially for his services in the cause of Holy Scripture (see the Collect in her Breviary for his festival, Sept. 30), and even now inserts his Prologues in her Vulgate, yet in direct opposition to S. Jerome, has added other books (viz. the Apocrypha) as equally inspired with the Books of the Old Testament; and anathematizes all who do not receive those other Books as of equal authority with those which alone were received as inspired by the ancient Church of God, and by Jesus Christ Himself. (Council of Trent, Session iv.)

The Vision, therefore, thus interpreted, serves as a safeguard against those who would adulterate the divine Word with human άστραπαΙ, κ.τ.λ.] lightnings and voices and thunders.

 This adjunct confirms the opinion that St. John is here speaking of God's Word. Thunder is the Voice of God. St. John himself, as a preacher of God's Word, was named by Christ "a son of Thunder." See on Mark iii. 17; cp. below, x. 3.

- έπτὰ λαμπάδες] seven torches of fire: λαμπὰs in this book does not mean a lamp (see viii. 10), but a torch (cp. John xviii. 3); and these seven torches or flambeaux of fire burning before the Throne, are contrasted with the Star which fell as a torch from heaven (viii. 10); cp. Welstein, i. p. 507; and Trench, Synonyms N. T. p. 193.

But here, by way of contrast, there is, in the heavenly Church, a Sea of glass, expressive of smoothness and brightness, and this heavenly sea is of crystal: declaring that the contract of the contract calm of heaven is not like earthly seas, ruffled by winds, but is cam of heaven is not like earthly seas, rumed by whos, but is crystallized into an eternity of peace.

8. λέγοντες] saying. So Λ, Β, and thirty Cursives.—Etz. has λέγοντα. This masculine participle, joined with the neuter ωα, expresses strongly the personal vitality of the Living Creatures.

— "Αγιος, ἄγιος, ἄγιος] Holy, Holy, Holy. The thrice Holy is an Eucharistic ascription of Glory to the Ever-Blessed Trinity, and is desired from the Ancient Church of Gal (Lee vi. 3) and and is derived from the Ancient Church of God (Isa. vi. 3), and is adopted by the Christian Church, which uses it in the Trisogion at the Holy Eucharist.

The Church has also declared her mind on the sense of these words, by appointing this Chapter of the Apocalypse as the Epistle to be used on the Festival of Trinity Sunday.

The Worship rendered to Almighty God by the UNIVERSAL Church upon earth, reflects, as in a mirror, the worship of the CHURCH in heaven; and therefore the language of heavenly worship,-as here described, and below, v. 8-10, and Isa. vi. 3,is happily embodied by the Church in the TE DEUM, which is her song of praise in Divine Service when she has read one Lesson of Holy Scripture from the Old Testament, and is about to read another from the New.

The meaning of the six wings of the Living Creatures is explained by Isaiah vi. 2.

9, 10. Kal otav] And when the Living Creatures shall give (δώσουσι) glory and honour and thanks to Him that sitteth on the Throne, Who liveth for ever and ever, the Twenty-four Elders will fall down (πεσούνται) and will worship (προσκυή-σουσι) Him that liveth for ever and ever, and will cast (βαλούσι) their crowns before the Throne, saying,—

9. ὅταν δώσουσι] when they shall give; as often as they shall give. On this use of the future, see Winer, § 42, p. 276.

10. πεσοῦνται – προσκυνήσουσι – βαλοῦσι] The preponderance of MSS. has the future tense here (and not the present), and so Griesb., Scholz, Tisch. These future tenses seem to intimate that the action was still future when St. John wrote the Apocalypse. They also show, that the Adoration rendered by the Four Living Creatures is the signal for the Adoration to be given by the Twenty-Four Elders.

This harmonizes with the Exposition offered above. The Foun Gospels proclaim the glory and the love of the Eternal Trinity, and teach the World to worship the Unity, in the power of the Divine Majesty; and they contain the Divine Commission to baptize all Nations into the Name of the FATHER, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Thus they are ever singing in clear strains a doxology—the Holy, Holy, Holy—to the Ever-Blessed Trinity. Thus the Gospels give the signal for the full expression of glory and praise rendered to God by the Old TESTAMENT.

The Evangelical Trisagion of the Four Living Creatures evokes the Choral Antiphon of the Elders. The New Testament, in revealing the doctrine of the Ever-Blessed Trinity, displays the things which Prophets and Kings and Righteous men of old desired to see but had not seen (Matt. xiii. 17. Luke x. 24. Rom. xvi. 25, 26. Heb. xi. 13); the Mysteries of God's grace in the Lamb Who was slain, not only for the literal Israel, but to redeem all men, of "every kindred and tongue and people and nation, and to make them Kings and Priests to God" (Eph. i. 9; iii. 3-9. Col. i. 26). The types and prophecies of the Old Testament, which had before lain in dimness and obscurity, were lighted up by the Gospel; and what was before dumb brake forth into singing (Isa. xliv. 23), and gave glory to the Triune God.

They cast their crowns before the throne-a mark of subjection, and act of homage. Tacit., Annal. xv. 29, "Ad quam (effigiem Neronis) progressus Tiridates sublatum capiti diadema

CH. V.] St. John sees a Roll upon (ἐπὶ) the right hand of the Triune God. It is sealed down (κατ-εσφραγισμένον) with seven seals. No one is able to open the Roll and to reveal its contents, but the "Lion of the Tribe of Judah" (v. 5), who is also here called the "Root of David," and the "Lamb who had been slain" (v. 6). Throughout the Apocalypse Jesus Christ, Who is the Λόγος or "Word of God" (xix. 13), is represented as the Parson by Whom God's Resistions are given to the world, see Person by Whom God's Revelations are given to the world; see

He comes, and takes the Roll out of the right hand of Him Who sitteth on the throne; and when he has taken the Roll, the Four Living Creatures and the Twenty-Four Elders sing a new song, and praise Him Who has redeemed men of all nations by It is blood, and has made them Kings and Priests to God, and they reign on the earth (v. 10). This ascription of praise by the Living Creatures, and by the Elders, is followed by a hymn of Adoration to the LAMB, sung by myriads of Angels, and offering worship to the Lamb in terms (v. 12) like those which had been addressed to the TRIUNE GOD (iv. 11).

Lastly, all Creatures in all places unite in giving glory to the TRIUNE GOD and to the LAMB (rv. 13, 14). 1. είδον επί την δεξιάν] I saw upon the right hand of Him that sitteth on the Throne a Roll written within and on the back, sealed down with seven seals. The word βιβλίον ought not to be rendered here Book, but Roll, in order that the dominant idea of the gradual unrolling of the Volume, and of the unfolding of its contents, may be kept before the eye of the reader. The Roll is  $\epsilon \pi l \tau \eta \nu \delta \epsilon \xi i \alpha \nu$ , upon the right hand; the word right hand is the accusative case  $(\tau \dot{\eta} \nu \delta \epsilon \xi i \dot{\alpha} \nu$ , not  $\tau \dot{\eta} \delta \epsilon \xi i \dot{\alpha}$ , dative), which seems to indicate the truth that the Roll was not placed in it by any external power; but that it lies upon it as upon its foundation. The Roll of the World's destiny rests upon God's hand:

Vol. II.—Part IV. cp. below, xx. 1; and Ps. xcv. 4, "In His hand are all the corners of the Earth," and all the events of Futurity.

The ancient Interpreters agree in regarding this Book or Roll as a prophetical one: in the words of Prudentius (Cath. vi. 84) describing this Vision,-

" Evangelista summi Fidissimus Magistri, Signata quæ latebant Nebulis videt remotis; Ipsum Tonantis AGNUM De cæde purpurantem, Qui conscium futuri Librum resignat unus."

The Roll is scaled down, because it is a prophetic roll, and because the future is hidden from human eyes; and it is upon the right hand of Him that sitteth on the Throne, because the sufferings of the Christian Church, which are contained in this Roll, are under the control of God, and nothing can happen to her without His providential dispensation, Who ever sitteth (observe the present tense) on the throne. Cp. Ps. xcix. 1, "He sitteth between the Cherubim, be the Earth never so unquiet."

The Lamb, who is Christ, in His Human Nature-suffering -and meriting and obtaining all glory and power by His sufferings and perfect obedience (Phil. ii. 6-10), comes and takes the Roll out of the hand of Him that sitteth on the Throne. "He, as Son of Man (says Primasius), receives from the Father, and from Himself, that dispensation which is from both those Persons of the Trinity; for both sit together with the Holy Spirit on the Throne of God." See the language of St. Paul (Col. i. 19), signifying the consent of Christ as God to His own assumption of the nature of man. "According to His humiliation as man," says Auy.? here, "Christ received the roll, and not according to His Godhead;" and he confirms this statement by the words of Christ Himself, "All power is given to Me," i. e. as Man. Matt. xxviii. 18. "Christ (says Bede) is here represented as a Lamb according to His suffering Manhood, taking a roll from the right hand of God. But in the glory of His Godhead He is ever at God's Right Hand." Cp. note above, iv. 3.

The seals of this prophetic Roll are seven, because seven is the sacred symbol of completeness; and because this Roll reaches to the rest or Sabbath of Eternity. As our Authorized Version rightly says in the heading of this chapter, "It contains a prophecy to the End of the World." See above, Introduction, pp. 151, 152; and below, viii. 1.

It is written within and on the back (ὅπισθεν, or as some MSS. read, ἔξωθεν-which is an explanatory gloss-outside)another mark of its fulness and completion. According to ancient usage, a parchment roll was first written on the inside, and if the inside was filled with writing, then the outside was used, or back part of the roll; and if that also was covered with writing, and the whole available space was occupied, the book was called opistho-graphos (written on the back side; Lucian, Vit. Auction. 9. Plin. Epist. iii. 5); or written "in aversa charta," Martial, viii. 22; whence Juvenal, describing a roll filled with writing to overflowing, says (Sat. i. 6),

- summi plenâ jam margine libri Scriptus, et in tergo, necdum finitus, Orestes."

See Wetstein, p. 768. This prophetic roll sealed up, filled with writing, and sealed with seven seals, contains a prophecy reaching to the end of the World. This is the uniform Exposition of all Ancient Interpreters, from the third century for a thousand years in uninterrupted succession.

The neglect of this fundamental truth has led to much perplexity and embarrassment in some modern Interpretations of the Apocalypse.

In order to have a clear idea of the Vision which now ensues, we must imagine a Roll, wrapped round a cylindrical wand, and sealed down with seven Seals (cp. Jahn, Archæol. § 88. Winer, R. W. B., ii. p. 422. Art. Schreibkunst). When one Seal is broken by the hand of Christ, a portion of the Roll is unwrapped, and its contents are disclosed; then a second Seal is broken; and so on, till the seven Seals are opened, and the whole Volume is unrolled.

This prophetic Roll or Volume is not traced with alphabetical characters, but with hieroglyphical symbols. The first symbol is exhibited at the opening of the first Seal, and the second symbol at the second Seal; and each symbol pourtrays the future state of the Christian Church in that period to which it refers; and so on, in succession, till we are brought, with the opening of the seventh Seal, to the final condition of the Church on earth.

This Roll, as we shall see, reveals a brief and rapid view of the successive sufferings of the Church of Christ from St. John's age to the end of the world.

3. Kal obbels howaro] and no one was able to open the roll.

Cp. Acts i. 7; and on the sense of the negative particles here and in the next verse, see Winer, pp. 435, 436.
4. ἐγὰ ἔκλαιον πολύ] I was weeping much. Observe the imperfect tense; and εκλαιον, a stronger word than εδάκρυον. See Matt. xxvi. 75. Mark xiv. 72. Luke xix. 41.

5, 6. ενίκησεν δ λέων] The Lion who is (δ &ν) of the tribe of Judah, the root of David, overcame—prevailed—to open the roll and its seven seals . . . And I beheld, in the midst of the Throne and of the Four Living Creatures, and in the midst of the Elders, a Lamb standing, as it had been slain.

On the infinitive after ἐνίκησεν, see Winer, § 44, p. 284.

Christ alone is able to open the sealed book, and to reveal the future. See above, i. 1. Hence S. Hippolytus (p. 159, ed. Lagarde), quoting this chapter (vv. 1, 2.6-9), remarks, that it is through Him alone that the sacred counsels of the Godhead are unlocked and revealed to man.

Observe the contrast between this manifestation of Christ, and that of Moses coming from the Mount. Moses veiled his face, but Christ unseals the Book. Cp. on 2 Cor. iii. 7. 13. 15. Observe δ ων, He that is, He that exists, from the tribe of Judah; denoting Christ's continuance and energy. Cp. i. 4.

Observe also ἐνίκησεν here; He conquered; a word which prepares the way for the description in the first Seal (vi. 2), where Christ is represented as going forth conquering and to conquer (νικών, καί Ίνα νικήση).

Here are three names of Christ; -the LION, the ROOT of DAVID, the LAMB.

The combination of these figures, all descriptive of the same Person, reminds the reader, that the language of the Apocalypse is not literal, but symbolical, and is to be interpreted accordingly.

The words "Lion of the Tribe of Judah," the royal tribe, bespeak Christ's sovereignty, and are derived from Jacob's prophecy (Gen. xlix. 9, 10).

The name, "Root of David," proclaims that Christ is more than a Branch or Root from out of the stem of Jesse (Isa. xi. 1). It declares that He is the origin of David. And here St. John joins with Isaiah, who describes Christ as the Rod of Jesse, and also the Root of Jesse. He is the Root because He is Man; He is the Root because He is God. Cp. Andreas, p. 253.

He is also the Lamb; meck and innocent (Isa. liii. 7. Acts viii. 32); the true Paschal Lamb (1 Cor. v. 7), who delivers the spiritual Israel from the wrath of God, and from the sword of the destroying Angel; and they are redeemed with His precious blood, "as of a Lamb without blemish and without spot" (I Pet. i. 19). He is the Lamb of God Who taketh away the Sin of the World (John i. 29).

Christ is called here the Lion (v. 5), and it is said that He has conquered  $(\ell v l k \eta \sigma \epsilon v)$ , and then He is displayed as a Lamb who has suffered (v. 6); and why? because it was by His sufferings as a Lamb that He conquered as a Lion. And, therefore, while we love Him as the Lamb, let us fear Him also as the Lion. The Cross in the hand of the Lamb is the banner of His Victory. As the ancient hymn beautifully expresses it,

"Dic tropæum passionis, dic triumphalem crucem; Pange vexillum, notatis quod refulget frontibus."

Prudentius (Cath. is. 84).

It is remarkable, that, in describing Christ as the Lamb, St. John, in his Gospel, uses the word 'Apply's (Agnus) (John. i. 29. 36), and so do other writers of the New Testament (1 Pet. i. 19. Cp. Acts viii. 32); and they never use 'Aρνίον. But, in the Apocalypse, St. John never uses the word 'Αμνδs, but always uses Aprior; and in this book the word aprior occurs about thirty times. For the probable reason of this difference of usage see below, on xvii. 3.

The LAMB is here represented standing, as having been stain (cp. Isa. liii. 7. Jer. xi. 19). Although Christ was stain, yet He stands. He was not overthrown. On the contrary, by falling He stood, and makes us (who fell in the first Adam) to stand upright in Him who is the Second Adam. His  $\pi\tau\bar{\omega}\mu\bar{\omega}$  is our σωμα (see Matt. xxiv. 28). By dying He overcame Death: by His Death He destroyed him that had the power of it, even the Devil (Heb. ii. 14. Col. ii. 15. Hos. xiii. 14).

Observe here the contrast between the 'Αρνίον ως ἐσφαγμένον, the Lamb, as it were slain, in order to live for ever (see v. 12, and i. 18), and to be the cause of eternal Life to all; and what is said below in the Thirteenth Chapter concerning the head of the Beast, as it were slain to death (θηρίον, ως ἐσφαγμένον είς θάνατον, xiii. 3), and the declaration that he goeth to destruction (είς ἀπώλειαν δπάγει, xvii. 8. 11).

The Lamb is here displayed as in the midst (ev μέσω) of the Throne; "In Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily" (Col. ii. 9), and He "is in the bosom of the Father" (John

He is also described as in the midst of the Living Creatures, and of the Elders; Christ, the Lamb slain from the foundation of the World (xiii. 8), is the central figure of the Four Gospels, and also of all the Books of the Old Testament. See Luke xxiv. 25-27. 44. John i. 45.

He is represented as having been slain, and as standing. This Passage affords a striking refutation of the modern notion of the Roman Church, that Christ's sacrifice is perpetually repeated upon Earth in the Holy Eucharist. As the ancient Expositors rightly interpret the passage, "The Lamb stands," He does not lie, as a Lamb which is stain, does. He stands, because He is risen, and dieth no more (i. 18. Rom. vi. 9). He stands, because He is our Advocate, ever living to make intercession for us (Heb. vii. 25), and because He is our Champion, ever ready to succour and defend us (Acts vii. 55, 56).

This is also manifest from the use of the perfect tense here, ἐσφαγμένον, which declares that the Lamb has been once immolated, and that the benefit of His sacrifice remains; and that He is not now continually being sacrificed (σφαζόμενον), and therefore He is here manifested in glory to St. John, as having triumphed over death by dying, and as having been made perfect through suffering (Heb. ii. 10). See Andreas, Arethas, and

This is also further intimated by the conjunction &s, as. St. John does not say that he saw a Lamb being sacrificed, but that he saw a Lamb standing, as if it had been sacrificed: that is, bearing marks of its sacrificial immolation that was past; as Christ showed the prints of the nails, and the mark of the spear in His side, to His disciples (Luke xxiv. 39, 40. John xx. 20. 27). Consequently, the song of the heavenly host is not, Worthy is the Lamb that is being slain, but Worthy is the Lamb that hath been slain (v. 12), and Worthy art Thou to receive the Book, for Thou wast stain (ἐσφάγης, observe the aorist), and didst redeem us by Thy blood (v. 9, see note).

Therefore, although Romish Divines affirm that the Sacrifico on the Cross is continued in the Holy Eucharist, and that Christ is every day immolated on the Altars of their Churches (see above, on Heb. x. 12), yet it is allowed by the best Romish Expositors of the Apocalypse, that this passage literally and grammatically interpreted is not to be expounded in that sense, "although the Holy Spirit may seem here to allude to it." See A Lapide here.

The Seven Horns are on the Head of the Lamb; all the spiritual power and privileges of Churches and of Christians is due to their foundation and elevation upon Christ. He is the Rock on which the Church is built. (Matt. xvi. 18.)

He hath taken the book, and holds it. St. John sees Him in the Vision as holding the Book.

Christ hath taken it, and holds it as His right by virtue of His obedience and sufferings (see Phil. ii. 9). Contrast this with the call to John to take the little roll (x. 8).

8. ὅτε ἐλαβε] when He took; not "when He had taken." The heavenly song of praise to the Lamb coincides in time with Christ's act of taking the Roll.

— Exortes] having each of them a harp, and vials (broad and shallow bowls) of gold, full of incense, which (bowls) are (i. e. signify, see i. 20) the prayers of the saints.

The word φιάλη (connected with φίω, suf-fio, which may be compared with θύω, and thus, incense) does not signify a vial or bottle, but a broad shallow vessel, as the Latin patera from pateo, whence also paten, like a saucer or bowl-like dish (see the authorities in Wetstein, p. 769), in which θυμίαμα, frankincense, was offered (cp. viii. 8; above, Luke i. 9. 13), which was a Hebrew emblem of prayer. (Ps. cxli. 2.) The word φιάλη is borrowed from the Temple-worship, and describes the sacred bowls in which aromatic incense (Exod. xxx. 7-10), lighted by coals taken from the great brazen Altar of sacrifice, in the outer Court of the Temple, was offered on the golden Altar in the inner Court or Holy Place before the Veil, in front of the Holy of Holies. Cp. Lightfoot on Rev. viii.

The Elders are represented here as having a twofold charac-They are enthroned and have triumphal crowns of gold (see iv. 2). But they also fall down and worship the Lamb: and sing praises to Him and offer prayers. This corresponds with the twofold office of Holy Scripture. It has a divine power and authority, as God's Law. It is a royal Law (James ii. 8). Thus it is enthroned and wears a crown. But it is also expressive of man's desires and praises to God for His mercies in Christ. The Scriptures declare the longings of holy men for the Gospel, and they record their gratitude for it.

Observe that the Angels of heaven themselves are represented here as taught by the Living Creatures, and by the Elders, to praise the Lamb.

This also corresponds with the office and prerogative of Scripture. St. Peter declares that the Angels themselves desire to look into the things which are revealed in the Gospel. (1 Pet. i. 12.) And St. Paul says, that "now unto Principalities and Powers in heavenly Places (that is, even to the Holy Angels themselves), is made known through the ministry of the Church the manifold wisdom of God." See note above on Eph. iii. 10.

The Golden Candlestick, or Lamp, of the Church is illumined by the oil of the Spirit poured into it by the Holy Scriptures (see below, xi. 4). And thus the Church being enlightened by God's Word, is enabled to enlighten the world, and even to illuminate Angels, who thence learn a new song, and have a fresh theme for praise to God, and for adoration of Christ.

Accordingly S. Victorinus, writing in the third century, observes here, that "it is the preaching of the Old Testament together with that of the New, which enables the World to sing a new song. New indeed is the song, which speaks of God becoming man. New is the song, which speaks of the Manhood raised to heaven. New is the song, which declares that men are sealed with the Holy Ghost. And the theme of praise in the mouth of the many Angels is the salvation of the World by

Such a revelation as this from St. John, representing Angels in heaven as receiving a knowledge of holy Mysteries from the Scriptures, and as adoring the Lamb, would afford a salutary safeguard to his Asiatic Churches, who needed cautions against the worshipping of Angels, to the disparagement of the Majesty of Christ. Cp. note above on Col. ii. 8.

On the sense of ev here to specify the price paid, see 1 Chron.

xxi. 24. Winer, p. 348.

The English Authorized Version has the perfect tense here, "Thou hast redeemed; Thou hast made priests." But the original has the aorist ἐσφάγης—ῆγόρασας, Thou wast slain, and, by being slain, Thou didst purchase or redeem men by Thy blood, that is, Thou didst effect this blessed work at a special time, by a special act, namely, by Thy death, suffered once for all, on the cross; and thus Thou madest men to be priests to God.

This Vision represents the unanimous consent of Holy Scripture glorifying the Lamb for the universal Redemption accomplished by His death. By the price of His blood shed once for all on the cross, by which He made "a full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction for the sins of the whole world " (see above on v. 6), He purchased to Himself an universal Church (Acts xx. 28; cp. 1 Cor. vi. 20; vii. 23, ἡγοράσθητε τιμῆs), redeeming all men from the bondage of sin and Satan; and paying their ransom to God (λύτρον, see on Matt. xx. 28. Eph. i. 7), and procuring for them pardon from Him (see on Rom. iii. 23—25), and purchasing for them a heavenly inheritance (see above on Eph. i. 14).

This doctrine of Universal Redemption by Christ, is represented here in its practical bearings and moral influence on human conduct. The privileges announced in it are coupled with a declaration of duties. All men, redeemed by Christ, are "redeemed to God;" that is, Christ ransomed them from the bondage of Salan to the service of God. They were made Kings and Priests to our God; Christ purchased for them a Kingdom, the Kingdom of Heaven, and has invested them with a share of His own royalties, by virtue of their mystical incorporation in Him, and by means of the royal unction which flows down from Him their Head on all His members. But these princely prerogatives are conditional on their being also Priests, presenting themselves, their souls and bodies, a living sacrifice to God (Rom. xii. 1, 2), and being a holy Priesthood, offering up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ (1 Pet. ii. 5), Who "gave Himself for us that He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a peculiar people zealous of good works. CH. VI.] The LAME opens the SEALS of the Roll which represents a prophetic view of the History of the Christian Church, from the first Advent of Christ to the end of the World.

The FIRST SEAL opened-

1, 2. kal elbor] And I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seven seals, and I heard one of the four Living Creatures saying, as the voice of thunder, Come and see. And I saw and beheld a white horse, and He that sitteth on him, having a bow; and there was given unto him a crown of Victory, and he went forth conquering and that he might conquer.

The opening of this the FIRST SEAL displays the victorious majesty of Christ, and of His Gospel going forth in its primitive purity and power. The horse, especially among the Jews, was symbolical of war (see above on Matt. xxi. 5, and cp. Ezek. xxvi. 10). The Rider on the White Horse is Christ. This is declared by St. John himself in the latter portion of the Apocalypse, where he says, "I saw heaven opened, and behold a White Horse; and IIe that sitteth upon him called Faithful and True (cp. iii. 14, where this is the title of Christ), and His Name is the Word of God" (xix. 13), St. John continues. Zechariah i. 8, see note there. Mark also the colour of the horse, white,  $\lambda \epsilon \nu \kappa \delta s$ , white as light, lux, lucidus. This word λευκόs, as used in the Apocalypse, is not the Latin albus, but it is candidus: "aliud est candidum esse,—id est luce quadam nitenti perfusum,—aliud album, quod pallori constat esse vicinum." Servius in Æn. xii. (Welstein.)

84. (Welstein.)

This colour is an emblem of purity and victory (see Welstein). and is applied in the Apocalypse to Christ, and is even consecrated by a special restriction and limitation to Him. Thus we read of . It is hair white as wool (i. 14). He promises to His faithful followers a white stone (ii. 17): they will walk with Him in white

(iii. 4). He rides on a white cloud (xiv. 14); they follow Him on white horses (xix. 11. 14). His Bride is attired in white (xix. 8). He will sit on a great white Throne (xx. 11).

The Apocalypse here, as classwhere, reproduces the imagery of ancient Hebrew Prophecy. David had seen and described Christ, riding as a Conqueror on a horse, and bearing in His hand a bow, as He is here seen by St. John. The Psalmist had greeted Him from afar, "Gird Thee with Thy sword upon Thy Thigh, O Thou most Mighty, according to Thy worship and renown; Good luck have Thou with Thine honour. Ride on, because of the word of truth, of meekness, and righteousness, and Thy right hand shall teach Thee terrible things. Thy arrows are very sharp, and the people shall be subdued unto Thee." (Ps. xlv. 4-6.)

Christ appeared in this form in the first age of the Church. This is what is here revealed in the First Seal. When our Lord had ascended in triumph into heaven (says Victorinus here) lle sent His Holy Spirit; and His words went forth like arrows from the Bow of Evangelical preaching, and pierced the heart (cp. fleb. iv. 12), and vanquished the unbelief of the world. Therefore," he adds, "the white Horse represents the trumpet of Christ's Gospel preached throughout the world by the aid of the Holy Ghost." See also the excellent comment of Aug.? and Primasius on this seal. Indeed, all the ancient Expositors recognize Christ here as the Rider on the white horse. The Rider on the white horse (say the Ancient Greek Expositors in Caten. p. 263) is He of whom the prophet Habakkuk speaks, "Thou didst ride upon Thine horses and chariots of salvation. Thy bow was made quite naked." (Hab. iii. 8, 9.)

The poetical features of the noble description in the prophecies of Zechariah may also be recognized here. "When I have bent Judah for Me, filled the bow with Ephrain, and raised up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Greece, and made thee as the sword of a mighty man. And the Lord shall be seen over them; and his arrow shall go forth as the lightning." (Zech. The Apostles and Evangelists were "sons of Zion," they were taken from among the Jews; and they were like Arrows in the Quiver of Christ, Who "bent Judah" as a Bow, and "filled His Bow with Ephraim," when He sent them forth, who were from the seed of Judah and Ephraim. He sent them forth as Evangelical arrows, discharged by His mighty power from His divine Bow, as from that of a Royal Warrior. He routed His divine Bow, as from that of a Royal Warrior. He routed His enemies and overthrew the opposing armies of Greece, that is, the Gentile World, by their means, and brought it into subjection to the mild yoke of the Gospel. (Cp. 2 Cor. x. 4.) As S. Jerome says (on Ps. xlv. vol. ii. p. 636), "Paul was like an arrow of the Lord, short forth from the Lord's bow from Jerusalem even to Illyricum." (Rom. xv. 19.) See above on Zech. ix. 13, 14.

Jesus Christ, in the days of His humiliation, had ridden on the

Jesus Christ, in the days of his humilation, had ridden on the foal of an ass into the Holy City, the Earthly Jerusalem, His own Capital, the City of the Great King; and had there been saluted with hosannas (Matt. xxi. 9), His path had been strewn with palms of victory (John xii. 13), and He had fulfilled the ancient prophecy of Zechariah, who had predicted that Royal Entry (Zech. ix. 9); and by riding on the foal into Sion He had prefigured the peaceful triumph of the Gospel over the Heather world subjected to His arms. So above on Matt. xxi. 5 Monte. world, subjected to His sway. See above on Matt. xxi. 5. Mark xi. 2-10. John xii. 14.

After His Ascension, the same Christ is now displayed in this Seal as no longer riding on the foal of an ass, meek and gentle, but as a Mighty Warrior riding on a White Horse, "conquering and to conquer," and having on His head a crown, the crown of victory,  $\sigma \tau \dot{\epsilon} \phi \alpha \nu \sigma s$ . He has now overcome Death and Satan. He has triumphed over them by the Cross, which and Satan. He has triumphed over them by the Cross, which becomes to Him a triumphal Chariot (see on Col. ii. 15), and He rides upon it a mighty victor (see on 2 Cor. ii. 14); and He has given His disciples power to conquer (1 Cor. xv. 55. 57), and has sent forth His Holy Spirit from heaven to enable them to bear ήκουσα ένδς έκ των τεσσάρων ζώων λέγοντος ώς φωνή βροντής, Έρχου καὶ ίδε. ηκουσα ένος εκ των του αμων ςων  $^{2}$  b Καὶ εἶδον, καὶ ἰδοὺ ἴππος λευκὸς, καὶ ὁ καθήμενος ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἔχων τόξον καὶ b ch. 19. 11.  $^{2}$  b Καὶ εἶδον, καὶ ἰδοὺ ἴππος λευκὸς, καὶ ὁ καθήμενος ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἔχων τόξον καὶ b ch. 19. 11.  $^{2}$  b καὶ εἶδον, καὶ ἰδοὸ ἴππος λευκὸς, καὶ ὁ καθήμενος ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἔχων τόξον καὶ b ch. 19. 11. έδόθη αὐτῷ στέφανος, καὶ ἐξῆλθε νικῶν, καὶ ἴνα νικήση.

His standard in triumph throughout the world, and to cast down "every thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God."

(See on 2 Cor. x. 4, 5.)

The most striking characteristic of the First Age of the Church was the wonderful success of Apostolical Preaching, after the outpouring of the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost. "The Lord gave the word, great was the company of the Preachers" (Ps. lxviii. 11); "their sound is gone out into all lands, and their words into the ends of the world" (Ps. xix. 4). "We Christians" (said a Father of the second century) "are but of yesterday, and we have filled the world,"-" Hesterni sumus, et orbem implevimus." Tertullian (Apol. 38).

This marvellous success of Christianity was therefore the appropriate subject of the prophetic vision of the First Seal.

The First of the Four Living Creatures is here introduced as calling attention to this glorious spectacle. "Come and see." That is, Come and see the Victory of Christ, the Royal Rider on the White Horse. This was a fitting office for the first of the Living Creatures. For he is described (iv. 7) This was a fitting office as having a face like a Lion, the King and Conqueror of Beasts. The Living Creature who has the face of a Lion invites us to behold the Victory of the Lion of the royal tribe of Judah (see v. 5). The first Gospel, that of St. Matthew, specially called the attention of the Church to contemplate the character and office of Christ as King; see above, Introduction to the Gospels,

The SECOND SEAL opened.

3, 4. καl ὅτε] And when He opened the second Seal, I heard the second Living Creature say, Come. And there went out another horse, that was red as fire  $(\pi\nu\tilde{\rho}\beta\delta s)$ : and it was given to him that sate thereon to take Peace from the earth, and that they should slay one another; and there was given unto him a great Sword (μάχαιρα).

Christ, Who has been displayed on the white horse, is followed, in the second, third, and fourth Seals, by another Power, riding on three Horses, in succession, of three different colours.

The Power introduced in these three Seals is opposed to Christ, Who rides on the white horse, is described in the latter part of the Apocalypse as "He that sitteth on the horse" (xix. 19. 21). The white horse is "the horse;" it is the only llorse on which Christ rides. At the end of the Apocalypse He is still riding on the white horse, and the Armies in heaven follow Him on white horses (xix. 11. 14). White is the colour appropriated to Christ: see above, v. 2. The other Horses in the second, third, and fourth Seals vary in colour from one another, and are all opposed to white; they are red, black, ghastly green.

They carry a Power adverse and antagonistic to Christ.

This appears also from the fact that they are attended by Allies who are Enemies of Christ. The Rider on the third of these horses is " Death, and the Grave follows with him;" and, as we read in another part of the Book, "Death and the Grave" are afterwards destroyed by Christ (xx. 13, 14).

Further; the declaration that Christ went forth conquering and to conquer (v. 2), is equivalent to an intimation, that He would have Adversaries to encounter, whom He will overcome. Christ comes forth first. Truth is before Error. God's first Will is, that all men should be saved. (1 Tim. ii. 4. See Introduction to Romans, p. 194.) The good seed is sown before the Tarcs (Matt. viii) 27. Chairt came forth in the first. Tares (Matt. xiii. 27). Christ came forth in the first Scal. The Adversary appears ofterwards in different forms. third, and fourth Seals.

The scenery of the Exodus,-the type of Christ's Victory over Satan, -is ever re-appearing in the Apocalypse. The Victory of the Exodus is thus celebrated by Moses and Miriam; "Sing ye to the Lord, for He hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider hath He thrown into the sea." (Exod. xv. 1. 21.)

ider hath He thrown into the sea." (Exod. xv. 1. 21.)
The ancient Interpreters were agreed that the Horse in the first seal carries Christ, and that the Horses in the second and the two following Seals introduce a Power antagonistic to Christ. This ancient Exposition is thus expressed by Victorinus, Pri-masius, Bede, and Haymo, who say, "In the first seal we see Christ and the glory of the primitive Church; in the next three seals we behold three forms of war (triforme bellum) against her." And before them, S. Irenæus thus speaks: "The Lord was born, in order to conquer, and of Him John speaks in the Apocalypse, 'He went forth conquering and to conquer.' (Iren. iv. 21. 3)

This opinion is confirmed, as we shall see, by the other incidents of the three Seals. And this interpretation of the Seals conveys a striking and important moral.

In the first Seal we see Christ on the white horse, going forth conquering and to conquer. Such He appeared in the primitive age of Christianity. And if we turn to the last Vision of earthly things at the close of the Apocalypse, IIe there reappears. There is the same white horse, and the same Rider upon it. "I saw heaven opened," says St. John, "and, behold, a white horse; and He that sitteth upon him is called Faithful and True, and in righteousness He doth judge and make war. On His head were many crowns. And He was clothed in a vesture dipped in blood, and His name is called THE WORD OF Gop. And the armies which were in heaven followed Him on white horses. And out of His mouth goeth a sharp sword; and He treadeth the winepress of the wrath of God" (xix. 11-15).

We here see the Majesty of Christ. Earthly powers will be shaken; His throne is immoveable. He rides on conquering and to conquer. Worldly things pass away; but His "years will not fail" (Ps. cii. 27). He is "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever" (Heb. xiii. 8).

The SECOND SEAL, where the Rider brandishes the sword, represents the first assault which Satan made against the Church.

That assault was by Persecution. He first stirred the Jews against the Apostles. James the brother of John was killed by the sword (Acts xii. 2). The rancour of the Jews against the Gospel in different parts of the world, is described in the Acts of the Apostles (see Acts xiii. 50; xiv. 2. 19; xvii. 5. 13; xix. 33; and on I These, ii. 14, 15). Therefore St. Paul could say even then, "For Thy sake we are killed all the day long, we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter" (Rom. viii. 36).

Soon afterwards the Spirit of Persecution broke out in the Roman Empire against the Church. The Cæsars, "who bare the sword" of the world (Rom. xiii. 4), unsheathed it against her. The Apostle of the Gentiles was killed by that sword. St. Peter perished in the same cause, at the same place, Rome (see Introduction to Epistles to Timothy, pp. 423, 424).

This Rider on the RED HORSE (red like fire) went forth in the second and third centuries. To cite the words of the ancient Greek Expositors (in Caten. p. 265), "In this Seal we see a prophecy of what we ourselves have seen fulfilled by the Martyrs of the Church; the Power here represented wields a sword, and takes away peace from the earth, according to Christ's own language, 'I came not to send peace on earth, but a sword'" (see Matt. x. 34).

This is the Exposition which all the ancient interpreters have given of this seal. Satan has already been declared by Christ Himself to be the Author of Persecution (see ii. 10). Christ rides on a horse that is white like light ( $\lambda\epsilon\nu\kappa\delta$ s, lux): but the Enemy rides on a horse that is red like fire ( $\pi\bar{\nu}\rho$ ). The same word  $\pi\nu\rho\dot{\rho}\delta s$  is applied to the Dragon, Satan, who persecutes the woman, the Church; see below, xii. 3. The rider has in his hand a sword (μάχαιρα), the instrument of persecution, and used in inture as the symbol of it. Thus St. Paul asks, "Who shall te us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?" (Rom. viii. 35.) And the Apostle, writing under the guidance of the same Spirit who inspired St. John, adds, "Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors (ὑπερνικῶμεν) through Him that loved us." The Apostles and other Martyrs were enabled to conquer him who rode on the red horse, and wielded the Sword of Persecution; they conquered him by the blood of Christ (Rev. xii. 11), Who ever rides on the White horse, and went forth conquering and to conquer.

This Exposition is further confirmed by what is said under

5 α Καὶ ὅτε ἦνοιξε τὴν σφραγίδα τὴν τρίτην, ἦκουσα τοῦ τρίτου ζώου λέγοντος, d Zech. 6. 2, 6. Έρχου, καὶ ἴδε καὶ εἶδον, καὶ ἰδοὺ ἵππος μέλας, καὶ ὁ καθήμενος ἐπ' αὐτὸν ech. 9.4. & 4.7. έχων ζυγὸν ἐν τῆ χειρὶ αὐτοῦ. 6 ° Καὶ ἤκουσα φωνὴν ἐν μέσω τῶν τεσσάρων

the fifth Seal (v. 9), "I saw under the altar the souls of them that had been slain (the same word as that used in the second Seal) for the Word of God, and for the testimony (μαρτύριον) which they held." Those Martyrs had been slain by the sword of him who rides on the red horse.

This Vision had been in part fulfilled when St. John wrote, and was to receive a still larger accomplishment.

Tertullian, speaking of the first Heathen persecution against the Church, adopts the emblem which St. John sees in the Rider's hand in this Vision,—the sword. "The Emperor Nero," he says, "was the first who raged against the Church with the sword of the Cæsars" (Apol. 5). The emblem of St. Paul as a Martyr, is the sword. Many of the Christians in the first age suffered death by fire. They were burnt by night, to enlighten the streets of Rome. See above, on Phil. ii. 15. They suffered under the violence of the Rider on the horse of fire, who wielded the sword.

St. John himself was a Martyr in will, under the power of Rome (see i. 9). Some of the most eminent of his disciples died the death of Martyrs, at the command of the imperial Power, which had the sword of the world. Their language illustrates this Vision of the Apocalypse. They felt this Rider's rage, when they thus wrote, "Why have I given myself up to death, to the fire, to the sword, and to the wild beasts? Yea, verily, when we are near the sword, we are near to God; when we are in the midst of wild beasts, we are in the hand of God. I endure all things in the name of Christ who strengtheneth me to suffer with S. Ignatius (ad Smyrn. 4: cp. his words, ad Rom. 5.) And S. Polycarp, the Bishop of Smyrna, said to the Roman Proconsul, the executioner of Persecution against the Christians, "Thou threatenest me with fire, which burns only for a short season, but thou knowest nothing of that fire which is never quenched, and is reserved for the wicked" (Martyr. Polycarp.

The Rider on the horse of fire, wielding the sword, went forth against Christ and the Church in Ten successive persecutors and the Church in Ten successive persecutors. Second under Domitian; Third, under Trajan; Fourth, under Marcus Aurelius Antoninus; Fifth, under Septimius Severus; Sixth, under Maximinus; Seventh, under Decius; Eighth, under Valerian; Ninth, under Aurelian; Tenth, under Diocletian; making a period of about 240 years, i. e. from de Civ. Dei xviii. 52. Cp. Euseb. viii.—x. Lactantius, de Morte Persecutorum, cap. 7—24. See the authorities in Gieseler, Ch. Hist. §§ 42. 56 and 57. A Poet, who has traced the History of the Church in our own land in pictures which often recall to the mind the imagery of the Apocalypse, thus speaks of the last and fiercest of these Persecutions,-

" Lament: for Diocletian's fiery sword Works busy as the lightning . . . Against the followers of the Incarnate Lord It rages.'

(Wm. Wordsworth, Ecclesiastical Sonnets, Sonnet vi.)

In this Seal the second of the Living Creatures is represented as saying Come. Some MSS. here add καl Υδε, and others read, βλέπε, i. e. and see; but in A, B, C, and many cursives and versions, Έρχου stands alone: and this reading is adopted by Lachm. and Tisch. The same remark is applicable, with some slight modification, to the reading of verse 5 and verse 7, where

A, C have ἔρχου only, and so Lach. and Tisch.

The invitation to see the suffering inflicted on the Martyrs fitly proceeds from the second of the Living Creatures, whose face is like a Calf or Ox (iv. 7), the sacrificial animal, and whose special office it is to display the sufferings of Christ (see above, Introduction to the Gospels, p. xli; and to St. Luke's Gospel, p. 163), Who is "the faithful and true MARTYR" (i. 5; iii. 14), the Exemplar and hope of all "the Martyrs of Jesus" (xvii. 6). See on Acts vii. 60, concerning the death of the Protomartyr, St. Stephen.

The THIRD SEAL opened.

5. καl ὅτε And when He opened the third seal, I heard the third Living Creature say, Come and see. And I saw, and to a black horse, and he that sitteth on him, having a balance in his hand.

And I heard a voice in the midst of the four Living Creatures say, A quart of wheat for a penny (or day's wages), and three quarts of barley for a penny (or day's wages), and the oil and the wine hurt thou not.

This Seal represents the Adversary of Christ and His Church in a new form.

He has now sheathed the Sword, the emblem of Power, and he has taken a Balance, the emblem of Equity, in its stead. He has dismounted from the horse of a fiery red, and now rides on a black horse; and a voice is heard, not from one of the Living Creatures singly as before, but from the midst of the Four, "A chanix of wheat for a denarius, three chanixes of barley for a

The measure here mentioned, the chanix, is about a quart measure (see Hussey on Ancient Measures, pp. 209-214), and was equal to two sextarii in liquid measure; and to two libre, or pounds, in dry measure (see Wetstein, p. 773); and the denarius was a day's wages for a labourer (see Matt. xx. 2), and the daily pay of a soldier (Tacit. Annal. i. 17). The chanix was only the eighth part of a modius; and a modius of wheat was usually sold for a denarius, and sometimes for half that sum (Cicero, Verr. iii. 81, and de Divin. c. 10).

Therefore this Seal denotes a Famine. The circumstance that corn is weighed in a balance, as if it were spicery, and not measured out in bushels, is itself a sign of Dearth. Cp. Lightfoot

The voice from the midst of the four Living Creatures says, "Hurt thou not the oil and the wine." It shows that they were in danger of being hurt. This voice restrains the power of the enemy, and forbids him to do what otherwise he would have done. It is a divine voice checking Satan's power, and protecting the Church.

Some modern Expositors have supposed that this Vision portended only a natural dearth and scarcity. But the Rider on the white horse was Christ, and the Power who follows on the other horses is opposed to Christ.

Therefore we must adopt here the opinion of the Ancient Interpreters, who say that the present seal represents a season of spiritual scarcity, a famine of the Word of God (Amos viii. 11), Rider, "Hurt not thou the oil and the wine," a prohibition to the Rider from the midst of the four Living Creatures, who adore Christ, is a restraint on the evil design of the Rider who would injure the spiritual oil and wine, that is, the means of Grace, which had been typified under those symbols in Ancient Prophecy (Ps. xxiii. 4, 5), and also by the words and acts of Christ, the Good Samaritan, pouring in oil and wine into the wounds of the Traveller, representing Human Nature, lying in the road (see above, on Luke x. 31)

The Horseman riding on the black horse and opposing Christ Who is on the white horse, and having Spiritual Famine in his rear, and being restrained from hurting the Oil and the Wine, holds in his hand a Balance (ζυγδs = τάλαντον, τρυτάνη, Είγμι. Μ.), the emblem of Justice. While therefore he practises wrong, he professes right: as the Prophet Hosea says, there is "in his hand a balance of iniquity" (ζυγδς ἀδικίας, LXX, Ilos. xii. 7). He is like a false Prophet, coming in sheep's clothing, but inwardly a ravening wolf (Matt. vii. 15).

This Vision has been interpreted by the History of the Church. At first, Satan assailed her by open violence, by the fire and sword of Persecution. That attempt has been foreshown in the second Seal. Satan was disappointed. He was foiled and frustrated in that design. She was enabled to resist him by the power of Him Who had ridden forth on the white horse a conqueror and to conquer. The Power of Christ was seen in the sufferings of the Martyrs, who triumphed in death, and over it. Thus Satan's devices recoiled on himself. The charity, patience, and courage of Christian Martyrs, not only men, but tender women, and even children (see S. Clement of Rome, Epist. c. 6), led others to seek and obtain that divine grace, which enabled them to pray for their murderers, and to rejoice in their sufferings, and to die with praises on their lips. They thus excited others to follow them in the path of earthly affliction to the kingdom of

As the Ancient Christian Apologist said to the heathen Persecutors, "Your cruelty draws others to us. The more we are mown down by you, the more our harvest grows; the blood of Martyrs is the seed of the Church" (Tertullian, Apol. ad finem. See above, on Acts viii. 1-4).

Satan therefore altered his plan of attack. He exchanged the sword of open violence for the balance of seeming Equity: and he dismounted from the fiery horse of Persecution; and next he rode forth upon the black horse of Heresy. He raised up many ζώων λέγουσαν, Χοινιξ σίτου δηναρίου, καὶ τρεις χοίνικες κριθων δηναρίου καὶ τὸ έλαιον καὶ τὸν οἶνον μὴ ἀδικήσης.

persons in the Church, who, under specious pretences of regard for Justice, Reason, and Peace, endeavoured to corrupt the Faith. He who had stirred up Persecution was the Author of Heresy. He who sows tares in Christ's field is the Enemy (Matt. xiii. 25. 39). The Christian Fathers ascribe Heresies to him. Thus Theodoret (Præf. in Hæret. fab. lib. iii.), "Heresies have arisen from the malice of the Devil."

The imagery of the Apocalypse is derived from ancient Hebrew Prophecy. The groundwork of its language here is in that of Hosea xii. 7, concerning Ephraim. Ephraim in the Apocalypse is a representative of enmity to Judah, the Church of Christ (see below on vii. 8). And Hosea thus describes Ephraim, "He is a merchant; the balances of deceit are in his hand, he loyeth to oppress." See above on Hosea xii. 7.

The characteristic of Heresy is to be a Merchant, and it bears a balance in its hand. "The Rider," says Aug.? "has a bears a batance in its hand. The Ritter, says Aug.? Has a balance in his hand, for he professes that he is dealing equitably, and yet he is doing wrong." They who teach things contrary to sound doctrine, endeavour "by good words and fair speeches to deceive the hearts of the simple." (Rom. xvi. 18. Cp. Eph. iv.

14; v. 6. Col. ii. 4.)

The Balance is also a symbol of traffic. Here also we have light from Hosea (xii. 7) concerning the bearer of the false balance, "Ephraim is a Merchant." It is a mark of Heresy to trade in spiritual things for its own profit. They who brought in "heresies, denying even the Lord that bought them," are characterized by the Apostle as "making merchandise of souls, through covetousness, with feigned words." (2 Pet. ii. 3. Cp. note on 2 Cor. ii. 17.) They have men's persons in admiration because of advantage (Jude 16), and are therefore compared to Balaam, "who loved the wages of unrighteousness" (2 Pet. ii. 15).

Besides, it is the practice of Heretical Teachers to weigh the articles of Christian Doctrine in the Balance of Human Reason, or of its own carnal Will. Hence early Christian writers traced the origin of Heresy to heathen Philosophy. See Irenaus, ii. 14. 2. Tertullian, c. Hermog. c. 8; de Animâ, c. 3. 23; Præscr. Hæret. c. 30; and S. Hippolytus (Philosophumena, lib. v.), whose language illustrates the present passage of the Apocalypse; "We (Christians) derive our knowledge of divine truth from no other source but the oracles of God. Let us examine, therefore, what the Holy Scriptures declare, and let us acknowledge what they teach; not dealing with these things (the mysteries of Faith) according to our own Reason, or our own Will, nor doing violence to what God reveals; but let us see them in that light in which He has been pleased to unfold them in His Word. (S. Hippolyt. c. Noet. § 9.) Heretics forsake Holy Scripture and profess Geometry." (S. Hippolyt. ap. Euscb. v. 23.) They weigh mysteries in the balance of Reason.

Satan having failed in his endeavours to destroy the Church by violence, transformed himself into an Angel of Light. (2 Cor. xi. 14.) He raised up Heresiarchs who made plausible professions; and by their instrumentality he undermined the foundation of the Christian faith, and of virtuous practice, which is grounded upon it. (See above, Introduction to St. Peter's Second Epistle, pp. 71—73, and to St. John's First Epistle, p. 103.) They distracted and weakened the Church by schisms. Therefore this second attack was more perilous than the former. "Persecution makes Martyrs; but Heresy makes Apostates." Tertullian, Præscr. Hæret. c. 4. Cp. Dean Stanhope on the Gospels, iv. 478—480.

This Third Seal represents the machinations of Heresy against the Church; and the invitation to behold them comes from the third of the Living Creatures, whose face was like a Man (iv. 7). The disbelief of the Incarnation of Christ was the source of almost all the primitive heresies. See above on 1 John iv. 2, 3. "By this ye know the Spirit of God. Every spirit that confesseth Jesus Christ come in the flesh is of God; and every spirit that confesseth not Jesus come in the flesh is not of God; and this is the spirit of Antichrist." The doctrine of the humanity of Christ, not properly understood, was perverted into an occasion of a denial of His Consubstantiality with the Father. Arius, the promoter of that Heresy, is described by ancient authors as dis-tinguished by those characteristics of philosophical calmness and seeming impartiality, which are symbolized by the Balance. See his character as drawn by Socrates (i. 5), and S. Ambrose (de Fide, i. 8), and S. Jerome (adv. Lucif. 3), who says that the Arian Heresy allied itself with the wisdom of this world, and derived its arguments from the Aristotelian Philosophy; and cp. Hooker, V. xlii. 2, and V. lii., where he traces the history of the Heresies concerning the Incarnation, and Two Natures and Person of Christ, from Arius to Nestorius and Eutyches.

It is therefore well said by some ancient Expositors, e.g.

Anselm, Bishop of Havilburg, that in this seal we may recognize the growth of Arianism and its progeny. "The Balance is the instrument of Heresy, which holds a balance of deceit in its hand, making a semblance of equity, and thereby deceiving the unwary."

This interpretation is in harmony with the other incidents of this seal. "A voice is heard in the midst of the Four Living Creatures." It is not a voice uttered by any one of them singly, as in the other seals, but it comes forth from the midst of them all. This voice proclaims the true character of the rider on the black horse. It declares, that, whatever he may feign himself to be, he is an agent of ill.

Christ had been already described as in the midst of the Four Living Creatures (v. 6). He ever speaks in the Four Gospels. And His Words, there recorded by the Holy Ghost, enable the Church to detect and to refute Heresy. As the ancient Expositor (under the name of Aquinas) says here, "The Voice comes from the Four Living Creatures, namely, from the harmonious concord of the Four Evangelists, and reminds us that in evil days we must resort to the Sacred Page. Christ, by the Power of His Word, restrains the Evil One from hurting the oil and the wine of the Christian Sacraments." He has protected, and ever will protect them, against the assaults of the Enemy. Cp. Primasius here, "In vino et oleo vim sacramentorum prohibet violari." The doctrine of the Sacraments is identified with that of His Manhood; see above, Introduction to St. John, pp. 259—264, and to the Epistle to the Ephesians, pp. 275, 276. By guarding the one He defends the other.

The Voice which checks the course of the Evil One, and protects the true Doctrine of the Word and Sacraments of Christ from the enemy's arts and arms, comes forth from the midst of the Four Living Creatures—the Four Gospels. And we see a happy illustration of this prophetical Vision in the fact that in the ancient Councils of the Church, which were summoned for the repression of Heresy, the Four Gospels were placed on a Throne in the midst of the Synod. They were the Royal code by which the deliberations of those Councils were regulated and determined. In one of the Epistles of the great Council of Ephesus to Theodo. sius, the Emperor, it is said that "the Fathers of that Synod were assembled in the Church; and the Holy Gospels were placed on the Throne in the midst  $(\partial v \tau \hat{\varphi} \mu \epsilon \sigma a \iota \tau \acute{a} \tau \psi \theta \rho \delta \nu \psi)$ , and displayed Christ Himself present among them." Act. Concil. Ephes. p. 175, and see ibid. p. 179, where similar expressions are used, τοῦ άγίου Εὐαγγελίου ἐν μέσω κειμένου, καὶ δεικνύντος ἡμῖν παρόντα τὸν τῶν δεσπότην Χριστόν. Other passages to the same effect are cited by Suicer, Thesaur. v. εὐαγγέλιον, p. 1227.

The Truth of this Vision portending the rise of Heresynext in order to Persecution-by the agency of Satan against Christ and the Church, is clearly manifested by the testimony of ancient Church Historians. Theodoret, in the fifth century (Eccles, Hist. i. 2), giving a summary of the History of the Church after the cessation of Persecution, and the establishment of Christianity by Constantine, speaks in remarkable words, which afford a clear illustration of the Apocalyptic Visions of the Third Seal. "Then Churches were repaired, and Christians were appointed to be rulers of the Gentiles, and the temples of Idols were closed; and there were joyful assemblies in the Church. But the malignant and envious demon, the Foe of the World, could not brook this change from storm to peace; and he stirred up Heresies, in order to submerge the ship of the Church. He saw that the errors of Paganism had been exposed, and that the cheats of demons had been detected, and that the creature was no longer worshipped, and that the Creator was adored. Wherefore, he no more excited open assaults against God our Saviour, but having found certain men, graced with the Christian name, but slaves of ambition and vain-glory, he chose them as instruments of his machinations. Thus he brought men back to their old error, not indeed by leading them to adore the creature, but by endeavouring to degrade the Creator of the World to the rank of the creature. At that time there was a certain Presbyter of Alexandria, Arius. The adversary of the Truth suborned him, and by his means made confusion in the Church, and tempted him to oppose the Apostolic Doctrine of Alexander, the Bishop of that Church."

A similar view is presented by more recent Ecclesiastical Annalists. A compendium of Church History (derived from Fleury, Tillemont, Alexander, and Ceillier) presents the following summary: "The first attack which Satan made against the Church during three centuries having been unsuccessful, he devised a second: 'il va substituer à la vaine Philosophie des faux sages, les vains raisonnements des faux Docteurs; il va employer Ezek. 14. 13, 21. 2 Esd. 15. 5.

7 Καὶ ὅτε ἦνοιξε τὴν σφραγίδα τὴν τετάρτην, ἦκουσα τοῦ τετάρτου ζώου λέγοντος, "Ερχου καὶ ίδε. 8 καὶ είδον, καὶ ίδου ίππος χλωρὸς, καὶ ὁ καθήμενος έπάνω αὐτοῦ ὄνομα αὐτῷ ὁ Θάνατος, καὶ ὁ "Αιδης ἡκολούθει μετ' αὐτοῦ· καὶ έδόθη αὐτοῖς έξουσία ἐπὶ τὸ τέταρτον τῆς γῆς ἀποκτείναι ἐν ρομφαία, καὶ ἐν λιμώ, καὶ ἐν θανάτω, καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν θηρίων τῆς γῆς.

contre la foi de l'Eglise l'abus du raisonnement soutenu par l'abus du pouvoir souverain.'" (Abrégé Chronol, de l'Histoire Ecclés. Paris, 1778. Tom. i. p. 259.) Lord Bacon, in his "Essay on Controversies," supplies an excellent historical comment on the prophetical Visions of the Second and Third Seals, "When the fiery trial of Persecution ceaseth, there succeedeth another trial; which, as it were, by contrary blasts of doctrine, doth sift and winnow men's Faith."

On the whole, then, we may acquiesce in the ancient interpretation of the first three Seals. The early Expositors may be safely followed here, because they are speaking of prophecies which had been fulfilled in their day. Their judgment on this matter is thus expressed in the Commentary published under the name of Aquinas,

"The first Seal represents the primitive state of the Church.

"The second Seal displays the Persecution of the Church by the Heathen, in the days of the Martyrs.

"The third Seal unfolds the Persecution of the Church by Heretics," Lastly, we may here apply the prophecy concerning Christ. "Thou shalt go upon the Lion and the Adder; the young Lion and the Dragon Thou shalt tread under Thy fect" (Ps. xci. 13). "The Devil," says Augustine, commenting on that prophecy, "is there represented as a Lion, and also as an Adder. And Christ's Victory over him in both these characters is signified in this Psalm. The Devil rages as a Lion: and he lies in ambush as an Adder. When the Martyrs were slain, then the Devil raged as a Lion; and when Heretics lay snares against the Church, then he lies in ambush as an Adder." But He who went forth conquering and to conquer, "goes upon the Lion and the Adder, and treads them under His feet." His Voice ever speaks in the Gospels, and reveals the wiles, and restrains the power, of the Enemy, and defends the Christian Sacraments. The Creeds of the Church, uttered by His Voice within her, are her symbols and watchwords; and the faithful in every age are enabled by His grace to contend carnestly for the faith, and to "tread on serpents and scorpions, and all the power of the Enemy." (Luke x. 19.)

The FOURTH SEAL opened.

7,8. καὶ  $\delta \tau \epsilon$ ] And when He opened the fourth seal I heard the Fourth Living Creature say, Come and see. And I saw and behold a pale horse : and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hades followed with him. And power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with the sword, and with hunger, and with death, and by means of the Beasts of the earth.

The Horse here mentioned is described as χλωρόs, gilvus, of a pale yellowish green, a livid ghastly colour, like that of a corpse. See the authorities in Wetstein here, p. 773. The word  $\chi\lambda\omega\rho bs$  is joined with grass below, viii. 7, and in Mark vi. 39.

The Rider here is Death, and by his side is Hades, the personification of the Region of departed spirits (see on Luke xvi. 23, and above, i. 18). Hades is joined with Death, below, xx. 13, 14, where Death and Hades are cast into the Lake of Fire. Compare xxi. 4, and St. Paul's words in 1 Cor. xv. 55, derived from those of Christ Himself in the prophecy of Hosea, "O Death, I will be thy plagues; O Grave (Hades), I will be thy destruction." (Hosea xiii. 14.)

The word used in this seal for sword is different from that in v. 4, and signifies properly a Thracian sword, framea (Hesych.); it is not the imperial sword (μάχαιρα) of lawful Authority, such as that of the Emperors of Rome, but it is rather the barbarian scymitar (δομφαία) of savage invaders; and it expresses the violence of wild and uncivilized marauders.

The Beasts of the earth here, θηρία της γης, are savage powers exercising an earthly dominion for earthly ends (cp. the Apocalyptic phrase, "those who dwell on the earth," see on iii.

Observe the article here, "the Beasts," showing that although they have not yet been mentioned, they are present to the divine foreknowledge, and will be described more fully in later parts of the Apocalypse. See particularly xi. 7; xiii. 1—17; xiv. 9—11; xvi. 2. 10. 13; xvii. 3—17; xix. 19, 20; xx. 4. 10.

This prophetic use of the definite article is striking and sublime. It shows that all the imagery of the future is present in the Panorama of Omniscience to Him who inspires St. John.

These words, the Beasts of the Earth, thus introduced, connect the time of this seal with the time of other prophecies in other portions of the Apocalypse.

The words thus used in this book may be called chronological catch-words. They serve to rivet prophecies of contemporaneous events, and to mark identity of subject, as well as sameness of

See above, Introduction, pp. 151, 152.

Here the Beasts are mentioned by anticipation. Similarly below, in ch. xi. 7, in the Vision of the two witnesses, it is said that "the Beast which riseth from the abyss" will make war with them. Nothing had as yet been said concerning the Beast, but he is afterwards described under that name in xvii. 8, and he is already present to the mind and eye of the Writer, illumined by the Holy Ghost.

The careful observation of these catch-words will often supply a clue to the sense of the prediction, and to its proper time and place in the prophetical volume. Evidences of the truth of this principle will be seen in the succeeding pages.

The Apocalypse is composed with marvellous accuracy and minute verbal precision (see above on chaps. ii. and iii.); and the use of a phrase in one part of the book serves often to determine its sense in another. This is what might be expected. The Apocalypse is a prophetical book; and the interpreter needs such helps as these; and the more he examines the language of the Apocalypse, the more he will be convinced that they are not denied him.

Let us apply this principle here. We find, on examination, that the word  $\theta\eta\rho\ell\sigma\nu$ , Beast, is used in no less than thirty-seven places of the Apocalypse, and always in a special sense, signifying a particular power; we may therefore reasonably infer that this word is used in the same sense in the passage now before us. Cp. notes below, x. 3, and on xi. 9.

This Seal, therefore, presents a compendious view of the sufferings which the Church of Christ would have to endure from rarious workings of the Evil One.

In the second seal the instrument of the Enemy was Persecution, in the third it was Heresy. But here in the fourth seal the evil is multiform.

History explains this.

In the fifth and next following centuries the Heresies and Divisions of Christians gave occasion to incursions of Barbarians, such as the Goths (A.D. 410), the Huns (A.D. 452), the Vandals (A.D. 455), and other hordes, which overran a great part of Europe and Africa. They are represented in this seal; and its range extends to the ravages of Mohammedanism in the seventh century (A.D. 622), and beyond it.

The words Famine and Death signify the moral and spiritual woes of this period; woes consequent on Heresies and Schisms. The voice of sound learning and scriptural exposition had become Spiritual Dearth and Death were dominant in Christenfeeble.

At length, also, in the ninth and tenth centuries, another Power began to domineer, which, on account of the extent and duration of its sway, will be more fully described in subsequent prophecies; and is now characterized by a few striking words, "the Beasts of the earth;" words which point out the chrono-logical place of the present prophecy, and prepare the reader for the fuller description which will be presented to him hereafter. See chap. xiii. 1-18; xvii. 3-17; xix. 19, 20; xx. 4. 10.

The colour of the horse in this seal, -pale, or ghastly as a corpse,—and the companionship of Death, as well as Hunger, seem to be peak the prevalence of deadness of soul, and of Infidelity.

The invitation to view the incidents of this seal is represented as proceeding from the Fourth Living Creature, who had the appearance of a flying Eagle (iv. 7). It was the special office of St. John, the writer of the Fourth Gospel, the Evangelical Eagle, to declare in that Gospel the divine power of Christ after His Resurrection (John xx., xxi.), when, like an Eagle, He had moulted the plumage of the Grave, and renewed His strength, and became young (Ps. ciii. 5), and mounted up with wings like an Eagle (Isa. xi. 31), and carried His young on His wings from their earthly nest, and soared with them to heaven. (See above on Matt. xxiv. 28. Luke xvii. 36.) And St. John in his Apocalypse de-

The Fifth Seal. 9–11.  $\kappa al~\delta \tau \epsilon ]$  And when He opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that had been slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held fast. And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, the Holy One and true, dost Thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?

And a white robe was given unto each of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little time, until their fellow-servonts also and their brethren, that are to be killed as they were, should be fulfilled.

The reading of the last word here is disputed. Elz. has πληρώσονται, which has not much authority. Lach. has πληρωθῶσιν, with A, C, and this seems the preferable reading. Tisch.

has πληρώσωσιν, with B.

St. John being " in the spirit," was enabled to see departed spirits; he beheld them with the spiritual eye enlightened by the Holy Ghost. Tertullian (de Animâ, c. 8) says, "in spiritu factus animas martyrum conspicit." Cp. ibid. c. 10, and de Resur. carnis, c. 25. The souls of Martyrs are represented here as under the Altar; because they had been slain as Victims to God; their bodies had been sacrificed on His Altar, and their blood, in which is the life (Gen. ix. 4), had been poured out upon it, and flowed down beneath it, and cried from the ground, as did that of Abel the first Martyr. (Gen. iv. 10. Matt. xxiii. 35.)

The imagery of this Vision is derived from the sacrificial service of the Temple (Exod. xl. 29); "the blood of the victims being received by the sacrificing Priest in a vessel was poured out at the foot of the Altar." (Jahn, Archæol. § 377; see Levit. iv. 7; viii. 15. Isa. xxix. l.) The sacrificial word (ἐσφαγμένων) here rendered slain, is the same as is applied to Christ, the True and Faithful Martyr, the Lamb slain (see v. 6. 9. 12; xiii. 8), and to the Martyrs (in xviii. 24). This imagery had been already adopted by the Apostle St. Paul at Rome, on the eve of his own martyrdom; "I am already being poured out, and the time of my departure is at hand." (2 Tim. iv. 6.)

St. John sees here the disembodied souls of departed saints; and he represents them, not as sleeping in insensibility, but as conscious of the past; and even as measuring the lapse of time, "Lord, how long?" and as earnestly longing and praying for the Coming of Christ. "How long, O Lord, the holy and true, dost Thou not judge?" "The souls of Martyrs," says Tertullian (Scorpiace, c. 12), "repose in peace under the Altar, and cherish a spirit of patience (patientiam pascunt) until others are admitted to fill up their communion of glory." And S. Irenœus says (v. 31, Grabe), "The souls of the departed go to the place assigned them by God, and there abide until the Resurrection, when they will be reunited to their bodies; and then the Saints, both in soul and body, will come into the presence of God." Cp.

S. Cyprian de Lapsis, p. 446; and de Bono Patientiæ, p. 592.

The souls here seen by St. John are those which repose "in Abraham's bosom," and have a foretaste of future glory (Luke xvi. 22). See the Catena here, pp. 274, 275; and Aug. (?), who says, "The souls of the saints are in Paradise (Luke xxiii. 43), but they are said to be under the Altar, because their blood is shed on the earth, and crieth from the ground."

St. John, in another part of the prophecy (see xx. 4), reveals a similar vision of the disembodied souls of the Martyrs in the intermediate state. That revelation is similar to St. Paul's representation of the present condition of the departed spirits of the Ancient Patriarchs, who wait till the General Resurrection and Day of Judgment for their "perfect consummation and bliss, both in body and soul, in eternal and everlasting Glory." (Office for the Burial of the Dead.) See Heb. xi. 40.

In the mean time, they enjoy the rest and refreshment of Paradise (Luke xxiii. 43), and are in Abraham's bosom (Luke xvi. 22). Therefore, as the Apocalypse says, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, for they rest from their labours" (xiv. 13). The voice here assures them that the time of their Vol. II.—Part IV.

rest is short, that is, it is short, compared with the time of future fruition of joy in eternity: and that ere long, when the number of their fellow-servants and brethren, God's Martyrs, has been accomplished, their bliss will be consummated by the Resurrection of their bodies, and by the gracious invitation of Christto "inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the World." (Matt. xxv. 34.)

As to the sense of ἐκδικεῖs, see above, on the prayer of the poor widow, Luke xviii. 3. 5; and below, xviii. 20, and the words of the Psalmist, zealous for the vindication of God's honour by the execution of His judgments on those who blaspheme His Name:

Ps. lxxix. 10-13.

It is well said by Bede here, "Those souls which offered themselves a living sacrifice to God, pray eternally for His Coming to judgment, not from any vindictive feeling against their enemies, but in a spirit of zeal and love for God's glory and Justice, and for the Coming of that Day, when sin, which is rebellion against Him, will be destroyed (see Heb. ix. 28), and their own bodies will be raised. And so in that prayer wherein Christ teaches us to forgive our enemies, we are also taught to say, 'Thy Kingdom come,'"

11. στολή λευκή] a white robe Elz. has here στολαί λευκαί, while robes, but the reading of A, B, C, στολή λευκή, in the singular, is far preferable, as indicating that the one and same white robe of Christ's righteousness was given to each of them (cp. xix. 14). All their unrighteousness is forgiven, and their sin is covered by that white robe (cp. James v. 20. 1 Pet. iv. 8), and they have a delightful consciousness of God's favour, and are with Christ (Phil. i. 23), and enjoy a blissful foretaste of heavenly and everlasting felicity.

Introduction to the SIXTH SEAL.

In the Apocalypse the number six always introduces a time of severe trial and suffering, previous to a seventh or Sabbatical period of Rest which ensues, and closes the series.

St. John saw the Visions of the Apocalypse on the Lord's Day (i. 10), the First Day of the week: and all these Visions are arranged in groups of sevens. Seven Epistles are sent; seven seals are opened; seven trumpets sound; seven vials are poured out. They all end in a Sabbath of rest, after an hexaemeron or six days' course of labour and sorrow. The number seven occurs nearly fifty times in the Apocalypse; see below, note at end of chap. xi.

There is a Harmony between the seven seals, indicating the seven successive periods of the sufferings of the Church, and the seven days of the Passion Week of Christ.

The first day of that week was Palm Sunday. Christ then came forth riding into Jerusalem, and was welcomed as a Conqueror and King. See on Matt, xxi. 1—11. Mark xi. 1—11. Luke xix. 29—44. John xii. 12—16.

So it was in the first seal. Christ came forth riding on the white horse, conquering and to conquer. See above, v. 2.

On the second day of that week, "the Chief Priests, and Scribes, and Chief of the People sought how they might destroy Him." Mark xi. 18. Luke xix. 47.

The Second Seal displays a similar working of the power of the Adversary against the Church (v. 3); and like analogies may be traced between the other days of the Passion Week of Christ, and the sufferings of the Church, as displayed in the seals.

The climax of Christ's Passion Week was Friday. The sixth Day was the Day of the Crucifixion.

So the Sixth Seal reveals the crisis of greatest suffering for the Church; it is the Friday of her Passion Week.

But it is also the eve of the Sabbath of her rest.

On the day of Christ's Passion, there was a strange and unnatural darkness. So, as this Seal reveals, will it likewise be in the sixth age of the Church, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find the Faith on earth?" see Luke xviii. 8. On Good Friday, there was desertion of Christ; and the Kings of the Earth stood up, and the Rulers took counsel together against the Lord and against His Anointed (Ps. ii. 2. Acts iv. 26, 27). So it will be in the last age of the Church. The Love of many will wax cold (Matt. xxiv. 12). Men will not endure sound doctrine k ch. 16. 18. Joel 2. 10, 31. & 3. 15. Matt. 24. 29. Acts 2. 20.

(2 Tim. iv. 3). The Woman will suffer persecution, and be driven into the wilderness (Rev. xii. 6. 14). As at the Crucifixion there was an Earthquake, and the rocks were rent (Matt. xxvii. 51), so it will be then. As Christ's Death brought confusion and overthrow to Satan and his adherents, and Victory to all true believers, and was their entrance to Rest and a Giorious Resurrection; so the sufferings of the last age will be succeeded by, and crowned with, everlasting felicity. Then especially the by, and crowned with, everlasting felicity. Then especially the Church—and every true member of the Church—will find and feel that we must through much tribulation enter the Kingdom of God (Acts xiv. 22), and if we suffer with Him we shall also reign with Him : cp. Rom. viii. 17.

The Sixth Seal.

12-17. καὶ εἶδον] And I saw when He opened the sixth seal, and there was a great Earthquake, and the Sun became black as sackcloth of hair: and the whole Moon became as blood; and the Stars of heaven fell to the earth even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind: and the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every Mountain and Island were moved out of their places. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the chief captains, and the rich men, and the mighty men, and every man bond and free, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains: and they say to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great Day of His wrath is come; and who is able to stand?

This Seal has special interest for us. It appears to be now being fulfilled in the confusions, conflicts, and convulsions of Kingdoms and States at this time.

Some Modern Interpreters have supposed that this Sixth Seal refers only to the establishment of Christianity in the Fourth

But all the ancient Expositors were agreed, as was observed before, that the Sixth Seal brings the prophecy down to the last age of the Church and the World. Cp. Tertullian, adv. Hermog. c. 34; and S. Hippolytus, pp. 113. 115 (ed. Lagarde); and the Auctor Anonym. adv. Novatianum, p. 781 of S. Cyprian, Works, ed. Venet. 1758; and the Ancient Greek Expositors here, in Caten., p. 282; and Primasius and other Ancient Latin ones; and the heading of this chapter in the Authorized Version.

As it is essential to the right understanding of the Apocalypse that this point should be settled, the following considerations are submitted to the reader, in confirmation of the Ancient

(1) The Apocalypse is a sequel to the Book of Daniel. St. John takes the thread of Prophecy from the hand of Daniel. He deals with many of the same subjects, and adopts his imagery

It is therefore highly probable that the Holy Spirit, Who inspired Daniel and St. John, and Who is a Spirit of Wisdom and Order, would present the prophetic Visions to their minds, according to the same plan.

In examining the prophecies of Daniel, we find that the Holy Spirit first presents a rapid sketch of the future from Daniel's age to the Day of Doom. This is done in the vision seen by Nebuchadnezzar, and revealed by God to Daniel, and interpreted by Daniel under the divine inspiration (Dan. ii.

That first Vision in the Book of Daniel has its parallel in this first Vision of the Apocalypse.

Each of these Visions-that of the image in Daniel, and this of the Seals in St. John-displays a brief view of the future, even to the end of the World.

Again; in the Book of Daniel the Vision of the quadriform Image is succeeded by the Vision of the Four Beasts (vii. 1-27), in which the subject of the former prophecy is displayed in a different and ampler form; and that Vision is succeeded by other subsidiary Visions (viii. 2-25), in which some of the elements and features of the former Visions are exhibited in clearer outline and larger dimensions.

Precisely the same method is employed in the Apocalypse.

See above Introduction, p. 152.

(2) If we scrutinize the context and contents of the Sixth Seal, we shall see that it cannot refer to the age of Constantine, nor to any other age than the last age of the Church. The phenomena of this Seal do not belong to the fourth century. It could not be said then, that "The Great Day of the wrath of the Lamb was come" (v. 17); or that it was a time of general panic and confusion; or that it was succeeded by the completion and gathering together of God's elect from all nations under heaven, and by an universal triumph of His people, and by an universal ascription of praise to Him and to the Lamb, and by the admission of the Saints to stand before His throne, and to serve in His Temple day and night (vii. 15). Day of Universal Resurrection and of the Last Judgment shall come, then—but not till then—will the Saints be admitted into heaven, to stand before God's throne, and to serve in His Temple for ever. See above, vv. 10, 11.

The Events just specified form the immediate Sequel of the Sixth Seal.

Hence it is evident that the prophecies in the Sixth Scal were not fulfilled in Constantine's age, nor will they be accomplished till the eve of the consummation of all things

(3) This appears also from the tenor of the prophecies in the preceding seals; which lead by a successive series of visions from the Time of Christ's First Advent to the last age of the Church.

Here then we have a clue to the interpretation of this Seal; and we shall find that the succeeding Visions are cleared up by this exposition, and reflect additional light upon it, and augment the evidence of its truth.

The imagery of this Seal is similar to that with which our Blessed Lord Himself describes the circumstances of His own Second Coming to Judgment (see Matt. xxiv. 29-31). "The Sun shall be darkened, and the Moon shall not give her light, and the Stars shall fall from heaven, and all the powers of the heavens shall be shaken; and then shall appear the Sign of the Son of Man in heaven, and then shall all the tribes of the Earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory."

This prophecy of our Lord introduces the mention of the last Trumpet, and the gathering together of His elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to another. Matt. xxiv. 31.

Here is another parallel to this seal; in which a command is given to the four Angels at the four corners of the earth, not to hurt the earth till the Servants of God are sealed; and then the number of the elect is completed (vii. 4-9).

Our Lord also in another place thus describes His own Second coming, "There shall be signs in the Sun, and in the Moon, and in the Stars, and upon the Earth distress of Nations, with perplexity, the Sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that shall be coming on the Earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken; and then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory" (Luke xxi. 25—27). See also the prophecies of Isaiah (li. 6. 2 Pet. iii. 7. 10, 11) concerning the last days. Those prophecies, and that of our Lord just quoted, harmonize with the Vision of this Seal, and show its reference to the same events.

Lastly, the imagery of this Seal connects it with other Visions in the Apocalypse itself, descriptive of the condition of the World

The mention here of the war and rout of the Kings of the Earth, i. e. the powers of this world opposed to Christ and to the Kings from the East (xvi. 12), and the mention also of the great Earthquake in this Seal, and the moving of Mountains and Islands, seem to show that the time of this Seal coincides with that of the Sixth and Seventh Vials, described in the sixteenth Chapter as follows: "12. And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river, Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way might be prepared of the kings from the East. And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs from the mouth of the dragon, and from the mouth of the beast, and from the mouth of the false prophet. 14. For they are spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great Day of — κρύψατε ἡμᾶς—ἀπὸ τῆς ὀργῆς τοῦ 'Αρνίου] hide us from the wrath of the Lamb. Awful and striking words. Save us from the wrath of Him whom we despised as weak and gentle as a Lamb, and whom we now find to be strong and terrible as the Lion.

He who was preached to us as the "Lamb of God, taking away the sins of the World," and dying to save us, is now become the Author of our punishment and woe. Dreadful discovery! Compare xiv. 14.

Perhaps also this will be said by some in a tone of desperate derision and fiendish blasphemy. Cp. xvi. 9, 11, 21.

Contrast this exclamation of agony with the ascription of salvation to God and the Lamb on the part of the servants of God (vii. 9). They will pass in safety through the great tribulation (vii. 14), and will stand for ever before the Throne of God and the Lamb (vii. 9), and the Lamb will lead them to waters of Life (vii. 17).

Brief Retrospect of the preceding SEALS.

In the First Seal we saw our Blessed Lord and Saviour arrayed as a mighty Warrior, crowned, riding in triumph on a white horse, conquering and to conquer. Such He appeared at the period of the First Seal; that is, in the primitive age of Christianity.

The succeeding Seals have displayed Satan, the Adversary of Christ and His Church. Christ, we have seen, is ever one and He is ever on the white horse; ever pure, ever true, ever victorious. But Satan changes his form and colour. He is first terrible, on a horse of blood, and brandishes a sword. next appears on a black horse, and holds a balance. He then comes forth on a pale horse, with Death, and Hades, and Hunger, and Beasts in his train. Christ is ever the same; but Salan assumes different shapes and colours, and has different weapons and allies, to suit the temper of the times. When he is foiled in one device, he resorts to another. He knows where men are most vulnerable, and assails them accordingly; and so it will ever be to the end of the world; when, having exhausted all his arts, he will, like the fabled Proteus after all his changes, return to his original shape, and fiercely persecute the Church (xx. 8, 9).

But now look at the end.

The day will at length come, when all his efforts will be defeated. Look at the close of the Apocalypse. He Who is on the White Horse has subdued all His enemies. The two Beasts (xiii. 1. 11), the allies of Satan, are taken by Christ, "and cast alive into the lake of fire" (xix. 20). "Death and Hades are cast into the lake of fire; which is the second death" (xx. 14). And at last, Satan himself is "cast into the lake of fire, to be tormented for ever and ever" (xx. 10).

The purpose therefore of the Seals is to assure the Christian Church that Christ has gone forth conquering and to conquer; and that whatever His enemies may do, His Victory is certain and will be eventually complete.

They also warn her, that she must not look for peace, or for perfect purity on earth. They reveal to her that she must expect to be tried by manifold forms of persecution from without, and of error from within. But she is also cheered with the assurance that all who remain true to Christ will be partakers of His Victory.

This design of the Seals is clearly brought out by the answer of the Angel at the end of the Vision of the sixth Seal, just before the final consummation, when he describes the whole company of those who are saved, even from the first Advent of Christ. "These," he says, "are they that are coming out of the great tribulation, and who washed their robes white in the blood of the Lamb " (vii. 14).

We are taught also by these Visions how History ought to be written, and how it ought to be read. And in speaking here of History we may include History not only of the Church, but of the World. Our Lord says, "the Field is the World" (Matt. xiii. 33). The Church is universal in time and place, and whatever concerns the World concerns the Church, and whatever concerns the Church, concerns all men.

We learn from these Visions to study History in this spirit. We learn to contemplate its events not only as facts teaching civil wisdom, but to regard them as St. John teaches us to do; that is, as exhibiting the operations of two opposite Powers, the power of Christ on one side, and the power of Satan on the other. Thus the early Christian Historians treated historical events; here is their great excellence. They looked on Persecution, and Heresy, and Superstition, and Infidelity, as weapons of Satan against Christ. In them they saw the Evil One riding, as it were, on the red horse, and the black horse, and the pale horse, against Him who sitteth on the white horse. If we do likewise, we shall study History with the spirit of St. John.

Lastly: to whom do we now belong? Whom are we following? Him Who rideth for ever on the white horse? or him who sitteth, now on the red horse, now on the black, now on the pale horse? Christ, or Satan? Doubtless in this world Satan has the grave. But prospice finem. Let us have our eye fixed on the end. Where shall we be then? With those who "follow Christ on white horses?" or with "the Beasts, the Grave, and Satan, who will be cast into the lake of fire, which is the Second Death?"

On these verses compare above, vi. 12. Corners of the Earth, ready to gather in God's Elect from the four winds of heaven (see Matt. xxiv. 31), and to execute His Judgments on the ungodly. Compare Matt. xiii. 39. 41, and 2 Thess. i. 7, 8, where the Angels are represented as ministers of His power and retributive justice on His enemies.

Another Angel appears, ascending from the East or sunrising (ἀνατολή). This Angel is either Christ Himself, or a special Messenger from Christ. Christ is described in Scripture, and particularly in this Book, as the ἀνατολή, or East (see on Luke i. 78, and below, on xvi. 12), and this Angel is a superior Angel, for he here gives a command to the four Angels; and they are his ministers. They are four, as gathering from the four winds.

Hurt not ye the Earth, he says, neither the Sea, nor any Tree, till we have sealed the servants of our God on their foreheads. The four Angels therefore are not only empowered to hurt, but they are also commissioned to Seal. The Scaling must first take place, before the infliction of vengeance.

The four Angels are commanded to restrain the Winds, or blasts of destruction, from blowing on the Earth, that is, on Earthly Powers, opposed to those of Heaven (see on i. 7; iii. 10), and from blowing on the Sea, the element of storms, which is the Apocalyptic emblem of Nations in a state of restless agitation, swelling, raging, and tossing their waves on high against God (cp. Ps. xxix. 9; xlvi. 3; lxv. 7); and from hurting the Trees, the Great and Powerful ones of this world, flourishing in the verdure and luxuriance of earthly prosperity. The Rich and Powerful of this world are often compared in Scripture to Trees, and are symbolized in its poetic imagery by Cedars of Lebanon, and Oaks of Basan for stateliness and strength, and by green Baytrees for prosperity. Cp. Job xxix. 19. Ps. xcii. 12-14. Isa. ii. 13. Jer. xvii. 8. Ezek. xvii. 3, 4. Dan. iv. 10-16. Hos. xiv.

The Sealing takes place first; the Vengeance follows. The important fact is thus made manifest, that the main design and primary purpose of God's workings in this world is the preservation and beatification of His servants; and that the Punishment of the opposing powers of this World which are His Enemies, and are here represented by the Earth, Sea, and Trees, is only secondary and subordinate; that it is not directly designed by Him, but consequent on their sins. Cp. Matt. xxiv. 41.

The Angels are restrained from inflicting punishment, until they have sealed the servants of God on their foreheads. This action of sealing with the seal or signet of God, is equivalent to a declaration, that they, who are so sealed, appertain to God, and are distinguished as such from others who do not belong to Him, and are assured by Him of His protection against all cvil; and that they are completed in number and consummated in happiness; cp. the use of σφραγίζω, to seal, in Isa. viii. 16. Dan. ix. 24. John iii. 33; vi. 27. Rom. xv. 28. Eph. i. 13; iv. 30.

This Vision may be compared with the Vision in Ezekiel (ix. 4-6), where the Saints are sealed with the letter Thau, the last letter of the Hebrew Alphabet (see the original Hebrew there, and also Vulg.); showing their constant perseverance to the end, and the unfailing protection of God. See above on Ezek. ix. 1-6.

The forehead is specified as that on which the divine impress is received. Cp. Rev. xxii. 4. The forehead is the most conspicuous part of the human body; as the ancient Fathers observe, it is the seat of boldness and constancy both for evil and good (see Jer. iii. 3. Ezek. iii. 7-9); and it shows whether a man is a faithful soldier of Christ, or sold in slavery to the Evil One.

Hence the Cross is impressed on the forehead in the Sacrament of Baptism (which was often called  $\sigma\phi\rho\alpha\gamma$ ls, or seal, by ancient Christian writers. See Euseb. iii. 23, in a narrative concerning St. John. Greg. Naz. Orat. xl. Suicer, Thesaur. p. 1198,  $v. \sigma\phi\rho\alpha\gamma$ ls), in order that he who bears it "may not be ashamed to confess the faith of Christ crucified, but may manfully fight under His banner against Sin, the World, and the Devil, and continue His faithful soldier and servant unto his life's end."

The Antichristian Power is also represented as imitating this by a similar process with regard to its own servants, whom it seals on the forehead (Rev. xiii. 16; xiv. 9; xx. 4).

4. καl ήκουσα] And I heard the number of them which were sealed: and there were sealed an hundred and forty and four thousand of every tribe of the children of Israel. Of the tribe of Judah were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Reuben twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Gad twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Nepthalim twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Manasses twelve thousand. of the tribe of Simeon twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Levi twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Isacchar twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Isacchar twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Joseph twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Benjamin were sealed twelve thousand.

With regard to the last of these verses it may be observed that Elz. repeats here the word ἐσφραγισμένων twelve times after χιλιάδες; but it is found only twice in A, B, C, and many Cursives. Also, Elz. has ιβ' instead of δώδεκα, which is in A, C; and in v. 4 Elz. has  $\rho\mu\delta'$  instead of the fuller orthography of the numerals.

What do these ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FOUR THOUSAND represent?

They do not signify the literal Israelites; but they represent the "blessed company of all faithful people," gathered together from all parts of the World, and constituting the Church Universal, redeemed by Christ's Blood, and sealed by His Spirit, and continuing stedfastly in the doctrine preached by His Apostles, sent by Him and taught by the Holy Ghost.

This is the interpretation given to this passage (vv. 2-12) by the Christian Church, appointing it to be read as an Epistle on the Festival of "All Saints." The truth of this interpretation may appear from the following considerations:—

(1) The 144,000 do not signify the literal Israel.

One of the main designs of the Apocalypse is, to show that believers in Christ are the true Israel of God; and that all the promises made by God to Abraham, the Patriarchs, and the Prophets, are fulfilled to those who are incorporated in the Mystical body of Christ, the true seed of Abraham, and abide in Him unto the end. See above, Introduction, p. 149.
St. John does not concede even the title of Jew to the St. John does not concede even the title of Jew to the literal Israel. "They say that they are Jews, and are not" (ii. 9; iii. 9). The Jerusalem, of which the Apocalypse speaks, is always the Christian Church (see iii. 12; xxi. 2. 10). The Sion is the sprirtual Sion (see xiv. 1), the Royal City of Christ, Who has the key of David (see iii. 7), and Who is the Root and off-spring of David (v. 5; xxii. 16).

In this respect the language of the Apocalypse had been already anticipated by the Apostle of the Gentiles. "He is not a Jew," says St. Paul, "who is one outwardly, neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh: but he is a Jew who is one inwardly, and circumcision is that of the heart" (Rom. ii. 28, 29); and he says "We are the Circumcision" (Phil. iii. 3; cp. Col. ii. 11). "If ye be Christ's ye are Abraham's seed" (Gal. iii. 29. Rom. ix. 8). "Ye are come to Mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to the spirits of just men made perfect." (Heb. xii. 22, 23; cp. Gal. iv. 26.)

Here was a source of inexpressible comfort to all the children of Abraham, especially in the latter days of St. John's age, when the literal Jerusalem was trodden under foot by the Gentiles. glories had been eclipsed by those of the Christian Church, or rather they had been swallowed up in its splendour. The spiritual Sion had risen on the ruins of the material Jerusalem. No longer were the eyes of the faithful to be fixed on the stones and buildings of the Temple, and on the transitory glories of its evanescent Ritual. They needed not the Levitical shadows, for they posδώδεκα χιλιάδες εκ φυλής Ζαβουλων, δώδεκα χιλιάδες εκ φυλής Ἰωσήφ, δώδεκα χιλιάδες εκ φυλής Βενιαμίν, δώδεκα χιλιάδες εσφραγισμένοι.

sessed the Evangelical substance. They were now "fellow-citizens with the saints," in every age and clime, and they looked upwards to the solemn fabric and glorious solemnities of "the city that hath foundations;" "the Jerusalem that is above, which is the mother of us all." (Gal. iv. 26.) They beheld with the eye of Faith the great High Priest of their profession, ministering in the Heavenly Sanctuary within the Veil.

(2) Nor do the 144,000, who are sealed in this Vision, represent only the Jews who believe in Christ; they represent all the faithful, whether Jews or Gentiles.

The names of the Tribes specified here are not to be understood literally as signifying Tribes of Israelitish Christians. This is clear from the fact that one of the twelve tribes, that of Dan, does not appear at all in the List. It cannot be imagined that not a single person would be saved of that Tribe, to which many holy men had belonged.

Besides, if the names of the Tribes were to be taken literally, so ought also the number of those who are sealed in each tribe:

But it is incredible, that precisely the same number of persons should be saved from each of the Twelve Tribes here mentioned; and only so small a number as 144,000 should be saved in all.

(3) Therefore, we may rest assured that the interpretation is sound, which is supplied here by the ancient Expositors, and is adopted by some of the best modern commentators, especially Vilringa and Hengstenberg in his notes on xi. 13. Neither the names, nor the numbers, in this Vision are to be understood literally.

The present Vision becomes clear, when we regard these ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FOUR THOUSAND as representing the glorified company of the whole Church of the Saints of God. The number 144,000 represents their consummation. As is well said by S. Augustine (de Doctrina Christiana), "The number Twelve multiplied into Twelve makes One Hundred and Forty-Four, the number in the Apocalypse, which designates the universal Society of the Saints:" and so Aug.? here, "centum quadraginta quatuor Millia omnis omnino Ecclesia est."

The number here mentioned, 144,000, is produced by Twelve squared, multiplied into Ten cubed. Twelve is the number of the Apostles; and being multiplied into itself and by a Thousand, it offers an apt representation of the Company of believers, "of a thousand generations," holding the Apostolic doctrine and discipline unto the end, in solid constancy and unity.

Geometrical dimensions were often used by the ancients, as exponents of moral qualities. Thus we have ἄνδρα χεροί τε καὶ ποσὶ καὶ νόφ τετράγωνον (a man perfectly squared), in Plato (Protag. 339, B). Compare Horace's metaphor, "Fortis et in se-ipso totus teres atque rotundus." 2 Sat. vii. 86.

The Number Twelve in the Apocalypse represents what is Apostolical. Thus the faithful Church is crowned with Twelve Stars (xii. 1); the Church glorified in the heavenly Jerusalem has Twelve Gates, and Twelve Angels, and has the names of the Twelve Tribes of Israel inscribed upon the Gates (xxi. 12); and it has Twelve foundation-stones, and on them written the names of the Twelve Apostles of the Lamb (xxi. 14); and the heavenly City lies four square, with 12,000 furlongs on each side, and its walls are 12 × 12 cubits high (see xxi. 17); and its Twelve Gates are Twelve Pearls (xxi. 21); and the Tree of Life yields Twelve Fruits (xxii. 2); all in harmony with our Lord's words to His

Apostles, "Ye shall sit on Twelve Thrones judging the Twelve Tribes of Israel." (Matt. xix. 28.)

Compare the note above, Matt. x. 2, on the Moral and Theo-

Compare the note above, Matt. x. 2, on the Moral and Theological value and signification of the Number Twelve, and also on its components Three and Four; and see below on xi. 3.

This number, like the other numbers in the Apocalypse, has therefore a didactic character. The number Twelve times Twelve thousand, describing the Servants of God sealed in their foreheads, exhibits a fundamental principle, which may be demonstrated from other parts of Holy Scripture. It displays the duty of internal union, and of visible communion, and of stedfast continuance "in the doctrine and fellowship of the Apostles, and in breaking of bread and prayers." (Acts ii. 42.) "The sameness of the number sealed in each of these Twelve Tribes," say the ancient Greek Expositors, p. 287, "shows the universal dissemination of the same Apostolic seed; and the multiplication of twelve times twelve by a thousand shows the fruitfulness of the seed sown by the Apostles, who were the chosen disciples and divinely commissioned ministers of Ilim who was the Grain of Corn that fell into the earth and died, and brought forth much fruit" (John xii. 24). By the gracious influence of the Holy Ghost, poured out upon the seed, "a little one became a thousand, and a small one a strong Nation; the Lord hastened it in His time." (Isa. Ix. 22.) "By this mystical number 144,000," says Primasius, "the innumerable multitude of the Elect is signified."

Further, lest any one should imagine, that this number of the Twelve Tribes of the sealed is to be interpreted literally, and that the servants of God make only so small a number as 144,000; or that these Tribes are literally Tribes of Israel; St. John takes care to add that they are innumerable, and come from every nation under heaven. He says, "After this I beheld, and, lo, a great multilude, which no man could number, of every nation, and tribes, and peoples, and tongues, stood before the Throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and they cry with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb."

It is well observed here by Aug.? and Primasius, and Bede, that St. John here combines together in one those whom he had before specified singly. He thus aptly intimates that each of the elect in each tribe, in each age, and each country, of the spiritual Israel, is well known to Him who calleth all His sheep by name (John x. 3. 11), and numbereth every hair of our heads (Matt. x. 30), and that they are also united in one body in Christ, before His throne in heaven; they are all joined in the same Root of David, and all are the Seed of Abraham, by faith in Christ.

It being therefore understood, that they, who are sealed, represent the complete number of God's servants from every nation under heaven; the question now arises,

What principle determines the arrangement and designation of these Tribes of the Christian Israel,—that is, of the Church Universal, containing both Jews and Gentiles? See Acts xv. 9. Rom. iii. 29. 1 Cor. xii. 13. Gal. iii. 28. Eph. ii. 13—16. Col. iii. 11.

For an answer to this question, we must compare the arrangement of these Twelve Tribes in this Vision, with that of the Twelve Patriarchs of the literal Israel, as regulated by order of birth in the Old Testament. See Gen. xxix. 32-35; xxx. 1-24.

This comparison will be facilitated by the following synoptical Table:

On comparing the natural order by birth, with the order in | the Apocalypse, we see the following discrepancies:

Judah is here placed before Simeon and Levi, and before Reuben the first-born. Here is another evidence of the Christian significance of these tribes.

Judah is placed first, because "our Lord sprang out of Judah" (Heb. vii. 14), and is the Lion of the tribe of Judah (Rev. vii. 5), and Judah and Jerusalem are the Apocalyptic names of the true Church of God. (Cp. above, ii. 9; iii. 9. 12, and below, xxi. 2. 10.)

Simcon and Levi, the second and third in order by natural birth, are degraded in the Apocalypse to the seventh and eighth places respectively. Here also is a proof that the names are not to be taken literally, but have a moral and spiritual sense. Simeon and Levi are reprobated by the Patriarch Jacob in his prophecy, for their subtlety and cruelty in punishing the wrong done to their sister (Gen. xlix. 5); and perhaps in their degradation they symbolize here a moral truth, that good ends are not to be attained by evil means, and that furious zeal, even in God's cause, is not pleasing to Him.

The fifth son of Jacob, namely, Dan, is altogether excluded from this list.

That tribe was notorious for its unhappy zeal in receiving and propagating idolatry (see Judges xviii. 1—31). This inter-pretation is suggested by Jewish writers themselves (e. g. the Targum of Jonathan on Exod. xvi. 8, and on Numb. xi. 1; xxii. 41, and Deut. xxv. 18), who represent the name of Dan as a proverbial by-word for idolatry (see Wetstein, p. 776).

"The reason for the excluding of Dan," says Hengstenberg on xi. 13, "is, that the only narrative of the Old Testament, in which Dan played a part, is that respecting the worship of idols in the Book of Judges (aviii. 1-31); so that the declaration in chap. xxii. 15 of the Apocalypse, 'without are idolaters,' is here represented by the omission of Dan."

Here therefore is a protest against Idolatry, as wholly disqualifying for admission into the number of God's Saints in glory. Here also is a preparation for the Judgments denounced against Idolatry in later parts of the Apocalypse (see ix. 20; xxi. 8; xxii. 15). See above, on Judges xviii. 30; 1 Chron. vii. 12.

Here again the Prophecy of the Patriarch Jacob on his death-bed, concerning his seed, the heads of the twelve Tribes, and concerning those Tribes themselves, sheds light on this Apocalyptic Vision of the Tribes of the spiritual Israel, and is illustrated by it. There is a mystical analogy between the Prophecy and the Vision which has not yet been fully unfolded. Dan is omitted here; and in the patriarchal prophecy Dan is described in ominous words, Dan is first pourtrayed as a Judge or Ruler, and then it is added, "Dan shall be a serpent in the way, an adder in the path that biteth the horse heels, so that his rider shall fall backward."

The imagery of that Prophecy connects it with the Apocalyptic visions of the Power of Evil represented by the Serpent (xii. 9. 14, 15; xx. 2); and the Rider in the Prophecy may have also a connexion with the Rider in the Vision of the Seals of the Apocalypse (see above, vi. 4, 5), and may represent the destiny and punishment of Evil recoiling on and supplanting itself. There seems to be an expression of this feeling in the patristic Exposition, that "Antichrist would rise from Dan," Hippolytus, p. 7, ed. Lagarde; cp. Irenæus (v. 30. 2), who notices the omission of Dan here, and connects it with Jeremiah's prophecy, viii. 16, 17, "The snorting of horses was heard from Dan—behold, I will send serpents;" and he regards Dan as a symbol of the Man of Sin.

Another name of a Tribe omitted is Ephraim.

The defection of the Ten Tribes from the House of David and from the worship at Jerusalem, commenced with Ephraim (2 Sam. ii. 9), and was mainly promoted by Ephraim (1 Kings xii, 25. Isa. vii. 9. 17)

Samaria, the capital of Israel, and the Samaritan Temple at Gerizim, distinct from Judah, and the Temple at Jerusalem, were in the tribe of Ephraim. Ephraim is often mentioned by the Prophets as the rival of Judah, and as a synonym for Israel as opposed to Judah, and even combining with the enemies of Judah and Jerusalem, the Church of God; see particularly the words in Isa. vii. 2. It was told Ahar, Syria is confederate with Ephraim: see also vv. 5 and 17, where Ephraim is charged with the guilt of the schism of Jeroboam (see also Isa. ix. 9; cp. Jer.

The prophecies of Hosea abound with denunciations and warnings against Ephraim (Hos. v. 3. 9. 13; vi. 4. 10; vii. 1. 8; viii. 9. 11; ix. 3. 8. 11. 13; xi. 12; xii. 1. 14), which, assuredly, are applicable to the schisms and heresies, the unbelief and ungodliness of a corrupt Christendom.

Therefore, in the omission of Ephraim from the number of the Saints, there is a divine caution and exhortation addressed to Christians, that they should flee from those sins for which Ephraim is condemned by the Voice of God in the Old Testament; especially from the sin of schism.

The family of Ephraim is not dealt with here precisely in the same way as Dan is. Dan and his seed are altogether omitted. But Joseph the Father of Ephraim, and Manasseh the brother of Ephraim, are both admitted into this catalogue: whereas in the division of Canaan among the Tribes, Joseph had been represented by his two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh.

This may be designed to exhibit the contrast between the earthly and heavenly inheritance; and to show that the principles by which this Apocalyptic enumeration is regulated are not natural, but spiritual.

Ephraim's seed, in so far as they are children of Joseph's faith, may yet have an inheritance: though not as far as they commit those sins which gave Ephraim a character of rivalry and hostility Manasseh were brothers in blood, yet "one is taken, the other left" (Matt. xxiv. 40. Luke xvii. 34—36); so it will be in the heavenly Canaan. It is not natural birth, but spiritual birth, not carnal brotherhood, but brotherhood in Christ, which will gain an entrance there.

Naphtali, who by birth was fifth, is sixth in order in the Apocalypse. Gad and Asher, who were seventh and eighth by birth, are here placed second and third.

These three were children of handmaids: Naphtali, of Bilhab, Rachel's handmaid; Gad and Asher, of Zilpah, Leah's hand-maid; and yet they are here elevated in rank, and are placed before Simeon and Levi, the children of Leah, and before Manasseh, descended, through Joseph, from Rachel.

The moral of this transposition is, that circumstances of worldly birth are of no account in the Christian Church; the sons of the stranger are brought to God's holy mountain (Isa. lvi. 6); the Church of God herself is a Spouse wedded from the heathen world (cp. on Matt. i. i), and the Gentile is preferred to the Jew; "there are last that will be first, and first that will be last" (Luke xiii. 30).

The last four names are the same in the order of Birth, and also of the Apocalypse. One pair of them, Issachar and Zebulun, is from Leah; the other pair, Joseph and Benjamin, is from Rachel.

There is another resemblance in the two orders of names.

In the literal Israel, the children of the same mother were born, in successive births, by pairs. Thus, from Leah came Reuben and Simeon, Levi and Judah, by successive births. From Rachel's handmaid came, in like manner, Dan and Naphtali. From Leah's handmaid came Gad and Asher. From Leah came Issachar and Zebulun. From Rachel came also Joseph and Benjamin in successive births; see the synoptical table in p. 197.

The same principle is visible in the order of the Apocalypse. Here Judah and Reuben, from Leah, are ranged side by side; so, from Leah's handmaid, Gad and Asher. From Rachel's handmaid, Naphtali. Dan, the son of Rachel's handmaid, is here omitted; and Manasseh, from Rachel through Joseph, is introduced; but not Ephraim, who does not appear. From Leah, Simeon and Levi are placed together, and another pair, Issachar and Zebulun. From Rachel, Joseph and Benjamin.

The foundation in the Old covenant was laid on a pair of Brothers, Moses and Aaron. And Christ, in calling His Twelve Apostles, chose three pairs of Brothers—Simon and Andrew; James and John; James and Jude; and sent them forth two and two (see note above, on Matt. iv. 18).

Thus Almighty God has recognized and commended natural relationship as the groundwork of Christian affection and co-operation. Doubtless it will be seen hereafter, that ties of natural kindred have been instrumental-according to the benevolent design of the Universal Father of the spiritual Israel-in pro-

9. μετὰ ταῦτα είδον] After this I beheld, and lo! a great multitude, which no man could number, of every Nation and Tribes and Peoples and Tongues stood before the throne and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and they cry with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God that sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb.

Two constructions are blended together. Observe the transition from the singular ἔθνους to the plural φυλών; the words φυλών and λαών declare that not the Jews only (who appropriate the terms φυλή and \(\lambda\)obsto themselves), but all men are tribes and people of God.

The true Israel of God, the Church called from all Nations, and now glorified and triumphant, after the completion of her pilgrimage through the wilderness of the world, and after her entrance into the Canaan of her rest, and to the heavenly Jerusalem, and after all her conflicts with spiritual Enemies, and after the gathering of her spiritual Harvest, sings Hosannas to God and to the Lamb.

13. καὶ ἀνεκρίθη] And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, Who are these who are arrayed in the white robes? and whence came they? And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they who come out of the great tribulation, and washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve Him day and night in His temple; and He that sitteth on the throne shall tabernacle upon them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat; for the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto fountains of waters of life: and God shall wipe away every tear from their eyes.

They are clothed with white robes, and have palms in their hands, and sing salvation to our God and the Lamb. The Palm is an emblem of Victory. As such, it is found engraved on monumental slabs in the Catacombs of Rome, indicating that after the battles of life, they, who are buried there, have triumphed by the power of Christ. See Aringhi, Roma Subterranea, cap. xv.,

Doubtless, also, in this Vision, there is a reference to the rejoicing at the Feast of Tabernacles, ή σκηνοπηγία, which was the last of the three great annual Festivals of the Jews. It was in the seventh month, and lasted for seven days, and had a great sabbath on the eighth day, and was called "the Festival," the crown and glory of all Festivals, and closed the sacred rejoicings of the Hebrew year. See the notes above on John vii. 2. 37; and on Matt. xxi. 8, 9; and Wetstein here, p. 777.

That Festival commemorated the Journey of the Israelites through the wilderness, when they dwelt in Tabernacles or Tents, and God Himself tabernacted among them; and the Ingathering of the Fruits of the Harvest was celebrated with joy and thanks-

They who took part in that festival bare palm branches in their hands, and cried with loud voices Hosanna, "Save us, we beseech Thee," and praised God for His mercies in the past year.

2 Macc. x. 6, 7. Indeed, the Palm branches were called Ho-

At that Feast also, they drew water in golden urns from the pool of Siloam, which had a typical reference to the future outpouring of the living waters of the Gospel. See on John ix. 7. They poured out that water from Siloam, on the great altar, in memorial of the water which had flowed from the smitten Rock in the wilderness, another type of Christ, 1 Cor. x. 4; and they chanted the great Hallel (Ps. cxiii.—cxviii.), in which they celebrated the deliverances from Egypt and their entrance into Canaan. "When Israel came out of Egypt, the sea saw that and fled: Jordan was driven back; Tremble thou Earth at the presence of the Lord, at the presence of the God of Jacob, who turned the rock into a standing water, and the flint-stone into a springing well" (Ps. cxiv. 1-8); and to it Isaiah alludes, "With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of Salvation." (Isa. xii. 3.)

That sublime prophecy had pre-announced the pouring out of the living waters of Salvation, by the effusion of the Holy Ghost, consequent on the Incarnation of Christ, who is the Lord Jehovah (Isa. xii. 2), ever "in the midst" of the true Israel (v. 6), being Emmanuel, God with us, Matt. i. 23.

Therefore, the inhabitants of the Christian Sion may well cry aloud and shout with Hosannas, as the literal Israel did at the feast of Tabernacles.

That Feast, which celebrated the ingathering of the Fruits of the Earth, typified the ingathering of the spiritual Harvest, consequent on the outpouring of the gracious rain of the Holy Spirit (Ps. lxviii. 9), sent to God's inheritance, the Church, through the Incarnation of Christ and His Enthronization in our Nature at the Right Hand of God.

Indeed, the Feast of Tabernacles, commemorating the dwelling of the Israelites in tabernacles, and of the God of Israel Himself in a Tabernacle in the wilderness, appears to have been designed as a Type of the crowning mercy of God in the fulness of Time, when the Son of God Himself ἐσκήνωσεν ἐν ἡμῖν, i.e. pitched His tabernacle in our Nature (see on John i. 14); and of all the gracious gifts of the Living Waters of the Holy Ghost, and the Glorious Vision of God, and triumphant beatification of heaven, which result from the Incarnation. See above on John

The disciples of Christ and the People of Jerusalem, who took branches of Palms, and sung Hosannas to Christ, when He rode on the young ass in His triumphant Entry into Jerusalem, and when He gave a glimpse of His future glory, and symbolized the salvation of the Heathen World (see notes on Matt. xxi. 5. 8, 9), were moved to adopt the language and practices of the Feast of Tabernacles in their homage to Him at that time.

Hence we recognize the propriety and beauty of the imagery in this Vision of the Apocalypse.

The Israel of God, now that its journey and warfare is over, and that the Harvest of the Saints is gottrey and warners over, and that the Harvest of the Saints is gathered in, takes palm branches and sings Hosannas to God; and they are before the throne of God, and serve Him day and night in His temple, and God shall tabernacle upon them  $(\sigma\kappa\eta\nu\dot{\omega}\sigma\epsilon\iota\,\dot{\epsilon}^{\mu}\,\dot{\omega}^{\nu}\sigma\dot{\nu}\sigma)s$ , see v. 15 here); He Who pitched His tabernacle with Israel in the wilderness of Arabia, He who overshadowed them with the Pillar of Cloud, and led them by the Pillar of Fire, He who pitched His tabernacle in v. (John 14) shall now tabernacle upon them for ever nacle in us (John i. 14), shall now tabernacle upon them for ever .

and as the literal Israel were fed from heaven with angels' food, and so the cravings of their hunger were satisfied; and as their thirst was slaked by the gushing stream in the sandy desert, and as they were sheltered from the scorching heat of the sun by the refreshing shade of the cloud, so the spiritual Israel shall feel God's love and goodness; they shall hunger no more, nor thirst any more, nor shall the sun light upon them, nor any heat (v. 16); and He who gave them manna from heaven and water from the rock in the wilderness; He whose mercies were celebrated and typified by drawing water from the well of Siloam; He who gave the true manna and the living waters in His Word and Sacraments, and in the gifts of the Holy Ghost, shall lead them to fountains of waters of life, and shall wipe away every tear from their eyes.

The rich store of allusions contained in the word σκηνώσει ought to be carefully treasured up in the mind of the reader, as showing that the Prophecies and Types of the Old Testament, especially in the Pilgrimage through the Wilderness, and the festive especially in the rightmage through the whethers, and the estre-ceremonial of the Hebrew Ritual, will have their full accomplish-ment in the heavenly glory of Christ and His Saints (see Exod. xxv. 8; xxix. 43. Ps. lxviii. 18. Ezek. xxxvii. 27. 1 Cor.

The SEVENTH or LAST SEAL. The End of the world.

CH. VIII. 1. καὶ ὅτε ἥνοιξε] And when He opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour. There is silence for half an hour. St. John has now a brief view of the eternal peace of heaven. "Cernit initium quietis æternæ" (Victorinus, Aug. ?, Primasius, Bede).

The silence here is described as short, because St. John has only a glimpse here of what will be described more fully hereafter (in chaps. xxi. xxii.), viz. the peace and happiness of heaven; and because he must now be called away to describe other Visions of a different kind. He is allowed to have a foretaste of the future peace of Eternity; and is then summoned from that half-hour's silence to listen to the terrible blasts of the Seven Trumpers.

This silence (say the ancient Greek Expositors, p. 298) may also serve to remind us, that the Second Advent of Christ is kept secret, and cometh not with observation (Luke xvii. 20), and the silence is short, only for half an hour, for that secret Coming will soon accomplish its work, by the speedy destruction of evil.

Thus end the SEVEN SEALS. The Roll, that had been sealed up, has now been opened, and all its contents unfolded to the View. Their moral is very consolatory and instructive. Cp.

In the first seal, symbolizing the first age of Christianity, Christ went forth conquering and to conquer (vi. 2), triumphing over Sin and Satan by His Death and glorious Resurrection and Ascension. Yet, after that glorious Victory, He and His Church have been opposed by Satan, in various forms, on the red horse, on the black horse, and on the pale horse (vi. 4-8). This was revealed by the Visions of the Second, Third, and Fourth Seals. It has also been revealed in the Fifth and Sixth Seals, that they will still have to endure many afflictions even to the end; and that it will almost seem to the Saints departed that Christ was tarrying too long, and had forgotten His faithful servants (vi. 9-It has been also revealed in the Sixth Seal (vi. 12-17), that the Last Days of the Church will bring the severest trial; and that her path will be through great tribulation (vii. 14), to the fruition of eternal felicity.

But there is also consolation in this Prophetic Roll, for Christians of every age.

Christ will at length send forth His Angels to gather His Elect from the four winds, and not one of them will be hurt in the Judgments which will overtake the world. They will all be sealed by God as His own, and be preserved in the wreck; and when the number of God's servants is completed, and gathered in from all parts of the world, to which the Gospel will have been preached (vii. 9; cp. Matt. xxiv. 14. Mark xiii. 10), then all the Enemies of Christ will be overcome; then will ensue the silence of the Seventh Seal (viii. 1). No voice will be raised any more against God. All the Earth will keep silence before Him (Hab. ii. 20). After the Storm there will be Peace. The blessedness of His Servants will be consummated in the Society of the Holy Angels, and in the beatific Vision of God; they will praise God and the Lamb as their Saviour (vii. 10). All things will then be seen to have ministered to the manifestation of the divine love, and to have "worked together for good to them that love Him" (Rom. viii. 28), and be a theme for a never-ending ascription of "Blessing, and Glory, and Wisdom, and Thanksgiving, and Honour, and Power, and Might, to God for ever and ever. Amen" (vii. 12).

St. John, having delivered this Prophecy, and having ministered this comfort to the Church of every age and country, now re-ascends to the first age of Christianity; or, as ancient Expositors express it, "recapitulat ab origine." He proceeds to reveal the prophetic History of the Christian Church from the beginning, in another form and aspect, in the Seven Trumpers.

What now is the design and character of the Seven Trum-

They are prophetic announcements of the Divine Judgments on the Enemies of Christ and His Church, from the time of His First Advent until the Day of Doom.

This will appear from the following considerations:

(1) The TRUMPETS follow next in order to the SEALS. The Seals, as we have already seen, have revealed a view of the suf-ferings of the Church from the time of the First Coming of Christ to the End of time, and of the full and final triumph of Christ, and of the everlasting blessedness of His servants, after the trials and tribulations of this world.

This prophetic view of the happiness which is reserved for the righteous, after trials, and sufferings for the Truth, is now succeeded by a prophetic view of punishment which will be in-flicted on the wicked, after temporary triumphs and oppressions of the Truth.

On the one hand, God announces reward to the good; "Say ye to the righteous, it shall be well with him, for they shall eat the fruit of their doings." On the other hand, He adds a denunciation of punishment to the wicked, " Woe unto the wicked, it shall be ill with him, for the reward of his hands shall be given him" (Isa. iii. 11). This prophetic declaration displays in two consecutive sentences the substance of the moral of the SEALS, on the one hand; and of the TRUMPETS on the other.

The former sentence is the moral of the SEVEN SEALS. The latter sentence is the moral of the Seven Trumpers.

(2) The Seven Trumpets are prefaced by Prayers of the Saints to God (viii. 2-4). The Trumpets are represented as sending forth divine answers to those prayers. The Saints of God are in a state of trial and tribulation; and their arms are Prayers and Tears. They commend their cause to God, and pray to Him for deliverance from their enemies. All Saints, whether on earth or under the altar (vi. 9), pray for the Coming of Christ's Kingdom, when all His Enemies will be put under His feet (1 Cor. xv. 24. 27), and when the happiness of all His faithful servants will be consummated both in body and soul in heaven.

The Twelfth Chapter of the Acts of the Apostles has displayed to us a striking specimen of this work of the Church, praying for deliverance from her enemies; and it has shown the result of her Prayers in the overthrow of her Enemies.

The Apostle St. James, the brother of St. John, had been slain by the sword of King Herod Agrippa; the Apostle St. Peter had been put in prison by the same King (Acts xii. 1-3). The Church makes unceasing intercessions for him (Acts xii. 5. 12). He is miraculously delivered by an Angel on the eve of the day when Herod would have brought him forth for execution; and Herod, the persecutor, is smitten by an Angel, when sitting on his Throne, in the height of his pride and glory (xii. 21-23). That narrative presents an Epitome of the History of God's Judgments on the Persecutors of His Church; and may serve to illustrate the design of the Trumpets, preceded by the prayers of the Saints (viii. 2-4).

(3) In Holy Scripture the sound of the Trumpet is a preparative for war, especially for a war waged by God Himself and His people against their enemies. "If ye go to war in your land against the Enemy that oppresself you, then we shall blow an alarm with the Trumpets, and ye shall be remembered before the Lord your God, and be saved from your enemies" (see Numb. x. 9. Cp. Amos iii. 6).

The Seven Trumpets of the Apocalypse announce the goings forth of the Lord of Hosts to war, in order to save His people by punishing their oppressors.

(4) Again, in Holy Scripture, the Trumpet is the instrument to be used by the Israelites for convoking the People (Numb. x. 10).

It is also to be used to proclaim the year of Jubilee (Levit. xxv. 8-10).

Therefore, Trumpets are used with great propriety in the Apocalypse to "call the nations to see the punishment of the Antichristian power, which, though Christian in name, persecutes the faithful" (Bishop Wilson). And the sounding of the Seven Trumpets of the Apocalypse ends in an universal Jubilee for the deliverance of the People of God (xi. 15).

(5) The Trumpet is also specified in the Gospel as the signal of the Universal Judgment of the Great Day. "The Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel and the Trump of God" (2 Thess. iv. 16). "The Trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised" (1 Cor.

Therefore there is another remarkable fitness in the use of Trumpets in the Apocalypse, for the purposes which they here subserve.

The consequences of the Sounding of each of the Seven Apocalyptic Trumpets are of a judicial kind; the first Trumpet is followed by inflictions of chastisement on the Earth (viii. 7); the second Trumpet by vengeance on the Sea (vv. 8, 9); the third Trumpet by plagues on the Fountains of Waters (vv. 10, 11); and the fourth Trumpet by visitations on heavenly bodies (v. 12); and it is especially declared that the last three Trumpets are three Trumpets of Woe to the inhabiters of the Earth (viii. 13); that is, to the enemies of God and of the kingdom of heaven (see on i. 7; iii. 10). Finally, the seventh or last Trumpet of the Apocalypse is the summons of all Nations to the Judgment-Seat of Christ (see xi. 15-18).

Thus the six Trumpets represent the Judgments of God, as preparatory denunciations, warning men with a loud voice to "consider their ways," and to repent, and to prepare for the sounding of the Seventh Trumpet, which will convene them to the general Judgment of the Last Day.

Thus the design of God's Judgments, even in punishment, is mercy; "O Lord, when Thy Judgments are in the Earth, the inhabitants of the World will learn righteousness" (Isa, xxvi. 9).

The last Trumpet reveals the complete overthrow of Christ's Enemies, and the execution of His wrath on the wicked, and the blessed reward of the righteous, and the establishment of His Kingdom for ever (xi. 15-18).

Thus it instructs the World, especially Rulers and States. It displays the infatuation of those who oppose Christ and His Gospel, and declares the misery which will be their doom. The successive sounds of the Six Trumpets which announce particular judgments, are rehearsals of the sound of the Seventh Trumpet, which announces Universal Judgment; when it will be confessed by all, that "verily there is a reward for the righteous, doubtless there is a God that judgeth the earth." (Ps. lviii. 10.)

(6) Lastly, the Apocalypse is grounded on the principle, that the Christian Church is the true Jerusalem; and that its faithful members are the Israel of God (Gal. vi. 16). It teaches the Christian Church to read her own history in that of the Israelites, and in their Exodus from Egypt, and in their passage through the Red Sea, and in their Pilgrimage through the Wilderness of Arabia. The entrance of the Israelites into the Rest of Canaan under the leadership of Joshua, and the capture of the Cities of Canaan, and the subjugation of the Kings of the Canaanites by the armies of Joshua, and the People of God, are recognized in the Apocalypse as types and figures, and as prophecies and pledges of the conquests of the Christian Church under the guidance of her heavenly Joshua, Jesus Christ, and of her admission to the everlasting joys of her heavenly inheritance. See above, Introduction, pp. 149, 150, and on ii. 9, and on vii. 4-9.

Especially, as has been observed by ancient Expositors, there is a reference in the Seven Trumpets of the Apocalypse to the history of the capture of that great City,—which is one of the scriptural emblems of the Power of this World arrayed against Christ,-the city of Jericho.

By God's command, Joshua compassed Jericho six times on six successive days. First went the armed men, then seven Priests with seven Trumpets of rams' horns; then came the Ark; then the People followed. On each of the six days, the Priests blew the trumpets once, and the People were silent. But on the seventh Vol. II.—Part IV.

day the seven Priests, and the People with them, compassed the city seven times; and at the seventh time, when the seven Priests blew the seven Trumpets, all the People shouted with a great shout; and the wall of the City fell down flat, and the People went up and captured Jericho. (Josh. vi. 1—20.) And after its fall, they marched victoriously under the command of Joshua, the type of Jesus, to the possession of Canaan the promised land, the type of Heaven.

The Apocalyptic Vision reveals Seven Angels and Seven Trumpets. The first six Trumpets pre-announce successive Judgments of God. At length, when the seventh Trumpet sounds, the walls of this world's Jericho will fall flat, and the victorious army of the heavenly Joshua will follow the Captain of their salvation into their everlasting inheritance.

The PRAYERS of all Saints before the Sounding of the

2. καὶ είδον And I saw the seven Angels which stood before God; and to them were given Seven Trumpets.

3. καὶ ἄλλος] And another Angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer.

Here is a reference to the act of the Priest ministering at the Golden Altar of Incense before the Veil in the Temple (see above on Luke i. 9, and Heb. ix. 4), and offering incense there, which is a type of prayer (see above, v. 8). And there was given unto him much incense, that he should give it to the prayers of all Saints upon the golden alter before the throne. Observe, there is no mention here, or in any other place of the Apocalypse, of an Altar before the Veil; the Veil has disappeared under the Gospel (Matt. xxvii. 51. Heb. ix. 8). The Apocalypse is an unveiling of heaven, now opened by Christ. The Holy of Holies is revealed, and the Altar is not before a Veil, but before the Throne. See above on iv. 1.

The Angel is not here represented as giving efficacy to the prayers of all Saints, but as taking part in them. There is a communication of Prayer between All Saints (namely, the Saints departed and the Saints on earth), and the Holy Angels in heaven. The Angels unite in offices of prayer with the Church on earth, and with the spirits of the Saints departed, for the deliverance of God's servants from their enemies. See Heb. xii. 22, 23, where the Saints on earth are represented as associated in one communion with the Angels and with the Spirits of just men made perfect. Cp. Bp. Pearson, Art. ix. p. 662, and Bp. Bull, Sermon on the Offices of the Angels towards the Faithful.

Some Interpreters suppose that the other Angel is Christ, our High Priest, the only Mediator between God and men (1 Tim. ii. 5), ministering in the heavenly Temple, where "He ever liveth to make intercession for us." Heb. vii. 25; ix. 24.

Christ, in His human character and priestly office, may be called another Angel. He is so called, x. 1. Cp. xiv. 17; xviii. 1; xx. 1. Hence Primasius says, "The Angel here is Our Lord, by whom all our prayers have access to God (Eph. ii. 18; iii. 12), and therefore the Apostle says, 'Through Him we offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually' (Heb. xiii. 15; cp. 1 Pet. ii. 5); and St. John says, 'He is our Advocate with the Father''' (1 John ii. 1). This interpretation is sanctioned by other ancient interpreters, such as Aug. (?) and Bede, and by Vitringa, Böhmer, and others of later date, and it represents the important truth, that the deliverance of God's people from the hands of their Enemies, smitten by His Judgments, is due to the ministry of Christ in heaven, presenting the incense of the Prayers of the Church, in

The dative here, ταῖs προσευχαῖs, is a dativus commodi: the incense was given to the prayers, and made them pleasing to God.

Voices, Thunders, Lightnings, and Earthquakes, are signs and instruments of God's Judgments against His Enemies. Lapide, Bengel, Ewald, De Wette, Hengstenberg.) The Divine Judgments to be announced by the Seven Trumpets of the Seven Angels, are represented as consequent on the prayers of all the Saints — prayers presented in heaven by the Angel, perhaps Christ, who said, "I came to send fire on earth" (Luke xii. 49. Primasius). These judgments are proludes of the great fire of the Day of Judgment which will consume the world (2 Pet. iii. 7).

The Saints who are on earth, and the Saints departed, whose souls are in Paradise (see vi. 9), pray to God for the deliverance of His Church, and for the manifestation of His Power and Justice; and their Prayers are presented before the Throne of God; and in answer to their Prayers, He ordains or permits such penal Visitations on the world as are best adapted to those ends.

Here is a striking evidence of the power of united Prayer.

It is a lever which moves the World.

The FIRST TRUMPET.

7. δ πρῶτος] The first Angel sounded, and there was hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast upon the Earth: and the third part of the Earth was burnt up, and the third part of the Trees was burnt up, and all Grass that was green was burnt up.

The second seal had represented the Evil One riding on the horse of fire, and wielding the sword of Persecution, and shedding the blood of the Martyrs (vi. 4).

In that Seal the Church suffered; in this Trumpet, her enemies are punished.

The judgment here announced is upon the Earth,-that is, on the Earthly power, opposed to Christ and to His Church, which is the Kingdom of Heaven. This Judgment is upon the Earth (as opposed to Heaven), and upon Trees which grow from the Earth, and look stately and tall, and derive their strength from the Earth; and upon the Green Grass which clothes the

This Judgment is represented as inflicted by hail (showing a storm from the north) and fire mingled with blood; and the third part of the Earth is consumed by fire; and the third part of the Trees, that is, of Princes and Potentates, proud, powerful, and prosperous (see Isa. ii. 13; and x. 17, 18, LXX; and above, note on vii. 1. 3), is consumed by fire; and all the Grass that was green, that is, the glory and beauty of the earthly power, is consumed by fire. Cp. Isa. xl. 6-8.

Here again is a reference to the history of the ancient People of God.

This and the succeeding Judgments denounced on the worldly Power, which persecutes Christ and His Church, correspond to the Judgments inflicted by God upon the worldly power of Pharach, the oppressor of God's people, who was chastened by a plague of hail, and fire with the hail, which smote every herb of the field, and brake every tree of the field; only in the land of Goshen, where the children of Israel were, was there no hail. (Exod. ix. 23-26)

This imagery seems to be adopted here, in order to show the similarity of the condition of the Church under Moses and under Christ; and to indicate that the purpose of this visitation was similar to that of the Egyptian plague; in a word, that the Trumpet announces a Judgment from God on the worldly power-typified by Pharaoh-for persecuting His People.

The extent of the visitation here is indicated by the use of the words the third part (i. e. a large part) of the earth, and the third of the trees. Cp. v. 9, and ix. 15. 18; xii. 4.

When the Apocalypse was written, the Church of Christ was persecuted by the power of this world—the power of heathen Rome. The Apostle, St. John himself, the disciple whom Jesus lored (John xxi. 7), was a prisoner for the Word of God (Rev. 1. 9); and he describes himself "as the brother and companion" of others "in tribulation."

The Church of Christ was then in Egypt; the Cæsars were her Pharaohs. The first Trumpet predicts the woes which would Roman Empire, rebelling against, heaven: and would afflict the princely Oaks and tall Cedars of that proud dynasty, and would wither up its pomp and glory like green Grass scorched by the

This Trumpet is like a retributive sequel to the second seal. It represents the woes which would fall on the Roman Empire in the fourth century, when it was a prey to the fire and sword of military violence, and was smitten by a hail-storm from the north, whence the Gothic tribes descended as in a tempest upon it. See the striking language of S. Jerome (de morte Nepotiani, ad finem), who gives a summary view of the miseries of the Roman Empire, and of the divine judgments executed on its Emperors, Constantius, Julian, Valentinian, Valens, Gratian, Valentinian II., and on Roman Princes and Potentates, and even private persons, and exclaims, "The mind shrinks with horror from contemplating the ruins of our age." "Horret animus ruinas nostri temporis persequi; Romanus orbis ruit, nostris peccatis (he speaks as a Roman) barbari fortes sunt." And in his second book against Jovinian (ad fin.), he addresses Rome and says, "If thou art penitent like Nineveh, thou mayest escape the malediction with which the Saviour of the world threatens thee in the Apocalypse." The irruption of the Goths into Italy is compared to a storm of hail, and is called a judgment from heaven by Claudian, de bello Gætico, v. 172,

> "Seu gravis ira Deûm seriem meditata ruinis Ex illo quocunque vagos impegit Erinnys Grandinis aut morbi ritu.'

Compare Bp. Wilson's note here.

The SECOND TRUMPET.

8. και δ δεύτερος άγγελος εσάλπισε] And the second Angel sounded, and as it were a great Mountain burning with fire was cast into the Sea; and the third part of the Sea became blood;
9.] And the third part of the creatures which were in the Sea, the things which had lives, died, and the third part of the Ships was destroyed.

The Second Trumpet follows naturally from the first. Here also is mention of fire and of blood. "He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity, he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword" (xiii. 9).

A great Mountain burning with fire is cast into the sca, which is the Apocalyptic emblem of tumultuous commotion and tunbulent rage (see v. 13; vii. 1. 3; xxi. 1, and compare above, note on iv. 6).

The removal of Mountains, and the casting of them into the sea is a scriptural metaphor, descriptive of violent commotions, as in Ps. xlvi. 2, "We will not fear, though the Earth be moved, and the Mountains be carried into the midst of the Sea.'

This present prophecy indicates the convulsion of a great and conspicuous Earthly power, which had been firmly fixed, like a Mountain, on a solid basis, and rooted in the earth. This Earthly power is also compared to a burning Mountain; it is like a volcanic Mountain burning with fire, and pouring forth its desolating streams of lava, withering and scorching the neighbouring territory.

Here is a noble image of a proud earthly military Dynasty, sending forth the torrents of its legionary forces to waste provinces, and to burn villages and cities as with a flood of fire.

The Prophecy predicts the precipitation of this volcanic Mountain into another element of a very different kind, one of fluid restlessness and tumultuous agitation.

In the Old Testament, the great City and Empire of Babylon is called "a destroying Mountain, which destroyeth the Earth," and God threatens to roll it down from the rocks and make it a burnt mountain (Jer. li. 25).

In like manner, the Empire and City of Rome are here compared "to a great Mountain," on account of its grandeur and power. And it might well be called a "burning Mountain," for it used its power to destroy the servants of God by fire in its ἀπέθανε τὸ τρίτον τῶν κτισμάτων τῶν ἐν τῆ θαλάσση, τὰ ἔχοντα ψυχὰς, καὶ τὸ τρίτον των πλοίων διεφθάρη.

own streets (see above, on Phil. iii. 15), and in many cities of the Empire.

In this respect, the mention of fire, characterizing Rome as Mountain, serves to connect this Judgment of the Second Trumpet with the Second Seal, where the Enemy of the Church is described as riding on the horse like fire (πυρρός).

That Great Imperial Mountain was uprooted by the assaults of the Goths, Vandals, and Huns; and the mighty Empire was dismembered and decomposed; and its solid Mass was dissolved and melted away into a swelling Sea, which was long agitated by the winds and waves of revolutionary storms and political hurricanes.

Thus the Christian reader of the Apocalypse was led to recognize in the incursions of Barbarians into the Roman Empire, a divine judgment upon it for its sins, especially in persecuting The Second Trumpet revealed the judgments inthe Church. flicted upon Rome for the wrongs it did in the Second Seal.

Indeed, those barbarians proclaimed themselves to be executioners of God's judgments on Rome; Salvian (a Latin Christian writer of that age), in his treatise on the Divine Government (lib. vii.), says, "they confessed that what they did, was not their own doing, and that they were hurried on by the Divine Command," "Ipsi fatebantur non suum esse quod facerent; agi enim se divino jussu et perurgeri." Hence, says he, we may infer the magnitude of our sins, since these barbarians are impelled, against their will, to punish us.

It may also be observed, that in the incursions of these hordes of barbarians into the Southern provinces of Europe, the wisdom and power of God were glorified, and His truth was manifested, and His kingdom was advanced, and "the fierceness of man turned to His praise" (Ps. lxxvi. 10).

For, by means of those immigrations, these barbarous tribes received the knowledge of Christianity. Many of them embraced the Gospel with fervour, and founded Christian Kingdoms in Europe. See Dean Jackson's remarks on God's Providence in raising up the Huns to punish Rome.

"The rule of God's liberality in disposing Kingdoms, is the correspondency or proportion which temporal greatness holds with the execution of His will; whether for punishing those which have made up the measure of their iniquity, or for the propagating or preservation of His Church already planted, or for preparing or ploughing up the hearts of wild and unnurtured

Nations for better receiving the seed of His Gospel.

"When the measure of that prosperity which God, for these and like purposes, had allotted Rome Heathen, and 'her iniquity became full,' she and her Provinces became a swifter prey to barbarous Nations, than any neighbour countries had been to her. The incredible success of the Goths and Vandals, of the Franks and Almains, &c., specially of the Huns, whose furious progress was like to the vulture's flight, and seemed to presage the slaughter which they made, will justify the probability either of Xenophon's stories concerning Cyrus; or of Curtius, Arrianus, or other writers of Alexander's conquests. Howbeit, this great power was not given them altogether to destroy others, but withal to edify themselves in the faith, and to be made partakers of God's vineyard, which He had now in a manner taken from these ungrateful husbandmen whom they conquered. The Franks became Christians through fear of the Almains. Dread of the Huns did drive the Burgundians to seek sanctuary in the same profession. And no question, but such of the ancient Christian inhabitants as outlived these storms, did believe God and His servants better afterwards than they had done before. Never were there any times more apt or more powerful to kindle devotion in such as were not altogether frozen in unbelief, or benumbed with the custom of sinning, than these times were. Rome, which had been the watch-tower of politic wisdom, became more stupid than Babylon had been, when the day of her visitation did come upon her. Her citizens (were a mere politician to be their judge) deserved to be buried in their city's ruins, for not awaking upon such and so many dreadful warnings as she had." Dean Jackson on the Creed, book vi. pt. ii. chap. xxvii. vol. v. p. 436.
9. τὰ ἔχοντα ψυχάς] the things which had lives, died. This phrase is to be explained from other similar ones in this book. The saints of Christ are described as not loving their lives (τὰs ψυχὰs) unto death (xii. 11), and as conquering by the blood of the Lamb.

And in the plague of the second Vial, every ψυχή ζωῆs is said to have died (xvi. 3), and Babylon at her fall is represented as despoiled of every desire of her \( \psi_{\pi} \chi_{\pi} \) (xviii. 14), that is, all the delights of animal existence and gratification; all "the lust of her eyes and the pride of life." In accordance with this sense of the word ψυχή, the word ψυχικός is opposed to πνευματικός in the New Testament. The former is the carnally-minded, the latter is the spiritual (see above, 1 Cor. ii. 14; xv. 44. James iii. 15. Jude 19).

Next, it is to be remembered, that, in the Apocalypse, tho verb έχω signifies to hold fast, as a treasure, to grasp tenaciously as the main good (see vi. 9; xii. 17).

Hence it follows that the sense of these words (τὰ ἔχοντα ψυχάς, ἀπέθανε) is, that they, who amid the Judgments that came upon Rome, would not be weaned from the pleasures of this life, but still doted upon them; they, who thus clung to their mere animal life (ψυχή), died, died in body and soul by that death which is indeed to be called death.

On the other hand, the faithful Christian was assured, that whatever might happen to his ψυχή, or animal life, in this world, he would be preserved for another world, in body, soul, and spirit (see on 1 Thess. v. 23), by the power of Him Who overcame Death, and Who is "the Resurrection and the Life." Thus Christ's own words would be true, that they who found their life  $(\psi \nu \chi \dot{\eta} \nu)$ , would lose it; and that they, who lost their lives for His sake, would find them (Matt. x. 39), or, as He expresses it elsewhere (Luke xvii. 33), "he that seeks to save his life  $(\psi \nu \chi \eta \nu)$  shall lose it, and he who loses it, shall make it live" ( $(\omega \omega \gamma \rho \nu \eta \sigma \epsilon_i)$ ; and again (John xii. 25), "he that lovelh his life ( $\psi \nu \chi \gamma \nu$ ) shall lose it, and he that hateth his life in this world, shall keep it to everlasting life" ( $\zeta \omega \eta \nu$ ; where the distinction between  $\zeta \omega \eta$  and  $\psi \nu \chi \eta$  is to be carefully observed).

Probably St. John had these words of our Lord in his mind, when he wrote the Apocalypse; and he supposed that his readers would remember them, and apply them to the interpretation of his own language here and throughout this book. Hence it is rightly said by some ancient Expositors here, e.g. Aug.? that the unyodly are here described by St. John as those "qui habebant animas, in carne vivi, sed spiritualiter mortui."

Observe also, that St. John appropriately uses here the neuter gender to describe these worldly-minded persons who cling to their animal life and its pleasures; they are τὰ ἔχοντα ψυχάς. He does not call them men, but things, the things which have lives, animal lives, and nothing more; they die, while they seek to live, and because they seek life, and that only; and he thus contrasts them with the male child of the Church mentioned below (xii. 5), that is, those noble, masculine spirits who are the genuine offspring of Christ, and willingly lay down their lives for Him Who died to redeem them, and thus live in death, and by death; being born thereby into that endless life (ζωήν αλώνιον), which alone deserves to be called life.

The carnal lives and voluptuous habits of the Roman Princes and Potentates of this time, the Trees of the Second Trumpet, are described by Ammianus Marcellinus (xiv. 6, and xxviii. 4), in passages cited in the xxxist chapter of Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire.

It is remarkable, that, at the capture and plunder of Rome by Alaric and the Goths in the third siege (A.D. 410), when "at the hour of midnight the Salarian gate was silently opened, and the inhabitants of Rome were awakened by the tremendous sound of the Gothic Trumpet" (Gibbon, chap. xxxi.), the fury of the invaders was restrained in a marvellous manner from injuring the Christian Church. Alaric said that he "waged war with the Romans, and not with the Apostles" (Isidor. Chronic. p. 714. Cp. Oros. vii. 39, and Procop. de bell. Vand. i. 2, cited by Gibbon). S. Augustine in his work "De Civitate Dei," written on the occasion of this event, in order to vindicate the Christian Religion against the allegations of Heathens who imputed their woes to the wrath of their Heathen Gods against those who had renounced Heathenism for Christianity,—observes, "that the Barbarians spared the Romans for the sake of Christ. Witness," says he, "the tombs of the Martyrs, and the Churches of the Apostles, which received as in an asylum both Christians and Pagans in that devastation of the City. The fury of the barbarians raged up to their doors, and there paused" (De Civ. Dei, i. 1). And he affords an interesting illustration of this text when he says, that "many Heathens thus escaped, who now revile the Gospel, which was the cause of their deliverance; and impute the woes of Rome to Christ; and the benefits they then received they ascribe to their own destiny; whereas they ought to ascribe the evils they then endured to the goodness of God, Who is wont to correct men's sins by sufferings, and to try men's virtues by affliction, and to translate Piety into a better world, or to retain it on earth for godly uses; and they ought to ascribe to Christ's Gospel the wonderful fact, that, contrary to the custom of wars, the Barbarians spared those who took refuge in places dedicated to the worship of Christ; and they, who made use of His Name D  $^{\mathrm{D}}$  2 f Isa. 14. 12. ch. 16. 4.

S. Augustine deplores the infatuation of the Romans who would not be corrected by God's Judgments inflicted on them by the armies of the Barbarians. "You," he exclaims, "have been trodden under foot by the enemy, and yet have not put a rein on your luxury; you have forfeited the benefits of your calamities, you have been made most wretched, and have remained most wicked,-miserrimi facti estis, et pessimi permansistis, et tamen quod vivitis Dei est, qui vobis parcendo admonuit ut corrigamini

- το τρίτον τῶν πλοίων διεφθάρη] the third part of the ships was destroyed. The Trumpet announces that ships, the instruments of Commerce and Wealth and Luxury, will be ruined. Isaiah, in a prophetic passage similar to the present, after the mention of God's vengeance against every one that is proud and lofty, typified as here by Trees, cedars, and oaks, speaks of Judgments upon ships of Tarshish (ii. 16), where the LXX has  $\ell \pi l$ παν πλυίον θαλάσσης.

It is a remarkable fact in the history of Alaric's campaign in Italy (in A.D. 409), that "instead of assaulting the Capital at once," he directed his efforts against the arsenal of its ships, the Port of Ostia, the emporium of its commerce, and magazine of its provisions, and "as soon as he was in possession of that place he summoned the City of Rome to surrender at discretion; and his demands were enforced by the declaration, that a refusal or even a delay would be instantly followed by a destruction of the magazines on which the life of the Roman people depended. The clamour of the people and the terror of famine subdued the pride of the senate," and Alaric was received within the walls of Rome. Gibbon, ch. xxxi.

The THIRD TRUMPET.

10, 11. καὶ ὁ τρίτος ἄγγελος ἐσάλπισε] And the third Angel sounded, and there fell from heaven a great Star, burning as a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of the waters; And the name of the Star is called the Wormwood: and the third part of the waters was turned into wormwood; and many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter.

Here A, B have δ'Aψινθοs, the Wormwood.-Elz. omits the

A Star, in the language of the Apocalypse, is a Luminary of the Church. The Seven Stars are the Angels of the Seven Churches (i. 20), that is, chief Ministers of the Seven Churches. A fallen Star is therefore emblematic of a false teacher. Cp. ix. 1. He is said to be like a torch (λαμπάς), because he has no heavenly light; but flares with earthly flame, mingled with lurid smoke. He was set by God in the firmament of the Church, to be a guide which is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever" (Jude 13).

His name is called δ "Αψινθος, the Wormwood.

Wormwood is very bitter (Billerbeck, Flora Class. pp. 213, 214), and in certain cases produces convulsions, delirium, epilepsy, 214), and in certain cases produces convaisions, and is here, as in and death (see Winer, R. W. B. ii. p. 688); and is here, as in descriptive of false doctrine. Take other places of Scripture, descriptive of false doctrine. there places of Scripture, descriptive of Jaise doctrine. Take heed, says Moses, when he warns the Israelites against corrupt doctrines and practices, lest there should be among you a root that beareth gall and wormwood. (Deut. xxix. 18.) And so God says by Jeremiah: Because the prophets cause My people to err, behold, I will feed them with Wormwood. (Jer. xxiii. 15; see also Amos v. 7; vi. 12.) He will choose their delusions, and punish them with their own devices. And St. Paul in the same punish them with their own devices. And St. Paul in the same spirit says, Looking diligently lest any fail of the grace of God; lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled. (Heb. xii. 15.) And St. John's scholar, S. Ignatius, in several places, speaks of heresy as a noxious plant, κακή βοτανή (Eph. 10, Trall. 6, Phil. 3).

This fallen Star, whose name is Wormwood, represents Heresy; and particularly those Heresies concerning the Natures and Person of Christ; and the Divinity of the Holy Spirit; and Divine Grace and Free Will; which prevailed in the fifth and with centuries after Christ.

Almost all those Persons who gave their name to those Heresies were gifted with great mental endowments. They were Stars: Stars set in the heaven of the Church to enlighten others. Arius was distinguished by his ready eloquence and logical acumen. Nestorius was a Bishop famous for holiness and learning. Euty-chianism owed its origin to the head of a monastic body. Pelagius was remarkable for moral strictness of life.

Here also is another reference to the History of Israel. Moses, the faithful servant of God, and the leader of His people in the wilderness, cast wood, which God showed him, into the bitter waters of Marah, and made them sweet. (Exod. xv. 23.) But here the false Teacher reverses that action. The Star burning like a lamp, whose name is Wormwood, falls into the waters and makes them bitter. Instead of guiding men by the steady light of true doctrine, over the troubled sea of this world, it falls into the rivers and wells of Salvation, and embitters the sweet waters of Holy Scripture, by the infusion of heretical interpretations, and destroys the souls of men.

This exposition is authorized by ancient Interpreters. This Star represents a constellation falling from the firmament of the Church. This Star symbolizes heretical teachers embittering the waters of Holy Scripture. (Aug. ? Bede, Aquinas.) And so Lightfoot here, "The third Trumpet brings the Star, 'Wormwood,' upon the rivers and fountains of waters; which seemeth to denote the grievous heresies that should be in the Church, which should corrupt and embitter the pure springs of Scripture, the fountains of truth." And so Vitringa, Bengel, and many others cited by him.

Thus we are taught to regard Heresies in their true light; that is, as punishments for the sins of men.

Grievous punishments they also were, even in a temporal sense, as was seen in the fury of the Asiatic Monophysites, of the African Circumcellions, and of the Arian Vandals, under Genseric, A.D. 477, and Huneric, A.D. 484, and Thrasimund. See the contemporary History of Victor Vitensis in Ruinhart's Historia Persecut. Vandal. 1694, and Vitringa, Anacr. p. 100.

But these and other Heresies were also trials and exercises of Faith, Hope, and Love; and so served to the manifestation of God's grace and glory, and to the purification of His Church. There must be Heresies, says the Apostle, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you. (1 Cor. xi. 19.)

Indeed, if there had been no Heresies, the Church would not possess the explicit declaration of the Christian Faith which she now has in her Creeds.

The opposition of Heretics constrained her to examine carefully the Holy Scriptures; and to proclaim clearly to the world what is the true Faith which is contained in those Sacred Writings, and which she had received from Christ and the Apostles; and to deliver a solemn protest and warning against the erroneous and strange doctrines with which Heretics endeavoured to corrupt that Faith.

Thus Heresies themselves, while they were Punishments to the godless, served to prove and confirm the belief of Christians, and to place the True Faith in a clearer light, and to establish it on a more solid foundation.

This was a blessed consummation of trial; and such a result as that might well be the object of the prayers of Saints.

Here also we may observe the difference of treatment of similar subjects in the Trumpets and Seals respectively; and this serves to bring out the difference of their character. In the Seals, Heresy is represented as a trial of the Church, and as a severe suffering to be endured by her (vi. 5, 6). In the Trumpets, Heresy is treated as a Judgment inflicted on men for sin, and brought upon them by themselves.

This Trumpet leads the way to The FOURTH TRUMPET.

Here we see a prophecy of a great prevalence of errors, defections, apostasies, and confusions in Christendom; such as abounded in the Seventh Century.

This view prepares us for The Fifth Trumpet.

13. και είδον] And I beheld and heard one Eagle flying in mid-heaven, and saying with a loud voice, Woe, Woe, to the inhabiters of the Earth by reason of the remaining voices of the trumpet of the three Angels, which are yet to sound!

The reading aeros (an eagle) is in A, B, and in several Cursive MSS., and in many Versions, and is received by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch.—Elz. has  $\mathring{\alpha}\gamma\gamma\acute{\epsilon}\lambda\sigma\nu$ . No copyist would have substituted  $\mathring{\alpha}\epsilon\tau\sigma\hat{\nu}$  for  $\mathring{\alpha}\gamma\gamma\acute{\epsilon}\lambda\sigma\nu$  here; and therefore, on this and other grounds, acrow is to be preferred.

The flying Eagle announces a triple Woe to the inhabiters of the Earth-that is, to those who are of the earth, earthy; and are not loyal subjects of Christ, and faithful citizens of the Kingdom of heaven. See above on iii. 10.

Observe also, St. John says that he beheld and saw one Eagle, ἐνὸς ἀετοῦ. The Eagle in mid-heaven here is called είς ἀετὸς, One Eagle. This Oneness marks some special messenger. This One Royal Bird, this King of Birds, here probably signifies Christ Himself, who is called in the Apocalypse "the Great Eagle" (xii. 14, where see note).

There is a similar use of the numeral els, one, in xviii. 21, είs ἄγγελος ίσχυρος, One special Angel who is strong, and xix. 7, είδον ενα άγγελον έστωτα, I saw One Angel standing. In both these cases the One Angel seems to designate Christ. On this emphatic use of εis, see Winer, § 18, p. 106.

Christ's Royalty, in His Human Nature, especially as triconsist Royally, in his ruman nature, especially as triumphing over Death, and as ascending in glory into heaven, is marked by the emblem of the Eagle (see on Matt. xxiv. 28. Luke xvii. 37; above on iv. 7), as it is in another respect, by that other emblem in the Apocalypse, where He is called the Lion, the King of Beasts (v. 5). In chap. x. 3, He is said to roar as a Lion. Why may He not therefore be here said to fly as an Eagle? especially as Jehovah Himself deigns to speak of Himself under this similitude in His care for His people in their Himself under this similitude, in His care for His people, in their deliverance from Egypt, and in their passage through the wilderness, to which there is a continual reference in this Vision of the trumpets. "As an Eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings, so the Lord did lead him." (Deut. xxxii.

The Eagle flies ἐν μεσουρανήματι, in mid-heaven, i. e. in the zenith (see Eustath. ad Iliad. ix. 68. Wetst.), so as to be manifest to all, like the sun at noon.

What now is the moral of this Vision?

It is this: The Trumpets, as we have seen, were introduced by a Vision of the heavenly Temple, and by the ministry of an Angel-probably Christ Himself, as Man, in His Priestly character—presenting before the Throne in heaven the prayers of All Saints (viii. 2—5).

The deliverances of God's Church, and all the discipline with which He purifies her in this World, by means of the Divine Judgments announced by the Trumpets, and executed by Him on the dwellers upon the earth, that is, on the proud and godless of this world, have been already represented as results of the Prayers of the Saints, presented by the Angel in the golden censer in heaven.

Thus the Church has been assured of God's protection; and she is encouraged to trust in Him, and pray for the Coming of Christ.

What next follows?

Three several and extraordinary Woes are now announced with a special preamble, and by a special Vision. One Eagle is seen stretching out his wings and flying in mid-heaven, and is heard crying, "WOE, WOE, WOE, to the inhabiters of the Earth, by reason of the remaining voices of the three Angels, which are about to sound."

Thus the Church is assured, that, however terrible these judgments may be, they are foreknown and controlled by Him who bore His people out of Egypt of old, and carried them through the wilderness on Eagles' wings; and that whatever may betide the inhabiters of the Earth, in the storm of His wrath against them for their ungodliness, she herself, who is not of the Earth, but has her hopes and her heart in heaven, "will be defended under His wings, and be safe under His feathers," as it is said in the Psalm (xci. 4); and that He will protect her from her Enemy the Dragon, as is written in the same Psalm concerning Christ, Who is "the great Eagle" (Rev. xii. 14)—on whose Wings the Church is borne. "Thou shalt go upon the Lion and the Adder, the young Lion and the Dragon Thou shalt tread under Thy feet." (Ps. xci. 13.)

This exposition is illustrated and confirmed by the language of the Apocalypse in the Twelfth chapter, to which a reference has just been made. See xii. 2, 3. 13, 14.

There we read, "Woe to the Earth" (xii. 12), as here, "Woe to the inhabiters of the Earth;" and that when the Dragon saw that he was cast out, he persecuted the Woman, i. e. the Church; and that "to the woman were given the two wings of the great Eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness into her place"—just as the Ancient Church and secuting King of Egypt, a type of the worldly oppressors of the Church-and there she is nourished from the face of the Serpent (xii. 14); and she may now say, "I will get me away far off, and remain in the wilderness, I will make haste to escape, because of the stormy wind and tempest." And the Spirit comforts her with words of peace, "O cast thy burden on the Lord, and He shall nourish thee, and shall not suffer the rightcous to fall for ever; As for my enemies, O God, Thou shalt bring them into the pit of destruction." (Ps. lv. 7, 8. 23, 24.)

but that they should be tormented five months: and their torment is as the torment of a scorpion, when it hath struck a man.

And in those days shall the men seek death, and shall not find the forms of the Locusts are like unto horses prepared unto battle; and on their heads are as it were crowns of gold, and their faces as the faces of men. And they had hair as the hair of women, and their teeth were as teeth of lions. And they had breastplates, as it were breastplates of iron: and the sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots of many horses running to battle. And they have tails and stings like unto scorpions, and in their tails is their power to hurt the men five months; they have over them a King, the angel of the bottomless pit; his name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, and in the Greek tongue he hath a name Apollyon.

The Vision here, in v. 1, represents the Star not as falling, Ine vision here, in v. 1, represents the Star not as fatting but as having already fallen (πεπτωκότα), and to this star is given the key of the bottomless pit (τοῦ φρέατος τῆς ἀβύσσου), literally, of the pit of the abyss: or, in other words, of the aperture, by which there is egress from, or ingress into, the abyss. The φρέαρ is the "orificium abyssi." (Bengel.)

The sense of the word ἄβυσσος has been already examined in the return the Lake of Fire in the note on Luke viii. 31. It does not mean the Lake of Fire, from which it is distinguished in the Apocalypse. See on xx. 1-3, compared with xx. 10. It does not mean that final abode of the Evil One, and of his associate spirits, but it signifies his present residence and stronghold.

A Star, in the language of the Apocalypse, is a Christian Teacher (i. 16. 20; viii. 10). The Star which had fallen from heaven to the earth, represents the heretical apostasy of some who were designed to be Lights in the Church. This Star has the key of the abyss, and opens the pit. Heretical Teachers are thus represented as being the cause of the opening of the abyss, and of the issue of the smoke from it, which is described as darkening the air and the sun; that is, obscuring the heavenly light of Christ and of His Gospel.

Smoke issues from the Pit; and an army of Locusts comes forth out of the smoke upon the earth. They do not come directly from the Pit itself, as the Beast does, in chap. xi. 7, but the army of Locusts issues forth out of the smoke.

They are described as like unto Scorpions of the earth.

Our Lord has spoken of Scorpions in a spiritual sense, as instruments of Satan. "I give you power to tread on serpents and scorpions." (Luke x. 19.) And in the mention of them here, there is also a reference to the enemies by which the Ancient Church of God was assailed in the wilderness, and to the mercy of Almighty God, "Who led her through the great and terrible wilderness, wherein were fiery serpents and scorpions." (Deut. viii. 15.) These Locusts are from Joel; see notes there, ii. 1—8

These Locusts of the Apocalypse are represented as enemies

These Locusts of the Apocarypse are represented as enemies to the soul; "they have no power to injure the Grass, nor any green thing, nor any Tree, except  $(\epsilon i \mu h)$  the men who have not the seat of God on their foreheads." Etz. has  $\mu \delta \nu o u s$ , only, here after  $\partial \nu \theta \rho \omega \pi u v$ , but it is not in A, C, and is probably only a gloss. It is added in v. 10, that they have power to hurt the men, five months. Observe the article  $\tau o u v$  before  $\partial \nu \theta \rho \omega \pi u u v$ ; "they have power to hurt the men," i. e. the men mentioned here, who have not the seal of God on their foreheads. not the seal of God on their foreheads.

Observe here also the use of  $\epsilon i \mu \eta$ , save only: these Locusts cannot hurt the vegetation of the earth-and therefore they are not natural locusts-but they only hurt men, and only a particular class of men, viz. those men who have not on their forcheads the seal of God, which declares them to be Ilis, and assures them of

These Locusts are described as conquering; they have golden crowns of Victory (vi. 2,  $\sigma\tau\epsilon\phi d\nu o\nu s$ ); their faces are human; their hair is long like that of women; and they are in form like Horses of War, to which even natural Locusts bear some resemblance (see Joel ii. 4. Winer, R. W. B. i. 487), and Locusts are therefore called in Italy "cavallette."

But, whereas natural Locusts are described in Scripture as "not having any king" (ἀβασίλευτον γένος, Prov. xxx. 27), these spiritual Locusts are represented here as having a king over them, who is the Angel of the abyss, and whose name is expressed here in Hebrew (אָבָדוֹן, Abaddon), and also in Greek ('Aπολλύων), both names signifying Destroyer; and thus he stands in contrast as the Adversary of the Creator and Preserver, whose name is specified in Scripture in those two languages, viz. in Hebrew אַבָּא (Abba), and in Greek Πατηρ, Father. See on-Rom. viii. 15. Gal. iv. 6.

The name is given in both languages in both cases, because the one is the universal Enemy, Satan, the other is the Father of all, "rich in mercy to all" (Rom. x. 12), both Jew and Greek (Rom. iii. 29).

It is specified here as a characteristic of these Locusts, that they are withheld from killing men; but permission is given to them to exert their power under a control and restraint, so that men should be tried, and tormented by them five months. Observe the change of voice here, from active to passive. God restrains them from killing men; and He suffers that men should be tried by them for a certain period. The language of the ve trea by them for a certain period. The language of the original marks the Divine agency in a more striking manner (εδόθη αὐτοῖς ἵνα μὴ κ.τ.λ.); it was given to them that they should not kill them, but that men should be tormented by them.

When we consider these circumstances, and review the characteristics of the Trumpets, and contemplate the events predicted by the preceding Trumpets, we see good reason for believ-ing, with many learned and judicious Interpreters, that the present Trumpet, the Fifth, announced the woes inflicted by Mohammedanism.

In further corroboration of this opinion, it may be observed, that the judicial Woe of this Trumpet is represented as due to the agency of the Star which has fallen from heaven; that is, to the operation of the false doctrine and corrupt worship of those who ought to have been Luminaries in the firmament of the Church. The Locusts issue from the smoke that arises from the pit of the abyss, unsealed by the fallen Star.

Mohammedanism owed its origin to Heresies, Schisms, and corruptions in Christendom.

When the Arians had propagated their pernicious dogma, that the Son of God is a creature, and when it had been affirmed by others in Christendom, that He was a mere man, it followed as a natural consequence, that other persons would be represented as a equal or superior to Him. If Jesus Christ was no more than a Prophet, then Mohammed, who came after Him, might be greater than Jesus Christ. In other respects also, defection, and degeneracy in the faith and ritual of Christendom, were preparatory and auxiliary to the spread of Islamism. The doctrine of the Divine Unity, studiously asserted in the Koran, gave an advantage to the new religion as contrasted with the popular form of Christianity, which was tinctured by superstition and idolatry. "Mahomet," says Neander (Church History, vol. v. p. 111), "proclaimed that he had been sent by God to be a restorer of pure Theism, and to cleanse it of those strange elements, with which it was mixed in Judaism and Christianity. The war which he waged was directed against the vain corruptions of those earlier Revelations; and he might be fairly justified in accusing the professors of Christianity, such as he saw it, of falsifying the original worship, as when he assailed the adoration of the Virgin Mary and of the Saints [and of images]. And the Schisms and bitter animosities among the different sects of Christians, presented another point of comparison, in which the religious unity displayed by the votaries of the Koran appeared in a favourable light." Neander has also observed (Ch. Hist. v. 114), that the divisions which existed among the Oriental Christians, and hindered them from making any well-organized resistance to the aggressions of the enemy, gave great facilities to the victorious advance of the Mohammedan Saracens. Cp. Grotius, de Verit.

Rel. Christ. vi. § 1.

The emissaries of this plague, in the Fifth Trumpet, are called Locusts, and they are compared to Horses and Scorpions. All these physical objects are associated with Arabia, the native country of Mohammedanism. The Locusts which were brought by Moses as a plague upon Pharaoh and upon Egypt, came from Arabia. (Exod. x. 13. Cp. Winer, R. W. B. i. p. 490.) The Mohammedan military power was distinguished by its cavalry. "Arabia," says Gibbon, "in the opinion of the naturalist, is the genuine and original country of the horse; the merit of the Barb, the Spanish and the English horse, is derived from a mixture of Arabian blood." (Gibbon, Decline and Fall, &c., ch. l., near the beginning.) The noblest description of the war-horse was probably written in Arabia. (Job xxxix. 19.) Scorpions also are mentioned in Scripture as characteristic of the Arabian wilderness. (Deut. viii. 15.) All the features of this Vision attract the mind to Arabia.

These Locusts are described as conquerors, having crowns of Victory on their heads, and the sound of their wings is like that of many horses running to battle. Islamism propagated itself by conquest; and the rapidity with which its conquests were achieved, and the vast extent of its dominion, and the splendour of its victories, are almost without a parallel in the history of the world. In leighty years it overran, or rather flew with wings, over Palestine, Syria, Armenia, a great part of Asia Minor, Persia, part of India, Egypt, Numidia, Portugal, and Spain.

Another characteristic of these Locusts is, that they have faces like Men, and hair as of Women, that is, long hair. (Cp. 1 Cor. xi. 14.). Mohammed himself is thus described; "his hair, hanging over his shoulders, retained its dark colour to the day of his death." (Arnold's Ishmael, p. 86.)

The Arabian and Sergeons are described by ancient without

The Arabians and Saracens are described by ancient writers as wearing their hair "long and flowing, and sometimes plaited like women." See Plin. N. H. vi. 26. Ammian. Marcellin. xxxi. 16, where Valesius says, "Such was the costume of the Saracens, wearing their hair long and braided, hanging down on their backs, 'crinitis vittatisque capitibus.'

A recent writer on Islamism thus speaks, " Moslem historians A recent writer on Islamish thus speaks, Austein instination and that the Locust Armies carried on their wings the Arabic inscription 'We are the Host of Allah; every one of us carries ninety-nine eggs; and if we had a hundred, we would destroy the world and all that is therein,'" Dr. J. M. Arnold's Ishmael, p. 252. Thus they identified themselves with the Locusts of the Apocalypse; the brood of Abaddon, the Destroyer; thus also they owned that they were restrained by a controlling Power.

It is also specified in the Vision that these Locusts are restrained from killing the men, but that men would be tormented by them five months.

The Persecution waged by Mohammedanism was distinguished in this respect from that of ancient Heathen Rome, which martyred Christians as such, and is represented in the Apocalypse as riding on a horse of fire, with a sword in its hand (vi. 3, 4). And the Persecution carried on by Mohammedanism was also distinguished from the Persecutions waged on the Saints of God by the two Beasts of the Apocalypse, who make war with the Saints, and kill those who do not worship the image of the Beast (xiii. 7-15; cp. xvii. 6).

Mohammedanism did indeed tempt men by many allurements to adopt its own creed; and this was a severe torment. It was, in the strict sense of the word, a βασανισμός; it was a touchstone (βάσανος) of their faith. Cp. I Pet. i. 7, where the Apostle compares persecution to the trial of precious metals.

Christians were subjected to many disabilities and humiliating distinctions and oppressions, if they refused to profess Islamism; but they were not compelled to renounce their faith. This fact is established by the authorities in Gibbon's Decline and Fall, chap. ii., near the end; and by the quotations from the Koran by Gieseler, Church Hist. § 127, who says, "Jews and Christians were tolerated by the Arabs on condition of paying a poll-tax; and though sometimes severely oppressed (βεβασανισμένοι), they were not compelled to change their religion; still, however, the advantages held out to those who adopted Islamism attracted many converts. Mahomet, in the Koran, made it a duty of believers to carry on religious war for the purpose of ex-terminating idolatry, and making Jews and Christians tributary."

In the conquest of Egypt by Amru, circa A.D. 639, the Bishop and Community of the Coptic Church near Memphis,

"submitted to the invaders, and paying a poll-tax secured to themselves their property and liberty of conscience."

Ishmael, p. 222, ed. 1859.

Neander observes (Church Hist., Third Period, First Section, near the end), "The Saracens, who, in the course of the seventh and eighth centuries, exercised rule in Asia, in Syria, and the neighbouring provinces, and in Northern Africa, did not persecute the old Christian inhabitants on account of their faith, if they paid the appointed tribute: but there were not wanting occasions for the exercise of wilful oppression, insult, and cruelty: those who only adhered in uncertainty to a dead faith" (i. c. "they who had not the seal of God on their foreheads") " might allow themselves to become converts to a religion which was extending itself by manifold influences, and flattered the passions of the natural man, and was supported by all the weight of authority."

It is said in this prophecy (v. 6), that in those days shall the men seek death. Observe here "the men," the men who have not the Seal of God (v. 4; cp. v. 10). This is a scriptural description of extreme misery, and represents the torment to which those men would be reduced under Mohammedan rule. Cp. Jer. viii. 3, where the prophet speaks of the sufferings of the rebellious Jews scattered abroad; " Death shall be chosen rather than life, by all the residue of them that remain of this evil family, which, remain in all places whither I have driven them, saith the Lord of hosts." Not that the dispersed Jews did really all prefer death, for few had the courage to be martyrs; but the misery of their life is thus described by a comparison which represents it as worse than death. Cp. Job iii. 21, where Job's wretchedness is represented in similar terms, "Wherefore is light given to him that is in misery, and life unto the bitter of soul, which long for death, but it comes not, and dig for it more than hid treasures?" The language of the Patriarch of Arabia appropriately describes the sufferings of Arabian Christians under the rule of the Arabian false Prophet and his Saracenic followers.

The question concerning the meaning of the five months, during which these Locusts are described as hurting men (v. 10), will be considered hereafter in a general note on the times and numbers in the Apocalypse, at the end of chap. xi.

In the mean time, it may be observed that natural Locusts have that time (viz. five months) appointed to them; their power of hurting extends from April to September, when they are rendered torpid by the cold. Bochart, Hierozoic. pars post. iv. c.

8, p. 495. Cp. Eichhorn, Ewald, De Wette.

And the moral of this sentence is, that, as natural locusts have their season of five months prescribed and limited by God, so these spiritual locusts will not be able to exercise their power of injuring men beyond the period which is determined by Him; and thus it will be seen and acknowledged, that the wonderful conquests of the Saracenic and Turkish armies were not achieved by their own inherent strength and energy, but by the Divine Permission, and for the execution of Divine Judgments.

It may perhaps be asked by some, in reference to this exposition;

How can it be said that Mohammedanism did not hurt any thing save only those men who had not the seal of God on their foreheads? Did not Mohammedanism hurt some faithful Christians, who had the Seal of God on their foreheads?

The answer to this question is supplied by other parts of Holy

They who hurt are compared here to scorpions: their power is called έξουσία, authority, permission, from God (cp. Rom. xiii. 1-3), and the word used here for to hurt is  $\delta\delta$ iκε $\hat{v}$  (vv. 3, 4). Also, the word here used for "it was commanded" is  $\delta$  $\delta$  $\delta$  $\epsilon$ 6 $\theta$  $\theta$ ; and this word, used about twenty-five times in the New Testament, is always predicated of God. It was God therefore Who restrained these scorpions from hurting (ἀδικεῖν) any " who have His Seal on their foreheads."

Let us now refer to the words of our Blessed Lord to His disciples, as recorded by St. Luke, x. 13, "I was beholding Satan falling as lightning from heaven." Compare the star fallen from heaven here (v. 1). Our Lord then says, "Behold, I give From neaven nere (v. 1). Our Lord then says, "Deboth, I give you the power"  $(\tau \dot{\eta} \nu \ \dot{\epsilon} \dot{\xi} o v \dot{\alpha} (a \nu, a u tho r i t \nu, t he same word as here), "to tread upon" <math>(\dot{\epsilon} r \dot{\alpha} \nu \omega, \text{ over, and upon})$  "serpents and scorptons, and upon all the power"  $(\delta \dot{v} \nu \alpha \mu v, \text{ physical force, distinguished from <math>\dot{\epsilon} \dot{\xi} o v \sigma \dot{\alpha} \dot{\alpha}$  "of the Enemy; and nothing shall in any wise hurt you"  $(\dot{v} \dot{\mu} \hat{\alpha} s \ o \dot{\nu} \ \dot{\mu} \dot{\eta} \ \dot{\alpha} \delta \iota \kappa \dot{\eta} \sigma \eta$ , the same word as here). Therefore, whatever injuries might be inflicted by those graphinglike Loreste more the doubless on the earth who have subject to His rule, and be restrained by His control, and they would not be able to hurt (ἀδικεῖν) any of His faithful servants, the true members of Christ, "Who has bruised the head of the Serpent" (Gen. iii. 16), and Who would bruise Satan under their feet (Rom. xvi. 20), and Who has assured His disciples of every age that they would have the power—the authority— $(\tau \hat{n})v$   $\hat{\epsilon} \hat{t} o v \hat{\epsilon} t o v$  "to tread upon serpents and scorpions, and upon all the power of the enemy." Whatever might happen in this world to their perishable bodies, their sufferings would redound to their greater glory (Rom. viii. 18. 2 Cor. iv. 17. 1 Pet. i. 6, 7; iv. 13), and they "would be more than conquerors through our Lord Jesus Christ" (Rom. viii. 35—37. 1 Cor. xv. 57), "For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and His ears are open unto their prayers, but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil. And who is he that will harm you if ye be followers of Him that Is good  $(\tau \circ \hat{v} \stackrel{?}{\alpha} \gamma \alpha \theta \circ \hat{v} \stackrel{"}{\mu} \iota \mu \tau \pi \alpha i)$ ? But and if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye, and be ye not afraid of their terror, neither be ye troubled, but sanctify the Lord God in your hearts" (1 Pet. iii. 12–15).

The following historical, doctrinal, moral, and practical inferences may be deduced from the vision of the Fifth Trumpet.

(1) Mohammedanism is not to be regarded as a true religion; but as an emanation from the bottomless pit, the abode of the Evil One. (2) Mohammedanism was permitted by God to come forth from the abyss to scourge mankind for corrupting the true Faith and Worship, and for their manifold schisms and divisions, and for their want of zeal and earnestness in maintaining and propagating the Truth. (3) Heresy and Schism, Superstition and Idolatry, are great evils, not only in themselves, but in their consequences. The fallen Star unsealed the Pit, and the Pit sent forth the smoke, and the smoke sent forth the Locusts. Arianism introduced Islamism. The schisms of Christendom made it a prey to the sword of the False Prophet. Superstition and Idolatry gave an easy triumph to the armies of him who proclaimed as his watchword, "There is One God." God Himself pointed out the sins of Christians by the punishment which He inflicted upon them. He adapted their punishment to their sins; and thus called them to repentance. They had despised the love of the True Prophet, revealing Himself as God, and they were chastised by the cruelty of the False Prophet. They were distracted by feuds; and they were made to bow their neck to the yoke of a Power which would have forced them all into unity. By the worship of the creature they had almost fallen into Polytheism, and they were chastised by him who proclaimed himself the restorer of Monotheism.

(4) The spirit of comparative forbearance, which in some respects characterized Mohammedanism, was not due to any moderation in its author; for the Locusts are described as under the rule of him who is called the Destroyer (v. 11); but solely to the restraining power and mercy of Almighty God.

(5) Mohammedanism itself, with its rapid and extensive conquests, not having in it the sinful and debasing elements of Idolatry, may be regarded as having served as a barrier against the incursions of Pagan Idolatry from without, and as a safeguard against the corruptions of Superstition within the Church; especially in the East; and thus, in a certain sense, may be recognized as subservient to God, in preserving Christendom from even a worse evil. It had the effect of stimulating the courage, and of reviving the faith of many; and perhaps the condition of Christianity in Asia, Africa, and Greece, might have been far more miserable than it was, if the Christians had not been awakened from their slumber, and excited by their trials to put forth new energy, and to flee with fervent devotion to God as their only refuge in adversity.

(6) Whatever woes may be inflicted on the world under the tyranny of Mohammedanism, or of any other false religion, yet the true servants of God, who have His seal on their foreheads, are safe from harm.

They have "authority from Him to tread upon serpents and scorpions and on all the power of the enemy, and nothing will in any wise hurt them."

Therefore the True Faith is to be held fast as the Christian's armour, and as a safeguard in all the perils of his pilgrimage through this transitory world to his heavenly rest.

(7) The sway of Mohammedanism is not only limited by God in degree, but in time; its power is to hurt the men (i. e. the careless and faithless, and not the true Christian, v. 4) for an appointed season, called in the prophecy five months. Then its appointed season, called in the prophecy five months. Then its power will fall, perhaps as rapidly as it rose. Here is another proof of its earthly origin. Islamism has its "five months," but the Gospel of Christ is everlasting (Rev. xiv. 6). The Locusts have a King over them, the Destroyer, and he goeth to destruction. But Christ is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, and His Kingdom will have no end (xvii. 14; xix. 16).

In order to understand this Vision, it must be borne in mind that the design of the Trumpets is not to represent the doings or sufferings of the good, nor the sins of the wicked, but the punishments inflicted upon the wicked for their sins.

Next it must be observed that the Vision of this Trumpet, the Sixth, stands in remarkable contrast, in some respects, with that of the preceding or Fifth Trumpet. The Woe represented by the fifth Trumpet proceeded from the pit of the abyss, opened by a Star that had fallen from heaven. That Woe was produced by a power which had fallen from God.

But here, in the Sixth Trumpet, the agency which becomes a Woe, is represented as proceeding from God.

The signal which sets it in operation is not, as there, from below, and from the Evil One, but it is from above, even from the presence of God Himself. I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar before God, saying to the Angel, who had the Trumpel, Loose the four Angels that have been bound.

The Loosing of the Four Angels is, therefore, a divine act. Next, the Four Angels, which are here loosed, are Angels of

The word Angels is of very frequent occurrence in the Apocalypse; but in no instance, when thus placed absolutely, as here, does it signify an evil Angel.

The number four, as used in this Book, indicates Universality, which appertains to Him in Whose Hand are the four corners of the Earth (see chap. xi. at the end). And these four Angels in the Sixth Trumpet, which are His agents in punishment, may be compared to those Four Angels in the Sixth Seal (vii. 1, 2), who stand at the four corners of the Earth, to whom it is given to hurt (ἀδικήσαι, vii. 2, 3, the same word as is used here in rv. 10, and 19) the Earth and the Sea.

Besides, the number assigned to the Army here displayed, is two Myriads of Myriads; and this is an immense number, far exceeding any human force.

The number Myriads of Myriads had already been used in this Book to describe the number of Angels about the throne of God (see v. 11). And Daniel uses the same number in speaking of God's Angels (Dan. vii. 10), and St. Jude speaks of the Lord coming with myriads of His Holy Angels (Jude 14. Cp. Heb. xii. 22). And the number of God's Angels in Ps. lxviii. 17, when literally translated, is precisely the same as here.

Again, the colour of their breastplates serves also to mark these armies as belonging to God.

No one will despise inferences from colours as well as from numbers, who has carefully considered their use in the Levincal Ritual; which is, as it were, an Ante-Chapel to the inner shrine of the Apocalypse.

This colour jacinth appears as a sacred colour in the Levitical Dispensation, where the word jacinth is used by the LXX, in the description of the curtains and ornaments of the Tabernacle (Exod. xxv. 5; xxvi. 14; xxxv. 7. 23; xxxvi. 19; xxxix. 34), and the holy garments of the High Priest (Exod. xxviii. 5— 8), and the breastplate and the Ephod (xxviii. 15. 28, 29. 33), and the Veil of the Holy of Holies (xxxvi. 35; xxxviii. 18: cp. 2 Chron. iii. 14), and the covering of the Ark (Numb. iv. 6), and of the Table of Shewbread (iv. 8), and of the Golden Candlestick, and of the vessels of the Holy Place, and of the Golden Altar of Incense (iv. 9—13). Compare the remarks of Bahr, Symbolik, i. 303, and 325, where he shows that jacinth (dark blue) was set apart under the Levitical Law as a sacred colour. The deep blue of the Sky, and of the Sea, in which God's majesty and glory are conspicuous, are like natural exponents of this symbolical consecration.

The word δακίνθινος (of jacinth, or deep blue), as well as λευκός, white, in the Apocalypse, indicates a sacred colour. adorns the livery of God's servants, and the uniform of His soldiers. One of the precious stones of the Twelve Apostolic Foundations of the heavenly Jerusalem in the Apocalypse is jacinth (xxi. 20).

The heads of the horses in this Apocalyptic Vision are described as like heads of Lions (v. 17). Already the first of the heavenly Living Creatures had been described as like a Lion (iv. 7), and in two places of the Apocalypse Christ Himself, in His royal and prophetical office, is described as a Lion (above, Rev. v. 5; below, x. 3).

Besides, the purpose for which these Angels are loosed, and this Army is sent forth, is a holy one.

It is, in order that men should repent; and it is said, as it were, with indignant surprise, that the men who were not killed by this visitation did not repent of the works of their own hands (v. 20). Vol. II.—Part IV.

This then seems to be clear, that these Angels are Angels of God; that this army is an army of God; and that it is set in motion by a command of God, and with a design worthy of God.

But it may be said, Are there not other circumstances in this Vision which are at variance with this divine character?

(1) The Angels are said to kill (ἀποκτείνειν) the third part of men, v. 15.

True, but precisely the same thing is said of the agency of the Two Witnesses, mentioned in the eleventh chapter, who are clearly sent by God, and are called His Witnesses (xi. 3), and are received up to Him in triumph and glory (xi. 12); and the same word is used in the description of the punishment inflicted on those who reject them. If any one wills to hurt them he must be killed (ἀποκτανθῆναι, v. 5), and the consequences of their triumph are, that 7000 men were killed (ἀπεκτάνθησαν).

The attention of the reader is specially invited to that Vision of the Two WITNESSES (xi. 3-14), which seems, when carefully examined, to leave no room for doubt as to the true interpretation of this Vision of the Four Angels. Indeed, both these Visions are designated by the same name: both represent "the Second Woe." See ix. 12, and xi. 14.

Further, the same action of killing is predicated in the Apocalypse of Christ Himself. He describes Himself as killing the children of the False Teacher with death (ii. 23). And we read, that "the rest of the men (who are arrayed against Him) were killed by the sword of Him Who sitteth on the Horse; by the sword that proceedeth out of His mouth" (xix. 21).

Indeed, all these sayings are repetitions of what He Himself declares in the Gospel, "Those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before Me" (Luke xix. 27).

(2) Again, it may be objected, that an army of God could not be described under such a figure as this; "out of their mouths issueth fire and smoke and brimstone; by these three plagues was the third part of men killed, by the fire and by the smoke and the brimstone, which issueth out of their mouths" (vv. 17, 18).

But here again it may be observed, that precisely the same thing is predicated of the Two Witnesses of God, in the next chapter. "If any man willeth to hurt them, fire issueth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies; and if any man willeth to hurt them, he must in this manner be killed; these have power over the waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth, as often as they will, with all plagues" (xi. 5, 6).

It may be also remembered, that, in the Hebrew Prophets, smoke and fire are represented as coming forth from God's countenance (as in Ps. xviii. 8), to consume His foes. And it is predicted of God's enemies in this book, that they shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the Holy Angels, and in the presence of the Lamb (xiv. 10; cp. xix. 11). Thus Fire and Brimstone are represented as instruments of the wrath of the Lamb (see above, vi. 16), the Meek and Holy One Himself, Who shed His blood to take away the sins of the world, and Who is infinite in mercy to those who love and obey Him but to those who despise and resist Him our God is a "consuming Fire" (Heb. xii. 29).

The Trumpets represent God's wrath and indignation against His enemies; and the execution of His retributive Judgments upon them for their abuse of His mercies, and contempt of His Majesty, and violation of His Law.

No wonder, therefore, that the elements of Hell itself should be represented as weapons of His Justice, and as His "instruments of death" (Ps. vii. 13) against the rebellious. Cp. Isa. xxx. 33.

(3) It may also be objected that an army sent by God could not be compared to horses "whose power is in their mouth, and in their tails; for their tails are like serpents, and they have heads, with which they hurt" (v. 19).

To this it may be replied, that God's dispensations in this world, and His messages to it, are likened, by Hebrew Prophets, to an army of horsemen, especially in His judicial retributions on Egypt, the Enemy of His People. "Thou didst ride, O Lord, upon Thine horses and Thy Chariots of Salvation. Thy bow was made naked, even Thy Word; Thou didst walk through the sea with Thine horses; through the heap of great waters" (Hab.

In the Apocalypse Christ is represented as a Warrior riding on a Horse, and His armies follow Him on horses, and His enemies are killed by the sword of Him Who rideth on the Horse (xix. 11. 19. 21), and the blood of the winepress of His wrath cometh up to the bridles of the Horses (xiv. 20).

αὐτῶν αἱ γὰρ οὐραὶ αὐτῶν ὅμοιαι ὄφεσιν, ἔχουσαι κεφαλάς, καὶ ἐν αὐταῖς άδικοῦσι.

Next, as to the imagery of the Serpents, we may refer again to the circumstances of the Exodus, which are perpetually re-curring in the Apocalypse, especially in the Visions of the Trumpets. The very badge of office of the Hebrew Legislator, the instrument by which Moses wrought his miracles, by which God punished His enemies and delivered His people, was changed into a serpent. (Exod. iv. 2. 4, LXX.)

This was its first appearance. And it is added, "Moses fled from before it." (Exod. iv. 3.) But God commanded him to take hold of it by its tail, in which is the serpent's sting; and which is noted in this Apocalyptic Vision as noxious to God's enemies (v. 19); "and Moses put forth his hand, and caught it, and it became a rod in his hand" (v. 4). Thus it was shown that God's faithful servants (Heb. iii. 2—5) can take hold of and handle that which is destructive to His adversaries, and that they can work wonders with it. This was a very significant emblem of Holy Scripture, the first books of which were written by him who bore the rod of power, which became a serpent. In the Septuagint Version of the same chapter (iv. 17), we read that God said to Moses, Thou shalt take into thine hand this rod, which has been changed into a serpent (τὴν στραφεῖσαν εἰς ὄφιν), and with it thou shalt do signs... And Moses returned into the land of Egypt, and took the rod of God in his hand (iv. 20; see viii. 5. 16; x. 13; xiv. 16).

When Moses and his brother Aaron came before Pharaoh, in order to show that the power was not in Moses himself, but from God, Aaron was commanded to take the rod, and to cast it before Pharaoh and his magicians; and the rod of God became a serpent: and after a trial, in which God allowed the magicians to exercise some supernatural power, for they cast down their rods and they became serpents, Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods (vii. 10 - 12).

Again, in the wilderness, a serpent of brass, by God's command, was made the instrument of health to the faithful Israelites, who were cured by it from the bite of the serpents of fire, by which He punished the wicked for unbelief. (Numb. xxi. 6. 9. 1 Cor. x. 9.) And this serpent of brass was a figure of Christ,the Saviour of all who believe, the Healer of the wounds inflicted by the bite of the old serpent of Fire. (See notes on John iii. 14, 15. Gal. iii. 13.)

Therefore, we arrive at the conclusion, that the Army in this Apocalyptic Vision is an Army of God.

The question now arises, What agents of God are specially represented in this Vision ?

In answer to this inquiry, let us observe, that-

The cause of the punishment is intimated in the words, "Loose the four Angels that have been bound at the river Euphrates.'

Some Expositors understand by these Angels and their host, some great earthly powers,-Turkish, Saracenic, Oriental, -and suppose that they will come forth from the literal river Euphrates.

But this opinion is untenable. The Euphrates is the river of Babylon; and Babylon in the Apocalypse is always used in a figurative sense; it designates the Great City, concerning which more will be said hereafter. We cannot therefore concur with those Interpreters, who, while they understand Babylon in a typical sense, interpret the river of Babylon in a literal sense. If Babylon is figurative (as doubtless is the case), Euphrates, the river of Babylon, must be figurative also.

What City is typified by Babylon will be considered hereafter. The Four Angels of God are represented here as having been bound by an evil power in the mystical Babylon. They are bound as Christ was bound; and He was sent bound (δεδεμένος, the same word as here; see on John xviii. 24) to Caiaphas and Pilate. (Mark xv. 1.) Here again is another resemblance to what is represented in the next chapter as done to God's Two Witnesses. They are represented as in a worse state than boundeven killed, as Christ also was killed; killed in "that great City," namely, the mystical Babylon. (See note on xi. 8.)

The Divine Angels are now loosed; their number is four, signifying the universality of their commission.

They are said to be prepared for the hour and day. Observe the definite article here (v. 15).

This is one of the passages, in which great mistakes have been made and propagated, from want of attention to the original. Even a chronological period has been deduced from this passage, understood to mean an hour, a day, a month, and a year; and on the hypothesis that a prophetical day is equivalent to a year, that period has been imagined to be 391 years.

But the hour can be no other than the hour of God's judgment, as it is explained hereafter in chap. xiv. 15; cp. xi. 13. The day can be no other than the great Day of His wrath (xvi. 14; cp. vi. 17). "The Day," says St. Paul (1 Cor. iii. 13), "shall make it manifest," i. e. the great Day. The month and the year are the Month and Year of God's Vengeance on the misled. See Leavist 2 large. wicked. See Isa. xxxiv. 8; lxi. 2. Jer. li. 6. Cp. Hos. v. 7. Zech. xi. 8.

This is elucidated by what our Blessed Lord Himself says, "He that rejecteth Me, and receiveth not My words, hath One that judgeth him-the Word that I have spoken, that shall judge him in the Last Day" (John xii. 48).

The Four Angels represent the Divine Word; and there is a propriety in the number Four in that respect also, inasmuch as the Divine Word is summed up in the Fourfold Gospel. The fourfold Evangelium is preached by the Four Angels.

At the awful Day of Doom the power of God's Word will be felt and recognized by all. That Word is prepared for "The Day," to be the rule and standard by which every sentence pronounced at that great Day of Assize will be determined, and according to which all to whom it has been preached will be judged at that Day.

On the whole, we may conclude that this Vision represents the diffusion of the Fourfold Gospel to the four quarters of the Earth. It predicted that the Word of God would be bound. This prophecy has been fulfilled. God's Word has been bound. It was bound for a long time; it was not read to the people; it was chained in the fetters of a dead language; and so it remained, as it were, in prison for many centuries. And even to this day, in many countries, the Word of God is bound by some who profess themselves to be Chief Rulers in the Church of God.

The Ancient Expositors of the Apocalypse had not the benefit of the light which has been thrown on this prophecy by events, such as they could never have anticipated. They had not seen the binding of the four Angels, and their subsequent release in later days. They had not seen the Holy Scriptures chained and imprisoned, and afterwards let loose by God. And yet even some of the Ancient Interpreters of the Apocalypse concluded, from the tenor of this prophecy, that the Angels here mentioned must be Messengers of God. Thus Arethas and Ecumenius.

This Vision has revealed also the result which we have seen, and now see. It foretold that the Holy Scriptures, though bound as captives for a time, would be loosed by the command of God, and that they would traverse the world like an innumerable Army. And although they are God's army, and therefore are divine, and ministers of salvation to many, yet the Vision has declared that the Holy Scriptures would be like instruments of punishment and death to the enemies of God.

Therefore this Vision inculcates an important religious and moral truth. It reminds us that the present diffusion of the Holy Scriptures may be a terrible Woe. The Scriptures are not to be regarded simply as a blessing to those who receive and obey them; and a blank and cipher to those who reject or slight them. No. Scripture is like the rod in the hand of Moses. It is a rod by which the hand of Faith works miracles for God's people; and it is a serpent to destroy His enemies. It is either Life or Death. It either saves or kills. As Christ was set for the fall of some, and the rising of others (Luke ii. 34), and is a precious stone to many (Isa. xxviii. 16), and the head-stone of the corner (Matt. xxi. 42), but whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken, and on whomseever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder (Matt. xxi. 44. Luke xx. 18. Cp. 1 Pet. ii. 7, 8), so it is with His Word; "it is a savour of Life unto Life" to those who receive it, but "of Death unto Death" to those who disobey or despise it (2 Cor. ii. 15, 16).

The Flood, which was a type of Baptism (see on 1 Pet. iii. 21), saved Noah and his family; but it destroyed the unbelieving. The other Sacrament brings life to those who receive it aright; but they who do not discern the Lord's body, eat and drink condemnation to themselves (1 Cor. xi. 29).

So it is with all God's gifts to men. They have all a double edge. Especially is this the case with Holy Scripture. It is a Woe to the wicked. And this is what the present Trumpet declares.

Our Lord Himself authorizes and confirms this interpretation of the Vision now before us.

He describes His own Presence as a Woe to some. "WoE unto thee, Chorazin, Woz unto thee, Bethsaida; for if the mighty works which were done in thee had been done in Tyre and Sidon, hey would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes" (Matt. xi. 20, 21). Compare what is said here, v. 20, "they repented not of their works."

"If I had not come and spoken unto them they had not had sin, but now they have no cloke for their sin" (John xv. 22).

In v. 18, the four Angels are said to smite the world with plagues (πληγαῖs). And precisely the same thing is said to be done by God's Two Witnesses; "They smite the Earth with every plague as oft as they will," below, xi. 6; and Christ says of Himself, "O Death, I will be thy plagues," Hos. xiii. 14.
 Men and Nations may despise Scripture, and defy its warnings, and break its commandments; and, in the language of this Vision, they may be destroyed by the fire and smoke and sulphur which issue from the mouth of God's host; they may be made desolate by War, Plague, and Famine, which are His Ministers, executing His rightcous judgments on mankind for their disobedience to His Word; and yet they may not be conscious of the cause of their sufferings—for this very reason, because they do not revere His Word in which that cause is revealed.

The Holy Scriptures which were bound as captives for many generations have now been set free. Thus the four Angels have been loosed, which were bound at the river Euphrates.

The WORD of GOD has been translated into all languages. Thus the Angels have been loosed. By the aid of Printing, copies of the Scriptures have been multiplied innumerably. Thus, also, the Angels have been loosed. The Scriptures, in swiftness and strength, like an innumerable Army of Horsemen, are now sweeping over the world. Their sound is gone forth into all lands, and their words unto the ends of the world (Ps. xix. 4). These are the Chariots of God's Power. This is His xix. 4). These are the Charlots of God, is with them, and leads them Host. Christ, the Word of God, is with them, Host. Christ on to Victory.

And let us be sure that this Propagation of the Gospel is, to those who disregard and disobey it, a terrible WoE.

Therefore, well might the Sixth Angel take up the trumpet, and sound, Woe to the World. Woe to the World because of offences. Woe to the World, for its neglect of the Gospel. Let us hear the heavenly blast now sounding in our ears. Some nations have set at nought, in their Laws, the clearest precepts of the Gospel. Many of the wise of this world deny its Inspiration. Others are overwhelmed with the cares of this world; others live in the pleasures of sin, and the lusts of the flesh, as if the Scriptures did not exist. Even Churches have bound the Angels, and killed the Witnesses. And yet the Gospel is the Voice of God. The Word of God is the Army of God. Alas! for all who despise it. Woe to all who reject it. Plagues, Pestilences, Famines, Wars are the penalties on mankind for their contempt of it in this world; and in the world to come,—the Second Death.

20. και οι λοιποί] And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship their devils, and their idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood: which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk: Neither repented they of their murders, nor of their poisonings, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts.

In v. 20 A, B, C have τὰ (which is omitted by Elz.) before
In v. 20 A, B, C have are important, as showing that men did not desist from worshipping the evil spirits, and the idols which they had been wont to worship, their idols: intimating therefore the sins of mankind before this Trumpet, and the still greater sins after it; and the punishments that might be expected as their consequences.

It is here declared, that idolatry is worship of devils, δαιμόνια; and this is the doctrine of St. Paul (see 1 Cor. x. 20) and of the Holy Spirit in the Old Testament (see Deut. xxxii. 17). Concerning the teaching of devils, see 1 Tim. iv. 1.

These passages reveal the hidden working of Satan and his associates in the world.

The rest of the language concerning idols is similar to that of Ps. cvi. 37, and cxiii. 5. 7, in the LXX.

The order of sins here recited is that in which they are recited in Holy Scripture in the Decalogue; first sins against God, Idolatry; then Murder, against the Sixth Commandment; then Fornication, against the Seventh; then those against the Eighth. This confirms the exposition just offered, -of the Vision of the Sixth Trumpet.

The word φαρμακεία—literally the use of φάρμακα, drugs and its cognate terms, are used in the Old Testament by the LXX to describe the magical arts of the Egyptian sorcerers (Exod. vii. 22; viii. 18), and the witchcraft of Jezebel (2 Kings ix. 22), and of Babylon (Isa. xlvii. 9. 12. Dan. ii. 2. Cp. Deut. xviii. 10. Mal. iii. 5).

The scientific discoveries of modern times, and the great facilities afforded to the use of  $\phi\acute{a}\rho\mu\alpha\kappa\alpha$  in slow poisons, or in other silent, insidious, and almost inscrutable processes, give a peculiar significance to these words in the Apocalypse, where they occur oftener than in the rest of the New Testament, and may serve to show the prescience of its Divine Author, and its applicability to the later ages of the world.

The word φαρμακεία—the use of φάρμακα, or drugs—is here appropriately placed between φόνοι, murders, and πορνεία, fornication; φαρμακεῖs are placed between πόρνοι, fornicators, and εἰδωλολάτραι, idolaters, in xxi. 8; and φαρμακοὶ are joined with πόρνοι, fornicators, and φονεῖs, murderers, in xxii. 15. φαρμακοὶ αναφορικού μεταιονικού και μεταιονικού κ μακεία is placed between είδωλολατρεία, idolatry, and έχθραι, strifes, by St. Paul, in Gal. v. 19.

One of the uses of poisons which seems to be specially noted in Holy Scripture, and which appears to have suggested the combination of this word with the word πορνεία, is the use made of φάρμακα in producing abortion; see on 1 Tim. v. 14, and Suicer, Thes. v. φάρμακον, where it is observed that Fornication leads to the use of drugs (φάρμακα) in causing Abortion and Infanticide. The word φαρμακεία also signifies tampering with the health of others, or one's own, by means of drugs, φάρμακα, potions, philtres, often connected with magical arts and incantations, and with a view to sins of unholiness, both of bodily and spiritual fornication.

The Vision of the Sixth Trumpet,-when understood according to the interpretation just given,—prepares the way for what follows; and therefore the Vision now ensuing affords a confirmation of that exposition of the Sixth Trumpet.

In v. 1, observe \$\hat{\eta}\$ loss, the Rainbow, the reading in A, B, C. In  $\aleph$  there is a strange reading,  $\theta \rho i \xi$ . Elz. omits the article. The Rainbow is an attribute of the Divine Majesty as already represented in a former vision (iv. 3), and it is here like a halo round the head of the Angel, and marks him to be no other than CHRIST. "The Cloud" also in which He is clothed bespeaks this (see Acts i. 9. Rev. i. 7; xi. 12; xiv. 14-16), and the words, "His face as the Sun," are also declaratory of the presence of Christ (see Matt. xvii. 2, and compare above, i. 16, and below, xii. 1). In the feet as of fire we see another attribute of Christ (see above, i. 15; ii. 18), and further, the voice as of "a Lion" (in v. 3) is also significant of Christ, "the Lion of the tribe of Judah" (v. 5). This "other Angel," therefore, is Christ (cp. viii. 3), and so the words are understood by Bede, Alcasar, Hengstenberg, and many other Expositors.

Christ is represented in this Vision, first, as "Mighty," because, as the sequel shows, He would have many adversaries, and would overcome them all.

Next, "the Cloud," in which He "is clothed," speaks of His Ascension and of His second Coming to Judgment (Rev. i.

"The Rainbow" expresses His Mercy to the good, tempering His Justice and Judgments to the rebellious (see above,

"His face as the Sun," proclaims His Divine Glory.

"His Feet as Pillars," firmly set, and "of Fire," indicate that His kingdom is immoveable (Dan. ii. 44), and that although the World should rebel against it, it will never be destroyed, and that He will consume, as with fire, all who resist Him (Dan. vii.

-14; cp. above, i. 15).

His Feet are firmly planted "on the Sea" (vv. 2. 5), the fluid element denoting Nations in a state of turbulence and agitation (see vii. 3; viii. 8), for He will tread beneath His feet the swelling surge of human pride and passion, as He walked on the waves of the sea of Galilee in the storm (Matt. xiv. 25). And His feet are set on the Earth, the emblem of worldly Power opposed to the Kingdom of Heaven (see i. 7; iii. 10), for all things are subject to Him (see Ps. viii. 6. Matt. xxviii. 18), and however Nations and Kings may rise up against Christ (Ps. ii. 2, Revet (Ps. ex. 1. Matt. xxii. 44. 1 Cor. xv. 25).

He is described as "crying with a loud voice, like the roaring of a Lion," the King of Beasts, when agitated with rage; for, "to cry with a loud voice as a Lion roareth" (says Andreas), is a sign of wrath; and Christ, as King of the World, and Lord of the Church, is indignant with those who usurp His sovereignty; and will execute vengeance upon them. Cp. Joel iii. 16.

The word here used to describe the sound uttered by the Lion is μυκᾶται. The ancient Greek Interpreters observe that this word is applied to Oxen rather than to Lions (see Wetstein here), who are said βρύχεσθαι or ἀρύεσθαι (see above, 1 Pet. v. 8). But Theocritus (xxvi. 21) has μύκημα λεαίνης. However, this utterance of the Lion seems to be the prelude of louder and more terrible signs of indignation.

This imagery aptly introduces the prophecy in the ensuing chapters (xiii.-xx.), where the two Beasts, θηρία, are represented as rising up against Him Who is the Lion, and as overcome by Him.

The Seven Thunders, consequent upon the utterance of His Voice, are signs of His power and indignation.

These utterances are called "The Seven Thunders," as if they were well known, for such, as the ancient Greek Expositors observe (Caten. p. 328), is the force of the Article here. Cp. note above, on vi. 8.

Seven is the Apocalyptic symbol of completion (see i. 10;

v. 6; xi. at end). The Seven thunders are all the Thunders.

Thunder is the voice of God, and accompanied the publication of His Law on Sinai (Exod. xix. 16; xx. 18), and the execution of His judgments in Egypt (Exod. ix. 23. 29), and on the world (Ps. lxxvii. 18; civ. 7).

In the xxixth Psalm (as Hengstenberg has observed) there is a sevenfold mention of the voice of the Lord (vv. 3, 4 twice, 5. 7, 8, 9). And in the Apocalypse there is a sevenfold repetition of Thunder, which marks, by successive peals, the manifestation of God's power and majesty, and their final consummation in the last Thunder of universal Judgment. The 1st mention of Thunder is in the Vision of the Heavenly Throne (Rev. iv. 5). 2nd. In the opening of the First Seal, where the Rider on the white horse is revealed (vi. 1). 3rd. In the introduction to the Seven Trumpets (viii. 5). 4th. After the sounding of the Seventh Trumpet (xi. 19). 5th. Before the Song of the 144,000 standing on Mount Sion with the Lamb (xiv. 2). 6th. On the outpouring of the Seventh Vial of God's wrath on the Kingdom of the Beast (xvi. 18). 7th. After the destruction of Babylon (xix. 6).

The Seven Thunders are here mentioned as uttering their own voices (τὰς ἐαυτῶν φωνάς- κ has ταῖς έ. φωναῖς) collectively with one universal peal of Judgment, and giving a rehearsal of the Judgment to come, in consequence of the utterance of the Voice of Christ, the Lion of the Royal Tribe of Judah; showing that the Thunders of God's Judgments are wielded by Christ, Who is Judge of all (John v. 22); and will serve at the awful Day for the full and final vindication of His Kingly Majesty, against those who encroach on His prerogatives, or are not loyal to His Throne. This is a fit prelude to the ensuing Visions, which reveal special judgments on adversaries within His Kingdom.

The Seven Thunders represent the consummation of God's Judgments.

St. John was about to write what the Seven Thunders spake (for ὅτε Ν has ὅσα, and has ὅσα for & after σφράγισον), but he is commanded to seal what the Seven Thunders uttered, and not to write those things; that is, as the ancient Greek Expositors interpret the words (in Catena, p. 331), he is commanded "to keep them secret, because the full revelation of them is reserved for the last times."

The sense of  $\sigma\phi\rho\alpha\gamma i\zeta\omega$ , to seal, as applied to words, is to be illustrated from its use in this book, and in the visions of Daniel. In xxii. 10, St. John is ordered "not to seal the words of the prophecy of this book;" for, it is added, "the season" (of their fulfilment) "is at hand." In the book of Daniel, vii. 26, we read (according to the version of Theodotion), καl σὺ, Δανιηλ, σφράγισον την υρασιν, υτι είς ημέρας πολλάς. There Daniel was commanded to seal the Vision, because its accomplishment was distant: it would be unsealed by Time. And in Dan. xii. 4, where the Vision is concerning the Final Consummation, as here, the prophet was commanded "to hide the words, and to seal the book, σφραγίσαι το βιβλίον, till the season of the end," εως καιρού

Then follows the oath of the Angel, which marks the parallelism of Daniel's Vision with the present, and leads the reader to consider the one as a clue to the interpretation of the other.

The sense therefore here is, "Seal thou up the things which the Seven Thunders uttered, and write them not; because they belong to the end of all things, which is yet far off; and they will make themselves heard and known by all men, when Christ comes to Judgment." Our Lord's own description of His coming to Judgment illustrates this commission. For "as the Lightning cometh out of the East and shineth even unto the West, so shall also the Coming of the Son of Man be." (Matt. xxiv. 27. Luke xvii. 24.) The season of that Coming is sealed up, and cannot be read (see Isa. xxix. 11). It is not written, but it will write itself with the Lightning's flash upon the clouds of heaven.

St. John, who is commissioned to reveal, is also commissioned to seal. He is enabled to disclose many future events, but he is not permitted to declare the time of the end. He has no message to deliver concerning the season of Christ's Coming to Judgment. He declares that Christ will come (i. 7), and that all will be judged by Him when He comes (xx. 12). But the time of that Coming is sealed up, in order that we may be always ready for it (Luke xii. 40). He thus discourages vain speculations upon it, and encourages us to watch and pray, that we may be

In v. 2, the LITTLE BOOK, or rather ROLL (see above, v. 1), is said to have been opened, or unrolled (ἀνεφγμένον); and so it is again described in v. 8, opened in the hand of the Angel, intimating that the Volume had been once shut, but has now been unrolled by the Angel, and that it lies open in His hand. Such is the meaning of the perfect tense. See on I John iii. 9.

St. John is commanded to eat the Roll. The Roll here is characterized by a diminutive, βιβλαρίδιον (so A and R, but C* has βιβλιδάριον, and so B in v. 9; C** has βιβλαρίδιον). It is a little Roll, less than the BiBliov, or Roll, described above in chaps. v. and vi., which, as we have seen, contained a prophecy of the sufferings of the Universal Church, even to the end of the world.

This lesser Roll may be regarded therefore as containing a prophetic episode; and it is delivered by Christ, by whom it has been unrolled, to St. John.

It is, comparatively, a little Roll, because, as we shall see, the contents of it do not concern the whole Church of all timeas the $i\beta\lambda\lambda\lambda\text{old}—but only a portion of the Church for a particular time. We shall see reason to believe the little roll of St. John concerns the Power which is called the LITTLE HORN by Daniel (Dan. vii. 8. 20), namely, the spiritual power of Rome. But lest we should imagine that the Little Roll is very limited in its application, its delivery to St. John is accompanied with a commission to prophesy "concerning many Peoples, Nations, commission to prophesy "co Tongues, and Kings," v. 11.

St. John is commanded by a voice from heaven to ask the Angel for this little Roll: and the Angel gives it to St. John, and commands him to eat it, to consume it (κατα-φαγείν), that is, to make it his own, to incorporate it in himself. On this sense of ealing, see Jer. xv. 16, and cp. Acts x. 13. By this union of the divine element with himself, St. John is enabled to prophesy. He receives divine food, and is inspired thereby.

He eats the Roll, and it is in his mouth sweet as honey, but as soon as he has eaten it, his belly is bitter; doubtless because of its contents, "full of lamentation and woe." And, together with this eating of the Roll, he receives a new prophetic commission, "Thou must prophesy again upon  $(\ell \pi l)$  many Peoples, and Nations, and Tongues, and Kings," v. 11. On this use of έπl, upon, concerning, cp. John xii. 16. Heb. xi. 4; it is like the Latin super in "multa super Priamo rogitans, super Hectore multa." (Virgil, Æn. i. 750.) Winer, Gr. § 48, p. 351.

St. John receives a commission to prophesy concerning many Nations and Kings; and (as many commentators have observed, Grotius, Alcasar, Ewald, De Wette, Hengstenberg, Ebrard, see Düsterdieck, p. 353) he executes that commission in the following chapters, particularly xvii. 2. 10. 12. 15; xviii. 3; xix. 19;

We have a parallel to, and an illustration of, this action also in Hebrew Prophecy.

The Prophet Ezekiel was commanded to take a Roll, which was spread out open before him, and to eat it; and it was in his mouth as honey for sweetness, but therein was written "lamentation, and mourning, and woe" (Ezek. ii. 9, 10; iii. 1-3); and the Prophet Ezekiel having eaten the Roll, which was as honey in his mouth, and with which he was to fill his bowels, and to cause his belly (κοιλίαν) to eat (see v. 3), was lifted up in the spirit, and went in bitterness (v. 14); or, as the original expresses it, he went away bitter, כר, in the hot anger of his spirit, "amarus in indignatione," Vulg.; and "the house of Israel," to whom he was sent to deliver the message, is described by him as olkos παρα-πικραίνων, "an embittering house," a people causing bitterness to God and His Prophets, by their sins (ii. 5-8; iii. 9. 26, 27; xii. 2, 3. 9. 25; xvii. 12; xx. 13; xxiv. 3; xliv. 6).

That Vision of Ezekiel affords the clue for the interpretation of this Vision of the Apocalypse.

The Vision of the Throne of God and of the Living Creatures, which Ezekiel saw, and describes in the beginning of his prophecy (Ezek. i. 3-22) has been already compared with the similar initiatory Vision of St. John, at the opening of the prophetic portion of the Apocalypse (iv. 2-11).

The resemblance now becomes more striking; especially when the Vision of Ezekiel, as represented in the Septuagint Version, which was read by the Churches of St. John, is set beside that of St. John.

Let the Greek Text here of the Evangelist be compared with the words of Ezekiel in that Version,— $\kappa \alpha l \ \epsilon \bar{l} \delta o \nu$ ,  $\kappa \alpha l \ i \delta o \nu$ χειρ έκτεταμένη πρός με, και έν αὐτῆ κεφαλις βιβλίου, και ἀνείλησεν αὐτὴν ἐνώπιον μου, και ἐγέγραπτο ἐς αὐτὴν θρῆνος και μέλος και οὐαι (compare "the woe" here in the Apocalypse, xi. 14), καl είπε πρός με, Υιε ανθρώπου (Son of Man, a phrase never applied to a Prophet in the New Testament, as being now consecrated to Christ), κατάφαγε την κεφαλίδα ταύτην, καί πορεύθητι και λάλησον τοις υίοις Ίσραήλ και διήνοιξεν το στόμα μου, και έψώμισ έ με την κεφαλίδα ταύτην, και είπεν πρός με, Το στόμα σου φάγεται, και ή κοιλία σου πλησθήσεται της κεφαλίδος ταύτης και έφαγον αὐτην, και έγένετο εν τῷ στόματί μου ὡς μέλι γλυκάζον (Ezek, ii. 9, 10; iii. 1—3). Ezekiel then receives a commission to speak to the house of Israel: he is told that he is not sent to strangers, but to the house of Israel, to God's own Church and People (iii, 4-6), and they are an "embittering house" (v. 9).

The Roll is first sweet and then bitter to him. And the Little Roll is first sweet and then bitter to him.

Little Roll is first sweet and then bitter to St. John.

In the next chapters (iv., v., vi., vii., viii., ix.) Ezekiel de-clares a prophecy of woes to Jerusalem and Israel for their sins, especially their idolatries (ch. vii.).

In this remarkable parallelism we may recognize a confirmation of the opinion, grounded on internal evidence, that the message contained in this little Roll of the Apocalypse, specially concerns the House of Israel of the Gospel Dispensation; that it concerns degenerate branches of the Christian Church, embittering God and His Prophets, and is declaratory of divine Judgments on a part of Christendom for its sins.

Let us now examine the other particulars of this Vision.

In vv. 5 and 6 the Angel lifts up his hand, as usual in oaths, and swears by Him that liveth for ever and ever. The hand is the symbol of action; and the lifting it up is a pledge that the thing sworn will surely be done (Andreas). "The Lord will make bare His holy arm" (Isa. liii. 10), and assert His power in the sight of the world. We may compare the action of the Angel in the vision of Daniel (xii. 7), who "lifted up his right hand and left hand to heaven, and sware by (èv) Him that liveth for ever and ever." No omits èv.

On this use of  $\ell \nu$ , = by, after verbs of swearing, cp. Matt.

4. Winer, § 48, p. 348.

The Angel here is Christ (see vv. 1-3). Christ is here represented in His human nature, as King of the Church and the world; what follows concerns the prerogatives of His Mediatorial Kingdom, which will one day "be delivered up by Him" to God. See on 1 Cor. xv. 24.

Observe that the opened Roll is in Christ's hand (vv. 2. 8), which He lifts up to heaven. The opened Roll is very visible.

In v. 6, χρόνος does not mean time here in the sense sometimes assigned to it; nor does χρόνος οὐκ ἔσται signify "there shall be time no longer," but it signifies "there shall be no longer delay :" and ἀλλὰ means except, or save only (see Matt. xx. 23. Mark x. 40).

The sense is, "there shall be no longer any delay, or respite for repentance to the wicked, or postponement of reward to the righteous, save only in the days of the last Angel, when he is about to sound His Trumpet to call the World to Judgment."

R has ἐστιν for ἔσται, an observable reading, "there is no more delay."

Almighty God in His mercy will give a brief respite on the eve of the final consummation and general Judgment, in order that the ungodly may repent. Cp. St. Peter's explanation of the delay, 2 Pet. iii. 4-9; and Rom. ii. 4: and the use of the word xpovices in Matt. xxiv. 48; xxv. 5. Luke xii. 45; and Heb. x. 37, ηξει, καὶ οὐ χρονιεῖ: and above, ii. 21, ἔδωκα αὐτῆ χρόνον ἴνα μετανοήση: and in the sense of delay of reward to the righteous, see the use of the word χρόνος in vi. 16. These passages afford the best comment on the sense of χρόνος here; and in this sense the words are understood by A Lapide, Grotius, Vilringa, Eichhorn, Ewald, De Wette, Hengstenberg. See Düsterdieck, p. 348.

In v. 7, καὶ ἐτελέσθη (the reading of A, K, C) τὸ μυστήριον, " and the Mystery was fulfilled," ἐτελέσθη is the prophetic past tense, signifying, that, although the event is still future, yet it is certain; and in the divine foreknowledge and decree, it is already done. See the note above, on John xv. 6,  $\partial \partial \eta \eta$ ; and compare the use of the prophetic agrist in xvi. 1. This use of kal with the agrist is derived from that of the Hebrew Vau with the This use of kal with Perfect. See Exod. xvi. 6; xvii. 4, where the LXX have kal with the future (Ewald, Ebrard): and cp. Winer, Gr. Gr. § 40, and Winer, § 32, p. 199.

The ancient Prophets are called "God's servants" in the Apocalypse (cp. xviii. 20; xxii. 9); and thus the agreement of the Apocalypse with ancient Hebrew Prophecy is declared.

Christ lifts up His hand, and swears. This act of swearing shows, that on account of the overflow of iniquity, even in the Christian Church, the World would begin to doubt the truth of Christ's Kingdom and Universal Sovereignty. This Oath of Christ is designed to put an end to such doubts. Cp. St. Paul's remarks on the use of Oaths, as an "end of strife" or of contradiction (ἀντιλογία); especially as applicable to the Oath of God Himself, assuring the world of Christ's everlasting Priesthood (Heb. vi.

This oath of Christ declares, that though the triumph of His Kingdom may seem improbable, on account of the multitude and power of the enemies even within His own Kingdom, yet the David (Ps. ii. 1—12), and to Daniel (ii. 44; vii. 9, 10. 14).

From these Oaths of God and of Christ, it is rightly inferred by Theologians that oaths are lawful for certain purposes, and on certain occasions, under the Gospel. See Bp. Andrewes, Sermons, vol. v. pp. 72-79, on Jer. iv. 2; and cp. notes above, on

In v. 9, on the use of the infinitive, δούναι, depending on λέγων, cp. Acts xxi. 21. Col. iv. 6. Winer, § 43, p. 283.

The question arises; Why does St. John receive this commission at this particular point in the prophetical Visions, namely, under the Sixth Trumpet, or Second Woe?

The Trumpets announce God's judgments on His enemies (see viii. 2). Therefore the commission to prophesy, and to proclaim the punishments reserved for those who invade the royal prerogatives of Christ, finds properly its place in the Series of the

The reception also of the LITTLE ROLL fitly dates from the Sixth Trumpet, because—as we have seen—the Sixth Trumpet specially declares the punitive power of God's holy Word (see above, ix. 13-21); and because this LITTLE ROLL opened in the Hand of Christ, the INCARNATE WORD, proclaims, as we shall see, the woes which will overtake those Christians who disobey the Law written in the opened Book of His WRITTEN WORD. That Book of Books in the Hand of Christ has now been opened in the eyes of all. It has been revealed to all by the loosing of the Four Angels that had been bound (see ix. 13-21); it has been displayed to all the World by the diffusion of the fourfold Gospel to the four corners of the earth.

It has also been opened, in another sense, because what was dimly foreshadowed by types and prophecies in the Old Dispensation, is now fully unfolded in the reading and preaching of the Gospel.

For another reason also, this declaration of Judgment on degenerate Christians, despising or hindering God's Holy Word, finds its appropriate position here in the Sixth Trumpet. Sixth Trumpet, like the Sixth Seal (see vi. 12-16), bears an analogy to the Sixth Day of Christ's Passion Week. On the Sixth Day of that week the Priests, and Scribes, and Pharisees, who bare rule in the literal Jerusalem, killed Him Who is "the True and Faithful Witness." (Rev. i. 5; iii. 14.) This they did, because they, who were the appointed Guardians and Interpreters of Scripture (Mal. ii. 7. Cp. Matt. xxiii. 2), knew not the Scriptures, that is, did not consider them, did not set themselves to discover their true meaning, nor the voices of the Prophets read every Sabbath day; therefore, they fulfilled them, in condemning Him. (Acts xiii. 27. Cp. 2 Cor. iii. 14.)

This LITTLE ROLL reveals a like sin in some of those who bear rule in the spiritual Jerusalem. It reveals the sufferings which the Word of God would have to endure from some degenerate Rulers in the Christian Church. See on xi. 7, 8. It reveals likewise the Judgments which would be inflicted upon them for their sins. See xi. 13.

In confirmation of these statements, it may be observed that the Sixth Trumpet is called "the Second Woe" (ix. 12, 13). That Trumpet announced the punitive power of Holy Scripture. And the revelation in the Little Roll concerning God's Two Witnesses ends thus: "the Second Woe is past," xi. 14.

This revelation therefore belongs to the Second Woe, and it accords with the Vision of the Sixth Trumpet, which is the Trumpet of the Second Woe. The Sixth Trumpet, which proclaims "the loosing of God's four Angels that had been bound," has revealed the punitive power of God's Word generally. The Little Roll describes His judgments on those in His Church who disobey that Word, and make it of none effect.

The ancient Greek Expositors observe (in Carena, p. 335), that the commission "to prophesy again concerning Peoples, and Nations, and Tongues, and many Kings," shows that the accomplishment of this Prophecy was not near at hand in St. John's age. The repetition of the words, "Peoples, and Nations, and Tongues, and Kings," in the prophecy concerning the mystical Babylon, xvii. 12. 15, indicates that this commission refers to events predicted in that prophecy; see the RETROSPECT, at the end of chap. xviii.

CH. XI.] Prophetic View of the History of HOLY SCRIPTURE: relatively to Rome:

1, 2. καὶ ἐδόθη μοι] And there was given me a Reed like unto a Rod, saying, Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein; and the court which is without the temple cast out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: and they will tread the holy City forty and 2 b καὶ τὴν αὐλὴν τὴν ἔξωθεν τοῦ ναοῦ ἔκβαλε ἔξω, καὶ μὴ αὐτὴν μετρήσης, ὅτι ὑ Εzek. 40. 17, έδόθη τοῖς ἔθνεσι καὶ τὴν πόλιν τὴν ἁγίαν πατήσουσι μῆνας τεσσαράκοντα ch. 13.5. 5. καὶ δύο.

After βάβδφ some MSS, prefix the words και δ άγγελος είστήκει, and the Angel stood. But this is not in A or in numerous Cursives, or in the Vulg., Coptic, or Æthiopic, and some other Versions; or in some Greek and Latin Fathers, and is rejected by Lach., Tisch., and Düsterdieck. It seems to be a gloss introduced to account for the abruptness of the diction here; but makes no alteration in the sense.

On this absolute use of the nominative λέγων, cp. iv. 1; xiv. 7; xix. 6: it is derived from the Hebrew אמר, and is of frequent occurrence in the LXX; e. g. Isa. vii. 2; xxx. 21. See

Winer, § 59, p. 474.

St. John having been directed to ask for the opened Roll, and having received it from the hand of the Angel, and having eaten it, and having been commissioned to prophesy again (x. 11), has now a Reed put into his hand, and he is commanded to measure the temple (or rather the sanctuary, ναὸν, not ἱερόν: see on John ii. 19. 2 Thess. ii. 4), and the Altar (θυσιαστήριον), and them that worship therein: and to cast out the court outside the temple, for it was given to the Gentiles; and they will tread the Holy City Forty and Two Months.

This Vision also has a parallel in the prophecies of Ezekiel, where the Prophet sees an Angel measuring a Temple and a City on a mountain in the land of Israel, purified from Idolatry and hallowed anew (xliii. 7—12). The Angel measures them with a measuring reed (καλάμφ, Ezek. xl.—xliii.), and when they have been measured, the Glory of the Lord came upon them from the East (the type of Christ, Luke i. 78; above, vii. 2; below, xvi. 12). The reader is requested to refer to the Retrospect in pp.

274-288 of the notes on EZEKIEL.

A similar Vision appeared to Zechariah; the imagery of whose prophecies is presented in this Vision to St. John. lifted up mine eyes and looked, and behold a Man with a measuring line in his hand; then said I, Whither goest thou? And he said unto me, To measure Jerusalem. And another Angel went out to meet the Angel that talked with me, and he said, Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited, for I, saith the LORD, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and will be the Glory in the midst of her." (Zech. ii. 1—5.)

This Vision, like the Vision of Ezekiel, undoubtedly referred to the Christian Church, and displayed the Divine Presence within her, and prepared the way for the present Vision of St. John.

The action of measuring is one of appropriation and of preservation (Numb. xxxv. 5. Jer. xxxi. 39. Hab. iii. 6. Zech. ii. 2), and also of partition and separation (2 Sam. viii. 2)

The Temple of God here ( $\nu$ abs), is always the Church in the Apocalypse, and in the Apostolic Epistles generally; see above on 2 Thess. ii. 4. It is never used in them, or in the Revelation, to designate the literal Temple of Jerusalem. See above, iii. 12; vii. 15; xi. 19; xiv. 15. 17.

The Altar refers to the Golden Altar of Incense which stood in the vads, sanctuary, or Holy Place.

Hence the action of measuring here is not only applied locally, but personally; St. John is ordered to measure the wor-Iocally, but personally; St. John is ordered to measure the worshippers; the living stones, which make the true Temple of God. "Ye are the Temple of God" (ναδ ε Θεοῦ), says St. Paul (1 Cor. iii. 16; vi. 19. 2 Cor. vi. 16), "and the whole body of the faithful grows together" (as a living thing) "in Christ into a Temple holy to the Lord." (Eph. ii. 21.) And St. Peter speaks of them as "living stones, grounded on Christ the Corner-Stone, and built up into a spiritual house;" and not only as living, but as sentient, acting, worshipping; set in the Church "to offer spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Him." (1 Pet. ii. 5, 6.)

The true worshippers of Christ have His protection quaranteed

The true worshippers of Christ have His protection guaranteed to them. They are girt in with the measuring line of His Omni-present Love. Cp. Matt. xxviii. 20.

Further, the Head of the Church, by commanding St. John to measure the Temple, or rather the Sanctuary (vadv), and the Altar, assures the faithful of all ages, that, whatever may be the power and rage of those who are here called ἔθνη, Gentiles, that is, men separate from, and hostile to, the true Israel, the Christian sion (see ii. 26, compared with ii. 9, iii. 9), yet her Sanctuary and Altar will always be preserved and protected by Christ, as His own peculiar portion; He will be "a wall of fire round about it, and will be the Glory in the midst of it." (Zech. ii. 5.)

This assurance has been fulfilled by the preservation of the Holy Scriptures, and of the Sacraments, of Christ, and of an Apostolic Ministry, offering the Incense of Prayer, and ministering the Word and Sacraments. They have been defended by Christ against all the arms and artifices of Satan, from without, and from within, who has ever been endeavouring to "hurt the oil and the wine." See above, vi. 6.

There is one remarkable difference between this Vision of St. John and the two parallel visions of Ezekiel and Zechariah.

In those Visions of the two Hebrew Prophets, the measuring Reed was in the hand of an Angel (Ezek. xl. 3. Zech. ii. 1-3). And an Angel was the Agent in measuring the City and Temple.

But here, in the Apocalypse, the Reed is given into the hand of St. John, and he is commanded to measure the Temple; and this command is from Christ Himself (see v. 3, and cp. x. 1).

To this observable difference it may be added, that the measuring Reed (κάλαμος), put into St. John's hand by Christ, is described as like to a Rod. And the word ράβδος, Rod, is coupled three times in the Apocalypse with the adjective σιδηρά, iron (ii. 27; xii. 5; xix. 15). And in the same places it is coupled also with the verb ποιμαίνειν, to tend, as a Shepherd does. idea is thus suggested of a pastoral staff.

These circumstances may be explained as follows:

HOLY SCRIPTURE is the Rule of Faith to the Christian Church. Holy Scripture is the Reed by which the sanctuary and the Altar, and those that worship therein, are to be measured (see above, on Gal. vi. 16. 2 Tim. iii. 15, and 1 Pet. iv. 11). The Greek word κάλαμος, Reed, used here, and by the LXX, about fifteen times in the Vision of Ezekiel, where the Angel measures the Church, is the equivalent to the Hebrew (kaneh). From that Hebrew word, kaneh, the word Kavav, canon (rule), canna (reed, cane), comes, and has passed into our own theological language; the Canon of Scripture,—that is, the canonical Books of the Two Testaments,—is our Rule of Faith (Art. vi.). In the words of Bp. Cosin (Canon of Scripture, p. 1), "The Books of Scripture are therefore called Canonical, because they have in all times been acknowledged by God's Church to be the Infallible RULE of our Faith."

Cp. Credner (Geschichte des Kanons, Halle, 1847, p. 6). Das griechische Wort κανών, verwandt mit κάννα, Rohr (Reed), entspreche dem alt-hebräischen τρς, welches von der Grundbedeutung Rohr, Halm (κάλαμος), die weiteren Bedeutungen gerader Stab, Mess-stab, gerader Schaft, u. s. w. ableitet. . . . . τατος Κανών ἃν είη τῶν θεοπνεύστων γραφῶν.

The Reed—the Hebrew Kaneh, a reed, whence the word Canon is derived—represents the Canon—or Rule—of Holy Scripture, completed and sealed by Christ. This Reed is said to be like unto a Ron; the Rod of iron frequently mentioned in the Apocalypse. Holy Scripture, though it measures as a Reed, yet is not frail and quivering as a Reed. It is not shaken by the winds of vain doctrine (Matt. xi. 7. Eph. iv. 14). It is not, as some Romish writers have ventured to call it, "a Lesbian rule," or "rule of lead," which may be easily bent and twisted many different ways. The evidence of this may be seen in the sequel of the Editor's Letters on the Church of Rome, Letter iv. p. 75. No, it is a Rod of iron, which cannot be bent or broken, but will break all its foes in pieces, like a potter's vessel. And yet by this Reed Christ is said ποιμαίνειν, to do the work of a Shepherd (Rev. ii. 27; xii. 5), for by the pastoral staff and Reed of His Word, all faithful shepherds under Him, Who is the Good Shepherd (John x. 11. 14), the Chief Shepherd (1 Pet. v. 4), guide the sheep of His pasture, and prove their love to the Shepherd by tending and feeding His Sheep (John xxi. 16).

This Exposition, which recognizes the Holy Scripture here as the Reed like unto a Rod, by which the Church is to be measured by St. John, is authorized by many ancient and modern Interpreters. "In Virga rectitudo Scripturæ intelligitur," says Haymo. So Aquinas in Apoc. xxi. "per Arundinem auream intelligitur Sacra Scriptura." So Berengaudus (Rev. ii. 24), "Virga ferrea Evangelium figurat, quo omnis error destructus est," and so Vitringa, Anacrisis, p. 453, "Calamus mensorius, quo dimensio peragenda est, haud dubiè est Verbum Dei, Lex et Testimonium, Lex regni Christi, unicus Canon et norma

This interpretation of this Vision is also happily illustrated by the historical fact, that St. John was the person who was specially appointed by God to complete the Canon of Holy Scripture, and to assure the Church of its integrity and inspiration. His Gospel was the last written of all the Gospels; and his Epistles and Apocalypse were the last written of the other books of the New Testament. See above, Introduction to the Four Gospels, p. xlv, and to St. John's Gospel, pp. 256. 266, and Introductions to St. John's Epistles and to the Apocalypse.

Hence in this Vision of the Apocalypse, the last written of all the Books of Holy Scripture, St. John receives the Reed from Christ, and measures the Church.

Thus we recognize another doctrinal and practical use of this Vision. It assures the Church, that the New Testament, as completed and sealed by St. John, comes from the hand of the Great Angel of the Covenant, Whose countenance is as the Sun, Whose head is arched-over by the Rainbow, the emblem of Mercy and Justice, and Who is clothed in the cloud of heavenly Majesty; Who guided the Ancient Church in the Wilderness by the Pillar of Cloud and Fire, Who treads all Earthly things under His feet, and walks on the Waves, and rides on the Storms of this World; to Whom All Power in Heaven and Earth is given (Matt. xxviii.

18)—Jesus Christ.
This Vision places before the eyes of all, as in a lively picture, the important doctrinal truth, deducible from other parts of Holy Writ, that HOLY SCRIPTURE is the RULE OF FAITH; and that whatever lies beyond the lines which Holy Scripture has traced, "is not to be required of any man that it should be believed as an Article of the Faith, or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation" (Art. vi. of the Church of England); and to serve as a warning to those who would add any articles to "the Faith once for all delivered to the Saints" (Jude 3).

It serves as a safeguard against the errors of the Romish Church, which adds the Apocrypha, as of equal value, to the Canonical Books of the Old Testament; and which also places her own Traditions upon a par with the Word of God. The proofs of these statements have been given by the present Editor elsewhere, "Letters on the Church of Rome," Letters iii. iv, and v.

This exposition is further confirmed by what follows concerning the Two WITNESSES, vv. 3, 4.

The Court outside the Sanctuary is said to have been given to the Gentiles, and they will tread down the Holy City forty and two months.

The word "Gentiles" in the Apocalypse, as above observed, signifies the enemies of Christ; being opposed to Jews. who, in this book, are true believers, faithful Christians (see ii. 9; iii. 9), true Confessors of the faith, those who are "Jews inwardly" (Rom. ii. 29), children of "faithful Abraham," Israelites indeed, in whom there is no guile (John i. 47. Cp. Vitringa, pp. 79. 137. 303. 451. 454).

There is here a reference to our Lord's prophecy concerning the literal Jerusalem. Jerusalem (He said) shall be trodden by the Gentiles (πατουμένη ὁπὸ ἐθνῶν), till the seasons of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled (see on Luke xxi. 24), and doubtless our Lord's prophecy had also a secondary meaning, in reference to the spiritual Jerusalem, the Christian Sion, which is presented to

St. John in this Vision (see on Luke xxi. 25).

This Vision therefore represents a corrupt state of Christendom. The outer Court of the Temple is given to the Gentiles, and they will tread the Holy City. Many enemies of God will domineer there. And the line of demarcation between them and the true worshippers, is to be drawn by the measuring Reed, like unto a Rod. The Reed of Holy Scripture measures the Church; and it draws the line between true Israelites, and those who, in the divine Eye, are like "heathen men and publicans" (Matt. xviii. 17). As Bede well says, in commenting on this passage, "They who in name only are joined to the Church, and do not belong to the Altar, and to the Holy of Holies, are cast out by the Gospel-Rule, and are numbered with the Heathen.
'For all the Glory of the King's Daughter is from within' (Ps. xlv. 14).

"I will give;" their power is a grant from Me; the streams of Divine Grace shall ever flow into them from the fountain of Divine Wisdom, and will enable them to prophesy or preach. God is the Fountain of the stream, which flows into the OLIVE Trees, and by them into the Lamps.

What are these Two Witnesses?

By some they have been supposed to be two persons, who would appear and preach for the time here mentioned.

Some of the ancient Fathers were of opinion that Enoch and Elias, or Moses and Elias, or other two persons were intended by Etias, or Moses and Etias, or other two persons were intended by them; see for example, Justin Martyr, c. Tryph. c. 49. Tertullian, de Anim. c. 35, and S. Hippolytus, de Christo et Antichristo, pp. 21—23. S. Hilary on Matt. xx., Evangelium Nicodemi, ed. Thilo, pp. 757—765, and the learned Editor's notes on this subject, and the note above on Matt. xxii. 10. Perhaps the requests of the two disciples, St. John and St. James, in Matt. xx. 21, may have been suggested by some such popular belief among the Jews, of the future pre-eminence of two favoured persons in the kingdom of the Messiah.

However true it may be, that this Vision of the Apocalypse may have a partial fulfilment in some pairs of persons combating side by side for the Truth, and specially honoured by Christ, as His Two Witnesses; yet it cannot be imagined, that any of the Saints who have entered into Paradise, and rest from their labours, should be brought back into this world to be treated with cruelty and ignominy upon earth. And the language of the prophecy has a wider and higher range than to any sons of men, as will be seen in considering it as a whole.

It is well said by an ancient Expositor here, Hoc est quod Apostolus dixit (1 Thess. iv. 17), "Rapiemur in nubibus obviam Christo." Ante adventum autem Domini nulli hoc posse contingere scriptum est, "Initium Christus, deinde hi qui sunt Christi, in adventu Ejus" (1 Cor. xv. 23). Unde excluditur omnis suspicio quorundam qui putant hos duos Testes duos viros

The Two WITNESSES are called the Two OLIVE TREES, and The Two Candlesticks, or Lamps, standing (ἐστῶτες) before the Lord of all the Earth. On the use of the masculine ἐστῶτες see Winer, § 59, p. 474. It signifies that the Witnesses (μάρτυρες) typified by the emblems are the principal objects which are to be contemplated as standing in the presence of God.

God is represented here as the Lord of all the Earth, because the Message to be delivered by His Two Witnesses concerns all the Earth; and because Earthly Powers will despise that Message (see v. 10), and because God will prove His Dominion by punishing those who despise it.

The clue to the interpretation of this Vision is from Zechariah. The reader is requested to refer to the notes on Zecharian iv.

1-6; 11-14; pp. 128, 129.

There the Prophet is comforted by an assurance, not only that the literal Temple of Jerusalem would be rebuilt by Zerubbabel, although it had many adversaries, but he is cheered with a Vision of the glorious building of that spiritual fabric, the Church of Christ, which was typified by it.

This consolatory assurance is communicated to Zechariah by the Vision of a Golden Candlestick or Lamp (λυχνία), with seven branches; and supplied with oil by Two OLIVE TREES which are above it (v. 3), one on the right, the other on the left. And he is informed, that this work will be done by the Spirit of God, and not by human power (iv. 6). And in answer to his question addressed to the Angel, "What are the two branches of the Olive trees which pour the oil out of themselves by the tubes of gold into the Candlestick or Lamp?" the Angel replies, "These are the two anointed ones (literally, sons of oil) standing before the God of all the earth."

The resemblance of this Vision to that of St. John will be obvious by a comparison of the words of Zechariah as they stand in the Septuagint, with those of St. John. Zechariah's words are ίδου λυχνία χρυση ὅλη -- καὶ δύο ἐλαῖαι ἐπάνω αὐτῆς (iv. 2, 3), καὶ εἶπα πρὸς αὐτόν Τί αἱ δύο ἐλαῖαι αῦται; Τί οἱ δύο κλάδοι τῶν έλαιων, οί εν ταις χερσίν των δύο μυξωτήρων των χρυσων, των επιχεόντων καὶ ἐπαναγόντων τὰς ἐπαρυστρίδας τὰς χρυσῶς; καὶ εἶπε πρός με, Οὖτοι οἱ δύο υἰοὶ τῆς πιότητος παρεστήκασι Κυρίφ πάσης τῆς γῆς (iv. 11, 12, 14).

The Apocalypse itself teaches, that a seven-branched Candlestick or Lamp is an emblem of a Church (i. 20; cp. ii. 1. 5). Hence S. Irenæus says (v. 20), "The Church preaches the truth; and she is the seven-branched Candlestick (Lucerna) bearing the light of Christ." Ubique Ecclesia prædicat veritatem, et hæe est έπτάμυξος (with seven wicks) Lucerna, Christi bajulans lumen. The Golden seven-branched Candlestick or Lamp represents the Church receiving the oil of the Holy Spirit, and discharging her office of shedding forth divine light.

The Visions in Zechariah and the Apocalypse represent the important doctrinal truth, that the oil is not in the Lamp itself, but is derived from something external to it, and above it; namely, from the two Olive Trees. Zechariah declares that the work of constructing the Candlestick, and of supplying it with oil, is not by human power, but by the HOLY SPIRIT of God (iv. 6), "Not by might nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."

Since therefore the oil is not originally in the Lamps, but in the Olive Trees, and since the work is ascribed to the Holy Ghost, therefore the Olive Trees must represent the means by which the Holy Ghost gives oil to the Church, and enables it to enlighten the world with Divine Truth. Those means are the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments.

Accordingly, many ancient Expositors were agreed that the Two Olive Trees represent the Two Testaments, by which the Holy Ghost gives light to the Church, and through the Church illumines the World.

"The Two Witnesses," says Primasius, "represent the Two Testaments preached by the Christian Church to the World: the Church, like a Candlestick, is illumined by the light of the Two Testaments; and the Church may well be represented by Two Lamps, for the Church displays a twofold light, derived from the Two Testaments; and the Church is made up of two societies, Jews and Gentiles, meeting together in Jesus Christ; and there is no contradiction of unity in this number two, any more than there is a contradiction in the preceding Vision of the Seven Golden Candlesticks, which are particular Churches, but taken together, symbolize the one Catholic Church." See above, i. 12. So also Aug.? p. 2310, "Duo Candelabra Ecclesia est; pro Numero Testamentorum dixit duo: ita et ex Septem Candelabris una Ecclesia est. Nam Zacharias (Zech. iv. 2, 3) unum Candelabrum vidit Septiforme, et has duas Olivas, id est, Testamenta, infundere oleum Candelabro, id est, Ecclesiæ." So also Bede and Bp. Andrewes (c. Bellarmin, cap. 11), who concurs in the opinion that the Two Witnesses signify the Two Testaments. Similarly Vitringa, Anacr. p. 468, "Olese figurant Spiritum Sanctum (ut liquet ex v. 6) dona et gratiam suam communicantem per medium Verbi Dei divisi in Libros Veteris et Novi Testamenti."

In the Vision of Zechariah, the Church is represented by One Candlestick, and in the Apocalypse by Two. Here is circumstantial variety and substantial identity. There is One Church of Christ, because Jews and Gentiles are joined together in Him, and yet in a certain sense there are two Churches which were typified by the mother and colt in the triumphal entry into Jerusalem (see on Matt. xxi. 5). And by this Apocalyptic Vision of the Two Candlesticks, drinking in oil from the two Olive trees, the Jewish Church, on its side, is reminded that it cannot have light without the New Testament; and the Christian Church is taught, on its side, that it cannot burn brightly without the Old.

Hence, S. Augustine says (Serm. 137, 6, on John x. 1-16), "that in many places of Holy Scripture we find mention of Two Churches, which are in fact one," like "the two walls which meet in the One Corner-Stone, Jesus Christ," See Eph. ii. 20.

This Vision is fraught with instruction.

(1) The Candlesticks receive their light from the Olive Trees. The Church of God must look for light "to the Law and to the Testimony; and, if she speak not according to this Word, it is because there is no light in her." (Isa. viii. 20.) The Scriptures of the Two Testaments are her Olive Trees. For they are λόγια ζῶντα, living oracles (Acts vii. 38); they are planted in the House of the Lord (Ps. lii. 9), ever flourishing with fresh leaves, ever ministering the oil of gladness and food of light. She must be pure and holy, like the Golden Seven-branched Candlestick, set on a firm oasis in the presence of God, and she must extend her branches far and wide to diffuse her light and irradiate the world. Like the Golden Candlestick, the Church has no light in herself. She can do nothing without the Olive Trees. If the golden channels which connect her bowls with their branches, are Vol. II.—Part IV.

choked, then she will burn dimly; if they are broken, she is eclipsed, and the Tabernacle of the World is dark.

(2) The Two Olive Trees stand side by side, showing that

(2) The Two Olive Trees stand side by side, showing that "the Old Testament is not contrary to the New, nor the New to the Old" (Art. vii.). The Law and the Gospel interweave their branches and blend their light together, and the same God is Author of them both.

(3) These two Witnesses stand before the Lord of the Earth. The Church preaching the word of God "is the Pillar and Ground of the Truth" (1 Tim. iii. 15). Christ is ever with her (Matt. xxviii. 20), and He has promised, that the "gates of Hell shall never prevail against her" (Matt. xvi. 18). Being illumined by the light of the Two Testaments, she stands stedfast in obedience to God; and is supplied with an unfailing stream of oil in the Holy Scriptures, which makes her ever to shine in the eye of the world.

(4) Next, we may remark that these Olive Trees and these Candlesticks are only two; that is, God has revealed Himself under the Law and under the Gospel. No other Religion, consigned to written documents, is from God: no third Witness is to be expected from Him.

(5) Next, we have divine admonition here as to the authentication of Scripture itself. The Two Candlesticks receive oil from the Two Olive Trees. Almighty God employs, and ever has employed, the Candlesticks to diffuse the light from the Olive Trees. Thus He has appointed His Church to receive, guard, interpret, and disseminate Scripture; and whatever has been always so guarded and authenticated by the Church, that we believe and are certain to be Scripture: or, in the language of the Sixth Article of the Church of England, "In the name of the Holy Scripture we do understand those Canonical Books of the Old and New Testameent, of whose authority was never any doubt in the Church."

(6) Again, here is a warning against the error of the Church of Rome, which says that she herself is the Church of God, and gives authority to the Bible. See evidence of this in the Editor's Letters on the Church of Rome, Letter iv. of the Sequel, pp. 75. 273. The Candlesticks do not give light to the Olive Trees, but the Olive Trees pour oil into the golden pipes of the Candlestick. The Church does not give authority to the Word; but through the Church the Word illuminates the World.

(7) Here also we see a caution against those who stop the channels of the oil of Holy Scripture from flowing freely into the Church, or adulterate the divine oil with human admixtures; and thus do what in them lies to mar the work of the Spirit, and impair the use of the Candlesticks by making the wicks fungous, and the light dim, and the air noisome, and the nations blind; and incur the wrath of Him "Who walketh in the midst of the Golden Candlesticks" (i. 13), and tempt Him to remove their own candlestick from its place (ii. 5).

(8) The Two Olive Trees and the Two Candlesticks are called the Two WITNESSES, and they are said to prophesy (v. 3), that is, to preach (see I Thess. v. 20); and, as we shall see, their actions, and sufferings, and triumphs are compared to those of Moses and Elias (v. 6), and of Christ (vv. 7—13). Christ the Incarnate Word is God's Witness to the World; He is "the True and Faithful Witness" (i. 5; iii. 14). The Word preached is His "Witness to the World." He Ilimself gives it that title. "This Gospel of the Kingdom must be preached as a witness to all nations, and then shall the End come" (Matt. xxiv. 14). The Two Olive Trees pouring their oil into the Candlesticks, and the Candlesticks receiving the oil and enlightening the World, are His two witnesses; and in the mouth of these "Two Witnesses every word shall be established" (Matt. xviii. 16).

(9) Lastly, this exposition is confirmed and illustrated by its context. The transition was very natural from the Reed like a Rod to the Two Wilnesses; for the Word of God, which measures the Faith of the Church, is His Wilness to the World. The ignominious treatment which the Word of God would receive, is predicted in the Vision before us, by the mournful garb of the Two Witnesses, who are represented as preaching in sack-cloth; and this follows very appropriately after the Vision in the last chapter but one, which represented the Loosing of the Four Angels (ix. 15-19), and its consequences, as already explained, and as will now further appear.

What has been said above, on the Loosing of the Four Angels, and their punitive power (ix. 15—19), may serve in part as a commentary on these verses.

In the language here used concerning the Two Witnesses, there is a reference to the acts of Elias and Moses.

In the days of Elias, says our Lord, the hearen was shut up three years and six months. Three years and six months are equal to 1260 days, the time specified here. Elijah said to Ahab, There shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word (1 Kings xvii. 1). And St. James says that Elias prayed that it might not rain, and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months (James v. 17). More will be said hereafter on the meaning of this period of time, in the note at the end of this Chapter.

Fire comes out of the mouth of the two Witnesses to consume their enemies (v. 5).

The enemies of Elijah were consumed by fire, 2 Kings i. 10. Cp. Luke ix. 54. Ecclus. xlviii. 1. The Two Witnesses are caught up into heaven, v. 12; so was Elias, 2 Kings ii. 11.

There is also a reference to the acts of Moses turning the waters of the land of Egypt into blood (Exod. vii. 19), and smiting the land with ten plagues (Exod. ix. 14).

We shall see also in the following verses, that their Acts, Sufferings, and Victory, are compared with those of Christ Himself (vv. 7-12).

At the time of the Transfiguration, Moses was the Representative of the Law; Elias, the Representative of the Prophets; Christ, the Representative of the Gospel (see on Matt. xvii. 23). And the Old Testament was commonly called "Moses and the Prophets" by Christ and by the Jews. See Luke xvi. 29; xxiv.

This Vision is being fulfilled in the insults now offered to the Two Testaments, which are God's Witnesses, and it will be fulfilled completely in their future triumph.

The woes here specified fall upon all who despise the Scrip-The woes here specified fail upon all who despise the Scriptures. If any one despises them, fire cometh out of their Mouth, and consumes their enemies. They can shut heaven, like Elias, and exclude all who reject them. The dews of divine grace are withheld from all who scorn them. The heavens are brass and the earth is iron to their foes. The Waters of salvation become blood to revilers or scoffers of Scripture. To them the Blessing is a Bane; the Scripture a Scourge; Preaching a Plague; the Word a Woe.

And some of the peoples and tribes and tongues and nations see their dead body three days and an half, and do not suffer their dead bodies to be put in a monument.

And when they shall have finished their testimony, or work of witnessing to the world, the Beast that ariseth up out of the bottomless pit will make war against them, and will kill them.

Here is a reference to the History of Christ, "the True and Faithful Witness," which we see in this Vision will be reproduced, as it were, in the History of His Holy Word; and in the treatment it will receive. When the Lord of the Two Witnesses had finished His testimony-which lasted, as is most probable, three years and a half (see on John v. 1), or 1260 days, the term here assigned, as by analogy, to His Witnesses (v. 3)—when He had finished His testimony after that period of time, He was delivered up by the Chief Priests of Jerusalem and crucified, and they and the world rejoiced over Him (John xvi. 20), as if He had been destroyed; as earthly men are here described as exulting over the death of the Witnesses; but in a little while (John xvi. 16. 20, 21) He arose from the dead, and there was a great earthquake, and the keepers of the sepulchre did shake for fear, and became as dead men (Matt. xxviii. 2-4), and He ascended on a cloud into heaven (Acts i. 9).

In order to remind the reader of this analogy between the Two Witnesses and Christ, it is said that the Witnesses ascend on the cloud (τŷ νεφέλη), that is, the cloud of Christ's Glory.

(Cp. i. 7; x. 1; xiv. 14. 16.)

The war against the Witnesses, and their death, are here ascribed to "the Beast that ascendeth from the abyss." Beast has not yet been described. This peculiar use of the article (as already observed) may be called prophetic; it indicates that the object is already visible to the eye of the writer, who is illumined by the Holy Spirit. It may also be designed here to remind the reader that the Beast here mentioned had been already described by another writer of Holy Scripture, the Prophet Daniel (ch. vii. 19), and thus St. John knits on his own prophecy to that of Daniel. Compare the words here used with those of Daniel, vii. 21, εποίει πόλεμον μετά των άγίων και τσχυσε πρὸς αὐτούς. St. John also thus connects his own language here with the fuller description which he will give hereafter of this Power. See xiii. 7; xvii. 18, where the Beast is said as here to ascend out of the abyss. He thus brings the past and future into ascend out of the abyss. He thus brings the past and nature into one view. On this prophetic use of the article, see above, in iv. 4; "the Four-and-Twenty Elders" (x. 3), "the seven Thunders" (xi. 3), "the great City," to be described afterwards (xiii. 14), "the two wings of the great Eagle," intimating that the mind of the inspired Writer had a full view of the idea, though not familiar to the reader. So xix. 20, "the lake of fire," to be described afterward in xx. 10. 14, 15; xxi. 8.

Their dead hady (it is added) lieth in the broadway (πλατεία)

Their dead body (it is added) lieth in the broadway (πλατεῖα) of the Great City. "The great City:" here is another anticipation: this name designates the City which is to be described fully hereafter. The words, "the Great City," occur nine times in the Apocalypse (xi. 8; xiv. 8; xvi. 19; xvii. 18; xviii. 10. 16. 18. 21). In xxi. 10, the reading of Elz. has been corrected by Griesb.,

Scholz, Lach., Tisch.

In all these passages the same City is designated by them; namely, the spiritual Babylon; "Babylon the Great," as it is always called, never "Babylon" simply; see xvi. 19; xvii. 5; xviii. 2. 10. An Angel of God has explained what City is meant by the words "the Great City;" see below, xvii. 18.

What this Great City is, will be considered more fully hereafter, when it is described. See below, pretiminary Note on chap.

xvii., where it is shown to be Rome Papal.

The dead body of the Two Witnesses is here said to lie in the broadway of the Great City, which spiritually (i.e. mystically, or symbolically) is called Sodom and Egypt, where also their Lord was crucified.

We are not here (says Hengstenberg, p. 529) to think of the literal Jerusalem; but Jerusalem here denotes the Church degenerate through the ascendancy of the worldly spirit, and filled with offences; as, on the other hand, the new Jerusalem denotes the Church purified. The term spiritually is to be also annexed to the expression, "where their Lord was crucified." Outwardly, the Lord was crucified in the literal Jerusalem; but spiritually He is crucified in the degenerate Church. This interpretation had been already authorized by the early Expositors. "The Great City is here that which is called Babylon, where their Lord was crucified in His members in the world" (Haymo). And Christians who revolt from Christ are said by the Apostle to crucify Christ afresh. Heb. vi. 6.
A corrupt Church identifies itself with the literal Jerusalem, whose Priests and Rulers rejected and crucified Christ, just as the Priests and Rulers even of our Lord's age, are said by Him to identify themselves with their forefathers of by-gone generations, by imitating their acts. He says to the Scribes and Pharisees of His own age that "the blood of all the righteous would come on them, from the blood of righteous Abel to the blood of Zacharias, son of Barachias, whom ye slew." See on Matt. xxiii. 35.

"The Great City," or mystical Babylon, is here compared to the degenerate Jerusalem which crucified Christ.

Jerusalem was the Church of God; and the reference to Jerusalem here shows that St. John is not speaking of the World which knows not God, but he is speaking of a corrupt Church, which has fallen away from Him.

This corrupt Church is also called Sodom for its immorality (Gen. xiii. 13. Deut. xxxii. 32), as Jerusalem herself is by the Prophets (Isa, i. 10. Cp. iii. 9. Jer. xxiii. 14. Ezek, xvi. 46. 46, 49. 55); and she is called Egypt also for her idolatry (see Ezek, xxiii. 3. 8. 19. 27). Rome Papal has fulfilled this prophecy.

9.] They (of the Great City) do not suffer their bodies (the bodies of the Two Witnesses) to be put into a monument.

"The dead bodies of Thy servants" (says the Psalmist in Ps. lxxix. 2, 3) "have they given to be meat to the fowls of the air, and the flesh of thy saints unto the beasts of the earth—and there was no man to bury them." The word here used for grave is not  $\tau \dot{a}\phi os$ , but  $\mu\nu \ddot{\eta}\mu a$ , monument, in the singular.

It may be designed to signify that not only would the people of the mystical Babylon treat the Two Witnesses with contempt and destroy them, but would not allow any record of them to be made; and would, as far as possible, obliterate all traces of them.

It has been well observed on the word μνημα here, that this act of the enemies of the Witnesses is done, "ne eorum memoria habeatur, quia monumenta sunt ad memoriam" (Aquinas); and Hayno here expounds μνῆμα by "monumentum, quod moneat."

The spirit described in this Vision is seen in the acts of the rulers of Papal Rome, who, on the plea of obscurity in Holy Scripture, withhold it from the people, and so virtually kill it; and who will not allow Holy Scripture to be committed to those enduring monuments of literature, such as editions and verna-cular translations. It is seen in the new Dogmas of Rome, especially that of Papal Infallibility,-stifling the voice of Holy

12. ἀνέβησαν κ.τ.λ.] They ascended up in the cloud, i. e. of Christ's Glory (see xiv. 14—16). Holy Scripture, God's Witness and Word, will have the same course as Christ, "the True and Faithful Witness," the Eternal Word. Scripture will have its Gethsemane and Calvary, and its Ascension.

13.] The Great Earthquake here described seems to connect the time of this the Sixth Trumpet with that of the Sixth Seal. See above, vi. 12-17. The plagues here described, says Aug. (?) are those which will afflict mankind for their contempt of the Two Witnesses, that is, the Two Testaments of God. And so Bede.

In this mention of the Ark of the Covenant and its concomitant Judgment, there seems to be a reference to that event in the History of the Ancient People of God, which presents itself at the beginning of the Vision of the Trumpets, namely, the Entrance into Canaan, the type of Heaven, and the Victory of Joshua, the type of Jesus, and the destruction of Jericho, the type of the City of this World (see above, on viii. 2-6). That Victory was achieved on the seventh day, when the seven Priests, who had com-That Victory was passed the City six times on each of the six preceding days, were compassing the City for the seventh time on the seventh day, and blew the seven trumpets of rams' horns, and the Ark of the Covenant of the Lord followed them; and the People shouted, and the walls fell down flat, and the people entered the City (Josh. vi. 4-16).

Here, at the sounding of the Seventh Trumpet, which has brought us to the end of all earthly things, St. John pauses; as he had done at the end of the seventh scal; and, after his manner, reverts to the first age of the Gospel, and will now begin to prophesy again.

He has now traced, as we have seen, the prophetic history of HOLY SCRIPTURE. He has revealed the fact, that many bearing the Christian name, will not be thankful for that gift of God; that Scripture will be treated with contumely, in the same manner as its Divine Lord, by a corrupt and degenerate Church. Thus he warns the faithful Christian not to be dismayed or staggered by this strange spectacle, when it is displayed.

He is now about to return to the first age of Christianity, as has been rightly observed by the Ancient Expositors, in order to deliver a parallel prophecy concerning the divinely-appointed Guardian, Witness, and Interpreter of Holy Scripture; the Christian Church. He will now reveal what she herself must expect from the same quarter, namely, from a corrupt Church.

The connexion of SCRIPTURE with the CHURCH had been displayed in the Vision of the Olive Trees, and the Candlesticks; and thus a preparation was made for this transition from the prophetical History of Scripture, to the prophetical History of the Church, in relation to a particular form of spiritual defection, namely, that of Papal Rome.

The parallel between the fortunes of SCRIPTURE and the Church is also marked by a chronological characteristic. Two Witnesses prophesy, or preach, in sackcloth, one thousand two hundred and sixty days (xi. 3). Similarly the Woman,—that is, the Church,—to be described in the following Vision, is in the wilderness for one thousand two hundred and sixty days (xii. 6) and, like Scripture, has her victory after suffering.

Here we are led to an interesting and important Question, viz.

What is the meaning of the Numbers in the Apocalypse?

(1) We may begin with the number Seven, which meets us at the opening of the Apocalypse.

This number is composed of 3+4. The number Three is a divine number; the number of the Ever-blessed Trinity. find it in the Old Testament in the Trine Benediction (Numb. vi. 24-26); and in the Seraphic Trisagion (Isa. vi. 3).

The Number Four in Scripture is expressive of universality of space. (Four winds, four corners of the earth. Matt. xxiv. 31.

pleteness after labour to produce it.

The clue to this meaning seems to be presented by the Scriptural History of the Work of Creation of the Universe by God; "In six days the LORD made Heaven and Earth, and on the seventh Day He rested" (Exod. xxxi. 17. Cp. Gen. ii. 2). And this rest of God was a type of that Elernal Rest ( $\sigma \alpha \beta \beta \alpha \tau i \sigma + \mu \delta s$ ) which "remaineth to the People of God." (Heb. iv. 9.)

The Seventh Day in the History of the Creation differs from all the other six Days. They all have an Evening. "The Evening and Morning were the First Day." And so it is said of each of the other five days. But the Seventh Day has no Evening.

It is a type of that Rest which has no end.

Enoch, the seventh from Adam, did not die, but was translated (see Jude 14. Heb. xi. 5). He was like a personified Sabbath. He was a type of the faithful who walk with God, and do not see death, and rest in Christ (Matt. xvi. 28. John viii. 51. Rev. xiv. 13).

Thus in the beginning of Holy Scripture we see the number Seven consecrated as a symbol of Rest after work done in a preceding series of Six.

In almost all the Holy Days of the Levitical Law we see the predominance of this element of Seven: e.g. in the Sabbath; the Passover (Exod. xii. 15, 16); the Pentecost (Deut. xvi. 9); the Feast of Tabernacles (Deut. xvi. 13, 15).

We see the same symbol in the entrance to Canaan, the type of Heaven, promised to the true Israelites.

Six Times Seven Stations brought the People through the wilderness to the promised land. (See Numb. xxxiii. 1-50; and S. Jerome de xlii. Mansionibus in eremo.)

For Six successive days the Great City Jericho was encompassed, and on the Seventh it fell, and the people entered in with a shout of victory. (See above, on viii. 2-6.)

In the Second or New Creation we see a similar principle. In the Genealogy, with which St. Matthew's Gospel begins, there are Six Sevens, which bring us from Abraham to Christ; in whom all the faithful have Rest. (See on Matt. i. 17.)

In St. Luke's Genealogy of Christ (iii. 23—38), Ten times

Seven Generations bring us from Christ through Adam to God.

(See on Matt. xviii. 22.)

ΧΠ. 1 Καὶ σημείον μέγα ἄφθη ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ· γυνὴ περιβεβλημένη τὸν ήλιον, καὶ ή σελήνη ὑποκάτω τῶν ποδῶν αὐτῆς, καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς αὐτῆς

Thus then we see that the sacred purpose of the number seven is to signify rest after toil. This is its use in the Apo-

The Seven Seals exhibit the sufferings of the Church in her pilgrimage through the world, and lead her to her eternal

Rest. (Rev. vi. 1; viii. 1.)

The Seven Trumpets proclaim all God's judgments on her enemies and the enemies of Christ, till the end, when the Kingdom of this World becomes "the Kingdom of the Lord and of His Christ." (Rev. viii. 2; xi. 15. 17, 18.)

The Seven Vials pour out all God's wrath on a particular form of wickedness which rebels against Him (xv. 7; xvi. 17).

Other Septenary combinations there are, all expressive of completion; all terminating after a successive series in some great consummation, just as the Hexaemeron of Creation ended in the Sabbath of God.

(2) The number Four seems to have the same relation to space, that the number seven has to time; it signifies completeness, universality. It rests on a natural basis, that is, on the idea of space considered in reference to the four cardinal points.

Thus, in the ancient Scriptures, we find the expression "the four winds of heaven" as significant of all space (Dan. viii. 8.22. Zech. ii. 6); and this expression is adopted by our Lord Himself in the Gospel. (Matt. xxiv. 31. Mark xiii. 27.)

In the Apocalypse, the number four appears often in this sense. Thus, just before the final consummation we see four Angels standing on the four corners of the Earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth (vii. 1. Cp. xx. 8). And this consideration may serve to explain such phrases as the following, "the blood from the winepress flowed to four times four hundred furlongs" (xiv. 20), that is, was extended far and wide.

(3) The Number Twelve (4  $\times$  3) bears a similar relation to mankind, that seven has to time, and four has to space; and this reference is one which belongs to mankind considered in union with God. See above, on Matt. x. 2.

In the old dispensation, we see this Number Twelve in the Twelve Sons of Israel, the Fathers of the Twelve Tribes of the People of God. In the Gospel it reappears in the Twelve Apostles, the Patriarchs of the Spiritual Israel. See above, on Matt. x. 2. "These Twelve are the labourers who were to be sent by Christ, and who were to baptize the Four quarters of the IVorld into the Faith of the THREE PERSONS of the Godhead." Aug. (in Ps. lix. Cp. Matt. xxviii. 19., Accordingly, in the Λpocalypse we see that the whole body of the Saints of God, the true Israelites who are admitted as citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem, are represented as consisting of Twelve Thousand out of each of the Twelve Tribes of the children of Israel (vii. 4-9) = 144,000.

It would, however, be a great error to imagine that the Elect of God are limited to this number. Indeed, the Apocalypse itself forbids us to do so; it declares them to be innumerable. The number twelve times twelve thousand is not to be taken literally. It does not express a quantity, but a quality. It teaches us the important truth, that this great, this innumerable company of true Israelites, are united in one Faith, that is, in the Faith taught by the Twelve Apostles of Christ. See above, on vii. 4-9.

The same truth is taught in the Vision of the faithful Church, who is represented as a Woman having on her head a crown of Twelve Stars; that is, as crowned with the Diadem of Apostolic Doctrine and Discipline (xii. 1). And it appears in the structure of the heavenly Jerusalem, or Church glorified, which is described as having "Twelve foundations, and in them names of the Twelve Apostles of the Lamb" (xxi. 14).

Thus this number Twelve in the Apocalypse conveys with it in a significant manner the doctrinal and practical truth, that it is necessary to avoid the error of those, on the one side, who would have only one Universal Bishop; and of those, on the other, who despise all Apostolic discipline; and that it is requisite to hold fast that faith and regimen, and that form of sound words and virtuous practice which was delivered by the Twelve Apostles to the world, in order that all men might thereby come to the rest and glory of the heavenly Jerusalem.

Thus much may be said concerning what may be called perfect numbers, in the Apocalypse.

(4) On the number one Thousand, the cube of ten, see below, xx. 2.

(5) We may now turn to others of a different import.

The number Six-not attaining to the perfection of Seven, the sacred number of rest, seems to represent a crisis of suffering, or a falling short of the Truth.

On the sixth day of Passion Week, Christ was crucified.

And throughout the Apocalypse, the sixth period, in the groups of seven, is the time of severest trial. It is, as it were, the Eve of the End; the "Day of Preparation" before the Sabbath, to the Good; the hour of Repentance before condemnation, to the Evil.

Thus the Sixth Seal represents the time of severest suffering to the Church (vi. 12). The Sixth Trumpet displays a preludo of the last Judgment to the wicked (ix. 14-21). The Sixth of the last Judgment to the wicked (ix. 14-21). Vial is the signal for the battle of the great Day of God (xvi. 12), and the precursor of the final voice "It is done" (xvi. 17).

The symbolical meaning of the number six, as expressive of falling short of the rest that remaineth to the people of God (Heb. iv. 9), which, as we have seen, is expressed in the number next after it, namely, Seven, is exhibited in a remarkable way in the number of the Beast, opposed to the Lamb; namely, in the number six repeated thrice, 666 (Rev. xiii. 18), which shows a triple declension (viz. in units, tens, and hundreds) from sabbatical rest and holiness, represented by the number Seven.

(6) To indicate an imperfect term of duration in which evil is inflicted or endured, we find the following numbers, which exhibit some remarkable parallelisms, in the Apocalypse.

> The Holy City is given to the Gentiles to be trodden down during forty-two months (xi. 2).

It is given to the Beast to exercise his power fortytwo Months (xiii. 5).

Here is one parallelism of oppression; now follows another, of suffering:

The Two Witnesses (representing the Two Testaments or Word of God) preach in sackcloth 1260 Days (xi. 3). The Woman (or faithful Church of God) is in the Wilderness 1260 Days (xii. 14).

She is also said to be in the wilderness a time, times, and half a time, i. c. 31 years (xii. 6).

All these several numbers represent the same duration of time, differently expressed.

The forty-two months =  $42 \times 30 = 1260$  days =  $3\frac{1}{2}$  years.

The  $1260 \text{ days} = 42 \text{ months} = 3\frac{1}{2} \text{ years.}$

Three and a half is seven years broken in two.

Forty-two is Seven multiplied by six, the number of imper-

These numbers have an historical basis in the actions and sufferings of the Ancient Church of the literal Israel, and of the Great Head of the Church, Jesus Christ Himself.

The number forty-two connects the History of the Christian Church with that of the Israelitish Church in the Wilderness. Its stations are enumerated in the Book of Numbers, and they are forty-two. (Numb. xxxiii. 1-50.) "And all these things," says St. Paul, "happened to them as types of us." (1 Cor. x. 6-11.) The forty-two mansions of the Israelitish Church are analogous to the forty-two months of the Christian Church. They foreshadow her history in her pilgrimage through the Wilderness of this World to the promised Land of Heaven.

This number 42 months, or 1260 days, equals three years and a half.

This term of three years and a half appears under that name as a type of suffering and persecution in Holy Writ. The famine in the days of Elias, when the Church of God was persecuted by Ahab and Jezebel, lasted for three years and a half. (Luke iv. 25.)

The time in which the ancient Church underwent persecution under Antiochus Epiphanes, was three years and a half. Josephus, B. J. v. 9. Prideaux, Connexion, on A.D. 168, pt. ii.

The earthly Ministry of the Great Head of the Church, during which He endured rebuke and contradiction from the corrupt and degenerate Teachers of His own People, lasted, it is probable, for three years and a half. See above on John v. 1; cp. Lowth on Dan. xii. 7. It is well said by Dr. Lightfoot (Harmony of the New Test., note on this chapter), that the fortytwo months, 1260 days, or 31 years, are symbolical of times of trouble. He observes that the Jews have learned to make the same construction of it: and this also, that comfort might stand up against misery, was the time of our Saviour's Ministry. Christ preached three and a half years in trouble. (Cp. also Lightfoot on Matt. iii. 16.) So the Two Witnesses in the Apocalypse preach in sackcloth. He having finished His ministry was slain; so they. He revived and ascended; so they likewise. Their case is paral-He revived and ascended; so they likewise. Their case is paralleled with Christ's, their Master's. See also Lightfoot's Chorographical Inquiry, chap. vi. sect. iv.: "The waste of sacred things by Antiochus lasting for three years and a half, the Jews στέφανος ἀστέρων δώδεκα. 2 καὶ ἐν γαστρὶ ἔχουσα κράζει ὼδίνουσα καὶ βασανιζομένη τεκείν.

retained that very number as famous, inasmuch that they often make use of it when they would express any thing very sad and afflictive. . . And perhaps it had been much for the reputation of the Commentators upon the Book of Revelation, if they had looked upon that number and the forty and two months, and the thousand two hundred and sixty days as spoken allusively, and not applied it to any precise or determinate time." See also his Sermon on Dan. xii. 12, p. 1250; and cp. Vitringa, pp. 449. 463.

What then, in fine, are the uses of these Numbers in the Apocalypse?

They do not indeed enable us to do what our Blessed Lord Himself has told us is not in our power. "It is not for you to know the times and seasons which the Father has put in His own prower." (Acts i. 7.) They are not designed to gratify the cravings of a vain curiosity. They do not enable us to foresee and foretell the future. They do not qualify us to construct a prophetical Ephemeris or Apocalyptic almanack.

But they have more important uses than these.

They have, as we have seen, a doctrinal and moral import. They teach us the necessity of unity and constancy in the one true faith, and of communion and fellowship in the discipline and regimen of the Apostolic Church of Christ.

They also serve to connect and rivet certain prophecies toge-The mention of the forty-two months, during which the Holy City is trodden down by the Gentiles (xi. 2), shows that the period in which this will be done is contemporaneous with the dominion of that power which is called the power of the Beast, and exercises its sway for a period described by the same chronological symbol of forty-two months (xiii. 5). So the mention of the 1260 Days, in which the Witnesses are said to preach in sack-cloth, connects their sufferings with those of the Church in the Wilderness, who is said to be there for a like period of 1260 Days, and it shows that the Word of God and the Church of God will be fellow-sufferers at the same time. They show that the sufferings of Scripture will coincide with those of the Church.

Besides, they have an analogical value. The Church, which is said to be in the wilderness 1260 days, is also said to be there for three years and a half. They remind the faithful Church that she is to look for trials - trials such as were endured by the ancient Church of Israel in her forty-two sojournings in the Wilderness; -trials such as were endured by Elias under Ahab, by the Maccabees under Antiochus, and by Christ from His own People. They encourage us with the joyful assurance, that if we are true to God, and maintain his cause with zeal, courage, and charity, then, though we suffer, we shall conquer also, as Elias did, as the Maccabees did, and as Christ did; that our sufferings will soon be over; that they will appear like a few days; then even for us there will be a Chariot of fire; and a heavenly Feast of Dedication; and a Cloud of glory; and a glorious Ascension into heaven, and an eternity of joy.

CH. XII.] Prophetic View of the HISTORY of the CHURCH;

relatively to Rome:

St. John now reascends to the first age of Christianity, as he had done after the opening of the SEVENTH SEAL (see above, viii. 1); and, as the ancient Expositors have observed, he now proceeds to reveal the future History of the Christian Church; not in her universality, but in her relation to a particular power, which will now be more fully described—the Power of ROME.

The Woman clothed with the Sun, and crowned with TWELVE STARS, represents the faithful Church.

1-6. και σημείον] And there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a Woman clothed with the Sun, and the Moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of Twelve Stars. And being with child she crieth, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered.

And there appeared another wonder in heaven: and behold a great dragon, red as fire (πυβρός), having Seven Heads and Ten Horns, and upon his Heads seven Diadems. And his tail draweth the third part of the Stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth: and the Dragon standeth before the Woman who was ready to be delivered, in order that he may devour her child as soon as it was born. And she brought forth a Son, a Male Child, who is to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her Child was caught up unto God, and to His throne.

And the Woman fled into the Wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her a thousand two hundred and threescore days.

As to the reading of this passage. In v. 5, Elz. has  $\alpha\beta\delta\epsilon\nu\alpha$ ; but A, C have  $\alpha\beta\delta\epsilon\nu$ , which can hardly have been introduced by the copyists; and so Lachmann and Tisch. The sense is, she brought forth a son, a male:  $\pi\epsilon\kappa\nu\sigma\nu$ , child, being understood; there is an emphasis on the masculine dignity and vigour of the son, who is thus more distinctly marked. Compare Mal. i. 14, where άρσεν is thus put absolutely, a male, and the use of the word άρσεν by the LXX in Job iii. 3, and Isa. lxvi. 7, ἔτεκεν άρσεν, said of the Church as here.
Especially compare Exod. ii. 2, ἐν γαστρὶ ἔλαβεν, καὶ ἔτεκεν

 $\check{\alpha}\rho \sigma \in \nu$ , said of Moses, who, in his deliverance, and in his actions, in smiting the kingdom of Egypt with his rod, was a type of the Male Child of the Church, represented in this Vision as delivered from the Serpent, who was symbolized by Pharaoh the Egyptian

King, in his persecutions of the ancient People of God.

The Woman in this Vision is the Christian Church. She appeared in heaven, for her origin is from above; hers is the kingdom of heaven. She is clothed with the Sun, for Christ is the Sun of Righteousness (Mal. iv. 2), and is compared in the Apocalypse to the Sun (i. 13-16; x. 1), and He is her Light; and they "who are baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Gal. iii. 27.) She is clothed with Christ; as God is said to deck Himself with light as with a garment (Ps. civ. 2). She has the Moon under her feet, because she will survive the changes of this world. As S. Hippolytus says, de Christo, § 60, p. 31, ed. Lagarde, "By this Woman, St. John most clearly designates the Church, clothed with the Evælasting Word, Who is more bright than the Sun;" and as Primasius expresses it, "The Church being clothed with Christ, treads upon the mutabilities of the World." Cp. Bede, A Lapide, Vitringa, Herder, and others.

She has on her head a Crown of Victory (στέφανος). This Crown is of Twelve Stars.

Twelve is the Apostolic number (see note at end of ch. xi.), and Stars are emblems of Christian Teachers (i. 20). Her Crown signifies, that the Victories of the Church are achieved by the Apostolic Doctrine and Discipline, which is planted as a Crown upon her head, by Christ her King. "The Crown of Twelve Stars," says S. Hippolytus (l. c. p. 32), "indicates the Twelve Apostles." "It is an emblem of the Apostles, who by the light of the glorious Gospel, put to flight the darkness of Error, and by whose agency Christ, the Head of the Church, vanquished the World." Haymo. And so Aquinas, who refers to 2 Constitute and so Bede, A Lapide, Vitringa, and others.

The Woman cries, travailing in childbirth, and pained to be delivered. On the infinitive after βασανιζομένη, cp. Winer, § 44, network. On the injuritive alter bacawigotern, cp. 11 ther, 9 44, pp. 287. In this world, the Church, like Eve, brings forth children in sorrow. (Gen. iii. 16.) "Be in pain," says the Prophet Micah, "and labour to bring forth, O daughter of Zion, like a woman in travail." (Micah iv. 10; cp. Isa. lxvi. 8-10.)

v. 3. And there appeared another great wonder in heaven, and behold, a great dragon red (as fire).

This other wonder is also said to appear in heaven, because the Power here represented assails the Church,—the kingdom of

The Dragon is "the Old Serpent," who is called in this book the Dragon, see vv. 9. 15, 16, where the names Satan, Devil, Dragon, and Serpent, are interchanged.

He had been already described as a Dragon in Ps. xci. 13, and Isa. xxvii. 1. And by this name, the Power of Egypt, as the Enemy of God and of His ancient Church, is described in the Prophets, see Isa. li. 9. Ezek. xxix. 3.

The Christian Church, in this Vision of the Apocalypse, as in very many others of this Book, is regarded as having been prefigured by the ancient Church of God in Egypt, and in the Exodus, and in the Wilderness.

The Dragon is red as fire  $(\pi \nu \hat{\rho} \hat{\rho} \delta s)$ , that is, he is here displayed as persecuting the Woman. See above, vi. 4, where Satan goes forth on the horse red as fire, to wage war against the primitive Church.

The Dragon is also described here as having Seven Heads and Ten Horns, and upon his Heads Seven Diadems. Diadems are symbols of Royally. Horns are emblems of Power. (Luke i. 69.) The number Seven represents completeness (see note at the end of chap, xi.). And combined with the number Ten, Ten horns, it connects this manifestation of the Dragon with the display of his power, as wielded by the Fourth Great Monarchy, that of Rome. See below, xiii. 1, and xvii. 3. 7. At the time here represented, the Kingdoms of the Roman World were under the Dragon's control. Our Lord Himself called him in that age the Prince of this World (John xii. 31), and St. Paul called him "the god of this world" (2 Cor. iv. 4. Cp. Eph. ii. 2; vi. 12.

The Diadems here are Seven, and they are upon the seven Heads (ἐπὶ τὰς κεφαλὰς), and in this respect they differ from those of the Beast in xiii. 1, where they are ten, and επί τῶν κεράτων, on the ten Horns.

The difference of the case after \$\delta n\$ in these two passages is to be noticed. With the accusative, the sense is, that the Diadems were upon the Heads; and the idea there is, one of firm collocation and settled subsistence upon the Heads. With the genitive, the idea expressed by it is that the Horns were surmounted by diadems. Cp. Winer, pp. 334, 362, and below, xiii. 1, where is an example of  $\ell \pi l$  with both cases.

The Dragon, Satan, has Seven Diadems, emblems of royalty. They are not on his horns, but upon his seven heads, which are more closely united to the body than horns are; and thus he is represented as exercising his dominion in one corporate Empire.

The Beast has not his diadems on his seven heads, but on ten horns, which have more the character of a separate existence, and also of a more precarious stability; indeed, his horns are said to give their power to him (xvii. 13). He rises from the seven heads (see xvii. 10), and exercises his power mediately by the horns, and not in the same corporate unity as the Dragon does.

In v. 4 the Dragon is said to draw with his tail a third part (i. e. a large part, see above, viii. 7-12) of the Stars of heaven.

The Dragon himself was once a bright Star in heaven. He was Lucifer, son of the Morning (Isa. xiv. 12). He had many bright Stars associated with him in a heavenly constellation. His fall was theirs.

The fall of the Angelic star led to the fall of the Angelic Constellation. The Dragon's Tail drew down in its train many bright Luminaries, who kept not their first estate, in the firmament of heaven. (Jude 6.)

The circumstance, that, in the ancient Uranography, one of the constellations was designated Δράκων, Draco, may perhaps be

This act of drawing down Stars from heaven, is expressed in the present tense, and by the verb σύρω, which sometimes signifies violent, and sometimes gentler, attraction, as in a σύρμα, syrma, a long trailing robe. See Acts viii. 3. John xxi. 8. Isa. iii. 15, where it is said of a robe; and Micah vii. 17, where it is applied to a serpent. The word σύρω, in the present tense, well describes the work which the Apostate Serpent is always doing in the Church; where he endeavours to draw down Teachers from their place in the Church, whether by force or flattery. Compare the words in Dan. viii. 10, where the Little Horn is said to cast down some of the stars of heaven, and trample them under his feet. As Augustine says (Epist. 119), and Haymo here, "The stars are falling from heaven, whensoever men, who seemed to shine by God's grace in the Church, yield to temptation, and fall

In v. 4, the Dragon stands before the Woman, and is ready

His design is like those of his personal Representatives and royal Instruments, Pharaoh in Egypt and Herod in Jewry; the former against the male children of Israel, who were to be cast into the river Nile (Exod. i. 22. Acts vii. 19), the other seeking to destroy the Man Child, Christ Jesus (Matt. ii. 13).

The Woman brings forth a son—a male, (see note above on the reading here in v. 5,) who is to tend (as a shepherd) all the Nations with a rod of iron; and her Child is caught up to God and to His throne.

At first sight these words appear applicable only to CHRIST. But, what is true primarily of Christ is, by virtue of His Incarnation, and mystical union with all true members of His body, and by reason of the working of His grace, transferred to them. Hence St. Paul says, "My little children, of whom I travail in birth again, until Christ be formed in you" (Gal. iv. 19). So, in a figurative sense, the Church is in labour with children, till Christ be formed in them. They are sons of God by adoption and grace (John i. 13. 1 John iii. 1), by reason of Christ's Incarnation, and their baptismal Incorporation in Him, Who is "Emmanuel, God with us," "God manifested in our flesh" (Matt. i. 23. 1 Tim. iii. 16. Gal. iii. 26. Rom. viii. 15. 17). (Matt. i. 23. 1 Tim. iii. 16. Gal. iii. 26. Rom. viii. 15. 17). Therefore David had said, "Behold ye the Philistines also, and they of Tyre, with the Morians, lo! there was he born, and of Sion it shall be reported, that He was born in her" (Ps. lxxxvii. 4, 5). Christ, Our King and Priest, "has made us Kings and Priests to God." By His ascension into heaven, we are even made "to sit together with Him in heavenly places" (Eph. i. 20; ii. 6), and our "Citizenship is in heaven" (Phil. iii. 20). And though it is primarily true of Christ that He tends the rations with a rod of iron (Ps. ii. 9), yet He Himself has said.

nations with a rod of iron (Ps. ii. 9), yet He Himself has said, "He that overcometh and keepeth my words unto the end, to him will I give authority over the Nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron, as potters' vessels are broken in pieces"

(Rev. ii. 26, 27).
Thus Christ Himself has interpreted the present Vision. And to cite one of many ancient interpreters here, S. Hippolytus says (1. c. p. 32), "The Church in this world never ceases to bring forth the Word, who is persecuted by the world; she is ever bringing forth the male child, the mature Christ, the Son of God, God and Man, by preaching Him to all Nations." And as S. Gregory says, in reference to our Lord's saying in Matt. xii. 48, where see the note, "Christ is born in our hearts by the Preaching of His Word."

The Rod of iron is Christ's Word, the Holy Scripture (see ii. 27; xii. 5), and by it the male children, the masculine spirits of Christ's Church, are endued with power from Him to rule the Nations, and overcome the World. With it they shiver into atoms the potter's vessels—that is, the earthly, brittle theories of corrupt Religion and carnal Philosophy; and, having performed their mission on earth like Elijah, like him they are caught up to heaven. They are exalted in a glorious apotheosis. "To him that overcometh," saith Christ in the Apocalypse, "will I grant to sit with Me in My Throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with My Father in His Throne" (iii. 21).

In v. 6, The Woman flees to the Wilderness, where she has her place prepared by God that they may nourish her 1260 days.

On the structure 3που ἐκεῖ cp. v. 14, and above, iii. 8; vii. 2.

Pharaoh, King of Egypt, who persecuted the Ancient Church of God, is, as we have seen, called a Dragon in the prophetic language of Scripture (see on v. 3).

The Ancient Church fled into the Wilderness of Arabia, under the guidance of Moses, who was the typical representative of the male child of the Church (see Exod. ii. 2, in LXX, and above, on v. 5), and who was marvellously saved from the royal Dragon of Egypt, and smole the land and people of Egypt with plagues by his rod (see Exod. iv. 17).

In like manner the Christian Church is here represented as flying into the Wilderness after the birth of her male child, who was to rule the Nations with a rod of iron.

The Church is here represented as nourished in the Wilderness, in the place prepared for her by God for 1260 days, or Forty-two Months; as the ancient Church, which was with Moses in the wilderness (see note above, on Acts vii. 38), was nourished with manna (Exod. xvi. 15. 35. Ps. lxxviii. 24, 25. Neh. ix. 15. John vi. 49. 1 Cor. x. 3), in her Forty-two Stations in the Wilderness.

This period of time, Forty-two Months, corresponds in duration with the period in which the Two Witnesses are said to prophesy or preach in sackcloth in the prophetical Vision in xi. 3, and with the sway of the Little Horn in Daniel vii. 25. See below, v. 14.

The duration of the Earthly Ministry of Christ Himself was probably a time, times, and half a time, i. e. 31 years, or 42 months. See above, on John v. 1.

The pilgrimage of "the Church, which is His Spouse and Body" (see Eph. v. 23—29. Col. i. 18. 24), is represented as corresponding in duration to that Ministry; and this analogical synchronism declares the sympathy which subsists between Him and her. Hence Bede here says that this period of 1260 days designates the sojourn of Christ's Church, because Christ, whose Body the Church is, preached for that period of time upon earth.

For a further explanation of the meaning of these periods of time, see above, note at end of Eleventh Chapter, "On the Num-BERS in the Apocalypse."

It has been asserted by some Romish Theologians, that the Woman in this Vision represents the Blessed Virgin Mary. But the Exposition now given is that which is dictated by the language of the Text, and was received by the early Interpreters of this Book.

In addition to those interpreters already cited, we may refer to Methodius (Bishop of Patara, and Martyr, in the third century), who says (in Catena, p. 352), "The Woman is the Church: for the things here spoken are not consistent with the circumstances of the generation of Christ, Who was already born before the epoch of this Vision. The Church is clothed with the Sun of Righteousness, and she has a crown of twelve Stars, namely, the Apostles of Christ. Therefore we must understand that the Woman here is the Church, and not the Blessed Virgin; for the Mystery of the Incarnation had been accomplished long before. [The edition of the Catena (1840) has γάλα here; read πάλαι.]
"The Church" (he continues), "which is the New Jerusalem, is in travail, as St. Paul says, and groans in labour with the redeemed, until Christ be formed in them (Gal. iv. 19), and she fears the Dragon, until she escapes his snares, and brings forth Christ in every man, that is, Christ spiritually formed in every man. He is both our Head and Body; He who died for us speaks in us, and has made us to be His members." S. Augustine (in Ps. 142) says, "The Woman is clothed with the Sun, the Sun of Righteousness; He Who is her male child, builds up Sion, and is also born in Sion. She, the City of God, is protected by the Light of Him, Who, as to the fiesh, is born in her; and she has the Moon under her feet, because she overcomes the mortality of the waxing and waning flesh," and ad Catechum. (vol. vi. p. 65), "The Church in every age is bringing forth members of Christ."

This Exposition is also expressed by Primasius, who says, "Caput Ecclesiæ Christus in singulis membris dicitur nasci. Omnes enim qui in Christo Jesu baptizati estis Christum induistis (Gal. iii. 27), Et raptus est filius ad Deum et ad thronum Ejus: licet in capite Christo præcesserit, congruit tamen et Corpori Ejus. Hinc illa voces Apostoli, Qui nos resus-citavit et considere fecit in cælestibus (Eph. ii. 6), et conversatio nostra in cælis est" (Phil. iii. 20). And Bede says, "Semper Ecclesia, Dracone licèt adversante, Christum parit; masculum autem dicit, victorem Diaboli qui fæminam (Evam) vicerat . . . . Ecclesia quotidie gignit ecclesiam, mundum in Christo vincentem." See also Aug. ? " Ecclesia semper generat Dei membramasculum autem dicit victorem adversus Diabolum;" Haymo, ad loc. "Membra Christi quotidie parit sancta Ecclesia. Rectè autem sancti sub nomine masculorum comprehenduntur, quia fortiter contra adversa istius sæculi pugnant, sicut fecerunt sancti Apostoli et Martyres. De omnibus electis potest intelligi, qui in Suo Capite acceperunt potestatem ut regant gentes virga ferred, et confringendi cas tanquam vas figuli."

This true Exposition is happily embodied in the Collect for Christmas Day, and in Bp. Taylor's Prayer (Life of Christ, i. p. 28), "Grant, O God, that I may entertain the Holy Jesus, conceive Him in my soul, nourish Him with the expresses of most holy and innocent affections, and bring Him forth, and publish Him in a life of piety and obedience, that He may dwell in me for ever."

In v. 7 Elz. has ἐπολέμησαν and κατὰ, but the reading in the Text (τοῦ πολεμησαι) is authorized by the best MSS., and is received by Grieso., Scholz, Lach., Tisch. On the use of the article with the Infinitive, where a design is implied, see above, Luke ii. 27. Acts vii. 19. Cp. Zech. iii. 1, LXX, and Winer, § 44, p. 293. The present construction seems to be without an exact parallel in the New Testament (see Winer, and Lücke, and Düsterdieck here), inasmuch as no verb, expressing a design, precedes the infinitive; we may however suppose such a verb; and an ellipse of this kind need not excite surprise in the Apo-

Observe, St. John now reverts to an earlier period, in order to recite the antecedent history of the Dragon, and to explain the circumstances under which he was led on to persecute the Woman; and he traces that history till it is brought down, in v. 14, to the same point as in v. 6, namely, to the escape of the Woman in the Wilderness.

It is necessary to attend carefully to this process of recapitulation, which is so frequent in the Apocalypse (see above, Introduction, p. 147, and xii. 1, and below, xx. 1). "It is a common thing in the Apocalypse" (says Bossuet in ch. vii.) "to exhibit events in general outline, and to unfold them afterwards in more minute detail." This is what is done now. Satan is displayed as he was before his fall from heaven.

On one side is MICHAEL, the Archangel, and his Angels, on the other Satan and his Angels. MICHAEL, whose name, קיכאל, signifies, Who is like unto God? (contrast the words, xiii. 4, vis δμοιος τ $\hat{\varphi}$  θηρί $\varphi$ ; and see note above, Jude 9,) stands up for the children of God's people (Dan. xii. 1. Cp. Dan. x. 12, 13. 20, 21), against the Adversary, who deceives the world. Some Expositors have supposed that Michael here is a name for Christ Himself; but the other opinion expressed above has been rightly maintained by Bengel, Ewald, De Wette, Hofmann, Ebrard, and others. See Düsterdieck, p. 400.

v. 8. "Their place was not found any more in heaven."

Compare Jude 6.

v. 9. "He that deceiveth the whole world." The deceits by which Satan cheated the World in Oracles, Sorcery, Soothsaying, Magic, and other frauds, are here specially noticed. put to flight by the power of Christ and of the Holy Ghost, in the Preaching of the Gospel by the Apostles and others in the first ages of Christianity.

Our Lord Himself, speaking of the consequence of the preaching of the Seventy Disciples, reveals the spiritual struggle and the Victory, "I was beholding Salan, as lightning fall from heaven" (Luke x. 17, 18. Cp. John xii. 31; xvi. 11). See the note above, on Acts xvi. 16, where is a remarkable specimen of that mysterious conflict, and of the victory achieved by the Apostle St. Paul over the Python or Serpent, who deceived the world.

The Revelations of the ministry of the Holy Angels, assisting the faithful in combating the Evil Angels warring against them, may instruct the Christian student, in reading Church History, and cheer the Christian soldier, in the conflicts of life.

The young man's eye was opened at Dothan; and "he saw chariots of fire and horses of fire around Elisha" (2 Kings vi. 17). "The Angels of the Lord encamp about those who fear Him (Ps. xxxiv. 7), and the Angels are sent "to minister to them that are heirs of salvation" (Heb. i. 14). The agency of Angels is often presented to the view by the Holy Spirit in the Acts of the Apostles (see notes on Acts xii. 15. 21, 22). The presence of Angels in Christian Assemblies and in the holy worship of the Church, is made the groundwork of practical admonition by St. Paul, 1 Cor. xi. 10.

Woe to the earth and the sea! for the Devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short season. Observe the articles here, "The Salvation," &c. the promised and long-expected Salvation has now at length arrived.

Satan is the Accuser (κατήγορος, A has κατήγωρ) of the Saints, as he was of Job (Job i. 9; ii. 4, 5, and see Bp. Andrewes, v. p. 482). He is the διάβολος, or Calumniator, opposed to Christ our παράκλητος, Advocate and Intercessor.

Satan is also the Accuser of the Brethren, and he accused them before God, that is, in the face of God, and in spite and defiance of Him (see the words concerning Nimrod, Gen. x. 9), when he prompted those lying calumnies, with which the early Christians were traduced by the Heathen votaries and vassals of the Dragon, who vilified the brethren, as guilty of nefarious crimes, and as the authors of all the miseries which befell the Roman Empire. See Minucius Felix, c. 9. Athenag. Apol. c. 4. Tertullian, Apol. c. 8. 14. 40, and S. Augustine, Prolog. De Civ. Dei, and Dean Stanhope on the Epistles, iv. p. 474, and above,

They who tabernacle in the heavens behold their struggle, and sing songs of praise for their Victory.

The Angels are said here to tabernacle (σκηνοῦν) in the heavens. Here is an allusion to the earthly history of the Church.

The Church of Israel sojourned in Tabernacles in the Wilderness, and God dwelt among them in a Tabernacle, the figure of heavenly things (Heb. viii. 5). The great Hebrew Feast of Tabernacles was commemorative of the blessings vouchsafed by God's presence to His Church in the Wilderness, and was prophetic of the blessings to be derived from the Incarnation of the Son of God, and to be consummated hereafter in Heaven. In process of time the Son of God Himself came from Heaven, and tabernacled in us (John i. 14). He now dwells with the Angels, and He will dwell for ever with His Saints, as in a Tabernacle, in the Church glorified (see above, vii. 15; xxi. 3). And they who now in this earthly pilgrimage, make a right use of the blessings vouchsafed in Christ's Incarnation will be partakers for ever of the glories of that heavenly Tabernacle.

The season of liberty and warfare which the Devil now has, is short, compared with that of his future detention in everlasting chains of penal fire; see below, xx. 10, and note above on Matt. viii. 29, "Art Thou come to torment us before the season?"

13, 14. καὶ ὅτε εἶδεν ὁ δράκων] and when the Dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth, he persecuted the Woman which brought forth the male child. And to the Woman were given the two Wings of the great Eagle, that she may fly into the Wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the Serpent. St. John recurs to what he had been describing before in

VOL. II .- PART IV.

vv. 4-6, the wrath of the Dragon against the progeny of the Church.

He represents the Dragon as persecuting the Church in his fury, because his frauds have been exposed and put to flight by the preaching of the Gospel. The Devil tempted Eve, the First Woman, the spouse of the First Adam, the "Mother of all Living" (Gen. iii. 20), the type of the Church. He now tempts the Church (see above, on 2 Cor. xi. 3). And she is carried by the two Wings of the Great Eagle into the Wilderness, where she is nourished for a time, times, and half a time, that is, three prophetic years and a half.

St. John is here brought again to the same point as in v. 6, the escape of the Woman into the Wilderness.

She is carried there on "the Two Wings of the Great Eagle." Observe the definite articles here, "the Two Wings of the

Who is this Eagle, and what are His Two Wings?

The Ancient Church, escaping from Pharaoh and from Egypt, is described by God, in Holy Scripture, as borne by Him on Eagles' wings (Exod. xix. 4. Cp. Deut. xxxii. 11).

The Eagle is the King of Birds. Christ, Our King, Who is compared to the Lion, the King of Beasts (v. 5), is also likened to the Eagle, the King of Birds. And the Eagle is the Serpent's foe, as naturalists observe. "Between the Eagle and the Dragon there is a constant enmity; the Eagle seeking to kill the Dragon, and the Dragon breaking the Eagle's eggs; and when he hears the noise of the Eagle's wings in the air, he speeds to his den and hides himself." Cp. Horat. 4 Od. iv. 1:

> "Qualem ministrum fulminis Alitem (the Eagle), Cui rex Deorum regnum in aves vagas Permisit-Nunc in reluctantes Dracones Egit amor dapis atque pugnæ."

And Plin. II. N. v. 4, "Acrior est (Aquilæ) cum dracone pugna, et multò magis anceps." On the Macedonian coins of Amyntas, Father of Philip, there was a figure of an Eagle seizing a Dragon. See Wetstein, p. 798.

Our Divine Eagle, Jesus Christ, wages war with the spiritual

The Eagle, also, bears its offspring on its wings (Deut. xxxii. 11), and casts off the feathers of old age, and renews its youth (Ps. ciii. 5).

So, our Divine Eagle, Jesus Christ, cast off the plumage of the grave, and soared in His glorious Ascension above the Clouds, and He carries His children with Him to His throne in Heaven, and is the Protector and Saviour of His Church (see above, on

See note above, on Matt. xxiv. 28. Luke xvii. 36.

The Two Wings of the Great Eagle are the "Wings of Christ." "Christ" (says S. Hippolytus, l. c. p. 32) "stretched out his arms like Wings on the Cross, and called all to shelter beneath Him, as a Hen gathereth her chickens under her wings' (Matt. xxiii. 37); and as God by the prophet says, "to you who fear My Name, the Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in His Wings" (Mal. iv. 2).

These Two Wings are emblems of the Two Testaments. The Two Wings are emotions of the Two Testastesis.

The Two Testaments are the Wings of Christ, the Incarnate Word. The Church flies on their pinions in her Missionary course through the Wilderness of this World. She is borne on the Wings of the Holy Scripture into all the world. As Primasius says here, "The Church uses the Two Testaments as her wings," and Aug.? says, "The two Wings of the Great Eagle are the Two Testaments." "Their sound is gone out into all lands" (Ps. xix. 4). The flutterings of those Divine Wings, the flappings of those heavenly pinions, are heard every where, and they walt the Church into all lands. Christ rides on them as on the chariot

The truth embodied in this symbol has received a beautiful practical illustration from the usage of Christians, in placing the practical illustration from the usage of can Eagle in Churches, Two Testaments upon the Two Wings of an Eagle in Churches, and reading the Lessons of Holy Scripture therefrom.

In v. 14 it is said that the Church is to be nourished for a time, times, and half a time, from the face of the Serpent.

This prophetic period is the same as that which is assigned by Daniel to the sway of the Little Horn, who rises from among the ten horns, or Kings, of the Fourth or Roman Empire (Dan. vii. 2-27).

The word καιροs signifies one year, and καιροl signifies two s. Cp. Winer, § 27, p. 160. There is no dual in the N. T. This note of time serves thus to connect this Apocalyptic prophecy with that of Daniel, and it also connects them both with the time of the preaching of the Two Witnesses in sackcloth, and with the pilgrimage of the Woman, or Christian Church, in the wilderness (see above, on v. 6, and on chap. xi. at the end).

15. καὶ ἔβαλεν] and the Serpent cast out of his mouth water as a river after the Woman, that he might cause her to be carried away of the river. And the Earth helped the Woman, and the Earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the river which the Dragon cast out of his mouth.

The Dragon, enraged by the exposure of his deceits, by which he had deluded the world, and finding that the Christian Church had not been destroyed by Persecution, but rather had grown under it (see above, on the Third Seal, vi. 5), as the Ancient Church, when persecuted by Pharaoh, the instrument of the old Dragon, had increased in Egypt (cp. Exod. i. 2. 7. 20. Ps. cv. 24), now resorts to another artifice.

He casts out of his mouth water as a river to overwhelm her with a Flood.

Waters are Apocalyptic emblems of Multitudes (see xvii. 15); and a Torrent, flowing with violence, and sweeping over the land, is an emblem of a hostile army, rushing onward with an impetuous invasion; and is so applied in Holy Scripture. See Isa. viii. 8;

xvii. 12; lix. 19. Jer. xlvi. 7; xlvii. 2.

This Flood poured forth by the Dragon, after the time of the primitive Persecutions of the Church, seems to represent the Deluge of barbarous Nations, streaming down from the North on Europe and Africa, and disturbing the peace of Christendom, and reducing lands and cities to desolation, and threatening to drown the Church.

Such were the inroads of the Goths and Huns, and especially of the Vandals in the fifth century. See above, on viii. 8.

But by God's mercy these floods were swallowed up by the earth. These barbarians subsided in the countries which they had invaded, and were converted to Christianity. See Bp. Wilson's note here, and Dean Jackson, quoted above, p. 198, and Archdu. Harrison on the Prophecies, p. 341, and the following statements by a recent Historian of the Church: "At first, the Heathens of Rome and Italy imputed their own calamities to the Christians, and when the West of Europe had been inundated by the barbarous hordes, they affirmed that these disasters were sent by the gods (see Aug. C. D. v. 21), and they predicted a speedy downfall of Christianity. But they were silenced, when even the German conquerors became converts to Christianity." "The amalgamation of the German conquerors with the older inhabitants of the land, and the development of the new European nations, were universally effected by similarity of faith." Gieseler, Church History, § 79, and § 123.

Thus the Earth helped the Woman. This Prophecy also recrived a fulfilment in the Christianization of the earthly power of Rome, which had been arrayed by the Dragon against the Woman. The first Christian Emperor Constantine, in one of his letters to Eusebius, refers to this prophecy, and says that the Dragon had been cast out by God's Providence and his own ministry (Euseb, de Vit. Const. ii. 46); and he placed in front of his palace a pic-ture representing the Cross over his own head, and the Dragon beneath him cast into the abyss; for, adds Eusebius (ibid. iii. 3), "the oracles of God in the books of the Prophets described the Enemy as a Dragon and a Serpent."

17. καὶ ἀργίσθη] And the Dragon was wroth with the Woman, and went away to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and hold fast the testimony of Jesus Christ.

The Dragon went away to make war with the remnant of her seed.

That new form of warfare is now to be displayed in the next Chapter, in the Vision of the Two BEASTS.

These words supply important chronological data, as showing that the two Beasts, now to be described, represent a power subsequent in its appearance to that of the Persecutions in the earlier ages of the Church, and posterior also to the pouring forth of the Flood in the preceding verses, v. 15.

The words ἐχόντων τὴν μαρτυρίαν signify more than having the witness; they mean, holding it fast. Cp. vi. 9; xix. 10. 1 John v. 10.

There is a remarkable parallel between the working of the Evil One here and in the Seals, vi. 3-8. There Satan first appeared on the horse of fire, mupples (v. 4), that is, of Persecution. So here he is first displayed as πυρρός, red like fire. There, having failed of his efforts in that respect, he resorted to another device, and mounted the black horse (v. 5), and next the pale horse; and then we heard a mention of the Beasts (see above on And in like manner we are now brought to the Beasts in the Vision next ensuing (xiii. 1-18), in which they will be described with greater fulness and clearness.

18. καὶ ἐστάθην] And I stood, I was placed, upon the sand of the sea. A, C have ἐστάθη, and so Vulg., Syr., Æthiopic, and Armenian Versions. But R and B have ἐστάθην, and so the majority of MSS., and Griesbach, Matth., Tischendorf, Ewald, De Wette.

In v. 12, there was a prophetic denunciation of Woe to the Earth and to the Sea; and now we are about to see two Beasts arising, one from the Sea (xiii. 1), and the other from the Earth (xiii. 11).

This station on the Sand, and the Vision of the Beast, rising from the Sea, the element of commotion, are contrasted with the Vision of the Lamb standing on the Mount Sion with His faithful servants, xiv. 1-5.

CH. XIII. 1-10. Kal eldov] And I saw a Beast rising up out of the sea, having ten horns and seven heads, and on his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads names of blasphemy.

and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to act forty and two months.

And he opened his mouth in blasphemy towards God, to blaspheme His name, and His tabernacle, and them that tabernacle in heaven.

And it was given unto him to make war with the Saints, and to overcome them; and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. He that hath an ear, let him hear. He that gathereth a captivity goeth into captivity: he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints.

The word enploy is here rendered Beast; and no other English word can be adopted for it. But the English word Beast, derived from Bestia, does not exactly represent the original. The Latin equivalent to \(\theta\rho\leftloor\) is not bestia, but fera (whence ferox, fierce, ferocious), which is derived from φηρ, the Æolic form of θηρ, θηρίον, and signifies a savage, predatory animal.

It has been imagined by some modern Interpreters, dwelling on the signification of the word Beast, and its derivatives in other languages, that the primary idea presented here in the Apocalypse by the word  $\theta\eta\rho lo\nu$ , is one of revolting bestiality.

But this view is inconsistent with the use of the word 8 nplov in Holy Scripture, and in the best Authors. The word  $\theta\eta\rho iov$ , used by the Septuagint and Theodotion, in the Visions of Daniel (iv. 9. 11, and passim; and vii. 3. 5-7, and passim), which are introductory to those of the Apocalypse, represents the Hebrew and Chaldee הֵינָה, הֵינָא, the fundamental idea of which is animal life. And the Syriac Version renders the word θηρίου in the Apocalypse, by "animal of teeth," showing that the idea of wild ferocity was uppermost in the Translator's mind.

The Leopard and the Lion, which contribute their features to constitute this Apocalyptic  $\theta \eta \rho lov$  (see v. 2), are not hideous and loathsome, but noble and beautiful in appearance.

The Wild Beasts which were kept by the Romans for Gladiatorial shows, and to which the Christian Martyrs were exposed, were usually called θηρία, and they were commonly Lions.

There is a contrast in the Apocalypse between the  $\theta\eta\rho la$  or Beasts on the one side, and the Aprior or Lamb on the other; between the lawlessness, pride, and ferocity of the one, compared with the innocence, meekness, and gentleness of the other.

The Horns of the Beast are mentioned in this Vision before the Heads, because when the Beast was arising from the Sea, the Horns would first appear.

In a subsequent Vision, when the Beast has arisen, and has advanced to a later stage of its history, the Seven Heads are mentioned before the Ten Horns. See xvii. 3. 7.

The Diadems are not on the Heads of the Beasts, as was the case with those of the Dragon, in xii. 3; but they are on the Horns. This is important to be observed. The Beast does not exercise his dominion with the same direct agency and corporate unity as the Dragon did; but he exercises it mediately, by other Potentates, which did not exist in St. John's age; see xvii. 12, and on xii. 3.

The Beast is seen rising from the Sea, that is, from a confused and tumultuous element. See above, vii. 1, 2, and viii. 8, and below, xxi. 1. The Power of the Beast is thus represented as due to a confused and restless condition of civil affairs, and as emerging therefrom.

By the mention of the sea here, the reader's attention is also called to the Vision of Daniel, who sees four Beasts (θηρία) arising from the Sea. (Dan. vii. 3.)

Those Four Beasts represented the Four great successive Empires of the world. I. ASSYRIAN, II. MEDO-PERSIAN, III.

This is the uniform exposition of the best Interpreters, dating almost from St. John's age. See S. Irenæus, v. 26. S. Hippolytus, de Antichristo, c. 49. Tertullian, de Resur. Carnis; and S. Cyril, Cateches. xv. S. Jerome on Dan. vii., and Epist. ad Algas. Qu. 2; and Theodoret, ad Dan. vii.; and cp. Winer, R.W.B. ii. p. 611, art. "Thiere," and see above on Dan. vii.

The language of St. John here is very similar to that of Daniel there—as represented in the Greek Versions of the LXX and Theodotion; and it is evident, from a comparison of the two prophecies, that this Vision of St. John is designed to be a sequel of that of Daniel. Compare the words of the Text here with those of Daniel, - τέσσαρα θηρία μεγάλα ἀνέβαινον εκ τῆς θαλάσσης το πρώτον ώσει λέαινα, και θηρίον δεύτερον δμοιον ἄρκφ (the form of this word ἄρκφ, not ἄρκτφ, in the Greek Versions of Daniel, and in the Apocalypse here, in the best MSS., affords a noticeable coincidence) και θηρίον άλλο ώσει

In this Vision of Daniel-who looks forward from the Assyrian Dynasty, under which he was living, to the three succeeding ones, the Medo-Persian, Greek, and Roman-we see first the Assyrian Lion, next the Medo-Persian Bear, and then the Greek Leopard. In this Vision of the Apocalypse of St. John-who looks backward from the Roman Dynasty, under which he was living, to the three preceding dynasties-we see the three Animals of Daniel, mentioned in an inverted order, and combined in the first Beast, here displayed. Hence it is evident that this Apocalyptic Beast comes next after the Greek Leopard, and that he has absorbed, as it were, the dominion of the three preceding Beasts into himself.

The Fourth, or Roman Beast of Daniel, is also described as having Ten Horns (δέκα κέρατα, Dan. vii. 7), which are declared to be the Ten Kings which would rise up from out of the Fourth Empire, i.e. the Roman. See Dan. vii. 23, 24. Cp. Iren. v. 25, 26. 30; and Theodoret in Dan. vii. vol. ii. pp. 1195, 1196, who says, "the Fourth Beast is the Roman Empire; and the Ten Horns indicate, that, at about the time of the end of that Empire, Ten Kings will arise from it." And so S. Jerome in Dan. vii., who says, "the fourth Empire, which now exists, is that of Rome."

The Apocalyptic Beast has likewise ten Horns (δέκα κέρατα), and his identity with the fourth Beast of Daniel is thus marked.

It is observable also, that Daniel has not likened the fourth Empire, or Roman, to any particular animal, although he had compared the first three Empires of the world to three several animals, viz. Lion, Bear, and Leopard.

The Holy Spirit who inspired Daniel seems thus to have intentionally left room, and to have prepared the way, for marking the identity of the Apocalyptic Beast with the Fourth Beast of Daniel. He now represents the Apocalyptic Beast as succeeding the Leopard, as the Leopard had succeeded the Bear, and as the Bear had succeeded the Lion; and he represents the Apocalyptic Beast, as composed of the three,—the Leopard, the Bear, and the Lion. The reader is requested to refer to the Introduction and notes above on the Book of DANIEL, which affords the best clue to the interpretation of the following portion of the Apocalypse. See particularly the notes on Dan. iii. 1; and on Dan. vii. 4; vii. 8; and on xi. 40.

He represents it not only as having Ten Horns, but also as having Seven Heads; and he describes one of these seven heads as having been slain unto death (v. 3), and he adds that the wound of the Beast's death  $(\dot{\eta} \pi \lambda \eta \gamma \dot{\eta} \tau o \hat{v} \theta a \nu \dot{\alpha} \tau o \hat{v})$  had been healed.

What do these seven Heads represent?

They do not represent the kingdoms which were to arise out of the Fourth, or Roman Empire; that feature is represented by the Ten Horns, bearing Crowns (διαδήματα, emblems of royalty).

See below, xvii. 12, 13. 16, 17.

The meaning of the Heads is afterwards declared by an Angel to St. John, when he sees the same Beast, in a yet more advanced stage of its history. I saw, he says, a Beast "full of the names of blasphemy" (xvii. 3); thus he identifies that Beast with what he now sees, which is described as having on his heads "names of blasphemy," v. 1; and that identity is also declared by the characteristic of "the Seven Heads and Ten Horns" (xvii. 3). And the Angel says, "I will tell thee the Mystery of the Beast that hath the seven heads and the Ten Horns. The seven Heads are (i.e. they represent) seven Mountains on which the Woman sitteth. And they are (i.e. they also represent) seven Kings; the five fell, the one exists, the other came not yet; and the Beast that was, and is not, he is the eighth [king], and is also from the seven [heads], and he is going to perdition" (xvii. 7. 9, 10).

Therefore the Heads have a double signification; they declare the local position of the seat of the Beast; they show that his residence is in the City of the Seven Hills-Rome. See below, preliminary note to chap. xvii., and on xvii. 7-10.

His residence, at that later stage of his history, is still the same as when he is first displayed in this chapter, where he appears in his imperial heathen form, as the fourth great Monarchy of the world-the Monarchy of Rome.

c.ch. 17, 3,

3 · Καὶ μίαν ἐκ τῶν κεφαλῶν αὐτοῦ ὡς ἐσφαγμένην εἰς θάνατον· καὶ ἡ πληγὴ τοῦ θανάτου αὐτοῦ ἐθεραπεύθη.

The Heads also describe successive Powers, ending in the Beast. See xvii. 7-10.

The Ten Horns mean Ten Kings (xvii. 12), that is, ten kingdoms, as the parallel vision of Daniel explains the word. And here the Seven Heads are also said to mean Seven Kings (xvii. 10), that is, they signify seven successive Powers, of which five were past when St. John saw the vision (xvii. 10), and one was existing, and the seventh was to exist for a short time only; then the Beast would assume his final development, in which he would go "unto perdition" (xvii. 11).

What these successive seven Powers are, will be considered hereafter, on xvii. 9-11.

In the mean time, it is requisite to bear in mind, that the character of the Beast varies greatly from time to time in the successive periods of his history, as displayed in the Apocalypse. This will be evident from a consideration of the parts of this prophecy contained in chap. xiii. to chap. xx. inclusive. The neglect of this observation has produced confusion in the interpretation of this portion of the Apocalypse.

The first stage of the Beast's existence is described in  $v.\ 2$ of the present chapter. There the Dragon, or Devil, gives him his power, and his throne, and great authority. Observe the word έξουσία, authority, something more than power, δύναμις.

See on Rom. xiii. 1.

This first state of the Beast, as here represented, is that of the Roman Empire while Heathen.

This Interpretation is adopted by almost all Expositors, ancient and modern. See the commentaries of Victorinus, Bede, Alcasar, A Lapide, Hammond, Bossuet, Wetstein, Grotius, Eichhorn, Herder, Ewald, De Wette, Lücke, Bleek. That power rose out of discordant tumults and revolutionary elements, which might well be likened to a sea (v. 1).

In v. 3 one of the heads of the Beast is seen as having been slain to death; and the wound of his death was healed.

The head that was first wounded after the age of St. John was the Imperial head of Rome.

It was wounded in A.D. 476, when Romulus Augustulus, the last Roman Emperor, abdicated the imperial dignity, and the Roman Empire ceased to be.

It is not said in this prophecy that the Head was restored, but that the wound of the death of the Beast was healed, and he lived (vv. 12. 15).

It is added (v. 3), that all the Earth (i.e. the earthlyminded, see v. 8, and above on i. 7; iii. 10) wondered, gazed with admiration ofter the Beast; i.e. they followed in his train. See this use of  $\partial \pi l \sigma \omega$ , John xii. 19.

The Beast now appears in another stage of his history, but he keeps his name; he is still a θηρίον; he has a wild and ferocious nature; and it is in this character that the Vision deals with him.

This is necessary to be observed.

The Imperial Power of Rome was succeeded by the Papal, and the Papal Power exercised as wide a sway, and a far more dominant one, than ever the Imperial had done

In the words of an Historian of the Middle Ages, "The noonday of Papal Dominion extends from the Pontificate of Innocent III., inclusively, to that of Boniface VIII.; or, in other words, through the thirteenth century. Rome inspired during this age all the terror of her ancient name. She was once more Mistress of the world: and Kings were her vassals." (Hallam, Middle Ages, ii. p. 284.) Thus "the deadly wound was healed."

In the words of Bp. Andrewes (c. Bellarmine, p. 296), "The seven-headed beast is the Roman power in its different successive forms, first as it was under the Pagans, and next as it is under the Popes. That power received a deadly wound in the Empire, and revived under the Papacy" (p. 289). See further below on Chap. xvii. 8.

Doubtless the Papal Power has, and ever has had, some other elements in it besides those of a Wild Beast; but it is in its character as a Wild Beast that it is here contemplated by St. John.

The Papal Power, as far as it is Christian, and teaches Christian truths, is not the object of the Apocalyptic prophecy. But the Prophecy deals with the Papal Power, as far as it is a lawless, fierce, and persecuting power; in a word, as far as it is a onplov, a Beast, and is opposed to the 'Applov, or Lamb, which is

It cannot be said with some modern interpreters, that, inasmuch as the Papal Power had, and still has, much that is Christian in it, it could not be represented by a Beast (0ηρίον).

It is confessed by all Expositors, that the old 'Heathen Empires are called Beasts by Daniel (vii. 3. 5-7). But they had many good features in them. The heathen Empire of Rome is called a Beast in the Old and New Testaments; and yet, inasmuch as it had authority from God, and ministered justice in its Tribunals, it is also described in Scripture as a "minister of God to man for good," and was to be revered as such. (Rom. xiii. 1-4. 1 Pet. ii. 13.)

So the old Babylonish Empire is called a Beast in Holy Scripture (Dan. vii. 4), because it was guilty of cruelty; and yet its King, Nebuchadnezzar, is called God's servant, and the Jews are commanded to obey him (Jer. xxvii. 8; xxxix. 18); and holy men, such as Daniel, who calls it a Beast, and Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, who knew that it was revealed in that character, were Ministers of the Empire of Babylon.

The Persian Empire is also called a Beast in Holy Scripture (Dan. vii. 5), and yet Cyrus its king is called God's Shepherd, and God's Anointed (Isa. xliv. 28; xlv. 1), and Daniel, who calls it a Beast, served under the Princes of that Dynasty.

These considerations afford a reply to the allegations of some recent writers, who say, that the Papal Power could not be the object of this prophecy, inasmuch as it had good and holy men subservient to it, and inasmuch as the Word of God was preserved under its sway, by faithful Pastors, and the Baptism of Christ was administered, and Bishops and Pastors of Christian Churches have received their Holy Orders, transmitted from Christ through the intermediate agency of the Roman Church.

Such allegations as these are irrelevant and illogical. They proceed from an exclusive school of Theology, which does not rightly distinguish between personal acts, and official qualifications; and which interprets words and sentences, which are spoken with special application, as if they were general and universal. The vicious character of such reasoning has been exposed by S. Augustine, in his controversy with the Donatists of older times, and by Richard Hooker, in later days, especially in the Third Book of his Ecclesiastical Polity (see iii. 1. 8-14).

Let such persons be requested to consider that Christ characterized Judas as "the son of perdition" (John xvii. 12), and that he said to St. Peter, when he would dissuade Him from suffering, "Get thee behind me, Satan" (Matt. xvi. 23. Mark viii. 33). These titles, given by Christ, were doubtless deserved by those to whom they were given, in respect of the particular acts which elicited those names. But the Baptism of Christ, which was administered by the Apostles, Judas and Peter, was not therefore invalid.

When Judas betrayed Christ for money, he was the son of perdition, but when he administered the Baptism of Christ he was an instrument of salvation; when Peter dissuaded Christ from suffering on the Cross, he was like Satan, but when he preached Christ and suffered on the Cross for Christ, he was like an angel of God.

These principles ought to be applied to the question before us. Dean Jackson, on the Creed, book xii. ch. xviii., says, "Now, though the Bishop of Rome be more than a heretic, even the Man of Sin, nevertheless, seeing he sitteth in the Temple of God (2 Thess. ii. 4), even the acts of his Ministration or Priesthood are good; nor are the Bishops consecrated by him so polluted by Communion with him in their consecration, but that their Episcopal acts be lawful and good, so long as they observe the form of Ordination or Administration of Sacraments prescribed by Christ and His Apostles. The Word preached by them likewise bath the force and efficacy of begetting faith in their hearers' hearts." And he compares their case to that of the Scribes and Pharisees in Matt. xxiii. 3, and of Caiaphas in John xi. 50. Cp. Hooker, V. Ixiii. 2. Serm. ii. § 27. Bp. Sanderson, Preface to his Sermons, vol. ii. pp. xxxvi—xliii, and vol. v. p. 246. Abp. Bramhall, i. p. 119; ii. p. 38. Bp. Bull, ii. p. 203, or the notes above, on Matt. xiii. 30, where it is shown that a Church, though almost overgrown with tares, is still God's Field by reason of His good seed in it; and note on Acts vii. 38, where God's people, though polluted with idolatry, are still called a Church, by reason of His Presence, and of His Law, and Worship; and the notes on I Cor. i. 2, and above, on ii. 1.

The real question, therefore, to be considered in interpreting this Prophecy, is not, whether the Papacy has the Word and Sacraments of God, or whether many holy men lived under it; but, the question is, whether the Papal Roman Power, which succeeded the Pagan Roman Empire, has committed acts of violence, and displayed a wild and ferocious spirit; and whether it exhibited this spirit towards many Christians, and for a considerable length of time.

Καὶ ἐθαύμασεν ὅλη ἡ γὴ ὀπίσω τοῦ θηρίου, 4 α καὶ προσεκύνησαν τῷ δρά- α ελ. 18. 18. κοντι, ότι έδωκεν την έξουσίαν τω θηρίω, καὶ προσεκύνησαν τω θηρίω λέγοντες, Τίς όμοιος τῷ θηρίω; καὶ τίς δύναται πολεμήσαι μετ' αὐτοῦ;

5 ° Καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ στόμα λαλοῦν μεγάλα καὶ βλασφημίας· καὶ ἐδόθη ε Dan. 7. 8, 11 αὐτῶ έξουσία ποιῆσαι μῆνας τεσσαράκοντα δύο.

If this has been the case, then the Papal Roman power had the marks and attributes of a Wild Beast, and it deserved the name of a Wild Beast as much as the Pagan Empire itself did, to which it succeeded. It was even more like a wild Beast than the Heathen Empire was, inasmuch as it sinned against clearer knowledge, and acted in a temper directly opposed to the Example of the LAMB, and to His Gospel, which it had in its hands, and which it professed to preach; and inasmuch also as its cruelty was directed against the followers of the Lamb, and inasmuch as in persecuting them it persecuted Christ (Acts ix. 4, 5), and therefore it was like a Wild Beast raging furiously against the LAMB Himself.

The historical evidence of its conduct in this respect is too strong to be gainsaid.

On the 24th of August; 1572, St. Bartholomew's Day, five thousand Christians were assassinated at Paris, by command of a King, who acted under the direction of the Papacy; and within a few days after, 25,000 more were slain, in six towns of France. See Ranke's History of the Popes, p. 147, who says that the numbers killed in that massacre amounted to 50,000. Some days after this massacre Pope Gregory XIII. showed his approval of it, and went in procession to the Church of St. Louis at Rome, to give God thanks for it; and he commanded a Medal to be struck in the Papal Mint, to commemorate the slaughter, and on "Massacre of the Hugonots", and he there represented that savage work as done by an Angel of heaven. This medal may be seen in Numismata Pontificum, p. 87, Lutet. 1679; cp. Clarendon's Religion and Polity, p. 427. Cp. below, xvii. 6.

Again; in the exterminating Wars of Religion, as they were called, waged by the Papacy against the Albigenses and Waldenses, about a million of souls were slain, as Perionius testifies, and his testimony is strengthened by the relation of Thuanus. from the first institution of the Jesuits, under the special favour of the Papacy, to the year 1480, 900,000 persons were slain for their religion in Hungary, Bohemia, and other countries. The Duke of Alva declared that he destroyed 36,000 Protestants in the Netherlands in a few years. In the space of thirty years, 150,000 Christians perished for their religion by the hands of the Inquisition. The historical authorities for these statements may be seen in Joseph Mede's Works, p. 503, ed. 1677.

Such acts as these, continued during a period far longer in duration than that of the Persecutions of the Christians by Heathen Rome, sufficiently prove the fitness of the word θηρίον, or Wild Beast, to designate a Power, which displayed itself in such features to the world.

4. προσεκύνησαν τῷ δράκοντι] They paid worship to the Dragon who gave the authority to the Beast.

How, it may be asked, could any Christians be said to worship or pay homage to the Dragon, i. e. the Devil or Satan?

Observe the word προσκυνείν. This verb, rendered "to worship" in our Version, does not necessarily, nor usually, imply that highest religious worship, which is due to Almighty God, but homage and obeisance, expressed by kissing the hand to the object of reverence: whence the Latin ad-oro. See above, note on Heb. xi. 13.

In Gen. xxiii. 7, Abraham is said προσκυνείν τῷ λαῷ τῆς γηs, which merely means that he did homage to the people by respectful inclination of the body. Cp. there, v. 12, and in Gen. xxvii. 29, Isaac says to Jacob that his brethren προσκυνήσουστιν αὐτῷ, and in Dan. ii. 46, Nebuchadnezzar the King is said προσκυνεῖν to Daniel. In the New Testament the word often occurs in a similar sense. See Matt. ii. 2. 8; viii. 2; xviii. 26. Acts x. 25. Rev. xxii. 8.

Observe also the case after προσκυνεῖν, the dative, as A, B, C have it, not the accusative. The distinction may be perceived by comparing such texts as Matt. iv. 10, τον Θεόν σου προσκυνήσεις. Cp. Luke iv. 8. John iv. 23, with Matt. ii. 2. 11; iv. 9; viii. 2; ix. 18; xiv. 33; xxviii. 9. Cp. Welstein, i. p. 242.

The accusative signifies an act of worship paid directly to an object; thus  $\pi\rho\sigma\kappa\nu\nu\epsilon\bar{\nu}$   $\Theta\epsilon\delta\nu$  is to honour God as God.

This distinction is remarked by the Grammarians, e.g.

Herodian, Philetaer. p. 445. But the dative case does not necessarily imply this. The use of the dative may be explained by the words of St Paul in 1 Cor. x. 20, quoting Deut. xxxii. 17, "What the Heathen sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils, and not to God." The Heathen did not pay worship to devils, as devils. But God regards all divine worship paid to any one but Himself as paid to Satan, who is the author of idol-worship. And St. Paul speaks from the divine point of view there, as St. John does here. They who abet the Beast in acts of fraud, lying, perfidy, wrath, malice, and murder, which are from the Devil (John viii. 44. I John iii. 12), and in deeds of savage cruelty against God's servants, and in acts of religious worship to images, or to any creature, are doing the Devil's work, and ministering to his glory.

This is a view which men may not commonly take of cruelty, treachery, lying, and idolatry; but it is the view which God takes of those sins; and He presents it for our warning in Holy. Scripture, especially in the Apocalypse: as to idolatry, see Lev. xvii. 7. Deut. xxxii. 17. Ps. cvi. 37. 1 Cor. x. 20, 21. 2 Cor. vi.

15, 16, and compare the note above on ix. 20, 21.

In v. 5, There was given him (i. e. to the Beast in his present form, as now displayed) a mouth speaking great things, στόμα λαλοῦν μεγάλα. So Daniel speaks of the Little Horn which grew out of the Fourth Beast, τδ κέρας ἐκεῖνο είχε στόμα λαλοῦν μεγάλα.

St. John adds that he had authority to act forty-two months,

i. e. 3½ prophetic years.

So Daniel speaks of the Horn, vii. 25, δοθήσεται έν χειρί αὐτοῦ τως καιροῦ καὶ καιρῶν καὶ τως ἡμίσους καιροῦ, John to the Beast. On this stage of the Beast's existence cp. above, xi. 3; xii. 6. 14, and below on xvii. 10. (Dan. vii. 25.)

In the prophecy of Daniel, the Little Horn is represented as absorbing into itself all the power of the Beast; in fact the Beast passes as it were into the Horn, and is identified with it. The Horn is the Beast in a later stage of its existence. Here is a correspondence with St. John's Vision. There the Beast has seven Heads, and is itself from the Seven; and is an Eighth King. See on xvii. 10, 11.

The language of Daniel is similar to that of St. John; and both are evidently speaking of the same Power. And since the Power, of which Daniel is speaking, is confessedly one which grew up out of the Roman Empire, we here see a confirmation of the proofs already adduced, that the power described by St. John is one which rose up out of that Empire.

Indeed, the identity of the Beast is preserved in St. John; but the Beast appears here in a later stage, and in a modified form.

These descriptions also, of that Power in the prophecies of Daniel and in this of St. John, are very similar to the prophetical portrait drawn by St. Paul (in the Second Chapter of the Second Epistle to the Thessalonians) of the Power which was to succeed on the dissolution of the Roman Empire; and they mutually illustrate each other. Accordingly, they were generally believed by ancient Expositors to delineate the same object. See S. Iren. v. 26, where he connects the prophecy of Daniel (vii.) with this of the Apocalypse, and with that of St. Paul, 2 Thess. ii. 3, and so S. Hippolyius, De Christo, §§ 47, 48, p. 23, and S. Jerome on Dan. vii. S. Cyril, Cateches. xv. 11—14. Theodoret on Dan. vii.

The following synoptical view of these prophecies of Daniel, St. Paul, and St. John, may assist the reader in comparing them.

The evidence already adduced in the notes on St. Paul's prophecy, 2 Thess. ii. 3-11, shows that the Power, of which St. Paul speaks, was to arise after, and in the room of, the Heathen Roman Empire; and corroborates the arguments brought forward to prove that the Power here displayed in the Apocalypse is that Power which succeeded in the place of the Roman Imperial Power.

It is, therefore, the Roman Papal Power.

This proof is further strengthened by the fact that the Power of which St. Paul speaks, is described by him as sitting in the Temple of God (είς τον ναδν τοῦ Θεοῦ), that is, in the Christian Church. See on 2 Thess. ii. 4.

It hardly needs be shown, that the Papacy has a mouth which speaketh great things, putting forth high and haughty claims in bold language.

At the Coronation of every Pope, the Tiara, or Triple Crown, is placed on his head in the lofty balcony in the façade of St. Peter's Church at Rome, in the sight of thousands; and he is crowned, with these words, "Receive the Tiara adorned with three Crowns, and know thyself to be the Father of Princes and of Kings, the Ruler of the World (RECTOR ORBIS)."

This language has been used for many centuries, and was applied to the present Pope on the day of his Coronation, Sunday, June 21, 1846.

The CLAIMS of the PAPACY are thus stated by one of the Popes themselves, Gregory VII., and are set down in the Church History of Cardinal Baronius (Gregory VII. Ap. Card. Baronium, Annal. Eccles. A.D. 1076), and are entitled "Dictatus Papæ," Dictates of the Pope. Surely we may say that he who utters them has "a mouth that speaketh great things" (v. 5), and fulfils the Apocalyptic prophecy;

"That the Roman Pontiff alone is rightly called Universal.

"That all Princes should kiss his feet.

"That his Name is the only Name in the world ('unicum nomen in mundo ').

"That he may dethrone Emperors.

"That no Chapter or Book of Holy Scripture is canonical without his authority.

"That all greater causes of every Church ought to be referred

"That the Church of Rome never has erred, and never will err.

"That a Pope of Rome, if he is canonically ordained, is indubitably rendered holy by the merits of St. Peter.

"That no one is a Catholic, who does not agree with the Church of Rome.

"That the Pope is able to release subjects from their allegiance to evil men.

Such claims as these are usurpations of what appertains only to God, and are rightly called blasphemous.

In v. 6 the Beast is described as guilty of blasphemy.

It has been alleged by some, that a Power which confesses the true Faith of Christ in the three Creeds, as the Papacy does, cannot be charged with Blasphemy; and that the Blasphemy ascribed to the Beast indicates that the Beast is not a Christian Power.

But, observe the words of St. John. He says that "the Beast utters great and blasphemous words, and opens his mouth unto blasphemies toward (apos) God, to blaspheme His Name, and those who dwell in His tabernacle in heaven. This is not the same thing as is predicated below of some who are said to blaspheme God (βλασφημείν τον Θεόν, xvi. 11. 21), with direct and outrageous impiety.

Is then the Papacy chargeable with acts or words which are blasphemous towards God?

Certainly it is.

The word "blasphemy" in Holy Scripture not only means an open utterance of impious language against God, but it signifies an assumption of those attributes which belong to God alone.

When the Jews said to our Lord, "Thou blasphemest," they did not mean thereby, that He was uttering any thing openly against God. No; they used this term when He forgave sins, for, "Who can forgive sins, but God only?" (Mark ii. 7. Matt. ix. 2.) He claimed Divine Power. And, if He had claimed it wrongly, this claim was blasphemy. Hence also, they said on another occasion, For a good work we stone thee not, but for blasphemy, because that thou being man makest thyself God (John x. 33).

Again, when Christ said to the High Priest, "Hereafter ye shall see the Son of Man sitting on the Right Hand of Power, and coming on the clouds of heaven," the High Priest rent his clothes and said, He hath spoken blasphemy (Matt. xxvi. 64, 65). He hath claimed for Himself what belongs only to God. And if this claim was not a just one, it was blasphemy. Hence it is clear, that they are guilty of blasphemy, who assume to themselves powers and honours which belong to God.

Apply this test to the Papacy. It claims for itself Infalli-bility, Indefectibility, Eternity. These are usurpations of the incommunicable NAME. "When that which is temporal claims Eternity, this is a name of blasphemy," says S. Jerome, ad

Algasiam, Qu. xi.

The ancient Expositors thus understood this passage. In the Commentary of Bede (which is compiled from older authorities) it is said that "the Power foreshown in the Beast will impiously usurp the dignity of God's Name, and will presume to call the Church his own," " dignitatem sibi Nominis Dei impius usurpans Ecclesiam quoque suam nominare præsumet."

This has been fulfilled in the Papacy in a remarkable manner.

It calls the Church its own.

The Papacy is chargeable with "blasphemy towards God and His Name," in the Canonization and Adoration of Saints, and in the worship of Images, and especially in its devotion to the Virgin Mary, whom it calls the "Queen of heaven," and exalts to the Throne of God; thus setting up other objects of worship besides Him Who alone is to be adored (Matt. iv. 10. Luke iv. 8).

The Papacy is chargeable with blasphemy against His Tabernacle; that is, the Christian Church, and those who tabernacle in heaven. It makes itself guilty of this blasphemy, by usurping to itself all the titles of the Holy Catholic Apostolic Church of Christ, which is God's Tabernacle; and by anathematizing as apostates and reprobates, those who are loyal subjects of the kingdom of heaven, and sound members of the mystical Body of Christ Himself, and who dwell in His heavenly Tabernacle, and hear His Word, and receive His blessed Sacraments, and "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the Saints" (Jude 3), and who know, that they themselves would be liable to the anathema uttered by the Holy Spirit in Holy Scripture, (see on Gal. i. 8, 9,) if they were to receive any novel doctrines, such for instance as that of the Immaculate Conception, and others which are now propounded as necessary to salvation by the Roman Papacy. See above, on Jude 3.

This blasphemy against Christ's faithful servants is uttered by the Papacy on many occasions, especially in the anathema-tizing Bull commonly called "In Cœna Domini," and required to be read annually on Thursday before Easter; which may be seen

It is illogical and futile to plead, as some persons do, that the Papacy holds the Creeds in her hands, and therefore cannot be said to blaspheme. She has added her claims to the Creeds, and she imposes those claims on all men, as of equal authority with the Creeds. This is an act of blasphemy; and this sin is not lessened, but is rather aggravated, by her possession and profession of the Faith, as declared in the Creeds. The sin is committed against light and knowledge, and is a heavier sin on that account.

From a consideration of her claims as just stated, and from the clear testimony of History to the manner in which those claims have been enforced, it has been concluded by many of the most judicious, learned, pious, and charitable divines of the Church of England, that this Prophecy of the Apocalypse has been fulfilled by the Papacy. See Hooker, Serm. v. § 15. Bp. Andrewes contra Bellarmin. cap. xii. pp. 273—296. Dean Jackson on the Creed, book xii. Bp. Sanderson, iii. p. 146. Bp. Wilson, of Sodor and Man, vol. vi. pp. 704, 705; and notes on chapters xii. xiii. xvii.

v. 8. All who dwell upon the earth, that is, the great body of worldly-minded persons (see iii. 10), will worship him. words πάντες, all, and πάντοτε, always, are often used in Holy Scripture to express what is commonly prevalent and habitual. See Exod. ix. 9. Cp. v. 19. Exod. ix. 25. Cp. x. 5. Exod. xxxii. 3. Cp. 1 Cor. x. 7. Matt. iii. 5, πâσα Ἰουδαία, and πᾶσα περίχωρος, i. e. the greater part; cp. Mark i. 5, and Luke xviii. 1, πάντοτε, and xxiv. 53, διαπαντός, always, i. e. constantly: and Acts x. 2. See Glass. Phil. S. pp. 881, 882.

Care is taken in this prophecy to guard the reader against the notion, that these words are to be understood to signify an universal apostasy, and that the Visible Church failed under the Papacy. In the next chapter we have a view of those faithful people who were not seduced by its errors, xiv. 1-7. The ROLL which introduces these Visions is called a LITTLE ROLL, although it concerns many people. See above, x. 2. 9. And even just before the fall of Babylon it is intimated that there are in it some people of God, for even then it is said, "Come out of her, My People" (xviii. 4).

v. 8. The Lamb is said to have been slain from the foundation of the world; because in the Divine Mind He was foreseen as our Propitiation, and we were foreknown in Him (Eph. i. 4-11), and His Death was represented in Types, and foretold in Prophecies, even from the beginning of the world; namely, by the creation of Eve, the mother of all living, and the type of the Church, from the side of Adam, the type of Christ (see above on John xix. 34), and in the promise of the Woman's Seed, whose heel would be bruised by the Serpent, and who would bruise the Serpent's head (Gen. iii. 15. See Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. iv. p. 396), and because His death had a saving efficacy for all men, even from the beginning. See Bp. Andrewes, i. 164.
v. 10. If any one leadeth into captivity, he goeth into captivity.

This seems the true reading and meaning of the words as expressed by some editions of the Vulgate and Irenœus, "qui in captivitatem duxerit ipse capietur." The reading συνάγει introduced by Elz. after the first aix μαλωσίαν is a gloss. repetition of the words seems to be grounded on Jer. xv. 2.

The sense is, They whom the Beast gathers together into his society are like a troop of captives, led together by him into slavery. See this use of alχμαλωσία in Numb. xxi. 1. 2 Chron. xxviii. 5. Isa. xx. 4. Ezek. xi. 25. Hab. i. 9.

The abstract term captivity for captives is very expressive. He professes to collect men together into a Church; but they are like a band of captives, carried by him into bondage. His retribution will be, that he himself will be carried captive. He has slain many Martyrs by the sword. His recompense will be, that he himself will be slain with the sword. See 2 Thess. ii. 8. Rev. xix. 15.

Here is the patience and the faith of the Saints, a remarkable saying; showing that the Empire of the Beast would be of wide extent, and of long duration. Cp. v. 7.

Some objections have been alleged against the interpretation now propounded; and may be summarily noticed here;

It has been said by some, that St. John would not have prophesied concerning trials so far off from those of his own age, as the afflictions of the Church under the Papacy.

This objection is derogatory to the character of divine Prophecy, and is refuted by the language of the Apocalypse, and of the Book of Daniel, written six centuries before it, which reveal the Day of Judgment and the trials immediately preceding it, Rev. xi. 18; xx. 12, 13. Dan. vii. 21-27.

Objection 2-

It has been said by some, that the power here described is not a Christian power, but is an openly infidel one, rebelling in undisguised impiety against God.

This allegation has been already considered above on v. 5.

See also below on v. 11.

It has been said by some, that a body of persons such as are here described "can have no true sacraments," and that those Reformed Churches, which have received their own Holy Orders from Christ through the medium of Rome, and which acknowledge the Baptism and Holy Orders of Rome, would be condemned by this Prophecy, if the Papacy were such a body as is here de-

This objection also has been considered above, xiii. 1-3, and will be further noticed below in the interpretation of chap.

Objection 4-

It has been said by some, that many pious and holy men and women have lived under the Papacy, and have regarded the Church of Rome with reverence and affection, as the centre of religious unity; and that it cannot be imagined, that Almighty God would have allowed them to be so much deceived by it, as they must assuredly have been, if the Papacy is pourtrayed in this Prophecy.

This objection also has been examined, in part, above on

xiii. 1-4.

To those considerations may be added the following. Many good and holy men and women lived and died at Jerusalem in the age of our Lord and His Apostles; such as Symeon, Anna (cp. Luke ii. 25), Nicodemus, Joseph of Arimathæa, and others; and they regarded Jerusalem with reverence, as the centre of religious unity. Our Blessed Lord Himself communicated with the Scribes and Pharisees in the public worship of the Synagogue, and in the reading and hearing of the Old Testament, and the religious services of the Temple. Even after the Crucifixion of Christ by the Rulers of the Jews (Luke xxiv. 20. Acts v. 30; x. 39) the Apostles of Christ communicated with them in the public liturgy (Luke xxiv. 53. Acts iii. 1) of the Temple and of the Synagogues.

In like manner, holy and religious men under the Papacy communicated with it in those divine truths and spiritual graces which Almighty God bestowed in His Holy Word and Sacraments, dispensed by its ministry; but holy and religious men did not, knowingly, communicate with it in the acts of violence, treachery, and cruelty, which were too often perpetrated by many of its Rulers; nor did they communicate consciously in the corruptions of sound doctrine which were propagated by them.

On the contrary, many holy and pious men, who lived under the Papacy, censured those acts, and protested loudly against those corruptions; and, even if they were deceived by its claims, yet under the circumstances of the times in which they lived, ignorance or error were then comparatively venial.

But when those corruptions were more clearly manifested by the revival of Learning in the fifteenth century after Christ, and by the wider circulation of the Holy Scriptures, consequent on the invention of Printing; and when those corruptions were enforced by the Church of Rome on the consciences of all men at the Council of Trent, in the sixteenth century after Christ, then many wise and holy men, and societies of men, even whole Nations and Churches, emancipated themselves from the bondage of those corruptions, and they have been blessed by Almighty God with marks of His favour, and they have been made happy instruments in His hands for the advancement of His Kingdom, by the preaching of His Holy Word, and the dispensation of His Holy Sacraments, by an Apostolic Ministry throughout the world.

11-18. καὶ είδον άλλο θηρίον] And I saw another Beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a Lamb, and he was speaking as a Dragon.

And he exerciseth all the authority of the first Beast in his sight, and causeth the Earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first Beast, whose deadly wound was healed.

And he doeth great wonders, and that fire may come down from heaven on the Earth in the sight of men.

And he deceiveth them that dwell on the Earth by the wonders which he hath power to do in the sight of the Beast; saying to them that dwell on the Earth, that they should make an image to the Beast, who hath the wound of the sword, and lived.

And it was given to him to give breath unto the image of the Beast, that the image of the Beast should both speak, and should cause that as many as would not worship for do homage to, προσκυνήσωσι τη είκόνι, see v. 4] the image of the Beast, should be killed.

And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to give themselves a mark in their right hand, or in their forehead: and that no man may be able to buy or sell, save he that hath the mark, the name of the Beast, or the number of his name.

Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the Beast: for it is a number of a man: and his number is six hundred sixty-six.

This second Beast is described as having horns-visible emblems of power (see v. 6; xii. 13)—like a Lamb, i. e. like the horns of a Lamb. Cp. Homer, Iliad xvii. 51, κόμαι χαρίτεσσιν δμοιαι, and see 2 Pet. i. 1. Jude 7. Winer, § 66, p. 549.

St. John uses a particular word in the Apocalypse for Lamb, viz. Apulov (see above, on v. 6). He never uses aurds, which is found in his Gospel and in other parts of Scripture (John i. 29. 36. Cp. Acts viii. 32. 1 Pet. i. 19), where ἀρνίον never occurs. But 'Αρνίον occurs about thirty times in the Apocalypse, and it always signifies Christ. And this word 'Apvlov, LAMB, in the number of its syllables, accent, termination, and gender, stands in direct antithesis, or contrast, to the word 8 nplov, or BEAST.

The Lamb, which is Christ, is described above as having horns (see v. 6), and the Beast is here described as having horns, like those of the Lamb; that is, he claims to exercise the power of Christ.

The verbal precision, which is a remarkable characteristic of the Apocalypse (see above, on ii. 1), proves that the Beast here described as having the horns of a Lamb, that is, as exercising the power of Christ, is not a heathen or infidel Power, but is a Power which professes Christianity. The emblems of his dominion, and the most conspicuous features of his body, are like those of a Lamb, i.e. Christ.

And yet his utterance is described as like that of a Dragon. This word δράκων, dragon, or serpent, does not always imply open ferocity, but often means wiliness and craft. The word 'Apvlov, or Lamb, indicates a profession of Christian innocence; and the word δράκων, Dragon, or Adder, signifies that this profession is united with the subtlety of the Serpent who deceived Eve (2 Cor. xi. 3). Cp. Wetstein, ii. p. 794, and note above, p. 187, from S. Augustine. Primasius here observes, that "this Beast is said to speak as a dragon, because he deceives by hypocrisy or semblance of the truth:" and the old commentator in S. Augustine's works on this passage says, "this Beast displays himself with a semblance of Christianity as a Lamb, in order that he may insinuate secretly the poison of the Dragon. This," he adds, "is an heretical Church."

Hence this Beast is hereafter described as the false Prophet (xvi. 13; xix. 20; xx. 10), or false Teacher (see 2 Pet. ii. I. 1 John iv. 1. Cp. note, 1 Thess. v. 20. Rom. xii. 6]. Our Lord's warning applies here, "Beware of false Prophets (or Teachers), who come in sheep's clothing" (with the semblance of a Lamb), "but inwardly they are ravening wolves" (Matt. vii. 15). Accordingly, in v. 14, this Beast is said πλαναν, to deceive, a word descriptive of false Teachers (cp. 2 Pet. ii. 18; iii. 17. 1 John ii. 26; iii. 7; iv. 6. 2 John 7), and which recalls our Lord's warning concerning the latter days, " Many false Prophets shall arise, and shall deceive (πλανήσουσι) many (Matt. xxiv. 11); and many false Christs and false Prophets (words which might almost seem to mark the relation of the two Beasts in the present Vision) shall arise, and shall work great signs and wonders, so as to deceive (πλανᾶν), if it were possible, the very elect. Behold, I have told you before." Matt. xxiv. 24, 25.

We may therefore safely adopt the interpretation of the ancient Expositors, who recognized in this Second Beast a succession of Teachers of unsound doctrine, labouring with great subtlety and success for the aggrandizement of the former Beast. S. Irenæus (v. 28) calls the second Beast the armour-bearer  $(\delta\pi\epsilon\rho a\sigma\pi\iota\sigma\tau\dot{\eta}\nu)$  of the former Beast; and it will be seen in the sequel, that, after fighting side by side, they will come to the same end at the same time (xix. 20).

The ancient Expositors had not seen, in their days, the par-ticular form of religious seduction which is predicted by this Vision; and they therefore could not fully interpret this prophecy.

See above, Introduction, pp. 153-156.

But Time has unfolded it to later ages. The energy, learning, intelligence, subtlety, unity, and perseverance, with which that great Ecclesiastical Corporation, the Romish Hierarchy, extending itself into almost all the Countries of the world, has laboured for many centuries, and is still labouring, for the spiritual aggrandizement and exaltation of the Roman Papacy, and for the subjugation of all men to its sway, is here delineated by the Spirit of Prophecy.

This Power rises from the Earth; it professes to have heavenly aims and ends, but is too often actuated by desire of earthly power, and motives of worldly ambition.

By. Andrewes says, "This second Beast represents the Roman Hierarchy, which both by speaking and writing proclaims the Pope as Vice-God." (Bp. Andrewes, contra Bellarmin. p. 287, cd. 1610, where the prophecy is further explained.)

The primary purpose of that Hierarchy, as the prophecy has predicted, is to make the Earth and all that dwell therein do homage to the former Beast, whose deadly wound was healed, v. 12, and to make an image to the Beast who hath the wound of the sword, and lived.

Observe these latter words, studiously reiterated, in order to show that it is not for the Roman Pagan Empire that this second Beast labours, but for the Roman Power, killed as far as its Pagan Empire is concerned, and still "having the wound of the sword" in that respect, and yet alive again; that is, it labours for the Roman power, not as Pagan, for it is dead as to its Pagantsm, and yet still lives in the Papacy.

The decree of Pope Boniface VIII., that "it is necessary to eternal salvation for every human creature to submit to the Roman Pontiff" (Extrav. Com. lib. i. tit. viii. cap. 1), and the statement of Cardinal Bellarmine (de Pontifice, cap. i. 10), that the "doctrine of the Pope's Supremacy is the essence and sum of Christianity," contain the very pith and marrow of the system propounded by the Romish Hierarchy.

Perhaps the best comment on this verse (v. 12) is to be found in the Oaths which are taken by all Priests and Bishops of the Roman Church throughout the world; in which they bind themselves to be "faithful and obedient to their Lord, the Pope," and "to uphold and maintain the Popedom of Rome, the royalties of St. Peter, and to defend them against all men;" and in which they swear that they "will cause to be preserved, defended, augmented, and promoted, the rights, honours, privileges, and authority of the Church of Rome, and of the Pope, and of his successors;" and "that they will keep, and cause to be kept by others, its decrees, ordinances, sentences, depositions, reservations, provisions, and commandments." The original of this Oath may be seen in the Pontificale Romanum, p. 62, published at Rome, A.D. 1818.

Such are the obligations of Roman Bishops; and all Ecclesiastics, regular and secular, of the Church of Rome throughout the world, take an Oath, in which they declare that they "acknowledge the Church of Rome to be the mistress of all Churches," and swear to "pay true obedience to the Roman Pontiff, the successor of Peter, the Vicar of Jesus Christ, and to maintain all things decreed in the General Councils, especially in the Council of Trent;" and they swear "that they reject and anathematize all things contrary thereto, and that they will hold firm unto death this true faith, out of which there is no salvation, and will take care that it be held and taught by all under their authority." This Oath may be found in editions of the Decrees of the Council of Trent, and in the Roman Canon Law, p. 111, ed. 1839.

vv. 13, 14. This second Beast is said to work signs or wonders, and to deceive by means of those wonders.

It is affirmed by Papal Divines that the presence of miracles is an "essential note of the Church" (Bellarmine, de Ecclesiâ, lib. ii.), where "gloria miraculorum" is reckoned as the eleventh note of the Church. Some of the wonders, which they affirm to have been worked for the exaltation of their own faith, are too well attested to be denied. The Holy Scripture expressly declares that miracles will be wrought for the trial of the faithful by teachers of strange doctrines, for the maintenance of those doctrines (cp. Deut, xiii. 1-5), especially in the latter days (Matt. xxiv. 24. 2 Thess. ii. 9); whereas, on the other hand, there is no reason now to look for further evidence (Luke xvi. 29), except in the fulfilment of prophecy (cp. 2 Pet. i. 19), in behalf of the Truth; and the appeal made by the Papal Hierarchy to the "glory of miracles," manifested among themselves, seems to be a fulfilment of prophecy, warning the world against its seductions.

This second Beast is also said (v. 13) to work great signs, so that he may make fire to come down from heaven on to the earth.

A, C have "να καὶ πῦρ, and so Lach., Tisch. The Apostle and Evangelist St. John himself had once asked our Lord to allow him to make fire come down from heaven on those who would not receive them; our Lord replied, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of" (Luke ix. 35-55).

That incident affords the best exposition of this verse. It is not affirmed that the Beast actually makes fire to come down;

but that he works that it may come down.

This is fulfilled in the operations of the Roman Hierarchy when they imprecate God's wrath, and call down the consuming fires of His vengeance, on those who will not receive their doctrines, and who in any way contravene their practices.

There is a solemn form of imprecation which is set forth to be pronounced annually by all Romish Primates, Patriarchs, Archbishops, and Bishops on the day on which our Blessed Saviour instituted the Feast of love. This form of imprecation is called "In Coena Domini;" "In the Lord's Supper."

This form of Imprecation has been authorized and enjoined by twenty different Popes, and anathematizes as Heretics all Protestants, and declares them to be incapable of enjoying civil rights, and liable to temporal penalties, and even to death. Thus it fulfils the divine prediction in v. 13. It may be seen in the Roman Bullarium, iv. p. 118, ed. 1722.

The awful form of cursing by "book, bell, and candle," used by the Roman Hierarchy in our own land in former times, by which men were "given over utterly to the power of the fiend, and their souls to be quenched in the pains of hell-fire," may be seen in Foxe's Acts and Monuments, p. 947, and in Wordsworth's Eccles. Biog. i. p. 220, ed. 1839.

In that form the Papal Hierarchy claimed the power to execute this curse; the tenor of it was, "we give them over utterly to the power of the fiend; and let us quench their soules as they bee dead this night in the paines of hell-fire, as this candle is now quenched and put out."

Thus they assumed the power ascribed here to the second

This prophecy has also been fulfilled in a signal manner by that portion of the Roman Hierarchy which works, and has worked, for many years by the instrumentality of the Inquisition, which calls itself the "Holy Office," and enforces the doctrines of the Papacy, and especially the dogma of the Papal Supremacy, by fire, sword, and rack. The badge of the Holy Office is a drawn sword with an olive-branch: thus while it does the work of the Beast, it wears the semblance of the Lamb; above, v. 11. See Limborch, Hist. Inquisitionis, pp. 370-373.

In v. 14 the Second Beast is said to deceive by means of the signs and wonders which it was given him to work. Observe the VOL. II .- PART IV.

word given: the agency of evil is limited by God. He allowed the Magicians of Egypt to work miracles, that His own power in overcoming them by His servant Moses might be more glorious. Exod. vii. 11. 22; viii. 7. 18, 19. Christ permitted devils to go into the swine, and to carry them into the deep, that thus He might overcome the devil, and that His love and power in delivering us from him might be more glorified. Matt. viii. 31, 32.

The second Beast is said to command the "dwellers on the earth," that is, men who are not loyal subjects of the kingdom of heaven, to make an image to the Beast who has the wound of the sword, and lived. It is remarkable that the best MSS., A, B, C, and others, have not b, in the neuter, as Eiz., but have bs here, in the masculine gender, and so Lach., Tisch.—showing the personality of the former beast.

It is added, that it is given to the second Beast to give breath to that image, in order that it should speak, and cause that, whoever would not pay homage to the image of the Beast, should be

The reading  $\tau \hat{\eta} \in i\kappa \delta \nu_i$  (the dative case, cp. ch. xvi. 2; xix. 20; xx. 4) is sanctioned by B, and more than thirty MSS., and some Fathers; and so Lach. and Tisch. See above on v. 4. The accusative is also used at a later stage of the prophecy, after the fall of Babylon, xiv. 9.

What is this Image of the Beast?

It is described not only as an Image made to the Beast, but also as an Image of the Beast. See here v. 15, and xiv. 9. 11;

xv. 2; xvi. 2; xix. 20; xx. 4.

The clue to this prophecy also is supplied by the Book of DANIEL. There Nebuchadnezzar, the king of the literal Babylon, makes an image which is to be worshipped by all on pain of death. This was an act of self-deification, see above on Daniel iii. 1. This has been fulfilled also in the mystical Babylon, i. c. Payal Rome; see the notes there.

In the Apocalypse the word εἰκων, image, signifies also an εἴδωλον, idolum, in the sense of an object to be adored, as images of heathen deities were; cp. the use of the word εἰκων in Rom.

The first Beast itself is the Papacy; and the εἰκὼν or Image of it is the personification of the Papacy, in the visible form of the Pontiff for the time being. Every one who is created Pope—whatever may be his character for learning, piety, ability, or morals, even though he be a Hildebrand or a Borgia—yet immediately on his creation is made into an Image or Idol by the Second Beast or Roman Hierarchy; and is displayed to the homage of the world; and this process of making an Image or Idol of every Pope for the time being, has now been continued for many centuries.

On the first occasion when a new Pope appears in public after his election to the Pontificate, he is elevated into an object of adoration in the temple of God.

The new Pope, wearing his mitre, is lifted up by Cardinals, and is placed by them on the High Altar of the principal Church at Rome-St. Peter's. He is there seated upon the Altar of God: and while he there sits, the Roman Hierarchy bow down before him and kiss those feet which tread on the Altar of God.

This Ceremony of Adoration is prescribed by the official Book of Roman Ceremonies, entitled "Cæremoniale Romanum;" it may be seen described in lib. iii. sect. i. of the edition of 1572; and it has been performed on the election of every Pope for many centuries in succession. It was performed to the present Pope on Wednesday, 17th June, 1846.

This Ceremony is called by Roman writers the "Adoratio Pontificis," and it is represented in the Roman coinage with the following remarkable inscription, "QUEM CREANT, ADDRANT," "Whom they create, they adore," Whom the Roman Hierarchy make by their own votes to be Pope—him they adore when made: they worship the work of their own hand. They make an image, and then worship it.

The worship of the εἰκὼν or Image is here described in the Apocalypse by the word προσκυνείν (see also xiv. 9; xvi. 2; xix. 20; xx. 4), and this word is exactly represented by the Latin word adorare; the word used here for προσκυνείν in the Roman Vulgate Version of the Apocalypse; this word adorare is chosen by the Roman Hierarchy to describe the homage which they themselves pay to the person of every Pope in succession on his election to the Popedom, as may be seen in the following Roman books, Lettenburgh's Notitia Curiæ Romanæ, p. 125, ed. 1683, and the works of other Romish writers (Mazaroni and Stevanus) de Adoratione Pontificis, and Histoire du Clergé, dedicated to Pope Clement XI., Amst. 1716, vol. i. p. 17. Tosi, Corte di Roma, a work approved by the Master of the Sacred Palace in 1764, p. 75. An engraving representing the "Adoratio" may be seen in Picart, Cérémonies, vol. i. p. 296.

A specimen of the feelings animating the Papal Hierarchy, and of the language uttered by them, when bowing before the Papal Image, may be seen in the words addressed by Cardinal Colonna in the name of the Clergy to Pope Innocent X. at his Coronation in St. Peter's, in A.D. 1644. "Most Holy and Blessed Father, Head of the Church, Ruler of the World, to whom the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven are given, whom the Angels in heaven revere, and whom the gates of Hell fear, and whom the whole World adores ("quem totus mundus adorat"), we venerate and adore Thee, and commit ourselves and all that is ours to thy paternal and more than divine disposal." The original words may be seen in Banck's Roma Triumphans, p. 384, ed. Francker, 1656.

The Coronation of the Pope with the Tiara or triple Crown succeeds his Enthronization. The latter is performed, as was said above, inside the Church of St. Peter, where he is enthroned on the High Altar. The Coronation takes place outside the Church, on a lofty balcony, above the Piazza of St. Peter's, where the ceremony is witnessed by many thousand spectators. performed in these terms; " Receive the tiara, adorned with three crowns, and know thyself to be the Father of Princes and Kings, the RULER OF THE WORLD" (Rectorem Orbis). These words were addressed to the present Pope, Pius IX., June 21, 1846.

In v. 15 the Second Beast is said to give breath to this Image, that the Image should speak.

This prophecy describes the process by which the Papal Image gives utterance to what is breathed into it by the Papal

It is a remarkable fact, that the Papal Hierarchy first consult together, and frame decrees, or prepare rescripts either in Councils summoned by the Pope, or by some other means prescribed by him; and when this preliminary process has been gone through, then they submit their decrees to the Pope, and desire him to ratify their verdicts by his authority.

Thus they give breath to the Image, which they themselves have made, and then the Image speaks; and what it utters becomes an Article of Faith, and is imposed on all men as necessary to

The Twelve new articles of the Trent Creed were framed and promulgated in this manner. The Trent Council was convened by the Pope. The Council prepared the decrees; they brought them to the Pope, Pius IV. Thus they breathed breath into the Papal Image, and the Papal Image spake what they had breathed into it. And those Twelve new Articles (such as the Council of Seven to Trench treathed into doctrine of Seven Sacraments, Transubstantiation, munion, Purgatory, Propitiatory sacrifice of the Mass, Worship of Images, &c.) have now become, as they affirm, an essential part of the Christian Faith, and they all make a solemn adjuration that no one can be saved unless he profess them,—"extra hanc fidem nemo salvus esse potest." See the Tridentine Creed put forth by Pope Pius the IVth, A.D. 1564, annexed to the Decrees of the Trent Council; and the same Pope's Bull of Confirmation of the said Decrees, A.D. 1563.

A striking specimen of the manner in which this prophecy is fulfilled in the Papacy, has been recently displayed to the world.

On the 8th December, 1854, the Pope promulgated in St. Peter's Church at Rome the new Doctrine of the Immaculate Conception, and affirmed that it was thenceforth necessary to salvation to believe that the Blessed Virgin was exempt from original sin, and that all who do not believe this dogma make shipwreck of the faith, and have fallen from the unity of the Church ("naufragium fidei fecisse, et ab unitate Ecclesiæ defecisse").

The mode in which this extraordinary promulgation was effected is specially worthy of notice.

Some years before that promulgation, namely, on the 2nd of February, 1849, the Pope had addressed letters to all the Bishops of his Communion, and in those letters he had stated, that some persons were surprised "that the honour (of being born without sin) was not yet attributed to the most holy Virgin by the Church and Apostolic See;" and he then desired the Bishops to communicate to him "what their opinion was concerning the defi-nition of the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin Mary,"—"quid ipsi de hâc definitione sentirent." The Bishops said in reply, that they all desired such a definition from him.

The Pope then consulted the consistory of the Cardinals; and they also made the same request.

Nearly six years passed, but at length on the 8th of December, 1854, the Representative of the Roman Hierarchy approached the foot of the Throne on which the Pontiff sat in the Church of St. Peter at Rome, and said, "In the name of the Sacred College of Cardinals, and of the Bishops of the Catholic Church, and of all the faithful, we humbly and earnestly demand, O most holy Father, that you would raise your Apostolic voice, and pronounce the dogmatic decree of the Immaculate Conception of Mary, which will be a subject of joy to heaven, and of exultation to earth." To quote the words of the Roman record of that day, "The Pontiff replied, that he received willingly the prayer of the Sacred College, and of the Episcopate, and of the faithful; and after the hymn 'Veni Creator,' he read with a loud voice the decree, in which he solemnly defined, that the Blessed Virgin, from the first instant of her being conceived, was preserved free from all stain of original sin."

After the reading of this Decree, the same Representative of the Hierarchy returned to the foot of the Throne of the Pontiff, and "returned thanks to him for having defined this dogma, and prayed him to publish the Papal Bull concerning it." The Pontiff gave his consent, and the Bull was published, bearing date "the sixth of the Ides of December, 1854."

"The Hierarchy returning from Rome to their Dioceses, and announcing to their people what they have heard from the Oracle of the Vatican, will tell them what honours are rendered to the Blessed Virgin in the Capital of the Catholic World; and the History of the Church will note the 8th of December, 1854, among its most memorable days, when the august Mother of the Saviour of the world received a new triumph from the chair of truth."

Such is the language of the documents published at Rome. The originals may be seen in No. xliii. of the Editor's Occasional Sermons, pp. 29-47, and in No. xii. p. 93.

And now, when it is objected, that this dogma of the Imma-culate Conception is a novel doctrine, a doctrine, as the Pope confessed, not before defined by the Church of Rome herself, and first promulgated by her in the middle of the nineteenth century, and that it is contrary to the Holy Scriptures, the reply given is, "Roma locuta est," Rome has spoken, "The Oracle of the Vatican has given its response;" let the Earth keep silence before it.

So indeed it is. Breath has been given by the Hierarchy to the Image, which their own hands had made, and had set up to be adored. It has spoken in that same Temple of God in which they had set it up to be adored, and in which they fell down before it, when it sat on the Altar of God.

And now, on July 18, 1870, the Pope has been there declared to be Infallible, and to be revered as having the attribute of God; and all who contravene that dogma have been anathematized by him, and consigned to perdition.

In v. 15 the second Beast is said to work that the image may cause all who do not worship it to be killed.

The Popes, inspired by the Hierarchy, have devised and enforced an Oath, by which all Roman Bishops bind themselves "to persecute and to impugn, as far as they are able, all heretics and schismatics, and rebels against their Lord, the Pope, and his successors," that is, all who do not submit to his claims to Supremacy and Infallibility. See the Oath in the Pontificale Romanum, p. 63, ed. Rome, 1818.

In v. 16 the second Beast is said to cause all men to give to themselves a mark on their right hand, or on their forehead, and that no one may be able to buy or sell except he that hath the mark, the name of the Beast, or the number of his name.

Observe the words "give to themselves;" the best MSS. have δῶσιν (not δώση as in Elz.), and so in Catena, p. 383; a remarkable sentence, intimating compulsion under the semblance of choice; that is, the mark which the hierarchy enforces is represented as imprinted voluntarily by those persons on whom they enforce it. It is like an oath imposed, and yet seemingly taken with good will.

v. 18. Here is wisdom. Let him who hath understanding count the number of the Beast; for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six Hundred Sixty-Six.

There are three distinct things to be considered here;

 The Mark of the Beast.
 The Number of the Beast. (3) The Name of the Beast.

 On the Mark of the Beast.
 The word rendered mark is χάραγμα, from χαράσσω, to engrave. Cp. Acts xvii. 29, and here and in the other passages of the Apocalypse (xiv. 9. 11; xvi. 2; xix. 20; xx. 4) it denotes such a kind of engraving as indicates that the person on whom the engraving is made, is the property of, and is subject to, the person whose χάραγμα, mark, cypher, or stamp, is engraved upon

In ancient times, marks were impressed on men for certain special purposes; Slaves were branded with the names of their Masters; Soldiers punctured their flesh with the mark of the General under whom they served; votaries of heathen deities stamped themselves with the names and marks of those deities. Cp. 3 Macc. ii. 29, and see notes above, on Gal. vi. 17, where St. Paul says, "I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus; S. Ambrose (ap. Wetst.), "slaves are inscribed with the mark of their lord; and soldiers are inscribed with the mark of their leader."

The χάραγμα therefore, or mark, of the Beast, indicates that they who wear it are servants, soldiers, and votaries of him whose mark they wear.

The mark is here described as imprinted on the right hand, or on the forehead. The right hand is the organ of working, the forehead is that of profession. The servants of God are represented in this book as having His seal and His name on their foreheads (see vii. 3; ix. 4; xiv. 1-9; xxii. 4; cp. Ezek. ix. 4), because they confess Him before men. Those who receive the mark of the Beast in their foreheads, profess his faith; they who receive it also on their hands, execute in deed what they profess in word,-" accipiunt inscriptionem in fronte propter professionem (says the old commentary in Augustine's works here), in manu propter operationem;" and Bp. Andrewes here, p. 291, says, "the forehead shows faith, the hand works," the one openly confesses, the other boldly executes.

What then is that χάραγμα, or mark, which, at the instance of the Hierarchy, men are said to imprint on themselves

It is such a Confession of faith and obedience as that already noticed of Pope Pius IV., which contains a solemn vow of subjection to the Papacy, and to the Decrees of the Council of Trent; and which is affirmed by the Papacy and its Hierarchy to be necessary to be received by all who desire to be saved,—"extra hanc fidem nemo salvus esse potest." "That profession of faith," says Bishop Andrewes here, "is implicitly required of all men by the Papacy; all who are baptized are reckoned, by the very fact of their baptism, to be subjects of the Pope, who claims to be the spiritual head of the Church."

There is a difference, which is marked in the prophecy, where it is said that they receive the mark on their right hands, or on their foreheads. The Papal Hierarchy have the mark on their foreheads and on their hands, because they make a profession by words, and exhibit it in works; others, who do not make such a direct profession by words, yet have it on their hands, because they are virtually bound to execute it by deeds.

In v. 17 it is said that no one may buy or sell,-that is, carry on any commerce,-except he has this mark.

This has been and is fulfilled in the Papacy, in two ways: First, by actual restraints of temporal traffic; such restrictions have been imposed on persons whom it calls heretics, and disqualifies, as such, for commerce and secular emoluments. See Limborch, Hist. Inquis. pp. 38. 48, 49. 71. Vitringa, p. 624.

Secondly, by inhibiting them from all spiritual commerce and religious communion.

This doubtless is the fuller sense of the prophecy, as has been noticed by ancient Expositors. Thus Haymo says, "the mark of the Beast is his Creed; and no one is permitted by him to preach, unless he has his mark, namely, his faith;" and Aquinas says, vol. xxiv. p. 311, 3, qu. 63. 3. 3, that the mark of the Beast is a "professio illiciti cultûs."

The word Symbolum, in Ecclesiastical language, signifies a

Creed, which is the bond and token of spiritual fellowship of all who sail together in the sacred vessel of the Church; and this word Symbolum, in the language of commerce, signifies a token of communion; and thus the word symbol affords an illustration of the metaphor here, and in other places of the Apocalypse, As is well said by Primasius and Bede, "By this mention of buying and selling, we are taught that as the Church of Christ delivers the Creed (Symbolum) to her people for their spiritual good, so on the other hand these persons are prohibited from buying and selling, unless they have the mark of the Beast; as merchants who sail in the same ship are known by the same

This sense of the Prophecy is exemplified in the Papacy.

The Roman Hierarchy affirms that all who do not bear the Pope's mark-that is, who do not hold the Trent Creed, and submit to him as Supreme Head of the Church on Earth, are cut off from communion with the Body of Christ.

They affirm that no one is a lawful Priest or Bishop, or can communicate any spiritual grace by the ministry of Christ's word and sacraments, unless he bear the Pope's mark; that is, unless he receive a commission to do so from him, and take an oath of

They even affirm, that if a Roman Bishop become an Archbishop, he cannot exercise even Episcopal authority, unless he sue for, and obtain another mark of subjection from the Pope, namely, the Pallium from Rome. See the Pontificale Romanum, ed. 1818, p. 87.

Thus all powers of spiritual commerce are made to depend on the reception of a mark from the Pope.

(2) On the NUMBER of the Beast.
17, 18.] What now is the meaning of the following words? Except he who has the name of the Beast, or the number of his name. Here is wisdom. He that hath understanding, let him count the number of the Beast; for it is the number of a man, and his number is 666.

Let him who has understanding count the number, for it is the number of a man; that is, it can be counted, because it is a human number, and not a divine number, which no one is able to count (see above, vii. 9, and below, xx. 8); it is the number of a man, although he who wears it professes himself to be little less than a god (see v. 4); and perhaps in a special sense it is said that it is the number of a man, because the power here described is that of ἀνθρωπος ἀμαρτίας, pourtrayed by St. Paul, 2 Thess. ii. 3, "the man of sin." As the ancient Expositor in the works of Aquinas says, "it is the number of a man, not of a God, although worshipped—as the Man of Sin." And so Bede, who says here, "Est homo peccati, filius perditionis," 2 Thess. ii. 3.

Let us first consider the number of the name.

The number of the name is stated by St. John himself, and is expressly declared to be 666.

This number is remarkable in reference to the name of Christ the Lamb—with whom the Beast is placed in contrast.

The name of the Beast makes three sixes: 666. The name of Jesus ('Iησοῦs) makes (according to the numerical value of its Greek letters) three eights, viz. 888. And the number eight is the symbol and number of resurrection and triumph. See above on Luke xxiv. 1. Thus it stands in striking contrast to the number here mentioned, 666.

The symbol of Christ is XP, the two first letters of Χριστὸs, Christ (see on i. 8), and was adopted by the Emperor Constantine and the Roman Christians as the badge and ensign of the Empire, on its military standards and coins. See Euseb. vit. Const. ii. 28. 30. 3. Sozomen. Hist. Eccl. i. 3. Rufin. 1. 9. Lactant. de mart. Persecut. c. 44, and the Coins of Constantine, in Gravii Thes. Rom. vol. x. p. 1529, and Suicer, Lex. art. Λάβαρον, and Ducange, vol. ii. p. 263.

This symbol of Christ (XP), arranged thus, is equivalent to seven hundreds.

Seven, as already observed (see note at end of chapter xi.), is the numerical symbol of rest after toil and conflict, and is characteristic of Him in Whom alone the soul can find rest (see Matt. xi. 28, 29).

The number of the Beast is composed of three sixes, 666. The number six, especially in the Apocalypse, is the symbol of conflict and distress; the sixth day of the week, the day of Christ's Crucifixion, the sixth seal, the sixth trumpet, the sixth H H 2

ach. 5. 5. & 7. 4. ΧΙΥ. 1 3 Καὶ είδον, καὶ ἰδοὺ τὸ ᾿Αρνίον έστὸς ἐπὶ τὸ ὅρος Σιων, καὶ μετ΄

vial, are all significant of critical seasons of rebuke, and blasphemy, and woe (see above at the end of chap. xi.).

Besides, these three sixes represent a threefold failure and declension from that sabbatical rest and perfection, which is represented by the number seven; which, as before observed, is a symbol of Christ and the true Church.

The "bearing of a number" is a mode of speech derived from ancient usage. The deities of heathens had mystical numbers consecrated to them; and their worshippers bare those sacred Thus the mystical number of the Sun was 608, which, expressed in Greek letters, is XH, and this was borne by his votaries. See Martian. Capellus, de Nuptiis Philologiæ, i. 2. Selden's Works, iii. pt. 2, col. 1402; and Grotius here.

S. Irenaus, remarking on the peculiar arithmetical value of the name Jesus ('Ιησούς), as containing three eights, 888 (Iren. i. 15. 2, and ii. 24, 1, ed. Stieren, or pp. 72. 163, ed. Grabe), observes also that the number 666, containing three sixes, represents a triple apostasy, or falling away (Iren. v. 27, 28, ed. Stieren, or pp. 446, 447, ed. Grabe); and Irenaus identifies the Apocalyptic power here described with that of the apostasia, or falling away, pourtrayed by St. Paul, who had used the same word apostasia to describe it (Iren. ii. 25, Stieren; or p. 443, Grabe). See above on 2 Thess. ii. 3.

S. Irenœus observes that Holy Scripture mentions that the Flood came in the six hundredth year of Noah (Gen. vii. 11), and that the golden image of the King of Babylon, which tried the faith of the Three Children, was sixty cubits in height and six in breadth. (Dan. iii. 1.)

It has been observed by some ancient Expositors, that Holy Scripture has recorded that the number of Talents of gold paid as yearly tribute to King Solomon amounted to 666 (1 Kings x. 14). Solomon, though in some respects a type of Christ, yet is also represented in Holy Scripture as multiplying horses (1 Kings x. 29), contrary to God's command (Deut. viii. 16), and departing from David's example (Ps. xx. 7), and trusting in worldly and temporal power rather than in God; and as multiplying wives against God's command (Deut. viii. 16), and as lapsing into idolatey (1 Kings xi. 1-4).

The numerical symbol of the Beast, 666, indicates that he aims at and aspires to the attributes of Christ, and puts forth a semblance of Christian Truth, but falls away from it in a triple decline and degeneracy. Such a religious communion as once held the truth as it is in Christ, in its perfection and integrity, as the Roman Church did (see Rom. i. 8), and now displays a triple declension in faith, practice, and worship, seems to be aptly symbolized by such an arithmetical combination as 666.

Besides, this number has found a literal fulfilment in the Papacy.

We derive our knowledge of the Imperial χάραγμα from coins and other public documents. Let us resort to similar evidence of the Papal Mark.

The Labarum of Imperial Christian Rome is not borne by Papal Rome, but has been succeeded by another symbol, represented below; concerning which the Editor of Numismata Pontificum, p. 191, ed. Paris, 1679, says, "Tritus est hic et valdè obvius nummus;" and p. 167, "ita vulgaris est, ut in ipso diutius immorari sit superfluum;" and p. 154, "vulgare est hoc numisma, quod toties repeti solet quoties nova cuditur moneta.

The KEYS arranged as there seen, constitute the badge of the Papacy.

The Keys declare its claim to universal supremacy.

The words TIBI DABO CLAVES REGNI COELORVM (Matt. xvi. 19), inscribed inside the cupola of St. Peter's, are a demonstration of the grounds on which the claims of the Papacy are made to rest, and an assertion of the authority which those words are supposed by it to have conveyed.

The soldiers of Imperial Rome fought under the standard of the Cross; so those of Papal Rome fight under the standard of the Keys.

The Roman Emperor might be said to conquer by the one, EN TOTTO: NIKAN; so they who successfully resist the power of Papal Rome may be said to be conquerors over the other, NIKAN EK τοῦ χαράγματος (Rev. xv. 2).

The χάραγμα in the Apocalypse forms a Number, and is to be counted (v. 17).

Does the badge of the Keys, as figured on the coins of the Papacy, correspond, when counted, to the χάραγμα described by St. John?

A copy of it, taken from Papal coins, has been inserted above. When the Monogram there represented is resolved into its elements, the following letters appear:-

and (1) XEST XE7

Let these elements be counted
$$\chi = 600$$
 $\xi = 60$

5 = 6;and  $\sigma\tau$  is equivalent to  $\tau$ , and we have  $\chi\xi\tau=666$ . Or if  $\tau$  be regarded as the digamma, there is the same result.

In Isaac Casaubon's Diary, ii. p. 800, A.D. 1610, is the following entry, " Papa χξς."

(3) On the NAME of the Beast.

The name in question must satisfy the following conditions: (1) The letters must, when calculated according to their numerical value, amount to 666.

(2) It must be descriptive of the character of the Beast. (3) His adherents, who are said to bear his name, must be known to own themselves his subjects, and bound by his laws in respect to that particular attribute which the name declares, just as the Saints are said to bear the name of Christ and His Father (ii. 3. 13; iii. 12; xiv. 1; xxii. 4), because they own them as the true objects of worship, and themselves their servants.

S. Irenæus (in v. 30. 2, Stieren; p. 449, Grabe), and after him his scholar, S. Hippolytus (de Christo, p. 26, ed. Lagarde), mention AATEINOZ, Latinos, as probably the name in question, for in the Greek notation-

> a === € = z = 10  $\nu =$ 50 o = 70 $\sigma = 200$

total, 666. And, adds Irenœus, this name makes up the requisite number, 666, and is very probable, because the last kingdom (i. e. the fourth of Daniel) "has this name, for they who now reign are called Latins."

This remark is important, as showing the opinion existing even in the age of Irenœus, the second century, that the Beast would be connected with the Latin race. And S. Hippolytus says, that the Latins were then the rulers of the world, and their name being summed up together into the name of one man, makes ΛΑΤΕΙΝΟΣ.

Both these writers mention some other names also as probable, but this name AATEINO∑ (as Bp. Andrewes observes, p. 293) is the most probable among them.

It is no objection to this opinion that the word is sometimes written AATINOS. The form at is authorized by usage. See Düsterdieck, p. 456, and this is received by Eichhorn, Ewald, De Wette, and many others.

The Papal Power has succeeded to the Seat of the Latin or Western Empire; and in religious matters it is essentially Latin. It has preferred the Latin Version of the Scriptures even to the Hebrew and Greek originals, and affirms that its own Latin Translation is to be the authentic standard of Holy Writ.

It says in the fourth Session of the Council of Trent, that "if any one does not receive as sacred and canonical all the books which it recites, with all their parts" (some of which are apocryphal), "as they are accustomed to be read in the Catholic Church, and as they are contained in the Old Latin Vulgate, he is to be anathema." And, it adds, "that the old Latin Vulgate edition is to be held to be authentic in all sermons and expositions."

In defiance of God's authority pronouncing a blessing on all who search the Scriptures (Acts xvii. 11. Luke xvi. 3t. 2 Tim. iii. 15. Rev. i. 3), the Papacy has been very loth to communicate the blessing of vernacular versions of the Scriptures to the people, and has kept them almost locked up in her own Latin Version;

αὐτοῦ έκατὸν τεσσαρακοντατέσσαρες χιλιάδες, ἔχουσαι τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ, καὶ τὸ ονομα τοῦ Πατρὸς αὐτοῦ γεγραμμένον ἐπὶ τῶν μετώπων αὐτῶν. <sup>2 b</sup> καὶ ἤκουσα b ch. 1. 15. 8. 8. 8. 19. 6. φωνην έκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ώς φωνην ύδάτων πολλών, καὶ ώς φωνην βροντής μεγάλης καὶ ή φωνη ην ήκουσα ώς κιθαρωδών κιθαριζόντων έν ταῖς κιθάραις αὐτών <sup>3 ·</sup> καὶ ἄδουσιν ὡς ϣδὴν καινὴν ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου, καὶ ἐνώπιον τῶν τεσσάρων · c.h. 5. 9. ζώων καὶ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων καὶ οὐδεὶς ἠδύνατο μαθεῖν τὴν ῷδὴν, εἰ μὴ αἱ έκατὸν τεσσαρακοντατέσσαρες χιλιάδες οἱ ἠγορασμένοι ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς. 4 d Οὖτοί d 1 Cor. 6. 20. είσιν οἱ μετὰ γυναικῶν οὐκ ἐμολύνθησαν, παρθένοι γάρ εἰσιν· οὖτοί εἰσιν οἱ James 1.18. ἀκολουθοῦντες τῷ ᾿Αρνίῳ ὅπου ἂν ὑπάγη οὖτοι ἠγοράσθησαν ἀπὸ τῶν ἀν-

and although the Latin Vulgate itself was a Version made originally for the edification of the people of Italy, it does not allow them the free use of the Scriptures in their own tongue. In spite also of the divine command, to "pray with the understanding" (see on 1 Cor. xiv. 14—20), the Papacy has been very reluctant to grant the use of public prayer in the native language of the nations over whom she exercises her sway, and has restrained the accents of public supplication to God within the trammels of her Latin Missal and Breviary. See Dr. Bentley's language on this subject in his Sermon on 2 Cor. ii. 17, vol. iii. pp. 247, 248, ed.

It may indeed be alleged against this exposition, that the Pope does not bear the name Latinus or Latin.

But this is no valid objection. It suffices, if he is in fact what that name declares.

Indeed we should hardly look for a very obvious name here, because the Prophecy describes the search for it as an exercise of wisdom, a trial of understanding, and a work of calculation, —"Here is wisdom: let him that hath understanding count, or calculate, the number of the name."

Holy Scripture says that Christ's "name is the Branch" (Zech. vi. 12), and that "this is the name whereby He shall be called, the Lord our Righteousness" (Jcr. xxiii. 16; xxxiii. 6), and that "a Virgin shall conceive and bear a Son, and they shall call His name Emmanuel" (Matt. i. 23). And yet we do not hear that Christ was ever called by any of these names: yet the prophecies which thus speak have been most surely fulfilled, because Christ was, and did, what those names declare.

So it may be with the name before us. The Papacy has succeeded to the seat of the Latin Empire, and rules in the capital of the Latin world. And it is indeed a wonderful characteristic of his empire, that this Latin Ruler will not allow any one of the nations on the earth to buy or sell, that is, to have any spiritual commerce with men or God by preaching, or prayer, unless they accept his Latin language in the place of God's own original Hebrew and Greek in the Holy Scriptures, and unless they accept his Latin language in the place of their own mother tongue, in common prayer and public praise to God, and in the administration of the Holy Sacraments. He would bring all nations of the carth under his own Latin yoke, and thus exercise over them an Imperial sway which was never wielded by Heathen Rome in the palmiest days of her power.

Thus, the exposition given by S. Irenœus and S. Hippolytus in the second and third centuries, has gained by time a force and clearness which they could not foresee; and if it was, as they affirm, very probable then, it is still more probable now.

The LAMB standing upon Mount Sion, and the One Hundred and Forty-Four Thousand with Him.

CH. XIV. 1-5. Kal elbor] And I saw, and, lo, the Lamb standing upon the mount Sion, and with Him an hundred forty and four thousand, having His name and His Father's name written in their foreheads.

And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder; and I heard a voice of harpers harping with their harps: And they sing as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four Living Creatures, and the Elders; and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth.

These are they which were not defiled with women; for they

These are they which are following the Lamb whithersoever He goeth. These were redeemed from among men, a first-fruit unto God and to the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no lie: for they are without fault.

This chapter follows the preceding in a natural connexion. It contains a cheering consolation, a triumphant acclamation, and hortatory admonition, consequent upon what has been revealed in the foregoing Vision of the dominion of the Beast, and the persecution of the faithful.

Observe the contrast here.

The LAMB ('Apvlov) is displayed standing, in opposition to the BEAST (θηρίον). The Beast had been seen rising from the Sea (xiii. 1), the element of tumultuous agitation; but the LAMB stands upon the Mount Sion, "which shall never be removed" (Ps. cxxv. 1; cp. Ps. ii. 6; cx. 2; cxlvi. 10).

Mount Sion represents the City of the true Church of God, the City of the Lamb (cp. above, ii. 9; iii. 9), and is opposed to Babylon, which is the enemy of God's People, and is the city of the BEAST. (See xvii. 4, 5. 18.)

With the Lamb are seen standing a hundred and forty-four thousand (12 × 12,000). This number represents completeness and union in the true doctrine and discipline of Christ, as preached by the Twelve Apostles. See above on vii. 1—9, and note at end of chap. xi. and on xii. 1, and below, xxi. 14.

The symbolical number of 144,000 has a moral significance. These 144,000 stand in the same relation to the portion of the Church which is the subject of these later Visions, as the 144,000 in the Sixth Seal (vii. 4-9) do to the Universal Church of all ages and places of the world.

By this complete Apostolic number, these faithful confessors are contrasted with those who have the number of the Beast, which represents a defection from the Truth (see on xiii. 18). And they have the name of the Lamb and of His Father (so the best MSS.) on their foreheads; and so they are contrasted with those who receive the mark or name of the Beast on their fore-

(See xiii. 16, 17; xiv. 11.)

This Vision, therefore, reveals the cheering truth, that, although, during the sway of the Beast, who had been displayed in the foregoing chapter, many would fall from the faith, and would do homage to him (see xiii. 8. 16), yet the true Catholic Apostolic Church of Christ would never fail, and would finally triumph over the power of the Beast, and would stand with the Lamb on Mount Sion, in His Kingdom, which will never be destroyed; and is hereafter revealed as established "on a great and lofty Mountain." See xxi. 10.

In v. 1, on the perfect participle έστδs see above, Matt. xxiv. 15, and έστάναι, 1 Cor. x. 12. Winer, § 14, p. 72.

St. John hears a sound of jubilee coming out of heaven

(v. 2).

The heavenly voices rejoice in the Victory of the Apostolic

The heavenly quire company of the 144,000 on Mount Sion. The heavenly quire celebrates their victory, by singing a new song before the Throne, and before the Four Living Creatures and the Elders, the emblems of the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament (see on iv. 4-6), because the Victory has been gained through the power of God and His Holy Word.

In v. 4 the Apostolic Company of the 144,000 on Mount Sion who stand with the Lamb, are described as they which were not defiled with women: that is, they were not corrupted by the spiritual harlotries of Babylon, the false Church who is seated on the Beast, and who lures men with her fascinations, and bewitches them with her charms, and tempts them to drink of the cup of her strange doctrines; and who will be more fully described hereafter (xvii. 1-5). They have not defiled themselves with any spiritual fornications, such as that of the woman Jezebel, the false Teacher, already described as deceiving God's servants, and tempting them to commit fornication, and to be false to their plighted troth and allegiance to Him (see above, on ii. 20. 22).

They were not sullied with any such defilements; for "they are Virgins." Their souls had been espoused to Christ in spiritual wedlock, in Holy Baptism, by an Apostolic ministry, as St. Paul says to the Corinthians (2 Cor. xi. 2), I espoused you as a chaste Virgin to one Husband, Christ. "A pure faith is the virginity of the sout" (S. Aug. See on 2 Cor. xi. 2). They have endeavoured to preserve their virgin purity of Soul in the true faith, "whole and undefiled," and to "perfect holiness in the fear of God," in spirit, soul, and body (2 Cor. vii. 1. 1 Thess. v. 23), and love the Lord in uncorruptness, appapola. See on Eph. vi.

"The Virgins here mentioned," says the ancient Expositor in the works of Augustine (iii. pp. 31. 37), "are not only chaste in body, but they represent the Christian Church, which keeps the faith pure, not stained with any adulteration of heresy, nor with the sensual indulgences of this world: and we all, by baptism, and by Repentance after Baptism, may be Virgins, in the inner man, and may be without guile."

The word παρθένος is applied to men as well as to women. See Suicer in voce, and Fabric. Cod. Apocr. V. T. ii. 92. Kypke, Obs. Sacr. on this passage. St. John himself is sometimes called παρθένος by Ecclesiastical Writers.

These Virgins represent the faithful Bride, married to the spotless Lamb (see xix. 7.9), and they have not been seduced from their love to Christ by any of the ministers of the Beast: they are they who are following the Lamb wheresoever He goeth. If He goes to Gethsemane, they follow Him thither; if He goes to Calvary, they take up their Cross and follow Him thither. He is gone to heaven, and they will be with Him there also.

In v. 4 remark the present participle of ἀκολουθοῦντες, they who are following the Lamb. Cp. οἱ ἐρχόμενοι ἐκ τῆς θλίψεως (vii. 14), and τοὺς νικῶντας ἐκ τοῦ θηρίου (xv. 2). This Hebraistic use of the present participle with the definite article, giving it the force of a noun substantive, is very expressive, as denoting the prominent feature, and distinctive characteristic which is designed for the reader's attention. Cp. of  $\ell \nu$   $\kappa \nu \rho l \omega$   $\delta \pi \sigma \theta \nu \eta \sigma \kappa \sigma \nu \tau \epsilon s$  (xiv. 13), these who are dying in the Lord, αποθνησκοντές (xiv. 13), these who are dying in the Lord, οί προσκυνοῦντές τὸ θηρίον (xiv. 11), οί τηροῦντές τὰς ἐντολὰς τοῦ Θεοῦ (xiv. 12). See Winer, § 18, p. 100, and § 45, p. 316, and note above, on Matt. iv. 3, ὁ πειράζων.

In v. 5 Elz. has δόλος, but A, B, C have ψεῦδος, a lie, and so Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Tregelles. Cp. the contrast in the prophecy of St. Paul concerning the Man of Sin, with his lung wooders σέρας μείδους and adherents. who are given and sin prophecy.

lying wonders, τέρατα ψεύδους, and adherents, who are given over to love the lie (το ψεῦδος), which he upholds (2 Thess. ii. 9-11).

On the word ἄμωμος, without blemish, see Eph. i. 4; v. 27. Col. i. 22. The Saints are made spotless by the blood of the Immaculate Lamb, Who redeemed them, and washed them from Immacuate Lano, Who redeemed them, and washed them from their sins, and Who, by offering Himself to God as "a Lamb without blemish (ξμωμον) and without spot" (1 Pet. i. 19. Heb. ix. 14), enables them to "offer themselves living sacrifices, holy and acceptable to God" (Rom. xii. 1. Heb. xiii. 15).

In v. 5, after εἰσιν, Elz. has ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου τοῦ Θεοῦ, but this addition is not in A, B, C, and is rejected by Griesb.,

Scholz, Lach., Tisch., and Tregelles, and it is liable to objection on this account, because the servants of God, who are here presented to the view, are not yet exalted to heavenly glory and everlasting felicity, but are on Mount Sion, the Christian Church, and they are a first-fruit to God and the Lamb (v. 4).

The triumphal song does not originate with this Apostolic company of the 144,000, but it comes forth from heaven (vv. 2, 3), from the lips and harps of Angels, chanting their victory; and Sin. The triumphs of the Church on Earth are celebrated by the Church in heaven: and the Church on Earth learns the song of praise, and echoes the joyful sound. The γὰρ after ἄμωμοι is not in A, C, and is omitted by Lachmann.

The ANGEL flying in mid-heaven with the EVERLASTING GOSPEL to preach to ALL.

6, 7. kal elbuv] And I saw another Angel flying in midheaven, having the everlasting Gospel to preach unto them that sit on the earth, and unto every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to Him; for the hour of His judgment is come; and worship Him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the foun-

Here is another Contrast.

The Beast has been represented in a preceding Vision as warring against Holy Scripture, and killing the Two Wir-NESSES (see on xi. 3-7), which were raised again by the Spirit of God. The Scriptures have been also represented in another foregoing Vision as having been bound at the Great River Euphrates, which is the River of the Great City, the Mystical Babylon, the seat of the Beast (see above on ix. 14, and below, xvii. 3-5), and as having been afterwards loosed at God's command (see above on ix. 14).

As a natural sequence of those Visions, an Angel is now revealed flying in mid-heaven,—that is, conspicuously soaring aloft in triumph in the zenith of the sky, in the sight of all the world, and bearing "the EVERLASTING GOSPEL to preach unto (én, so A, B, C, Lach., Trisch., Treyelles) those who are sitting upon the Earth," sitting in worldliness and carnal indifference (see on Luke xxi. 35, and above, iii. 10), and to preach unto (ἐπὶ) every nation, and tribe, and tongue, and people.

This Preaching of the Gospel is a preparation for the End, as Christ Himself has declared. See Matt. xxiv. 14.

The Gospel which the Angel bears is called the EVERLAST-ING GOSPEL. Here is another contrast to the agency of the Beast above described, and of his adherents. The Gospel of Christ is the everlasting Gospel. It is unchanged and unchangeable. Nothing can be taken from it, and nothing can be added to it. The Gospel is One and the same Gospel as it was 1800 years ago. It is the same Gospel for all Nations, and for all ages, even unto the end of the world. And St. Paul has said, " If any one, or even an Angel from heaven, preach to you any thing, besides what we preached, let him be anathema." (See on Gal. l.

Yet, in spite of that Apostolic anathema twice repeated, the adherents of the Beast have pronounced their anathema on all who do not receive the new doctrines which they have added to the Gospel of God.

The words with which the Trent Council concluded its deli-berations were words of malediction, "Anathema, Anathema:" and they were reiterated against all those who will not accept their novel decrees. Concil. Trident. Session xxv. Decr. 4, 1563.

In that Council the Papacy affirmed that its own Latin Version is to be the authentic Standard of Holy Scripture: and it has denied the free use of vernacular Versions of the Holy Scriptures to Nations under its sway (see above on xiii. 17, 18); but in this Vision the Angel files (such is his eagerness and love) to preach the Everlasting Gospel unto every nation, and tribe, and language, and people.

The Angel also commands the world to worship God. Here s another contrast to the agency of the second Beast or false Teacher described above, who has horns like a Lamb, and endeavours to make every one worship the Beast, and his Image (see xiii. 11, 12. 15).

ANTICIPATION of the FALL of BABYLON.

lon the Great." The English words "is fallen" do not exactly represent the Angel's prophecy. The meaning is,—though Babylon is now so great, and seems so strong, yet she fell. He foresees her fall as an event so certain that he describes it as past. On this prophetic use of the aorist, which expresses the certainty and suddenness of the fall, as if it were by a single blow, see above on ἐτελέσθη, χ. 7.

There is also a peculiar significance in these words ἔπεσεν, έπεσε Βαβυλὰν ἡ μεγάλη, as connecting this Apocalyptic prophecy concerning the fall of the mystical Babylon with the predictions of the Hebrew Prophets concerning the fall of the literal Babylon. Compare here Isa. xxi. 9, πέπτωκε πέπτωκε Βα-βυλών, and Jer. li. 8 = xxi. 8, in the Septuagint Version, ἔπεσε Βαβυλών. And this parallelism between Hebrew Prophecy and the Apocalypse suggests and teaches, that as certainly and as suddenly as the literal Babylon fell, so certainly and so suddenly will the mystical Babylon fall.

Babylon fell. Here is an anticipation. It is a characteristic of the Apocalypse, as it is of Hebrew Prophecy, to anticipate future events, and to speak of them as having already taken place; and afterwards to return, by way of recapitulation, and to enlarge more fully upon them. See Augustine, de Civ. Dei xx. 14, " recapitulando dicit, tanquam ad id rediens, quod distulerat; and ibid. c. 17, in Apocalypsi Joannes "eadem multis modis repetit." See above, Introduction, p. 151, and below, xx. 1-7, and cp. Düsterdieck, Einleitung, pp. 15-21.

Here, then, is a prophetic pre-announcement of an event which is to be described more fully hereafter—the fall of the mystical Babylon. See below, xvii. 1-18, pp. 250-253, where it is shown that Papal Rome is Babylon the Great. The literal Babylon fell when her temporal power was transferred to the Medes and Persians. The fall of the mystical Babylon has now begun in the transfer of the Pope's temporal power to the King of Italy; see on xvii. 16, and above on Daniel v. 4.

 $\pi \epsilon \pi \delta \tau \iota \kappa \epsilon \pi \delta \nu \tau \alpha \tau \dot{\alpha} \epsilon \theta \nu \eta$ ] i. e. she endeavours to make all Nations to drink of her golden cup (see xvii. 4). This cup is declared to be full of the wine of the wrath, that is, the wrath of God (cp. η δργη, 1 Thess. ii. 16. Ps. lxxv. 9. Isa. li. 17. Jer. xxv. 15, 16), who, in His righteous retribution, will give to her to drink of the cup of the wine of the fierceness of His wrath (xvi. 19; cp. xiv. 10).

She is arrayed in splendid attire (xvii. 3), and professes to give them a delicious beverage from her golden chalice; but it will be found by those who drink it, to be no other than the wine of the wrath of God. And it is said to be the wrath of her fornication, because her fornication is the cause of that wrath, and because it is the object against which that wrath is directed.

On this use of the genitive, see above on Luke vi. 12, and Winer, § 30, pp. 167-169.

Some recent expositors have rendered these words, "Who hath forced the nations to drink of the wrath of her fornication; and have interpreted the word fornication to mean "secular com-merce," and "wrath" to signify the violence with which the commerce is driven forward. Such interpretations may be mentioned as indicating the results produced by the erroneous theory, that St. John is here speaking of a secular or heathen power; and as serving, among other evidences, to show the unsoundness of

WARNING against Worship of the BEAST.

9. και άλλος] And another third Angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worshippeth the Beast and his Image, and receiveth his mark upon his forehead or upon his hand, he also shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God which is mixed undiluted into the cup of His indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone before the Lamb. And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the Beast and his Image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name.

el τις προσκυνεί] If any man worshippeth the Beast, he shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God.

These words contain an answer to the objections of some who allege, that the interpretation propounded above-which applies the description of the Beast to the Roman Papacy-cannot be true, inasmuch as it would involve a denial of the salvability of all who lived under it

This objection is unfounded.

The Apocalypse itself refutes such a supposition. It declares that there are some servants of God in Babylon, the city of the Beast, and that there will be some servants of God in her there even till the eve of her fall. It contains a warning to God's people to come out of her; and it is evident from this warning, that some who are in her are people of God (xviii. 4).

Many, doubtless, there are, and ever have been, under the Papacy like those of Thyatira, who are described in this book as not knowing the depths of Satan (ii. 24).

It is not till after the fall of Babylon, already anticipated in v. 8, and now supposed to have taken place, that the solemn and awful denunciation contained in these verses (vv. 9, 10) is uttered. who foreknows all things. Indeed, it is present to God, who foreknows all things. Indeed, it is so certain, that it is represented as already past (v. 8). But it is still future to us. Rome still stands. The woe pronounced in these verses will light on those who have seen the dreadful judgments which will be executed by God on Babylon, and yet will not profit by the warning of her fall, but will persist in worshipping the Beast, even to the end. See note on v. 11.

But here a caution is necessary.

Many, doubtless, there were in former times in our own land, who had not the privilege, which we enjoy, of hearing the voice, " Come out of her, My People." They had not the warnings of the Everlasting Gospel: to them it was almost a sealed book. And this, too, is still the case with many in foreign lands. And since men's responsibilities vary with their privileges, and God judgeth men according to what they have, and not according to what they have not, therefore Christian Love, which hopeth all things, will think charitably, and if it speak at all, will not speak harshly of them.

This is true. But this is not all. What will be the lot of those who hear the voice, "Come out of her," and do not obey it? And, still more, what will be the lot of those who go in to Babylon and dwell there, when the voice from heaven says, "Come out of her, My people?"

The holy Angels are represented here as preaching the Gospel (v. 6), and announcing God's warnings to the world, especially those warnings which concern Babylon, and the power of the Beast (vv. 8, 9, 11).

Let us, therefore, take heed not to weaken the force of these divine warnings, lest we ourselves be excluded from the blessed company of the Angels. We may hope for the enjoyment of their society, if with hearts like theirs, full of love to God, and of zeal for the salvation of mankind, we announce these warnings to others, and labour and pray for those who are in need of these

It is to be carefully observed, that in the present Chapter we are brought to the very eve of the Second Advent of Christ; see vv. 7. 14, 15. 18.

Here is another example of anticipation which is very common in the Apocalypse. If (as some have said, and even still say) the Beast, as represented here, means the Heathen Empire of Rome, and if, as some allege, Babylon means the Heathen City of Rome, then the warnings of this Chapter would be altogether irrelevant. The Heathen Empire of Rome has disappeared more than a thousand years ago, and the Heathen City of Rome is no longer Mistress of the Earth. There is not, nor has there been for ten centuries, any need of an Angel from heaven to warn the world not to worship Heathen Rome.

But there is great need of an angelic voice to warn the world not to bow down, in their Consciences, Judgments, Reasons, and Wills, to Papal Rome. Observe the Warning not to worship the Beast is altered after the fall of Babylon; the Papacy will survive the fall of its temporal Power. See below, p. 249.

In v. 10 the wine of God's wrath is said to be mixed (κεκερασμένος), and yet to be undituted or unmixed (άκρατος).

Here is an oxymoron, showing that this saying is a spiritual one, and not to be taken literally. The wine of God's wrath is mixed, because it is mingled with the bitter ingredients of His indignation; as wine among the Hebrews sometimes was mixed with drugs, for the purpose of giving it greater potency (see Ps. lxxv. 9, and on Matt. xxvii. 34). But it is also unmixed, as not being tempered with any elements of mercy; as wine among the Hebrews and other ancient nations was diluted with water. Isa, i. 22, and cp. Jahn, Archæol. § 144.

In v. 11 οί προσκυνοῦντες τὸ θηρίον is a stronger expression than "those who worship the Beast:" it means those whose distinguishing characteristic is, that they are worshipping the beast, and persist in worshipping him, even to the end. On this sense of the present participle with the article, see above, v. 4, cp. vv. 12, 13.

This characteristic is so strongly marked that they are here represented as keeping it even after their death; they, who are the worshipping votaries and vassals of the Beast, they who live and die with this character stamped upon them, have no rest day or night after death.

12. ωδε ή ὑπομονή] Here is the patience of the Saints: they that are the keepers of the commandments of God and of the faith of Jesus.

13.] And I heard a voice from heaven saying, Write, Blessed are the dead, they who are dying in the Lord henceforth : Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow with them.

They who are the keepers of the faith of Jesus, that is, the faith taught by Jesus (see on Rom. xii. 6. Jude 3, and of which He is the object, see xii. 17), are contrasted with those who have been just described (in vv. 9 and 11), as the worshippers of the Beast and the wearers of His mark, that is, the upholders and promoters of his profession of faith. The contrast between the number of Jesus and that of the Beast has been mentioned above, on xiii. 18.

After λεγούσηs in v. 13, Elz. adds μοι, but this is not in the best MSS., and is rejected by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Tregelles.

The word  $\delta \pi d\rho \tau \iota$ , henceforth, from this time forth (see John i. 52; xiii. 19; xiv. 7), intimates that there is a special blessedness announced from heaven to those who in times of great trouble and trial remain unwavering and firm, and stand fast, keeping the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus. This mention of the faith of Jesus is a caution against the Judaistic notions of St. John's days, and reminds the reader that the Sion of the Apocalypse (see v. 1) is the Church of Jesus Christ.

Some Ancient Expositors connect ἀπάρτι with ναί. Andreas, Primasius, Bede, and so B, and Vuig., "Amodo, jam, dicit Spiritus;" the meaning of which would be that they who depart hence in the Lord enjoy immediate blessedness after their dissolution (see on Luke xxiii. 43). But wherever val is used in the New Testament, it stands the first word in the sentence. Perhaps, however, this sense, in a somewhat modified form, is the true one. Blessed are they who are dying in the Lord; and then a pause is to be made, and ἀπάρτι may stand by itself, the word blessed being repeated: blessed they are even from this moment in which they are dying: the present participle being used here. Yea, saith the Spirit, blessed are they who are thus dying, that they may rest from their labours.

They (says Bede) who worship the Beast to the end never rest after their death (see v. 11), but they who die in the Lord enjoy repose and are blessed, even from the moment of their death. And so the passage is understood by A Lapide, Wolf, Ewald, De Wette, Hengstenberg, Ebrard; see Düsterdieck, p. 470. Thus this passage would indeed declare the immediate blessedness of the faithful, whose complete blessedness is hereafter declared in xix. 9, which is the consummation of this declaration (cp. Hengstenbery here). Yea, even so saith the Spirit, blessed are they who thus depart this life, not that they may perish (1 Cor. xv. 18), or pass into a place of everlasting torment (v. 10), as will be the lot of those who persist in worshipping the Beast, after the fall of Babylon, and continue worshipping him even to the end (vv. 8-11), but who go hence in order that they may rest in peace from their labours (see above, on vi. 11. Cp. Winer, p. 409), and their works are not lost, but follow with them, and will receive an eternal reward at the Great Day.

A, C have ἀναπαήσονται here, and this has been compared with the form ἐκάην from καίω (see Winer, § 15, p. 80), but there seems to be little analogy between the two. Β has ἀναπαύσονται.

A, C have γάρ before ἔργα, and so Lachmann and Tregelles; but B and the majority of Cursives have δè, and so Tisch., and this reading seems preferable as introducing an additional circumstance of blessedness.

Preparation for the Last Judgment.

14-16. και είδον] And I saw, and behold a white cloud, and one sitting on the cloud like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle. And another angel came out of the inner temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle, and reap: for the season is come to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe. And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped.

One like the Son of Man is Christ (see i. 13) in His Human Nature coming to judge the world. He sitteth, because He is the Judge; and He sitteth on the Cloud, which is like His judgmentseat and chariot, on which He is described as coming in glory to judgment (see Dan. vii. 13. Matt. xxiv. 30; xxvi. 64. Luke xxi. 27. Acts i. 11; above, i. 7; x. 1; and xi. 12), and this cloud is white like light, the colour of Christ (see vi. 2). And He has a golden crown of victory, as in the First Seal. See vi. 2, and Andreas Hitherto we had heard the voices of the Heralds announcing the approach of their Lord, but now we see the JUDGE (Bede).

He receives a commission to reap. The commission comes through the Angel from God. The Angel is only the bearer of The commission comes from the vals of God; that is, from the inner shrine of the heavenly Temple, from the oracle of the Heavenly Holy of Holies, in which the Godhead dwells in ineffable glory, and it comes to Christ as Son of Man. "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son, and hath given Him authority to execute judgment also, because He is the Son of Man" (John v. 22. Acts x. 42; xvii. 31). And the hour appointed for the Last Judgment is determined by the Father. (Matt. xxiv. 36. Acts i. 7.)

Vision of the LAST JUDGMENT. The work of JUDGMENT is described under a double figure.

1, As a HARVEST; 2, as a VINTAGE.

The dominant idea in the metaphor of the Harvest is the ingathering of the Good; the dominant idea in the metaphor of the Vintage is the crushing of the Wicked.

The Harvest is mentioned first: and this priority shows that Christ's first desire is that all should be saved (see 1 Tim. ii. 4).

The Harvest is the manifestation of God's Love in the ingathering of the good wheat into the heavenly barn (Matt. xiii. 39). In like manner when Christ describes the transactions of the Great Day, He speaks first of the reward to them on the right hand (Matt. xxv. 34), and afterwards He pronounces the doom of those on the left hand (v. 41).

The Parable of the Tares and the Wheat is not at variance with this view; for there the whole drift of the Parable is concerning the existence of evil in the world, and in the Church: and evil is therefore put prominently forward: and the Wheat could not be reaped with the sickle, unless the Tares growing with it had been first rooted up (Matt. xiii. 30, 39, 43).

In accordance with this view of the divine desire for the salvation of all men, the work of reaping the Harnest of the good seed is here done by Christ Himself, the Son of Man (v. 14), but He executes by an Angel the work of the Vintage.

It is indeed Christ Who treads the Winepress (see xix. 15), "for all judgment is committed to Him."

The World's VINTAGE.

17-20. kal allos And another angel came out of the inner temple which is in heaven, he also having a sharp sickle. And another angel came out from the altar, he that hath authority over the fire; and cried with a loud cry to him that had the sharp sickle, saying, Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the Earth; for her grapes are fully ripe.

And the angel thrust in his sickle into the Earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great Winepress of the wrath of God. And the Winepress was trodden without the City: and blood came out from the Winepress, even up to the bridles of the Horses, for the space of a thousand six hundred

In v. 18 A, C have  $\delta$  before  $\check{\epsilon}\chi\omega\nu$ , and so Lach. Tisch. Elz. omits it. In v. 19 A, B, C have  $\tau b\nu \mu \acute{\epsilon}\gamma a\nu$ , and so Griesh. Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Tregelles; and some of the old Commentators (e. g. Primasius) have remarked on this singular combination of a masculine adjective with a feminine substantive. Cp. Winer, § 59, p. 466. If the reading is correct, perhaps this is another specimen of the practice of the writer of the Apocalypse endeavouring to stimulate the attention of the reader to things and persons of unparalleled grandeur and sublimity by bold solecisms (see above, i. 4). The substantive  $\lambda \eta \nu \delta$ s is feminine, but his view of it, as here used, may be, that a feminine adjective would be too weak to describe its awful fury: and that the exceeding terror of the winepress of the wrath of God may best be described by a combination at variance with ordinary human utterances concerning the things of this lower world. heathen Poets we find something of the same anomalous combination, e. g. in Eschyl. Eumen. 551, Wellauer; Agam. 545, Blomf. Eurip. Hippol. 387. Pmdar, Olymp. vi. 23, Heyne. Cp. Matt. G. G. § 436. There was something of the same δεινότης in the acclamation "Moriamur pro rege nostro Mariâ Theresă."

The casting of Grapes into a Winepress, and the act of treading them under the feet, so that the juice flows out of them in purple streams, is emblematic in Holy Scripture of destruction of Enemies in battle, with great carnage (Isa. xvii. 6. Jer. xlix. 9. Lam. i. 15). It is especially descriptive of the Last Judgment to be executed by Christ. For He in His own Death and Passion poured out His own blood in the Winepress of God's fury against the Sin of the World, and thus he was a Saviour and a Redeemer of all, before He became their Judge. But when the Day of grace and salvation is past, and the Day of Doom is come, and the season of the World's Vintage, then He will tread all His enemies under His feet (1 Cor. xv. 25. 27) with the same ease as the treader of grapes in a Winepress tramples the ripe, luscious fruit; He will trample them in the great Winepress of the wrath of God. Compare the prophecy of Isaiah (Ixiii. 1—6), where the tree ideas above transition of the same case. two ideas above expressed are combined in one picture; and see Joel iii. 9. 13, where the imagery of the Vintage is used to describe the Judgment of God.

This judgment and destruction of His Enemies will be universal. None will escape. The blood is therefore described as flowing from the Winepress for 16,000 furlongs, i. e.  $4 \times 4000$ , which is symbolical of all space,—" per quatuor omnis mundi partes," says Primasius. See above, on ch. xi. at end.

On the use of and here, to signify distance, see on John xi.

The Winepress is trodden from without the City; for no unclean thing can enter into the City, the Holy City (xxi. 27; xxii. 15). Elz. has  $\xi\xi\omega$  here; but A, B, C have  $\xi\xi\omega\theta\varepsilon\nu$ , and so Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Tregelles.

The blood is said to reach up to the bridles of the Horses. This mention of Horses, in connexion with the Winepress, may at first cause surprise. But it serves an important purpose. It is doubtless designed to show, that the words are to be understood figuratively and not literally; a purpose which is also answered by the combination of a sickle with the vintage (v. 18). And the Horses are mentioned here, in order to connect this prophecy of Christ's Triumph over His enemies with the vision of His Victories on the White Horse revealed in the first Seal (vi. 2), and with His final conquest in xix. 11-14, where He is described as "riding on the White Horse, and His Armies follow Him on White Horses, and He has a vesture dipped in blood, and He treadeth the Winepress of the fierceness and wrath of the Almighty; and He hath on His vesture His name written, King of Kings, and Lord of Lords." Observe the combination of the Winepress with the Horses in that Vision, as here.

Cit. XV. 1. καὶ είδον] And I saw another sign in heaven, great and marvellous, seven angels, having seven plagues, which are the last, for in them is finished the wrath of God.

St. John, having been brought, in the foregoing chapter, to the eve of the Day of Judgment, now re-ascends, as usual, to an earlier point in the Prophecy; and enlarges on the judicial chastisements to be inflicted on the Empire of the Beast.

Those chastisements are called the Seven last Plagues, or SEVEN VIALS (see v. 5, and xvi. 1).

The plagues which are to be poured out upon the Empire of the Beast are called the last, for in them is filled up the wrath

Here is another Evidence that the Empire of the Beast is a Power that will endure to the eve of the end; and cannot be (as some have imagined) the Heathen Empire of Rome.

The agrist  $\hat{\epsilon}\tau\hat{\epsilon}\lambda\hat{\epsilon}\sigma\theta\eta$  (literally, was finished) is the prophetic agrist, which speaks of a thing foreseen and decreed by God as already done. See above, note on  $\hat{\epsilon}\tau\hat{\epsilon}\lambda\hat{\epsilon}\sigma\theta\eta$ , x. 7.

servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvellous are thy works, O Lord God the Almighty: righteous and true are thy ways, thou King of the Nations. Who shall and true are thy ways, thou King of the Nations. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy: for all the nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments were made manifest.

St. John sees a sea of glass mingled with fire. Here is an allusion to the deliverance of the Israelites from the captivity of Egypt, and to the Divine retribution executed on the enemies of the ancient People of God. The fire is the emblem of Judgment. The sea which St. John beholds calls to mind the Red Sea which overwhelmed God's foes with its waves, but which is not a tumultuous element to His faithful servants, but a placid sea of glass, like the crystal sea in Heaven described above, iv. 6.

Standing on its shore are seen those who come forth conquerors out of the bondage of the Beast, that is, those who are delivered from his sway, as the Israelites were in their Exodus from the land of Pharaoh, and from the house of bondage, and who emerged in triumph from the waters of the Red Sea. is the idea expressed in the phrase τους νικῶντας ἐκ, a very significant phrase, as showing that their victory consisted in deliverance from the Dominion under which they had been en-slaved, and from the dangers by which they were compassed. Compare the phrase μετανοείν ἐκ, ii. 21, 22; ix. 20, 21; xvi. 11; and cp. Ps. xviii. 21, "Thou hast heard me out of the horns of the unicorns," and Winer, § 47, p. 329.

Observe the use of the participle with the article, τοὺs νικῶνταs, literally, the conquering ones, those who conquer, and continue conquering; and are presented to the view as ever conquering, inasmuch as the fruits of their victory are everlasting.

See above, on xiv. 4, οἱ ἀκολουθοῦντες τῷ ἀρνίῳ. The κιθάραι τοῦ Θεοῦ, harps of God, are those which sing His praise, and are dedicated wholly to that purpose. Cp. v. 8; xiv. 2. Here is comfort to the Churches of England, Ireland, America, and others which have been delivered from the bondage of the Papacy. There is also admonition to them in this prophetic Vision. Let them stand, as it were, on the sea-shore, as the Israelites did on the Eastern side of the Red Sea, and let them praise God for their deliverance. Let them have harps of God in their hands, and sing the song of Moses the servant of God, as the ancient Church did after its Exodus (Exod. xv. 1. 6. 13), and as Moses did on that occasion and at the close of his life (Deut. xxxiii.), and let them sing the song of the Lamb, for they overcome by the blood of the Lamb, and by the Word of their testimony (xii. 11). In other words, let them not be content with having renounced the errors of the Papal Egypt, but let them hold fast the true faith. Let them offer a pure and holy service to God; let them sing with their hearts, and in their lives, a perpetual song of love and obedience to Him and to the Lamb.

On the form of the adjective, valueds, of glass, see above, note on 1 Cor. iii. 1. Winer, § 16, p. 89.

note on 1 Cor. III. 1. Winer, § 10, p. 89.

In v. 2 Elz. has ἐκ τοῦ χαράγματος αὐτοῦ after εἰκόνος αὐτοῦ καὶ, but those words are not in Λ, B, C, and have been rejected by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Tregelles.

Also Elz. has ἁγίων, of saints, at the end of v. 3, but ἐθνῶν, of Nations, is the reading of Λ, B. Compare Jer. x. 7. And this reading has been received by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Tregelles. C has alwww, but this (as Tregelles has observed) is only a slight variation from εθνών, arising from the similarity of sounds of at and e in the ancient pronunciation-still maintained in Greece-and from the likeness of the letters @ and Q.

Remark, that God is here praised as King of Nations. He judges Nations as well as Individuals, and in the last days His Divine Judgments will be more and more manifest, because Nations will have no national existence in the next world, and on viii. 2-6.

therefore Nations must expect to be judged in this world. Let Nations therefore take warning from this prophecy.

v. 4. "Thou only art holy," Socies.

The God whom Christians worship is the only God who is Socies, holy; the deities of the heathen are unholy. Even their worshippers represent them as actuated by evil passions, such as cruelty, anger, envy, lust. "Thou only, O God, art holy;" see Ps. xcix. 3. 9.

On the meaning of the word δικαιώματα in v. 4, see note above on Rom. i. 32.

Preparation for the pouring out of the SEVEN VIALS on the Empire of the Beast.

5. καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα And after this I saw, and the inner-temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened: And the seven Angels came out of the inner-temple, who have the seven plagues, clothed in pure and while linen, and having their breasts girded with golden girdles. And one of the Four Living Creatures gave unto the seven Angels seven golden Vials full of the wrath of God, who livelh for ever and ever. And the inner-temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from His power; and no man was able to enter into the inner-temple, till the seven plagues of the seven Angels should have been finished.

The place from which the seven Angels who have the seven plagues come forth is the vads, the inner-temple in which God dwells (valet). See on xi. 1, 2, and on 2 Thess. ii. 4.

It is called the sanctuary of the tabernacle of the testimony, because the testimony (μαρτύριον) was in the Holy of Holies in the Levitical Temple; and it bare witness to, and was typical of, the offering to be made by Christ, the Great High Priest, in the true heavenly Holy of Holies, before the Mercy-seat of God. See above, note on 1 Tim. ii. 6.

The seven Angels come forth from the Heavenly Holy of Holies, the throne of God's majesty and mercy, and the sanctuary in which Christ is ever offering prayer, and in which the testi-mony of His Love is enshrined, and they are arrayed in pure, bright linen garments, and with golden girdles about their breasts, v. 6; that is, they are arrayed in the attire of Priests of the heavenly temple (see above, i. 13; and cp. Exod. xxviii. 6. 8); and one of the four Evangelical Living Creatures (see above, iv. 6) gives them their instruments of vengeance.

These instruments are called Vials, or rather sacred bowls, for sacrificial purposes (see above on v. 8, and below, xvi. 1), showing that the office which these seven Angels are commissioned to execute is a sacred one. They are not swayed by the impulse of human passion in undertaking it; it is a sacerdotal office, a religious function, discharged in obedience to God's command, issuing from His heavenly throne, and for the vindication of His honour and service, and for retribution on His enemies, who have despised and disobeyed the law of His testimony. It also calls to mind, that the destruction of those who impiously rebel against God, is, as the Hebrew Prophets represent it, like a great sacrifice (cp. Isa. xxxiv. 6; lxiii. 1. Jer. xliv. 10. 18. Zeph. i. 7; cp. above, James v. 5; below, xix. 17), and that it is a consequence of the prayers of the Church for deliverance, and of Christ the Mediator and Advocate, the King and Judge of all.

In this respect, as in others, which will be noted hereafter, the VIALS which are poured out upon a particular form of hostility to God, bear a striking resemblance to the TRUMPETS, which announce God's Judgments generally against the wicked. The VIALS are to the Empire of the Beast, what the TRUMPETS are to the whole body of God's enemies, with this difference, that the Trumpets announced Judgments, the Vials execute them. Cp.

v. 8. The smoke in the inner-temple is like a prelude to the breaking forth of the fire of God's wrath. It is the warning of coming judgments now to be described. Cp. Exod. xix. 18. Isa. vi. 4. Cp. Exod. xl. 34, 35, where Moses is not able to enter the Tabernacle; and 1 Kings viii. 10, 11, where no one could stand to minister because of the cloud. If that was the case in consequence of the cloud, which was not an evidence of anger, how much more would it be here, by reason of the smoke, which is a precursor of the outbreak of the fiery indignation of Gon!

THE SEVEN VIALS.

Сн. XVI. 1—10. кай пкоиба] And I heard a great voice out of the inner-temple saying to the seven angels, Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God into the earth.

And the first went his way and poured out his vial into the earth; and there came a noisome and grievous boil upon the men which have the mark of the Beast, and upon them which worship his image.

And the second poured out his vial into the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man; and every soul alive died,

- those that were in the sea.

And the third poured out his vial into the rivers and fountains of waters; and they became blood. And I heard the angel of the waters say, Righteous art Thou, O Lord, which art, and wast, holy art Thou, because Thou didst judge thus. For they poured out the blood of saints and prophets, and Thou hast given them blood to drink; they are worthy. And I heard the altar say, Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are Thy

And the fourth poured out his vial upon the sun; and it was given unto him to scorch men with fire. And men were scorched with great heat, and blasphemed the name of God, who hath the authority over these plagues: and they repented not to

And the fifth poured out his vial upon the throne of the beast; and his kingdom was filled with darkness: and they were gnawing their tongues for the pain, and they blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and their sores, and repented

The same imagery is preserved as in the preceding chapter; the scenery is derived from Egypt: and the Empire of the Beast is scourged by Plagues, like those which fell on Pharaoh and his people.

These Plagues are poured forth from VIALS.

To understand the full meaning of the word Vials, we must refer to the history of the Egyptian plagues.

"The Lord said unto Moses and Aaron, Take to you ashes of the furnace, and let Moses sprinkle it toward the heaven in the sight of Pharaoh; and it shall become small dust in all the land of Egypt, and shall be a boil breaking forth with blains upon man and upon beast, throughout all the land of Egypt. And they did so. And the Magicians could not stand before Moses because of the boils; for the boils were upon the Magicians, and upon all the house of Pharaoh." (Exod. ix. 8—11.)

One of the Egyptian plagues was a boil on the Egyptians, even on the Magicians and house of Pharaoh; and the first of these Seven Plagues of the Apocalypse is a boil upon all who have the mark of the Beast.

The word used by St. John to describe this plague is έλκος, the same word as used by the LXX in the Books of Moses to describe the plague on the Egyptians. See Exod. ix. 10, 11. Deut. xxviii. 27. 35.

In Egypt the action was performed by Moses and Aaron the Priest with common fire from the furnace; but here the plagues are poured forth by Angel Priests with φιάλαι, VIALS. word, as was before observed (v. 8), is not to be understood in its common English acceptation. It does not signify a bottle, but a bowl-like dish. It is a word borrowed from the Temple-Worship, and describes the sacred bowls, in which the aromatic incense that was lighted by coals taken from the great brazen altar of sacrifice, which stood in the outer court of the Temple, was offered on the Golden Allar, which stood in the inner court or Holy Place, before the Veil.

The Vials, then, are sacred Vessels. The incense now contained in them is called the Wrath of God; and there is a contrast between  $\phi_i \alpha \lambda \eta \gamma \epsilon_{\mu \rho \nu \sigma \alpha} \theta \nu_{\mu \rho \sigma}$ , and  $\phi_i \alpha \lambda \eta \gamma \epsilon_{\mu \rho \nu \sigma \alpha} \theta \nu_{\mu i \alpha \mu \alpha} - \tau \omega \nu_{\nu}$  (Rev. v. 8.) The former, instead of containing  $\theta \nu_{\mu} \alpha \mu_{\alpha}$ , incense, contains  $\theta \nu_{\mu} \delta s$ , wrath, burning like fire. We have, in English, a parallel to this, in our word incensed.

The incense of God's wrath is poured out by Angel-Ministers coming forth from the heavenly oracle; and it is poured forth on the power of the Beast, on which the Harlot City, Babylon the Great, sits enthroned. (Rev. xvii. 3. 7. 18.)

The act of pouring forth had already been used in Hebrew Prophecy as an image descriptive of the execution of Judgments from heaven (see Ps. lxxix. 6. Zeph. iii. 8); and it exhibits, in a striking manner, the ease with which the Almighty Ruler of the World, the King of Nations (xv. 3), punishes the most powerful Kingdoms of the Earth. He pours out upon them some of the ingredients of the cup of His wrath, and forthwith they are destroyed thereby.

The sixth plague of Egypt—that of the boils—is the first plague here. The reason of which (as Dr. Lightfoot has suggested) seems to be, that the sixth plague of Egypt was on its Jaise Teachers, the Magicians; and they could not stand before Moses (see Exod. ix. 11); and the Empire, on which these Apocalyptic Plagues are poured, is not only a temporal Power, but a spiritual Empire.

The vessels here used as instruments of punishments are holy Vessels, filled with coals from God's allar, by ministering Angels in priestly attire; and, according to that adaptation and adjustment which usually subsist between divine punishments and the human sins which are punished, the sacred Vials are poured out by Angel Priests, coming forth from the heavenly Church, upon an hierarchical Empire, for spiritual sins.

Vials are holy Vessels, and the use of Vials in the execution of Vengeance, represents the change of instruments of blessing into weapons of chastisement. It exhibits a solemn warning, a moral lesson, and spiritual admonition. Wherever means of grace are not duly used, they recoil on those to whom they have been offered, and become means of punishment. represent blessings changed into banes. The greater the gifts of God are to a Church, the more fierce will be His wrath against her, if she abuse them. "Now, O ye Priests," says God by Malachi (ii. 1), "this commandment is for you, If ye will not hear to give glory to My Name, I will send My curse upon you, and will saves were these incommendation." and will curse your blessings."
"Thanks be to God," says St. Paul, "Who always leads us in triumph in Christ and maketh manifest the savour (or odour, rather) of His knowledge in every place. For we are a sweet savour (or perfume, rather) of Christ in them that are saved, and in them that perish. To the one we are a savour (odour) of death who is sufficient for these things? For we are not as the many who corrupt the Word of God." (2 Cor. ii. 14–16.)

The Apostles of Christ, who dispense the Word and Sacratoria of the state of the state ments in truth and godly sincerity (2 Cor. ii. 17) in His name Who gave Himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God, for a sweetsmelling savour (Eph. v. 2), are like the Priests of the Temple offering sweet incense to God on the altar of His Sanctuary, which

3 καὶ ὁ δεύτερος εξέχεε την φιάλην αὐτοῦ εἰς την θάλασσαν καὶ εγένετο b Exed. 7. 17, 20. αἷμα ώς νεκροῦ· καὶ πᾶσα ψυχὴ ζῶσα ἀπέθανεν, τὰ ἐν τῆ θαλάσση.

4 Καὶ ὁ τρίτος ἐξέχες τὴν φιάλην αὐτοῦ εἰς τοὺς ποταμοὺς καὶ εἰς τὰς πηγὰς oblation is acceptable to Him in Christ, "Who has entered within the Veil" (Heb. vi. 19); and this Ministry of Apostles, and Apostolic men, is a sweet-smelling odour to Life Eternal for all who gladly receive what they deliver.

But, if a Church adulterates the Word and Sacraments, the aromatic incense of their spiritual censers fills up the Vials of God's wrath, and instead of ascending into Heaven in fragrant clouds, it descends upon her in fiery streams. The blessings of His Word and Sacraments become Plagues. Scripture becomes a Scourge, and the Word a Woe. They are an odour of death

All the Vials are poured into (eis) the earth; and yet one of them, especially, is described as poured into the earth (v. 2), and another is poured into the sea (v. 3), and another into the rivers (v. 4), and another upon the sun (v. 8). All are poured from heaven downward into the lower earthly region; and each is poured upon special objects in that lower region.

Observe also the change in the use of the preposition prefixed to the several objects of the seven Vials. National to the several objects of the several vials. The list thee Vials are poured  $\epsilon is$ , or into: i. e. into the earth; into the sea; into the rivers. The last four Vials are poured  $\epsilon \pi l$ , or upon, with an accusative; i. e. upon the sun; upon the Throne of the Beast; upon the river Euphrates; upon the air  $(\lambda \epsilon \rho a)$ .

The former preposition (eis, into) seems to denote infusion into and admixture with the object of punishment; the latter (¿nl, upon) seems to denote the Divine dominion over the object which has exalted itself against God, and to indicate His Majesty and Vengeance triumphing and treading upon it.

Remark also that the VIALS are represented as poured out successively, without any such interruptions or episodes as occur in the series of the TRUMPETS. They all concern the same Empire, that of the Beast, and this consecutive and continuous character seems to represent the regularity and celerity with which the Divine Judgments will be inflicted upon it.

The FIRST VIAL is poured into (eis) the earth, as the First Trumpet ushered in a Judgment on the earth: and there comes a boil (akos, ulcus, ulcer), sore and grievous, upon the men who have the mark of the Beast and worship his image.

This plague sent into the Earth is directed against that carnal, earthly element, which is opposed to the spiritual and heavenly. See i. 7; iii. 10; xiii. 12. It is upon men's persons, and represents something loathsome, as well as painful.

Before we enter on the exposition of this and the following Vials, it is requisite to premise, that, although even now, at the present time, the state of Europe exhibits some striking evidences of the fulfilment of these Visions of the Vials, yet it is probable that what we now see is only a portion of the evidence; and is like a prelude and specimen of what will be more fully developed in later times; as may be inferred from their name, "the last plagues."

The contempt of God's Holy Word has already brought forth many foul boils, and blotches, and eruptions upon those who are subject to the Papacy. Almighty God, in His Word, condemns those who forbid to marry (1 Tim. iv. 3); St. Peter,—whom the Popes profess to succeed, and on whom they build their claims, was a married man (Mark i. 30), and had his wife with him in his Apostolic journeys (1 Cor. ix. 5); and St. Paul gives precepts concerning the wives and children of the Clergy (1 Tim. iii. 1-5.12).

But, in defiance of this divine warning, example, and doctrine, the Papacy has enforced celibacy on her ecclesiastics for nearly a thousand years. This enforcement has engendered many impurities both of body and soul. Cp. Gieseler, Eccl. Hist.,

Third Period, § 65.

Again, the Papacy claims to dispense with the Law of God in Matrimonial causes, and to supersede the degrees of Consanguinity and Affinity, which are set forth in the Word of God, and thus many unholy and incestuous Marriages have been contracted under its sanction, which have entailed a miserable inheritance of imbecility and ignominy on many princely houses. Evidence of this may be seen in Sandys, Europæ Speculum, p. 41, ed. 1673.

Further; the ministry of the Confessional familiarizes the Romish Priesthood and People with thoughts and actions which ought to be veiled in silence, and mars that modest delicacy of feeling which is one of the best safeguards of virtue. It provides a ready expiation for gross sin; and the doctrines of the Casuists, -such as Liquori and others, -who have devised ease for the troubled conscience, by subtle equivocations and mental reservations, have produced foul sores on the social and domestic constitution of Nations subject to the Papacy, and especially on the Hierarchical body; sores visible to all, and like penal retributions for the neglect of those precepts of Chastity, and motives to purity, which are supplied in God's Word and Sacraments.

The Vials of His wrath for this desecration of Holy Things have been poured on the Papal Empire, and have produced a loathsome disease like the boils of Egypt.

The Second Vial. In v. 3 the Second Vial is poured into the Sea; and it becomes blood, as of a dead man; as in the Second Trumpet (viii. 8), and every soul alive died, - the things that were in the sea.

This is explained by another passage in the Apocalypse. The Woman who is enthroned on the Beast, is said to sit upon many waters (xvii. 1), and the waters where the Harlot sitteth, are explained to mean Peoples, and Multitudes, and Nations, and Tongues (xvii. 15).

These are now described as a Sea.

The Sea in the Apocalypse represents Nations in a restless state, tossed about by winds and storms of passion, like the Sea to which the wicked are compared by Isaiah, "the wicked are like the troubled Sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt; there is no peace, saith my God, for the wicked" (Isa. lvii. 20, 21).

The language of this Vial may be illustrated by the description in chap. viii. 9, ἀπέθανε το τρίτον τῶν κτισμάτων τῶν ἐν τῆ θαλάσση, τὰ ἔχοντα ψυχὰs, where see the note.

The sense of the word  $\psi \nu \chi \dot{\eta}$  here appears to be the same as there, and to designate the carnal mind; and the word Gwoa, living, is added to show that, while alive in name, they are in fact They are like the Church of Sardis described above, it, 1, "Thou hast a name that thou livest, and thou art dead" (verpos)

The carnally-minded widow "is dead while she is living" (ζῶσα τέθνηκε, 1 Tim. v. 6). These passages supply the best comment on the present one. A, C have ζωῆs here, but this reading may be ascribed to want of perception of the oxymoron in ζωσα ἀπέθανε, supposed to be a contradiction. However, if (whis is the true reading, - and it derives some authority from ψυχη ζωης in Gen. i. 30, and it is received by Lachmann and Tisch.,-it will make little difference in the sense. Cp. Winer,

§ 30, p. 169.

There is also a peculiar significance in the neuter here, τλ, namely, the things in the sea; intimating that carnal minds lose the genuine properties of men, and are merely like inanimate things, and become κτίσματα, creatures, as they are called in the parallel place above in viii. 9, which happily illustrates the meaning here; see the note there. Elz. omits τὰ, but it is in A, C, and is restored by Lach., Tisch., Tregelles. The reading τὰ is also confirmed (as Hengstenberg has observed) by the parallel passage in the Septuagint concerning the Egyptian plague of blood, Exod. vii. 20, 21.

An important lesson and practical religious truth may be derived from this passage. A life tossed about in the restless sea of popular passions, and agitated by the fickle winds and waves of popular tumults, may appear to the world to be full of energy; but it is not life; it is not worthy of that name; it ought rather to be called death. And they who pass their lives in such a tempestuous element, and are swayed to and fro by it, forfeit the genuine characteristic of independent men; they lose the masculine vigour of true Christians (cp. xii. 5); they become things, -the sport and laughing-stock of the veering gale.

The THIRD VIAL.

v. 4. The third Vial is poured into the rivers and the wells of water, and they become blood.

Here also is a parallel to the plagues of Egypt. Exod. vii. 19, 20. Ps. lxxviii. 44, and compare above, the third Trumpet, viii. 10, 11.

The rivers and wells are the channels and springs of the prosperity and health of the Power which is here punished.

The prophecy contained in this Vial has also already been in part fulfilled. It foretold calamities to be inflicted on the re-sources of the Papacy; and announced that those very things which were once tributary to it, and supplied it with the means of τῶν ὑδάτων καὶ ἐγένετο αἷμα. 5 ° Καὶ ήκουσα τοῦ ἀγγέλου τῶν ὑδάτων λέ- ch. 1.4, 8. γοντος, Δίκαιος εἶ, ὁ ὧν καὶ ὁ ἢν, ὄσιος, ὅτι ταῦτα ἔκρινας,  $^6$  ἀ ὅτι αἷμα ἁγίων ἀ Isa. 49. 26. καὶ προφητῶν ἐξέχεαν, καὶ αἷμα αὐτοῖς δέδωκας πιεῖν ἄξιοί εἰσι.  $^7$  ° Καὶ  $^6$  κιι εἰρι. 3. 34.  $^8$  κιι  $^8$  Καὶ  $^8$ ήκουσα τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου λέγοντος, Ναὶ, Κύριε, ὁ Θεὸς ὁ παντοκράτωρ, ἀληθιναί και δίκαιαι αί κρίσεις σου.

greatness, would be turned against it, and become occasions and | instruments of its suffering and shame.

This may be applied to the traffic of the Papacy in Indulgences, and Legendary Fables, and Miracles, which were for many centuries like wells and rivers of wealth to the See of Rome; but which became the sources of her weakness, by opening the eyes of Nations to the fraudulent cheats and impostures practised by her, and by arousing their indignation against her. See the evidence in Gieseler, Eccl. History, Third Period, Division iv. chap. vi.

In v. 4 A has ἐγένοντο: in v. 5 Beza and Elz. 1633, have δ ἐσόμενος, but this has little, if any, MS. authority.

The pouring out of this Vial, by which the rivers and wells are said to be changed into blood, is declared to be due to the sins of those who are punished, in pouring out the blood of Saints and Prophets; that is, of holy men, especially preachers of the Gospel. See xi. 3. 10.

In v. 7, we read, "I heard the Altar saying, Yea, O Lord, the God, the Almighty."—The Altar speaks. Such is the reading of the best MSS. received by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Tregelles: and so the words are interpreted by Bengel, De Wette, and Düsterdieck. The reading ἄλλοι, alterius, seems to be due to Latinizing MSS., and to be a repetition of altaris. The Altar speaks; for it is God's Altar; and this is in harmony with the God are themselves endued with life. Thus the Gospels are  $\zeta_{out}$  living creatures (iv. 6). The Altar speaks, as the Blood of Abel is said to cry (Gen. iv. 10; cp. IIeb. xii. 24), and the Slones of Jerusalem to cry out (Luke xix. 40). The Altar speaks, because the souls of the Martyrs, who had been slain by the Beast, are described as Victims whose blood has been poured out upon God's Altar (see above, vi. 9, and 2 Tim. iv. 6). The Altar itself, though typified by what was of stone and brass, yet, inasticular itself, though typified by what was of stone and brass, yet, inasticular itself. much as it is a heavenly Altar, and an Altar of God, is beautifully represented as feeling compassion for the sufferings of His Martyrs, and as rejoicing in the vindication of God's honour by the execution of His judgments on those who had slain His

The sublime address of the Prophet of Judah to the Altar of Jeroboam, "O Altar! Altar!" (1 Kings xiii. 2,) is conceived in the same spirit of poetic beauty, and oratorical vehemence, which is characteristic of Hebrew Prophecy, and which often finds utterance in the Apocalypse, and makes it to be one of the noblest Poems, as well as sublimest Prophecies, that have ever been given to the world.

The Fourth Vial. v. 8. The Fourth Vial is poured upon  $(\ell\pi!)$  the Sun: and the Sun scorches the men (that is, the men of this Empire; cp. vv. 2.21, and above, ix. 4.10, "the men who had not the Seal of God") with fire; and they blaspheme the name of God.

On the accusative καθμα see Luke xii. 47. Winer, § 32,

p. 204.

Observe the change of preposition here. The first three Vials are poured into (eis) the elements, &c., which are the objects and instruments of punishment; the last four are poured upon them. See above on v. 1.

The verb ἐδόθη, "it was given," does not intimate any benefit bestowed upon the recipient, but it intimates that all these penal results are due to the permission of God. Cp. the use of έδόθη in vi. 4. 8; ix. 1. 3. 5.

The objects, upon which the Vials are poured out, are elements and powers of the Empire of the Beast.

The Sun is the glory of that Empire, that which dazzled men with its brilliance. The Sun is here represented as scorching men by its heat. This image is derived from the history of the Exodus, and of the pilgrimage in the wilderness, when the people of God were sheltered from the sun's glare by the pillar of cloud by day, Exod. xiii. 21, 22; xl. 38. Numb. xiv. 14. And it is a figure frequently occurring in Hebrew prophecy (as Isa. iv. 6; xlix. 10. Ps. cxxi. 6), and is repeated in the Apocalypse, vii. 16; cp. Ps. cv. 38.

This prophecy also has been partly accomplished already. The temporal splendour of the Papacy has already had an effect similar to that which is here described. The earthly grandeur of the Romish Hierarchy, its lavish expenditure in pompous pageantries, and in sumptuous edifices, its prodigal profusion in the aggrandizement of Papal families, and in their luxurious affluence of Palaces, Equipages, Pictures, Statues, Demesnes, and Gardens, have made themselves felt by those under its sway, in galling exactions, and oppressive burdens entailed upon them for the maintenance of the solar splendour of that brilliant magnificence. The meridian glory of this Spiritual Empire has scorched the people of the Romagna and of Italy by the glare of its rays.

The provision of revenues for the erection and decoration of the Church of St. Peter at Rome by means of a shameless sale of Pardons and Indulgences, may be cited as one example among many of the manner in which the grandeur of Papal Rome has been created and supported; and its traffic in Bulls, Dispensations, and the levy of Annates and First-fruits, and Peter-Pence, and other onerous imposts, and the simoniacal sale of Ecclesiastical Preferments, in all countries under its sway; and the burdensome taxation of those under its temporal monarchy, have been like parching heat, withering the herbage and exhausting the resources of the soil.

The historical proofs which substantiate these statements are open to all. A summary of them may be seen in Isaac Casaubon's Dedication to his Exercitationes Anti-Baronianæ, p. 9. Sir R. Twysden's Vindication, chap. iv. Dr. Inett's Origines, ii. pp. 488-503, and Gieseler, Eccl. Hist., Third Period, Division iii. ch. i. § 55. 84. 103. 105, who thus speaks (in § 103): "All kinds of Church-oppression, which, when essayed by temporal Princes, had been resisted by the Papacy, were now practised in a greater degree by the Papacy itself."

The consequence of this parching heat may be described in the words of St. John (v. 9); "the men blasphemed the name of God; and they did not repent to give Him the glory."

This unhappy result has been already displayed to the world.

The usurpations and corruptions of the Papacy have already produced a baneful harvest of Infidelity and Blasphemy.

Men, seeing and feeling in their own persons that evil practices are promoted and enforced under spiritual sanctions, and with spiritual penalties, by a Christian Government, even by the Government of one who calls himself the Head of the Church and the Vicar of Christ upon Earth; and not being acquainted with any other form of Christianity than that which presents itself too often before them as a minister of superstition and imposture, tyranny, and wrong, have been led to identify Christianity with Papal corruptions and usurpations, and have been goaded on by a spirit of vindictive resentment and indignation to blaspheme the Gospel itself, as if it were the cause of their sufferings. One of the worst evils produced by the fanaticism, fraud, and oppression practised by the Papacy, is this: that it has estranged whole Nations from Religion, and has driven them by a reckless recoil and desperate reaction into Infidelity; and has thus prepared the way for some future terrible outbreak of anarchical rebellion against all lawful authority, and even for an impious insurrection against Christ Himself.

The FIFTH VIAL.

v. 10. The fifth Vial is poured upon the throne of the Beast; and his kingdom is darkened.

Here is another reference to the plagues of Egypt, that of h ch. 9, 21,

the "darkness that could be felt." (Exod. x. 21. Cp. Ps. cv. 28. Wisd. xvii. 21.) But they did not repent, like Pharaoh. Exod. x. 27. This Vision is in course of fulfilment in the judgments on the throne of the Beast, i.e., in the dethronement. of the Pope by the Italian People (1871). His throne falls, but the Beast survives (see v. 13).

The SIXTH VIAL.

12. και ὁ έκτος] And the sixth poured out his vial upon that great river, the Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the Way might be prepared of the Kings who come from the sunrising.

The mention of the Euphrates reminds us that the Vision concerns the Power which sits upon the Beast, and is the mystical Babylon (xvii. 1-5).

What is it's EUPHRATES?

In the Apocalypse, Babylon is not the literal city; and Euphrates, the river of Babylon, is to be understood spiritually. See

There is an allusion here to the manner in which the literal or Assyrian Babylon was taken; namely, by the drying up of its great River, the River Euphrates.

It has been said, indeed, by some learned persons (e. g. Hengstenberg) that the Apocalypse does not derive any of its imagery from events related by Heathen writers, such as Herodotus and Xenophon, who describe the taking of Babylon by Cyrus, when he had drained the Euphrates from its bed, and made for his army a passage by the dry channel into the city.

This may be true; but it is to be remembered, that the drying up of the Euphrates by Cyrus, as a preparation for the cap-ture of Babylon, is not only described by heathen historians, Herodotus (i. 190), and Xenophon (Cyrop. vii. 5), but was also predicted by the Holy Spirit Himself, speaking by the mouth of the Hebrew Prophets, Isaiah (xliv. 27) and Jeremiah (l. 38;

It cannot reasonably be doubted, that St. John here refers to that circumstance; and this reference to the means which led to the capture of the literal Babylon, has been rightly recognized by the ancient Expositors: e. g. Haymo, who says, "Euphrates quippe fluvius Babyloniæ est; Medi et Persæ hunc diviserunt fluvium, et per ejus alveum ingressi sunt Babyloniam."

The glory and strength of the literal Babylon was the Euphrates; and its channel was made dry by Cyrus, and so Babylon was taken.

The glory and strength of the mystical Babylon is her Supremacy, spiritual and secular, which have blended their streams in a swelling and navigable flood; by which her ships have gone forth, like those of a Merchant City, and riches have flowed into her bosom from all nations of the earth.

Accordingly, an Expositor of the Apocalypse, who lived in the fourteenth century, Peter Olivi, thus speaks, "The Primacy of the Pope, and the multitude of those who are subject to him, are, as it were, a River Euphrates, which hinders the passage of the Kings of the East;" and obstructs the expeditions of those who desire to see the Evangelical restoration of the Christian Church. See Baluzii Miscell. i. p. 213, sqq. The tide of this Papal Euphrates, which has long impeded the march of the Kings of the East, is already ebbing, and will one day be dried up, and open a way for them.

What is this WAY?

In Scripture language "the way" is the "Way of God;" the "Way of Salvation." See above, Acts ix. 2; xvi. 17; xix. 9. 23; xxii. 4; xxiv. 14. 22.

Who are the KINGS of the EAST?

The expression is figurative, and to be understood spiritually. The words rendered Kings from the East are of Basiless of and ανατολης ηλίου: that is, the Kings from the rising of the Sun.

The Sun here is Christ. He is "the Sun of Righteousness rising with healing on His wings" (Mal. iv. 2). "He is the Day-spring ('Ανατολή) from on high" (see on Luke i. 78; cp. Zech. iii. 8; vi. 12, where Christ is called 'Ανατολή in LXX).

In the Apocalypse the Church is clothed with the Sun, xii.

1, that is, with Christ; and the Angel who seals the elect comes from the rising of the Sun, vii. 2; and Christ says, "I Jesus am the bright and Morning Star," xxii. 16; cp. ii. 28.

The above interpretation is given by the ancient Expositors.

See Aug.? Bede, Haymo, and others. The words of Bede are, "The saints are the Kings of the East, whose way is made open by the drying up of the Euphrates."

The reference here made to the capture of the literal Babylon, as prefiguring the fall of the mystical Babylon, is fraught with practical instruction at the present time;

(1) Some persons may now be in danger of being deluded by the confident language and bearing of Rome. They may imagine that a cause pursued with such sanguine reliance must be good. But let them remember the parallel-Babylon. Its streets echoed with music; its halls resounded with mirth and revelry; the king's guards were intoxicated at the gates of the city and at the wery doors of the palace, and the vessels of God were on the table at the royal banquet, when the fangers of a man's hand came forth from the wall,—and Babylon fell. See Dan. v. 5, and Isa. xxi. compared with Xenophon, Cyrop. vii. 5.

So it may be with the Papacy. It may be most infatuated

when most in peril. It may vaunt its power, and make new aggressions, and put forth new doctrines, and be entranced in a dream of security, when its doom is nigh. And, as the great river, the river Euphrates, the glory and bulwark of Babylon, became a road for the Conqueror of the city, so the swelling stream of Rome's temporal and spiritual Supremacy, which has now flowed on so proudly for so many centuries, and has served for the aggrandizement of the Papacy, may be in God's hands the means and occasion of its fall. The reason of this is obvious. The Papacy puts forth lofty claims, above all human pretensions, and rivalling the divine attributes. Such claims as these, uttered in proud language, and resting on unsound foundations, provoke the indignation and hostility of men-and how much more of Him who is a jealous God, and will punish all usurpations of His own Prerogatives! The Papal Supremacy will one day be dried up, and will supply the appointed means of the Papal downfall. It will be like the channel of the Euphrates, and give an entrance to its enemies, into the beleaguered city.

(2) It is said by St. John, that the Euphrates is to be dried up, in order that the way of the Kings from the East may be

Cyrus, "the shepherd" of God (Isa. xliv. 28), "the anointed of God" (Isa. xlv. 1), the King who was raised up from the East (Isa. xli. 2. 25), for the preparation of whose way God dried up the rivers (Isa. xliv. 27), was a signal instrument for executing God's counsel, and for performing all God's pleasure (Isa. xliv. 28; xlvi. 11), not only in punishing Babylon for its pride, cruelty, blasphemy, and idolatry (see Isa. xlvi. and xlvii. Dan. v. 22-24, and Hab. ii. 5-20), but also in delivering God's people from their captivity in Babylon, and for restoring Jerusalem (Isa. xliv. 28. Ezra i. and ii.). See the excellent remarks in Dean Jackson, on the Creed, v. 404-414, book vi. pt. ii. ch. xxvi. Dean Prideaux's Connexion, B.c. 538-536.

From the past history of the literal Babylon we may gather some anticipations with regard to the future fate of that Power which is compared to Babylon in the Apocalypse-the Power of Rome. The drying up of the Euphrates for the march of the Persian King, and the consequent capture of the literal Babylon by Cyrus, was, in God's hands, the occasion of the liberation of the literal Israel; and of the rebuilding of the literal Jerusalem.

It may reasonably be expected, that the drying up of the Papal Euphrates, in order to expedite the march of the spiritual soldiers of Him Who was typified by Cyrus, and Who is the true King from the East, JESUS CHRIST, and the fall of the mystical Babylon, may be preparatory to the deliverance of many of God's People, who are now in spiritual bondage at Babylon, and for their restoration to their true home, in the Spiritual Sion, the Christian Church.

Perhaps, also, in God's divine purpose it may not be without its gracious results to God's own ancient People, the JEWS.

It is, and long has been, a deeply-rooted opinion among the Jews, that, as the Restoration of their forefathers by Cyrus did not take place till Babylon was taken, and then immediately ensued, so "the Redemption of Israel cannot be accomplished before Rome is destroyed." See R. Kimchi in Abdiam ארום הדיה השוצח ישראל cum devastabitur Roma (Edom), erit redemptio Israeli; cp. Mede's Works, p. 902.

There is much reason in this supposition:

τῶν ἀπὸ ἀνατολῶν ἡλίου. 13 k Καὶ εἶδον ἐκ τοῦ στόματος τοῦ δράκοντος, καὶ ἐκ k 1 John 4. 1, s. τοῦ στόματος τοῦ θηρίου, καὶ ἐκ τοῦ στόματος τοῦ ψευδοπροφήτου πνεύματα £19.20. £20.10. τρία ἀκάθαρτα, ὡς βάτραχοι· 14 1 εἰσὶ γὰρ πνεύματα δαιμονίων ποιοῦντα σημεῖα, ½ Thess. 2.9. ἃ ἐκπορεύεται ἐπὶ τοὺς βασιλεῖς τῆς οἰκουμένης ὅλης, συναγαγεῖν αὐτοὺς εἰς ch. 13. 13, 14. αὐτοῦ· ἴνα μὴ γυμνὸς περιπατῆ, καὶ βλέπωσι τὴν ἀσχημοσύνην αὐτοῦ.

For, when we consider the stumbling-blocks which the Papacy places in the way of the conversion of the Jews, by adding the Apocryphal Books,—as of equally divine authority,—to the Hebrew Scriptures, and by its adoration of the Blessed Virgin, and of Saints, Angels, and Images,—idolatrous practices, which the Jews, having once so severely suffered for Idolatry, regard with the greatest abhorrence,-we cannot but believe, with humble submission to the mysterious counsels of Divine Providence, that there is a solemn truth in this their popular conviction; and that the spiritual Redemption of Israel will be ushered in by the fall

It may also be reasonably supposed, that together with this reference to the drying up of the Euphrates, previously to the capture of Babylon, and the liberation of God's People, by Cyrus marching from the East, there is also an allusion to the circumstances of the drying up of the River Jordan to facilitate the passage of Joshua, before the capture of Jericho: see Josh. iv.

This is the more probable, because there is a constant retro-spect in the Apocalypse to the circumstances of the Exodus, and to the pilgrimage in the wilderness, and to the victorious entrance under Joshua, into Canaan, the type of Heaven. See above concerning the Trumpets, viii. 6.

It is also remarkable, that in the book of Joshua there is a marked emphasis laid on the fact that he and his army came into Canaan from the sunrising: see Josh. i. 15; iv. 19, where the Septuagint has ήλίου ἀνατολάς—the words here used by St.

If this be so, we may derive another anticipation from this

The drying up of the stream of the Papal Supremacy may be preparatory to new victories to be achieved by Christ the Divine Joshua, and to the overthrow of the Jerichoes of this world, and to the glorious entrance of His faithful soldiers into their promised Land, and to the full and final possession of their everlasting inheritance in heaven.

Three UNCLEAN SPIRITS come forth from the mouth of the Dragon, and of the First and Second Beast; and gather together the kings of the whole world for the great conflict of ARMA-GEDDON, against Christ.

13. καὶ είδον] And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs from out of the mouth of the dragon, and from out of the mouth of the beast, and from out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth upon the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty.

Here we are again reminded of Egypt and its plagues. "Aaron stretched his hand over the waters of Egypt, and Frogs came up and covered the land" (Exod. viii. 6). "Their land brought forth Frogs; yea, even in their Kings' chambers"

(Ps. cv. 30).

Aaron brought up Frogs on Egypt; and the Magicians of Egypt did the same; they also brought up Frogs; but this was their last action of a supernatural kind. When Aaron smote the dust of the earth, and it became lice, the Magicians attempted to do the same, but they could not, and they said, "This is the finger of God!" (Exod. viii. 19.) The Dragon, the Beast, and the False Prophet are here seen leagued together; and as it was with the literal Egypt, so it will be with them; they will send forth frogs; but as the ancient Interpreters have observed, this will be their last struggle, as it was of the Magicians, and be the omen of their defeat. As St. Paul says, speaking of the Magicians of Egypt, they shall proceed no further (2 Tim. iii. 8, 9).

The Apostle St. Paul, in the passage first cited, appears to offer an explanation of the meaning of the sending forth of frogs by the Magicians of the Papal Egypt, —"They are men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith," "men who have the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof" (see note on 2 Tim. iii. 1-9), "lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers.

St. Paul has there described a confederacy like that in this Apocalyptic Vial, where the Dragon or Satan, the Beast, and the False Prophet are united. He represents a combination of corrupt Religion having a form of Godliness, and allied with Lawlessness and Infidelity.

These emissaries thus leagued together will endeavour to enlist the world in a campaign against true Religion. They will draw out their forces in terrible array; and while Christ, the King from the East, is marshalling His legions from the bright Dayspring under His heavenly banner, they will come forth from the realms of darkness, and muster their forces for the conflict. Out of His mouth comes a sharp sword (xix. 15); from their mouth, frogs, unclean spirits, which shun the fresh streams of divine Truth, and dwell in the slime and quagmire of sordid cogitations, loving the slough of debasing lusts, or the misty glimmerings of false Philosophy and worldly Policy, and yet are puffed up with pride, and speak swelling words, and come forth in the evening of the World's existence, and make it ring with their shrill

Such are they who do not own that the glory of the Highest, and the eternal happiness of men, are the true ends, and right reasons, and immutable laws of all Government, secular and spiritual; but limit its aims to earth, and degrade it into an abject slave of human opinions, and human appetites. Such are they, who do not receive the doctrines of Religion as God has been pleased to reveal them, but would make themselves the standards and oracles of Truth, and would make Truth to vary with their own proud and fickle caprices. In a word, such are they who do not raise their eyes upward to the sun and stars of God's Power, Providence, and Wisdom, set in the clear vault of His glorious firmament, but look downward to earth, and judge of the things of heaven as they are reflected in the watery mirror of the low pools and miry marshes of their own minds.

These unclean spirits, it is said, work miracles.

We are, therefore, to be prepared to hear of strange apparitions. The emissaries of whom St. John speaks will be permitted to show "signs and wonders, with all power, after the working of Satan," Matt. xxiv. 24. 2 Thess. ii. 9; as the Magicians of Egypt were with their enchantments, Exod. vii. 11. 22; so as to deceive, if it were possible, the very elect, Matt. xxiv. 24. Mark xiii. 22.

Further: These spirits, it is added, go forth upon the Kings of the Earth to gather them to the Battle.

The Kings of the Earth are opposed to the Kings of the East, that is, they are opposed to Christ and to those whom Christ has made to be Kings (v. 10), by their incorporation in Himself, Whose Kingdom is the Kingdom of Heaven (xvii. 14), and Who is King of Kings (xix. 16).

The unclean spirits are said to go forth upon (ini) the kings of the World; which seems to denote, that these spirits will not only address themselves to, but also will exercise some influence upon and over, these kings. Cp. Winer, § 49, p. 362.

Thus St. John foreshows that the Papacy, when distressed by the drying up of its Euphrates, will resort for help even to godless powers; that it will advocate doctrines of political licentiousness, and flatter Rulers with seducing words for their own advantage; that it will countenance men in disobeying the divine Word, as the Egyptian Magicians encouraged Pharaoh in his resistance to God; that it will palliate crimes which the Gospel condemns; that its emissaries will encourage disloyalty and Insurrection against Christian powers opposed to themselves, and will invoke benedictions on Rebellion, and be like Hierarchs of Revolution.

The scene of the future conflict is called "in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon," of which more will be said hereafter. See

But in the mean time, while these preparations are going on Christ mercifully interposes and pronounces a warning.

Preparations for Armageddon.

The conflict itself does not take place yet; it is described hereafter (see xix. 19-21). We have now only a view of the gathering together of the hostile forces against Christ.

v. 16. And they gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon.

As to the reading of the word, B and some Cursives have Μαγεδού, or Μαγεδδών; A has Αρμαγεδών, and ποταμόν for τόπου. Lachmann and Tisch. print the word with an aspirate, 'Αρμαγεδών, and ancient Latin authorities have Hermayedon.
What is meant by Ar-MAGEDDON, or Har-magedon?

Observe that St. John here specially calls attention to the Hebrew etymology, by saying that the place is called in the Hebrew tongue Ar-magedon, or Har-magedon.

Ar-mageddon, or Har-magedon, is formed of two Hebrew words; the one קה, har, signifying a Mountain, the other, a cutting to pieces; from קבָר, gadad, exscidit; and thus it means the Mountain of excision, or of slaughter.

When the prophet Zechariah is speaking of the destruction of all nations that come against the City of God, he says that there will be a great mourning in the valley of Megiddon (Zech. xii. 9); and Megiddon is there translated by the Septuagint Interpreters, cut up, or destroyed. LXX, Zech. xii. 11, ροῶνος ἐν πεδίφ ἐκκοπτομένου. See above on Zech. xii. 9—11.

Lightfoot and Vitringa, who have called attention to this etymology, do not seem to have been aware that they had been anticipated by Andreas and Arethas ad loc., and in the Ancient Greek Catena, Cramer, p. 420, and also by Œcumenius, ibid. p. 552, who deserve to be cited. Catena, Cramer, p. 420, xvi. 16, τόπου τὸυ καλούμενου Ἑβραϊστὶ Ἑρμαγεδών τόπου νῦν τὸν καιρὸν άκουστέον τῷ καιρῷ τοίνυν τούτῳ οἱ ἀπὸ πονηρῶν πνευμάτων ἀπατηθέντες καταλαμβανόμενοι τεύξονται διακοπῆς τοῦτο γὰρ Ερμαγεδών ή Έβραϊκή λέξι εἰς τὴν Ἑλλάδα διάλεκτον διαπορό-μευομένη νοεῖν παρέχει.— Œcumenius, ibid. p. 552, τὸ 'Αρμαγεδών διακοπή ή διακοπτομένη έρμηνεύεται, ἐκεῖ γὰρ τὰ ἔθνη συναγόμενα ἐκκόπτεσθαι νοεῖν ἀκόλουθον.

The word Armageddon, then, signifies a Mountain of slaughter: like that valley of decision or cutting off, described by the Prophet Joel (iii. 14), and it is a figurative expression similar to that in the same Prophet, namely, the valley of Jeho-shaphat (Joel iii. 2. 12), or judgment of God. There may be also a reference in this word to the Hebrew root at together in a troop for an attack. See on Joel iii. 2. 12. 14.

The word Ar-mageddon seems also designed to signify a defeat and slaughter, such as that of the Kings of Canaan at Megiddo, in the region of Galilee, wrought by a miraculous interposition of Almighty God, discomfiting the vast and terrible army of Sisera and his confederate Princes. "The Kings came and fought, then fought the Kings of Canaan in Taanach by the waters of Megiddo. They (the armies of God) fought from heaven; the stars in their courses fought against Sisera" (Judges v. 10, 20).

The Holy Spirit, by the mouth of David, specially speaks of these Kings as types of God's foes, in their sin and doom. "Do Thou to them as unto the Midianites; unto Sisera, and unto Jabin, at the brook of Kison; who perished at Endor, and became as the dung of the earth" (Ps. lxxxiii. 9).

These Kings had oppressed Israel, and were routed by the army of God at Megiddo; and, in like manner, earthly powers will rise against Christ and His Church, and be defeated in a marvellous manner, in a great encounter, which is called by St.

It will also be remembered, that King Josiah was defeated and mortally wounded at Megiddo (2 Chron. xxxv. 20. 22); and though Josiah was a pious King, yet, when at Megiddo, he was disobeying a Divine command, given him by the Prophet Jeremiah. 1 Esd. i. 25-32, where the LXX has Μαγεδδώ, Μαmeddon. See also S. Jerome, ad Ctesiphontem, ad finem, and Ep. 86, ad Eustach.—Campi Mageddo Josiæ necis conscii. He was endeavouring to repel Pharaoh-Necho, who was marching towards the river Euphrales to besiege Babylon, and so Josiah was then an ally of Babylon. See above on 2 Chron. xxxv. 22.

Thus the name Megiddo or Mageddo had been prepared for St. John as a word denoting the scene of a defeat and slaughter of God's foes, and allies of the city of the Beast.

Megiddo itself was in a Valley (2 Chron. xxxv. 22. Zech. xii. 11), and Harmagedon is a Mountain; but this circumstance does not present any difficulty; on the contrary, it may serve to remind the reader that the word is not to be understood literally, but to be regarded as a symbolical word; and the characteristic significance of the Mountain of destruction is, that the defeat will be conspicuous to the world.

This gathering together of the Kings of the Earth to Armageddon, or Har-magedon, at the instance of unclean spirits going forth from out of the mouth of the Dragon, the Beast, and False Prophet, intimates (as has been observed by ancient Expositors, Primasius, Haymo, and others), that there will be a muster of earthly powers, combined together in an unholy confederacy and league of godless Policy and corrupt Religion, like that of Pilate with the Chief Priests against the Lord and His Anointed: and it pre-announces the signal discomfiture and manifest cutting off of those powers, as on a lofty Mountain, visible to all, by the might of Him Who is the Conqueror on the White Horse, and Who will slay His enemics with the Sword that goeth forth out of His mouth (xix. 15).

But it is only the gathering together of these forces, which is ribed here. The description of the conflict of Har-magedon, described here. The description of the conflict of Har-magedon, and the issue of it, is reserved for a later period in the prophecy. See xix. 19-21, where it is said, "I saw the Beast, and the Kings of the Earth, and their Armies having been gathered together (συνηγμένα) to fight the battle (ποιήσαι τον πόλεμον), with Him that sitteth upon the Horse, and with His armies. And the Beast was taken, and the False Prophet that is with him, and they were cast into the lake of fire, and the rest were killed with the sword of Him that sitteth on the Horse.

This conflict does not take place yet. See below, xix. 19-21.

The SEVENTH VIAL.

In the mean time the SEVENTH VIAL brings with it a judgment on the mystical Babylon, which is the capital city of the Empire of the Beast.

17-21.] And the Seventh Angel poured out his vial upon the air; and there came a great voice from the temple, from the throne, saying, It is done.

And there were lightnings, and voices, and thunders, and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, so great.

And the great City was made into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell; and Babylon the Great came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fury of his wrath.

And every island fled away, and mountains were not found. And there cometh down upon the men great hail out of μησαν οἱ ἄνθρωποι τὸν Θεὸν ἐκ τῆς πληγῆς τῆς χαλάζης, ὅτι μεγάλη ἐστὶν ἡ πληγή αὐτης σφόδρα.

heaven, about the weight of a talent: and the men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof is great exceedingly.

The Air (ahp) here (v. 17) is the region of darkness, in which the powers of evil abide. See Eph. ii. 2.

The great City Babylon is divided into three parts, and the cities of the Nations or Gentiles (τῶν ἐθνῶν) fall. These cities are those which are opposed to Christ, and to the Christian Sion. This Vision seems to be now in course of fulfilment, by the division of the Roman Catholic World into two opposite parties, some accepting, and others rejecting, the new dogma of Papal Infallibility.

Babylon the Great comes into remembrance in the sight of God to give to her the cup of the wine of the fury of His wratt (cp. above, xiv. 8).

The fuller description of Babylon the Great, her site, her wealth, her magnificence, her sins, and her fall, is contained in the two following chapters, the xviith and xviiith.

In the mean time, it is to be observed that although in this Vial Babylon, the Great City, the capital of the Empire of the Beast, comes into remembrance before God, and is now about to fall; yet, as appears from the Prophecy, the Beast itself, and its ally the False Prophet, will not be destroyed with the Fall of Babylon, but will survive that fall; and will appear in hostile array against Christ, in the conflict of Armageddon (see xix. 19).

Yet further, even after their defeat and doom, described in xix. 20, Satan, or the Dragon, will still remain to wage war against Christ (xx. 8); but finally he also will be defeated and cast into the Lake of Fire (xx. 10).

Thus, then, the following chronological series of events is presented in the Prophecy;—

(1) The drying up of the spiritual Euphrates, the river of the mystical Babylon, to prepare the way for Christ's people, the Kings of the East, coming against the mystical Babylon (xvi. 12).

(2) The mustering of the Kings of the Earth, or Powers opposed to the kingdom of Heaven, at the instance of the emissaries of the Dragon, the Beast, and False Prophet, against Christ and his armies (xvi. 14).

(3) God's Judgments upon Babylon, the capital City of the st. The Fall of Babylon.

ETERNITY.

But, before these events are presented to the view, we now have in the next chapter a prophetic enlargement concerning the great City, the Mystical Babylon; and concerning the Beast, upon which she sits; and concerning her splendour, her sins, and her fall;

CH. XVII. 1.  $\kappa \alpha l \hat{\eta} \lambda \theta \epsilon \nu$ ] And there came one of the seven angels who had the seven vials, and talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will show unto Thee the Judgment of the great Harlot that sitteth on the many waters: with whom the kings of the earth committed fornication, and they who are dwellers in the earth were made drunk with the wine of her fornication.

And he carried me away in the Spirit into a wilderness: and I saw a Woman sitting upon a scarlet-coloured Beast, full of the names of blasphemy, having seven heads, and ten horns.

And the Woman was arrayed in purple, and scarlet, and gilded over with gold, and precious stones, and pearls: having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and the uncleanness of her fornication: and upon her forehead a name written, Mystery, Babylon the Great, the Mother of the Harlots, and the abominations of the Earth.

VOL. II .- PART IV.

And I saw the Woman drunken with the blood of the Saints, and with the blood of the Martyrs of Jesus; and when I saw her I wondered with great wonder.

And the Angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou wonder? I will tell thee the Mystery of the Woman and of the Beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and the ten horns.

The Beast that thou sawest, was, and is not, and is about to ascend out of the bottomless pit, and to go into perdition, and they who are dwellers on the earth, whose names are not written in the book of life, will wonder when they see the Beast, that it was, and is not, and will appear.

Here is the understanding which hath wisdom; the Seven Heads are Seven Mountains, upon which the Woman sitteth.

And they are Seven Kings; the five are fallen, the one is, the other is not yet come : and when he is come, he must continue a little while.

And the Beast that was, and is not, even he is an eighth

(King) and is from the seven, and goeth into perdition.

And the Ten Horns which thou sawest are Ten Kings, who have not received a kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the Beast. These have one mind, and give their power and strength unto the Beast. These will make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb will overcome them, for He is Lord of Lords, and King of Kings, and they that are with Him called, and chosen, and faithful (will overcome them).

And he saith unto me, The Waters which thou sawest where the Harlot sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues.

And the Ten Horns which thou sawest and the Beast, these will hate the Harlot, and will make her desolate and naked, and will devour her flesh, and will burn her utterly with fire. For God put in their hearts to perform His mind, and to perform one mind, and give their kingdom unto the Beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled.

And the Woman which thou sawest is that great City, which reigneth over the kings of the earth.

PRELIMINARY NOTE on this, the XVIITH CHAPTER.

In order to understand this prophecy, it is requisite to ascertain clearly the subject of it.

What is the City of which St. John here speaks?

Certain criteria are supplied by him for the determination of this question.

(1) He says, "Here is the understanding which hath wisdom; the Seven Heads (of the beast) are (that is, they signify, or represent, see i. 19, 20) the Seven Mountains on which the woman sitteth" (v. 9).

(2) He also calls it "the great City," and it is a city which was in existence in his age (see v. 18).

At that time there was one City, a Great City, built on Seven Mountains,-Rome. The name of each of its Seven Mountains is well known: they were the Palatine, Quirinal, Aventine, Cælian, Viminal, Esquiline, Janiculan. In St. John's time Rome was usually called "the Seven-hilled City" (ἡ πόλις ἡ ἐπτάλοφος, urbs septicollis). She was celebrated as such in an annual national festival, the Septimontium. And there is scarcely a Roman Poet of any note, who has not spoken of Rome as a City seated on Seven Mountains,—Virgil, Horace, Tibullus, Propertius, Ovid, Silius Italicus, Statius, Martial, Claudian, Prudentius; in short, the unanimous voice of Roman Poetry, during more than five hundred years, beginning with the age of St. John, proclaimed Rome as "the Seven-hilled City."

The passages referred to from these writers are as follows;

Virgil, Georg. ii. 535. Æn. vi. 784, "Septemque una sibi muro circumdabit arces." Horace, Carmen Sæc. 7, "Di, quibus septem placuere colles." Tibullus, ii. 5, 55, "Carpite nunc tauri de septem montibus herbas." Propertius, iii. 10, 57, "Septem urbs alta jugis toti quæ præsidet orbi." Ovidius, Trist. i. 4, 69, "Sed quæ de septem totum circumspicit orbem Montibus imperii Roma deûmque locus." Silius Italicus, xii. 606, "Defendere tecta Dardana, et in septem discurrere jusserat arces." See also x. 587; xvi. 620. Statius, Silv. iv. 3, 26, "Septem montibus admovere Baias." Martial, iv 64, 11, "Hinc septem dominos videre montes, Et totam licet æstimare Romam." Claudian, xii. 19 (ed. Gesner), "Aurea septem-geminas Roma coronet arces." also xv. 194. Prudentius, de Romano Martyre, 411, "Divûm favore cum puer Mavortius Fundaret arcem septicollem Romulus," καὶ ἐλάλησε μετ' ἐμοῦ, λέγων, Δεῦρο δείξω σοι τὸ κριμα τῆς πόρνης τῆς b Jer. 51. 7. ch. 14. 8. & 18. 3. μεγάλης, της καθημένης ἐπὶ τῶν ὑδάτων τῶν πολλῶν, 2 b μεθ' ἡς ἐπόρνευσαν οἰ

This prophecy of St. John is also illustrated in this respect from another source, equally open to the eyes of the world-Coins.

On the Imperial Coinage of that age, Rome is displayed as a Woman sitting on Seven Hills, as she is represented in the Apocalypse. See the coin of Vespasian, described by Capt. Smyth, Roman Coins, p. 310. Ackerman, i. p. 87, "Rome by the wolf; before, the Tiber personified." It is figured in Gessneri Numismata, Tab. lvii. Cp. Vaillant, p. 30.

(3) St. John gives another criterion by which the Woman is to be identified. He says that she is the reigning city of his " The Woman which thou sawest (he says) is that great City which reigneth (literally, "which hath royal sovereignty"—ή έχουσα βασιλείαν) over the kings of the earth" (v. 18). The reigning City of that age was Rome.

If we refer to the Latin Poets of that time, we find that the epithets commonly applied to Rome are The great; The mighty; The royal Rome; The Queen of Nations; The Eternal City; The Mistress of the World; as, see for example, "Maxima rerum Roma," Virg. Æn. v. 600. 660. Manil. iv. 773. Propert. iv. 1.

Hor. 1 Sat. v. 1. 1 Ep. vii. 44. Ovid, Met. xv. 445.

If, again, we contemplate the public feelings of the World as expressed on the Coins of that period, we there see Rome, as the great City, deified, crowned with a mural diadem, holding in her palm a winged figure of Victory, which bears in its hand a Globe, the symbol of Rome's Conquests and Universal Sway. See the figures described, and the citations collected, in Spence's Polymetis, 243, and Vaillant, Numismata Ærea Imperatorum, Paris, p. 243, and Vaillant, Numismata Ærea Imperatorum, Paris, 1695, p. 205, "Dea Roma; Roma Æterna...dextrâ Victoriam tenens." See also 191, and Gessner, Tab. lviii. and lxii.

The City on Seven Hills is ROME; the great City which reigned over the kings of the earth was ROME.

Therefore the City here described by St. John is ROME.

(4) Next, the City here described by St. John is called by him "Babylon;" "Babylon the Great" (v. 5). He cannot be speaking of the literal Babylon in Assyria; for that was not built on seven Mountains; nor did it then reign over the Kings of the earth.

What he means to say is, that the City of which he is here speaking, resembles Babylon; and it may, therefore, in the figura-tive language commonly used in the Apocalypse, be called

Rome was in many respects a second Babylon. Babylon had been the Queen of the East, in the age of the Hebrew Prophets; and Rome was the Queen of the West, when St. John wrote, Babylon had been called in the Old Testament "the Golden City," "the glory of kingdoms," "the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency." Babylon boasted herself to be Elernal. She said in her heart, "I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God. I shall be a Lady for ever. I am, and none else beside me: I shall not sit as a widow, neither shall I know the loss of children" (Isa. xiii. 19; xiv. 4. 13; xlvii. 7, 8).

In these respects Babylon was imitated by Rome. She also called herself the Golden City, the Eternal City.

The words ROMAE AETERNAE are found on the imperial coins of Rome, e. g. on those of Gallienus, Tacitus, Probus. Gordian, and others. The Bishop of Rome is called Urbis Eternæ xix. 10. The Jupiter of Virgil speaks the national language when he says (Æn. i. 278), "His ego nec metas rerum nec tempora pono; Imperium sine fine dedi."

Again: the King of Babylon "was the rod of God's anger, and the staff of His indignation" against Jerusalem for its rebellion (Isa. x. 5). Babylon was employed by God to punish the sins of Sion, and to lay her walls in the dust.

So, in St. John's age, the Imperial legions of Rome had been sent by God to chastise Jerusalem for her sin in rejecting His Holy Word, and crucifying His beloved Son.

Again: the sacred Vessels of God's Temple at Jerusalem had been carried from Sion to Babylon, and were displayed on the table at the royal banquet in that night, when the fingers of a man's hand came forth from the wall and terrified the Chaldwan

King. (Dan. v. 5, 6.)
So, the sacred Vessels of the Jewish Temple, which were restored by Cyrus, and the Book of the Law, and the Golden Candlestick (Joseph. B. J. vii. 5), and the Table of Shewbread, were carried captive in triumphal procession from Sion to Rome; and even now their effigies may be seen at Rome, near the site of the Roman Forum, carved in sculpture on the marble sides of the triumphal Arch of Titus, the Imperial Conqueror of Jerusalem.

And the Jewish Candlestick is figured on a coin of Vespasian, with the legend "HIEROSOLYMA CAPTA." Gessner, Tab. Iviii.

The Jews commonly gave to Rome the name of Babylon.
See the authorities in Mede's Works, p. 902. Winer, R. W. B.

ii. p. 335, art. Rom.

So did the Christians. See S. Hippolytus, de Christo, § 35, who quotes this and the following chapter. Tertullian, adv. Jud. c. 9; c. Marcion. iii. 13. Euseb. ii. 15. S. Hieron. in Esa. xlvii. 1; and Victorinus, Primasius, and Cassiodorus on this chapter. We may sum up all in the words of S. Augustine, "Rome is a second Babylon" (de Civ. Dei xvi. 17; xviii. 2. 23).

Let us now review the evidence before us. We see that the Woman here described is designated by St.

John-

(1) As a great City, seated on seven Mountains.

(2) As that great City, which in the time of St. John reigned over the Kings of the Earth. And

(3) It is called Babylon.
What City corresponds to this description?

It cannot be the literal Babylon, for she was not built on seven hills, nor was she the Queen of the Earth in St. John's age. It is some great City which then existed and reigned over the Kings of the Earth. Among the great Cities, which then were, one was seated on Seven Hills. She was universally recognized in St. John's age as the Seven-hilled City. She is described as such by the general voice of her own most celebrated writers for five centuries; and she has ever since continued to be so characterized. She is represented as such on her own coinage, the coinage of the World. That City then reigned over the Kings of the Earth. She exercised Universal Sovereignty, and boasted herself Eternal. That same City resembled Babylon in many striking respects: in dominion, in wealth, and in historical acts, especially with regard to the ancient Church and People of God. This same City was commonly called Babylon by St. John's own countrymen, and by his disciples. And, finally, the voice of the Christian Church, in the age of St. John himself, and for many centuries after it, has given an almost unanimous verdict on this subject:-that the Seven-hilled City, the Great City, the Queen of the Earth, Babylon the Great of the Apocalypse, is the City of

This conclusion is so clear and certain, that it is admitted even by the Divines of Papal Rome.

Thus, for example, Cardinal Bellarmine says, "that Rome is signified in the Apocalypse by the name of Babylon" (de Rom. Pont. ii. c. 2, § Præterea, tom. i. p. 232, ed. Colon. 1615). And Cardinal Baronius (Annal. ad A.D. 45, Num. xvi.) owns "that all persons confess that Rome is denoted by the name of Babylon, in the Apocalypse of St. John." "In Apocalypsi Joannis Romam Babylonis notatam esse nomine in confesso est apud omnes."

And the celebrated French Prelate Bossuet, in his Exposition of the Book of Revelation, observes, that "the features (in the Apocalypse) are so marked, that it is easy to decipher Rome under the figure of Babylon." Bossuet, Préf. sur l'Apocalypse, § vii., "C'est une tradition de tous les Pères que la Babylone de l'Apocalypse c'est l'ancienne Rome. Tous les Pères ont tenu le même langage. Avec des traits si marqués c'est une énigme aisée à déchiffrer, que Rome sous la figure de Babylone."

Here then we see the question is brought into a narrow compass. It is affirmed by Romish writers, as well as by others, that Babylon in the Apocalypse is the City of Rome.

But here a separation takes place. The Divines of Papal Rome assert that St. John in this prophecy is speaking of Rome as a City, and not as a Church.

Many of those Divines say, that St. John's prophecy concerned Rome as heathen, but does not concern it as Christian; and they affirm that the prophecies in this chapter, and in the next, predicting the fall of Babylon, have been already fulfilled. They allege, that these prophecies were fulfilled when Rome was taken by the Goths in the fifth century of the Christian era. See Bellarmin. de Pontif. ii. c. 11. Baronius, Annales ad A.D. 45, Num. xviii.; and Bossuet, who says, " La Babylone, dont Saint Jean prédit la chûte, étoit Rome conquérante et son empire: et la chûte de Rome, arrivée sous Alaric, est un dénouement de la prophétie de Saint Jean." Bossuet, Préf. sur l'Apoc. § viii. x., vol. xxiv. of his works, ed. Paris, 1827.

Let us examine this hypothesis.

(1) The destruction of the great City, the Mystical Babylon, is represented in the Apocalypse as a punishment for her sins when brought to a head. "Her sins, it is said, had reached to βασιλείς της γης, καὶ εμεθύσθησαν οι κατοικουντες την γην εκ του οίνου της πορνείας αὐτης.

heaven, and God remembered her iniquities," which had become full. (Rev. xviii. 5.)

But, when Rome was taken by Alaric and the Goths, she had become Christian. As one of the ancient Fathers, S. Jerome, says (c. Jovinian, lib. ii. ad finem), "she had wiped off the blasphemy on her forehead by the confession of the Christian faith." Rome had then ceased to persecute the Christians; and, as we learn from S. Augustine (de Civ. Dei, ad init.), the invasion of the Goths was represented by her heathen writers as a consequence of the anger of the heathen Deities against the City for its neglect of the old religion, and for the favour shown by it to Christianity.

Therefore, the capture of Rome by Alaric cannot have been the destruction which is here foretold in the Apocalypse.

(2) Again: the destruction of Rome, as foretold in the Apocalypse, is to be total and final. It is here prophesied that she will be burnt up with fire (xvii. 16; xviii. 9), and the smoke of her burning shall ascend for ever (xviii. 9. 18; xix. 3); and that she shall be plunged into perdition like a great millstone into the sea, and that she shall be found no more at all (xviii. 21); and that the voice of harpers and musicians shall be no more heard in her, and that no craftsmen shall be found in her, and the light of a candle shall no more shine in her (xviii. 22, 23); in a word, that the city described in the prophecy shall be utterly destroyed.

But this cannot be said to have taken place when Rome was captured by the Goths, nor to have ever taken place—as yet. Rome has not been burnt with fire, and the smoke of her burning does not ascend to heaven. The voice of harpers has not ceased within her. She has not been taken up like a great millstone and plunged into the sea. The sound of music is yet heard in her palaces: they are still adorned with pictures and statues. The riches of her purple, and silk, and scarlet, and pearls, and jewels, are still displayed in the attire of her Pontiff and her Cardinals in their conclaves. Cavalcades of horses and chariots, and trains of religious processions move along her streets; clouds of frankincense arise in her temples, which on high festivals are hung with tapestry, and brocade, and embroidery; her precious vessels glitter on her altars; her rich merchandise of gold and silver is still purchased; her dainty and goodly things are not yet departed She still sits as a Queen and glorifies herself and says, "I am no widow" (xviii. 17). She still claims divine titles, and calls herself ' Eternal.'

Therefore, we are brought again to the conclusion, that the prophecies of the Apocalypse concerning the fall of Rome, were not fulfilled in the destruction of Rome in the fifth century, but concern the Rome of a later age.

(3) These Prophecies also declare, that Rome, after her destruction, will become a desolate wilderness, and the habitation of unclean creatures. St. John's words are, "Babylon the Great fell, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and the cage of every unclean and hateful bird" (xviii. 2). Will it be allowed by Romish Divines that this is now fulfilled? Will they allow that after its capture by the Goths Rome became, and is still, "the habitation of devils, the hold of every foul spirit, the cage of every unclean and hateful bird?" Could she be described in such dark colours as these?

Certainly not. After the taking of Rome by Alaric, Rome had many holy men within her. She was still a source of blessings to other nations. She had a Gregory the Great, Bishop of Rome, who sent an Augustine to England, at the end of the sixth century, and whose writings will ever be read, and whose memory will ever be revered, with grateful regard by the faithful.

Even now, we are fully persuaded, Almighty God has some people in Rome. He Himself says, on the very eve of her fall, "Come out of her, My People" (see below, xviii. 4). And in the language of Romish Divines, Rome is still the "Capital of Christendom," the "Holy City," the "spiritual Sion." They call her Sovereign "the Supreme Pontiff," "Holy Father;" his States are "the States of the Church;" and his throne, "the Holy See."

Therefore these Apocalyptic prophecies were not fulfilled in

But it is allowed by Romish Divines, as well as by other writers, that they concern Rome. Therefore they concern Rome, not as she was when Pagan, but they concern her such as she became, after she had ceased to be Pagan, and after long-continued sin, which at length will reach to heaven, and bring down God's judgments upon her, and involve her, as the prophecy reveals, in utter destruction, total desolation, and irreparable ruin.

When Rome had ceased to be Heathen, and when her Imperial Power was extinct, and when also the Imperial Power of her German Masters was broken (see below on v. 10), Rome became subject to the Bishop of that city; and after the lapse of some centuries, the Bishop of Rome acquired a spiritual and temporal sway, under the titles which he then assumed of Sovereign Pontiff and Supreme Head of the Universal Church, and Vicar of Christ upon Earth, and "Ruler of the World" (see above on xiii. 5-7, and below on v. 10). He stood in a more lofty eminence than had ever been attained by the Cæsars. That position has now been occupied by him for eight hundred years.

Here then we already see reason to believe that these prophecies, which are generally acknowledged to concern Rome, and which were not fulfilled in Heathen Rome, refer to that City in which the Bishop of Rome now lives and reigns, and in which he has reigned for many centuries.

In order to escape this conclusion, some other Romish Divines allege, that although—as they candidly confess—these Prophecies cannot fairly be said to have been fulfilled in ancient Heathen Rome, yet it is possible that Rome may again become Heathen, and that these Prophecies may then be fulfilled in her.

This is the hypothesis of some learned Romish Theologians. It is maintained by Suarez, Viegas, Ribera, Lessius, Menochius, Cornelius à Lapide, and others, particularly Dr. Manning in our own day. This hypothesis is important to be noticed, as an avowal on their part that the other theory above stated of their co-religionists-Bellarmine, Baronius, and Bossuet, and many more (see above p. 250)—who say that these prophecies were fulfilled in ancient Heathen Rome—is untenable.

Here then is a remarkable phenomenon. Here are two discordant schools of Romish Theologians. The one school says, that these Apocalyptic Prophecies concern the Rome that was destroyed more than a thousand years ago. The other school affirms, that they relate to the Rome of some future time. They differ widely from each other in the interpretation of these Prophecies, which, as they all agree, concern their own City. And yet they say that they have an Infallible Interpreter of Scripture resident at Rome! And they boast much of their own unity!

There is something ominous in this discord. But it makes their agreement more striking. It confirms the proof that these Apocalyptic prophecies concern Rome.

Both these schools of Roman Catholic Expositors allow that Babylon is Rome. A remarkable avowal; which is carefully to

The hypothesis that these prophecies concern some future heathen Rome is irreconcileable with the language of St. John.

St. John refers to Rome reigning over the Kings of the Earth in his own day. He then proceeds to reveal her future history. No intimation is given of any break in the thread of his prophecy. But if Babylon is some heathen Rome, in ages yet to come, as well as the Rome of St. John's age, there must be a chasm in that history of nearly two thousand years.

St. John also says, that the Beast on which the Woman sitteth is an eighth King or Kingdom; and that five heads, or Kingdoms, had already fallen in St. John's age; that the sixth was then in being; that the seventh would continue only for a short time, and then the Beast with the woman sitting upon it, would be revealed; and the Beast, in that phase, is declared to be of the seven and to be an eighth. See below on v. 11.

It is clear that an uninterrupted succession of Powers is here represented, and that consequently the Beast must have appeared long ago, with the Woman sitting upon it.

Therefore, since it is generally agreed that these prophecies concern Rome, and since they were not fulfilled in Heathen Rome; and since they concern Rome as she was to become after she had ceased to be Heathen; and since, after she had ceased to be Heathen, she became in course of time subject to the Bishop of Rome, and has continued to be subject to him for many hundred years, therefore, our conclusion is, that they concern Rome as the capital City of the Bishop of Rome, and of the Papal World.

After a careful meditation, for many years, upon these pro-phecies concerning the Apocalyptic Babylon, the present writer here solemnly, in the presence of the Omniscient Searcher of hearts, Who dictated these awful predictions, records this as his deliberate judgment upon them, probably for the last time. He has endeavoured seriously to examine all the objections which have been urged against this interpretation. He has found that those objections, as far as they have any validity, affect some minor incidents and subordinate details in the mode in which that interpretation is sometimes stated; but do not in the least affect the principle, or in any way impair the soundness of that inter-pretation itself. And when he has proceeded to examine other different interpretations of these Prophecies-such, for instance, as that interpretation which applies these Prophecies to Heathen

3 · Καὶ ἀπήνεγκέ με εἰς ἔρημον ἐν πνεύματι, καὶ εἶδον γυναῖκα καθημένην ἐπὶ θηρίον κόκκινον, γέμον δνόματα βλασφημίας, έχον κεφαλάς έπτα καὶ κέρατα

Rome, or to some Infidel Power-he has found all those other interpretations to be so vain and futile, and so inconsistent and irreconcileable with the general scope and language of these Prophecies themselves, that even on this account he has been confirmed in the conviction that the Interpretation adopted in these notes, is the true, and only true Interpretation.

We may now proceed to consider this chapter in detail, and see whether this conclusion is confirmed by such an examination. 1. δεθρο δείξω σοι] Come, I will show thee the judgment of the great Harlot.

The City of Rome is here called a Harlot. Is this word applicable to a Church? Is it applicable to the Church of Rome? Such is Christ's love for His faithful people, that He is pleased to speak of His own relation to them under the term of marriage. The Church is His Spouse (John iii. 29. Eph. v. 23-32). "I have espoused you, as a chaste Virgin, to Christ," says St. Paul to the Corinthians (2 Cor. xi. 2). Hence spiritual unfaithfulness to Christ is represented in Scripture as adultery.

This idea runs through the whole Book of Revelation. the Church of Pergamus there are said to be some who hold the doctrines of Balaam, and cause others to commit fornication (ii. 20). At Thyatira there is a Jezebel, who, by her false teaching, seduces Christ's servants; and they who commit adultery with her are threatened with tribulation (ii. 20. 22).

On the other hand, the faithful, who follow the Lamb whi-thersoever He goeth, are said to be Virgins, and not to have been defiled with women; that is, not sullied with spiritual harlotry (xiv. 4).

The name Harlot, therefore, describes a Church, which has fallen from her first love, and has gone after other Lords, and given to them the honour due to CHRIST alone.

But, here it is objected by some Romish Divines-If a faithless Church had been here intended by St. John, he would not have called her a Harlot, but an Adulteress, and he would not have designated her by the name of a heathen city, Babylon, which never owned the true God, but by the name of some City, such as Samaria, which once knew Him, and afterwards fell away from Him. (Bossuet, Préface sur l'Apocalypse, vii.-ix.)

But to this allegation it may be replied, that a faithless Church may be, and often is, called in Scripture a Harlot, when she mixes false doctrine and worship with the true faith. Isaiah says concerning Jerusalem, the ancient Church of God, "How is the faithful city become a harlot!" (Isa. i. 21.) And Jeremiah, "Thou hast played the harlot with many lovers." (Jer. iii. 1.) And Hosca, "Though Israel play the harlot, let not Judah offend." (Hosca iv. 15.)

The original word which is uniformly used for harlot by St. John in the Apocalypse is  $\pi \delta \rho \nu \eta$ ,  $Porn \epsilon$ . And this same word  $(\pi \delta \rho \nu \eta)$ , or its derivatives, is used in the passages just quoted, and is employed in the Greek Septuagint Version of the Prophets of is employed in the Greek Septuagint Version of the Prophets of the Old Testament, at least fifty times, to describe the spiritual fornication, that is, the corrupt doctrine and practice of the Churches of Israel and Judah; e. g. Ezek, xvi. 15, 22, 33, 35; xxiii. 7, 8, 11, 14, 17—19, 29, 35, 43, 45; xliii. 7, 9, Jer. ii. 20; iii. 1, 2, 6, 9; xiii. 27. Hosea ii. 2, 4, 5, 10; iv. 12, 15, 18; v. 4; vi. 10; ix. 1. Isa, i. 21. Micah i. 7. Nahum iii. 4. So εκπορνεύω very frequently.

Therefore the word Harlot does designate a Church; and if the Church of Rome is described by that name in the Apocalypse, then the word harlot, as applied to her, indicates the multitude of her sins. And the name Babylon (like Sodom in Isaiah i. 10) applied to Judah, the ancient Church of God, shows the heinousness of her iniquity. Cp. Rev. xi. 8.

The question therefore is-

Has the Church of Rome been unfaithful to Christ? Does she teach new doctrines, and draw any of His servants from their allegiance to Him, their only Lord, to other objects of veneration and love? Is she thus guilty of harlotry?

This question receives a sufficient answer from the Twelve new articles of the Trent Creed, which is imposed on all by the Church of Rome; and from her worship of Saints, and especially of the Blessed Virgin Mary. See above on the xiiith chapter. The Harlot is also described as sitting as a Queen "on the many waters;" and these are explained in the prophecy to signify peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues (v. 15).

The Bishop of Rome, when he is crowned, is saluted as Rector Orbis, Ruler of the World (see above, on xiii. 5-7). His Coins declare his claims to Universal Supremacy. "The nation and Kingdom which will not serve thee shall perish." " All Kings shall serve him:" such are the inscriptions upon them. (See Numismata Pontificum, pp. 50, 58, ed. Paris, 1679.) The reigning Pontiff, on the 10th Feb. 1848, used the following words in an address to the people of Rome, "It is a great gift of heaven that our three millions of subjects have two hundred millions of brethren of every tongue and every nation. It is this which in other times, and in the midst of the confusion of the Roman world, has ensured the safety of Rome."

Thus in the claim of the Church of Rome to exercise sway over all Kings and Nations of the earth, and in that amplitude of dominion and plenitude of felicity, to which she has appealed for so many generations as an evidence that she is favoured by Heaven, we recognize another proof that the Babylon of the Apocalypse, the Woman which "sitteth upon the many waters," which are "peoples, multitudes, nations, and tongues," is the City of Papal Rome, the capital of the Papal Empire.

This interpretation is no new one. It dates from the time in which Papal Rome displayed herself to the world in those colours which characterize the Harlot City of this chapter. It may be traced in the writings of Peter of Blois, and in the expositions of Joachim, Abbot of Calabria, at the end of the twelfth century; of Lubertinus di Casali, Peter Olivi, and others in the thirteenth century (which may be seen in the Appendix to tho Editor's Greek Text of the Apocalypse, ed. 1849, pp. 121-146); Marsilius of Padua, and those of the illustrious Dante and Petrarch. See the authorities in Wolfii Lectiones Memorabiles, ii. pp. 839—841; also in i. 376. 384. 408. 418. 429. 438. 443. 488. 597. 600: 610; and in Gerhard, Confessio Catholica, p. 583, sqq. ed. Francofurti, 1679; and in Abp. Ussher, de Christ. Eccl. Success. c. ii. p. 36; c. v. p. 109; c. vii. p. 196. Illyric. Catal. Test. p. 1558. Grassféle, Bp. of Lincoln, ap. M. Paris, ad A.D. Test. p. 1558. Grosstéle, Bp. of Lincoln, ap. M. Paris, ad A.D. 1253. The Bishop's dying words on this subject are very striking. See also Allix, Hist. of the Churches of Piedmont, p. 207; and the numerous passages collected from Dante by Wolf, pp. 610—613; from Petrarch, ibid. pp. 677—684; and from Dante and Petrarch in Rosetti's Spirito Antipapale, Lond. 1832.

To omit the names of a multitude of English Divines, who have approved this interpretation, it may suffice to mention those of Hooker, Bp. Andrewes, Bp. Sanderson, Dean Jackson (on the Creed, i. ch. xxxii.), and Bp. Wilson, of Sodor and Man. A learned and pious writer of the present age, the Rev. Isaac Williams, in his Notes on the Apocalypse, says, "That which has the horns of a Lamb (see above, xiii. 13) must be a false Christ; and a Harlot is a false Church," p. 243; "the Prophecy does in some awful manner hover as with boding raven wing over Rome" (p. 337).

This opinion derives also additional force from the fact, that, although the capture of Rome by the Goths, in the fifth century, was a very striking event, yet they who lived then, did not suppose that these prophecies were accomplished in that capture, but looked forward to some future time for their accomplishment.

Some Christian writers, such as Primasius, Bede, and others, who lived after the capture of Heathen Rome, and before the manifestation of the errors, usurpations, and corruptions of Papal Rome, and to use Hooker's words "her gross and grievous abominations" (iii. 1. 10), do not, indeed, apply them to Rome Christian. For how could they foresee that such gross and grievous abominations would show themselves in a Christian Church? But they did not imagine that these prophecies had been fulfilled in the capture of Heathen Rome by the Goths. The opinion which connects these prophecies with that Fall, was first propounded by Papal Theologians, many centuries ofter that event.

The present seems to be a suitable place for resuming the consideration of objections that have been urged against the exposition now adopted. Compare above, on xiii. 8.

(1) Why, it has been asked, should so large a portion of the Apocalyptic prophecies be directed against Romanism? Are there not other forms of error equally noxious? especially Scepticism and Infidelity? To this it may be replied that the Apocalypse does speak in unequivocal terms against other errors in faith or practice. It declares that "the fearful, and unbelievers, and sinners, and abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death" (xxi. 8. See also xxii. 15).

But it must be remembered, that certain errors are more insidious and subtle than others; and therefore need to be more clearly pointed out, and more minutely described, that they may be shunned. Such are the errors of Rome. They present themselves in a specious form, with many alluring fascinations. They are therefore more dangerous.

4 d Καὶ ἡ γυνὴ ἢν περιβεβλημένη πορφυροῦν καὶ κόκκινον, καὶ κεχρυσωμένη d ch. 18. 12, 16. χρυσίω καὶ λίθω τιμίω καὶ μαργαρίταις, έχουσα ποτήριον χρυσοῦν ἐν τῆ χειρὶ Jer. 51. 7.

In another respect, also, they are more injurious. They have been a main cause of the prevalence of schism and unbelief in the world. The Church of Rome has the three orders of the Christian Ministry, and the Sacrament of Holy Baptism, and yet is chargeable with many grievous errors and sins; and has thus brought discredit on the name and offices of the Christian Church, and even on Christianity itself; see above, on xvi. 9.

Looking, then, at the declarations of Scripture concerning Infidelity, and at the true ends of Christian Prophecy, and at the perils of the World from Heresy, Schism, and Infidelity, and at the countenance and advantage given to them by Popery; and looking, also, carefully at the language of these Apocalyptic prophecies, we see reason to believe even on this account, that the form of Antichristianism contemplated in these Prophecies is a religious one; and we recognize the wisdom of God in providing such clear cautions against the errors, frauds, usurpations, and corruptions of Papal Rome.

(2) Another objection is, also, sometimes urged.

If the Church of Rome is the Apocalyptic Babylon, then the Ministers of the Church of England, who derive their Holy Orders from Rome, are infected with the taint of Babylon: their ministerial commission, therefore, is liable to grave suspicions: the validity of their ministrations is questionable; in a word, by fixing a stigma on Rome, they brand themselves.

Such is the objection.

But, assuredly, the fear of it is as groundless, as the allegation of it is illogical.

The Ministers of the Church of England do not derive their Holy orders from Rome-but from CHRIST. He is the only source of all the grace which they dispense in their ministry. And suppose that we admit that this virtue flows from Him through some who were in communion with the Church of Rome, and that no charitable allowance is to be made for those who held some of her doctrines in a darker age-what then? The Channel is not the Source. The human Officer is not the Divine Office. The validity of the commission is not impaired by the unworthiness of those through whom it was conveyed. The Vessels of the Temple of God were holy even at Babylon: and, after they had been on Belshazzar's table, they were restored to God's altar (Ezra i. 7). The Scribes and Pharisees, against whom Christ denounces woe, were to be obeyed, because they sat in Moses' seat (Matt. xxiii. 2), and as far as they taught agreeably to his Law. The Word and ordinances of Christ, preached and administered even by a Judas, were efficacious to salvation. The Old Testament is not the less the Word of God because it has come to us by the hands of Jews, who rejected Him of whom Moses and the Prophets did write (John i. 45). And so, the sacred commission, which the ministers of the Church of England have received from Christ, is not in any way impaired by transmission through some who were infected with Romish corruptions; but rather, in this preservation of the sacred deposit even in their hands, and in its conveyance to us, and in its subsequent purification from corrupt admixtures, and in its restoration to its ancient use, we may recognize another proof of God's ever-watchful providence over His Church, and of His mercy to ourselves.

(3) We ought to be on our guard against two opposite errors. On the one hand, it is alleged by some, that if Rome be a Church, she cannot be Babylon. On the other hand, it is said by others, that if Rome be Babylon, she cannot be a Church. Both these conclusions are false. Rome may be a Church and yet Babylon: and she may be Babylon, and yet a Church. This will appear from considering the case of the Ancient Church of God.

The Israelites in the Wilderness were guilty of abominable atry. Yet they are called a Church in Holy Writ (Acts vii. idolatry. Y 38. 41. 43). 38. 41. 43). And why? Because they still retained the Law of God and the Priesthood (Hooker, iii. c. 1 and 2). So, also, Jerusalem—even when it had crucified Christ—is called in Scripture the Holy City (Matt. xxvii. 53). And why? By reason of the truths and graces which she had received from God, and which had not yet been wholly taken away from her.

A distinction, we see, is to be made between what is due to God's goodness on the one side, and to man's depravity on the other.

As far as the divine mercy was concerned, God's Ancient People were a Church: but by reason of their own wickedness, they were even a Synagogue of Satan (Rev. ii. 9; iii. 9), and, as such, they were finally destroyed.

Hence, their ancient Prophets, looking at God's mercy to Jerusalem, speak of her as Sion, the beloved City (Ps. lxxxvii. 2): but regarding her iniquities, they call her Sodom, the bloody city (Isa. i. 9, 10; iii. 9. Ezek. xxiv. 6).

In like manner, by reason of God's goodness to her, Rome received at the beginning His Word and Sacraments, and through His long-suffering they are not yet utterly taken away from her: and by virtue of the remnants of divine truth and grace, which are yet spared to her, she is still a Church. But she has mise-rably marred and corrupted the gifts of God. She has been favoured by Him like Jerusalem, and like Jerusalem she has rebelled against Him. He would have healed her, but she is not healed (Jer. li. 9). And, therefore, though on the one hand, by His love, she was, and has not yet wholly ceased to be, a Christian Sion-on the other hand, through her own sins, she is an Antichristian Babylon.

v. 1. The Harlot is described as sitting on the many waters: that is, as the Angel explains it below (v. 15), as having dominion over many nations and languages.

v. 2. The Kings of the earth committed fornication with her, and they that are dwellers on the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication.

v. 4. She holds in her hand a golden cup full of abominations and of the uncleanness of her fornication (as to the accusative after γέμον cp. v. 3. Phil. i. 11. Col. i. 9. Winer, p. 205), and has on her forehead a name written, "Mystery: Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots."

Heathen Rome received the Gods of other Nations into her Pantheon. Even the deities of Syria and Egypt found a place there. She did not impose her forms of worship upon any. Therefore again we see that the Apocalyptic Babylon is not Heathen Rome.

But this prophecy is very descriptive of Papal Rome.

Almighty God has distinguished man from the rest of the creation by the endowments of Reason and of Conscience; which He commands them to use, and not to give away. But the Church of Rome requires men to sacrifice them to her own will. And then she pours into their minds a delirious draught of strange doctrines. She requires all to drink of her cup. " This (says she of her Trent Creed) is the Catholic Faith, out of which there is no salvation" (Oath in the Creed of Pope Pius IV.).

She has trafficked and tampered with all the Kings and

Nations of the Earth

In the words of Hooker (Serm. v. 15), " she hath fawned upon Kings and Princes, and by spiritual cozenage hath made them sell their lawful authority for empty titles." She has caressed and cajoled them with amatory gifts of flowers, pictures, and trinkets, beads and relics, crucifixes and Agnus Deis, and consecrated plumes and banners. She has drenched and drugged their senses with love-potions of bewitching smiles and fascinating words; and has thus beguiled them of their faith, their courage, and their power. Like another Delilah she has made the Samsons of this world to sleep softly in her lap, and then she has shorn them of their strength. (Judges xvi. 19.) She has captivated, and still captivates, the affections of their Prelates and Clergy, by entangling them in the strong and subtle meshes of Oaths of vassalage to herself, and has thus stolen the hearts of subjects from their Sovereigns, and has made Kingdoms to hang upon her lips for the loyalty of their People; and so in her dream of universal dominion she had made the world a fief of Rome.

v. 3. St. John says that he is taken into a wilderness, and there sees the Woman enthroned. This is a remarkable characteristic. She is a Great City, and yet in a wilderness. These words may be understood either literally with some, or figuratively with other, Expositors. If literally, they are very descriptive of the desolate region in which Papal Rome is now situated. The Roman Campagna, which was formerly peopled with towns and cities, and alive with the busy stir of men, has now been reduced to a desolate wilderness by the inundations of the Pomptine marshes, and by the inveterate malaria of centuries; and from the fetid miasma brooding over its sulphureous springs and brooks, is now no longer habitable, and by its wild and lonely aspect presents a sad prognostic of its future destiny, and seems to forebode that the likeness will one day be more striking than it is now between Rome and Babylon. In many spiritual respects also Rome is not like a fruitful field of the Lord, but may be compared to a wilderness.

The Woman is described as sitting on a scarlet-coloured Beast. This is her colour, she is called the great City clothed in scarlet (see xviii. 12. 16).

This colour is reserved by Papal Rome for the use of her Prelates and Cardinals. She says in her " Cæremoniale" (iii. Sect. 5), that "it specially belongs to the Pope." And Pope Paul II. forbade any one to wear hats of scarlet, but Cardinals. See Platina, p. 312. Vitringa, p. 758. Heidegger, i. p. 432.

The "Caremoniale Romanum," or order of Roman Ceremonies, was written 350 years ago, by a Papal Archbishop; and is dedicated to a Pope, Leo X., and was printed at Rome, A.D. 1516, and has often been reprinted as the official Directory of Papal Ceremonies; see above, on xiii. 14.

If we turn to that portion of this Volume which describes the first public appearance of the Pope, on his Election to the Pontificate, we find the following order of proceeding,—"The Pontiff elect is conducted to the Sacrarium, and divested of his ordinary attire, and is clad in the Papal robes." The colour of these is then minutely described: five different articles of dress, in which he is then arrayed, are scarlet. Another vest is specified, and this is covered with pearls. His mitre is then mentioned; and this is adorned with gold and precious stones.

Such, then, is the attire in which the Pope is arrayed, and in which he first appears to the World as Pope. Refer now to the Apocalypse. We there see that scarlet, pearls, gold, and precions stones are thrice specified by St. John, as characterizing the Mysterious Power pourtrayed by himself (Rev. xvii. 4; xviii.

The Beast also is of scarlet colour, that is, it wears the livery of the Woman, as her servant and subject; she sits upon it; it carries her (see v. 7); it is like a Throne on which she is placed.

The Beast is described as having seven Heads and Ten Horns. This designation of Ten Horns marks the Beast as the same in substance as that already described in the xiiith chapter (xiii. 1). Its duration is the same (cp. xi. 9, and xiii. 5). In the xiiith chapter we have mention of the Mark of the Beast (vv. 16, 17), and after the description of this beast in the xviith chapter we see mention again made of the Beast and his Mark (xix. 20, and xx. 4). See Bp. Andrewes, contra Bellarmin. cap. x. ad init. pp. 232, 233; and p. 288, where he says, "eadem est Bestia in cap. xvii. et xiii."

That Beast, as we have seen, represents the fourth great Monarchy passing through successive phases, first Heathen, and afterwards subject to the Papacy;

It has first been displayed as the Pagan Empire of Rome (xiii. I).

Secondly. It was displayed as killed, as to its Pagan Imperial power; and as reviving and living again in more than its former energy under the Papacy (see xiii. 3-10. 12-17).

Thirdly. It is represented here (xvii. 3-7) wearing the scarlet livery of the Harlot City, and as carrying her on its back: that is, as subservient to Papal Rome.

Fourthly. The Prophecy foretells, that its Ten Horns will hereafter turn their power against the Harlot City. See on v. 16. All that has been said before, in the xiiith to the xvith chapters inclusive, confirms the present proof that the Woman which is arrayed in scarlet, and sits on the scarlet-coloured Beast, is Papal Rome.

Here we may observe some striking contrasts which serve farther to strengthen this conclusion.

The colour of the Harlot and of the Beast is scarlet.

The colour of the Bride and of Christ is white (see above, vi. 2, and below, xix. 14).

This contrast seems to be marked even by the word chosen in the Apocalypse to designate the Lamb. As was observed before, that word is not 'Aurds, as in the Gospel; but 'Aprlov, which occurs twenty-nine times in the Apocalypse, where 'Aµro's never occurs. And thus we have a striking contrast, which is aided by an exact correspondence of syllables and accents. On one side are.

The Harlot and the Beast, 'H NO'PNH KAI' TO' OHPI'ON. The Bride and the Lamb. 'H NY MOH KAI' TO' 'APNI ON.

On the other side are,

See Rev. xxi. 2. 9; xxii. 17. If any one can have any doubt of St. John's intention to identify the Woman on the Beast with a faithless Church, let him read the following description:- Καὶ ἦλθεν είς ἐκ τῶν ἐπτὰ άγγέλων τῶν ἐχόντων τὰς ἐπτὰ φιάλας, καὶ ἐλάλησε μετ' έμοῦ λέγων, Δεῦρο, δείξω σοι το κριμα τῆς πόρνης τῆς μεγάλης... Καὶ ἀπήνεγκέ με εἰς ἔρημον ἐν πνεύματι καὶ εῖδον γυναικα καθημένην ἐπὶ θηρίον κόκκινον (Rev. xvii.

And then let him compare it with the words which describe the faithful Church in glory:—Καὶ  $\bar{\eta}\lambda\theta\epsilon\nu$  εἶς ἐκ τῶν ἑπτὰ ἀγγέλων τῶν ἐχόντων τὰς ἐπτὰ φιάλας... καὶ ἐλάλησε μετ' ἐμοῦ, λέγων, Δεῦρο, δείξω σοι τὴν νύμφην τοῦ ἀρνίου τὴν γυναῖκα. Καὶ ἀπήνεγκέ με ἐν πνεύματι ἐπ' ὅρος μέγα καὶ ὑψηλὸν, καὶ ἔδειξέ μοι τὴν πόλιν τὴν ἁγίαν Ἱερουσαλήμ (Rev.

The Lamb ('Aprlor) is contrasted with the Beast ( $\theta\eta\rho lor$ ); so is the Bride ( $\nu\ell\mu\phi\eta$ ) of the Lamb contrasted with the Harlot (πόρνη) who sits upon the Beast.

Thus, on one side we see the faithful woman (xii. 1), clothed with the Sun, Which is Christ, and treading on the Moon, that is, surviving all the changes and chances of this world; and having her brows encircled with Twelve stars-the diadem of Apostolic faith. She is a Mother: and her child is caught up to Heaven.

On the other side we see a faithless woman, arrayed in worldly splendour, and having on her forehead the name Mystery; and called Mother of Abominations of the Earth.

Again; on the one side, we see the faithful woman persecuted, and driven into the wilderness.

On the other side, we see the faithless Woman in the wilderness, enthroned on seven hills, and on the many waters which are peoples and nations; sitting on the Beast, and persecuting.

The former Woman is the faithful Church, which is truly Catholic or Universal.

The latter Woman, who is contrasted with her, and is called the Harlot, is a faithless Church, which claims to be Catholic, but is not.

Let us pursue the contrast.

The faithful Woman appears again, after her pilgrimage in the Wilderness of this world is over. Her sufferings have ceased.

Look upward. Her glory is revealed at the close of the Apoca-The Woman is the Bride in Heaven. She is Christ's Church glorified, His Spouse purified. She is arrayed in fine linen, pure and white. She is called the Holy City, the new Jerusalem (Rev. xix. 7, 8; xxi. 2. 9, 10).

Now look below at the faithless woman or Harlot sitting on the Beast. She is arrayed in scarlet, and pearls, and jewels, and gold. She is called Babylon, the Great City (Rev. xvii. 4, 5; xi. 8).

What is the conclusion from all this?

As the former Woman, the Bride, the Holy City, the new Jerusalem, represents the faithful Church, so the other Woman, the Harlot, the great City, the City on Seven Hills, which reigned in St. John's age, the mystical Babylon, represents a faithless Church, the Church on the Seven Hills, the Church of Rome.

6. elbor] I saw the Woman drunken with the blood of Saints.

And when I saw her, says St. John, I wondered with great wonder. If the Woman had been Heathen Rome, past or to come, why should St. John wonder? It is not wonderful that a heathen city should persecute the Saints of God. St. John had seen the blood of Christians spilt by imperial Rome. She had beheaded St. Paul, and had crucified St. Peter. He himself had been a Martyr in will, and was now an exile by her cruelty. Therefore he could not have wondered with great admiration if the Harlot was heathen Rome.

But it was a fit subject for surprise, that a Christian Church -a Church calling herself the "Mother of Christendom," "the spiritual Sion," "the Catholic Church"-should be drunken with the blood of the Saints; and at such a spectacle as that St. John might well have wondered with great admiration.

The Church of Rome has stained herself with the blood of Christians. She has erected the prisons, and prepared the rack, and lighted the fires, of "the Holy Office of the Inquisition" in Italy, Spain, America, and India. At this day she lauds one of her Popes, whom she has canonized, Pius the Fifth, in her Breviary, for being an Inflexible Inquisitor (Breviar. Roman. v. Maii, ed. Ratisbon, 1840, and p. 662, ed. Paris, 1842). As has been already stated, she has engraven the massacre of St. Bartholomew's Day on her coins, and represents it there as a work done by an Angel from heaven (Numismata Pontif. p. 87, ed. Paris, 1679). Strange to say, Rome has recently recast this medal, viz. in the year 1839, 19th Dec., and again in 1840 (see Irish Eccles. Journal, No. 13). Thus she has proclaimed her desire to identify herself with that massacre. She has inserted an Oath in her Pontifical, which requires Bishops to "persecute and wage war against all" whom she calls "heretics" (Pontificale Romanum, p. 63, ed. Rom. 1818).

St. John might justly wonder with great admiration that such acts should be done by any who profess Christianity.

7. διατί έθαύμασας] Why didst thou wonder? I will tell thee the Mystery of the Woman, and of the Beast that carrieth her.

I will tell thee the Mystery; a Mystery is something secret and sacred. See above, 2 Thess. ii. 7, where St. Paul describes the "Mystery of Iniquity, or Lawlessness," and compare St. Paul's words, in that remarkable prophecy, with the words of this prophecy of St. John. The one is like an inspired comment on the other. See above, on Rev. xiii. 5.

St. John, when he calls us to see the Harlot City, the sevenhilled City, displays her name on her forehead-Mystery.

Her title is Mystery, a secret spell, bearing a semblance of sanctity: a solemn rite which promises bliss to those who are initiated in it: a prodigy inspiring wonder and awe into the mind of St. John: an intricate enigma requiring for its solution the aid of the Spirit of God.

Heathen Rome doing the work of heathenism, and persecuting the Church, was no Mystery. Infidelity, blaspheming Christ, is no Mystery; therefore the Woman is not Heathen

Rome; and she is not an Infidel power.

But a Christian Church, calling herself the Mother of Christendom, and yet "drunken with the blood of saints"-this is a Mystery. A Christian Church boasting herself to be the Bride, and yet being "the Harlot;" styling herself Sion, and being "Babylon"—this is a Mystery. A Mystery indeed it is, that, when she says to all "Come unto me," the voice from heaven should cry, "Come out of her, My People" (xviii. 4). A Mystery indeed it is, that she who boasts herself the city of Saints, should become "an habitation of devils:" that she who claims to be Infallible, should be said to "corrupt the earth:" that a self-named "Mother of Churches," should be called by the Holy Spirit the "Mother of Abominations:" that she who boasts to be Indefectible, should in one day be destroyed, and that Apostles should rejoice at her fall. Rev. xviii. 20.

should rejoice at her fall. Rev. xviii. 20.

Nearly eighteen centuries have passed away, since the Holy Spirit prophesied by the mouth of St. John, that this Mystery would be revealed in that City which was then the Queen of the Earth, the City on Seven Hills,—the City of Rome.

The Mystery was then dark, dark as midnight. Man's eye could not pierce the gloom. The fulfilment of the prophecy seemed improbable,—almost impossible. Age after age passed away. By degrees, the mist which hung over it became less thick. The clouds began to break. Some features of the dark Mystery began to appear, dimly at first, then more clearly, like Mountains at daybreak. Then the form of the Mystery became more and more distinct. The Seven Hills, and the Woman sitting upon them, became visible. Her voice was heard. Strange ting upon them, became visible. Her voice was heard. Strange sounds of blasphemy were muttered by her. Then they became louder and louder. And the golden chalice in her hand, her scarlet attire, her pearls and jewels, glittered in the sun. Kings and Nations were seen prostrate at her feet, and drinking her cup. Saints were slain by her sword. And now the Prophecy has become clear, clear as noon-day; and we tremble at the sight, while we read the inscription, emblazoned in large letters, "MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT," written by the hand of St. John, guided by the Spirit of God, on the forehead of the CHURCH of ROME.

8. το θηρίον] The Beast which thou sawest, was, and is not, and is about to ascend out of the bottomless pit, or abyss. See xi. 7, and cp. ix. 1, 2, 11, concerning the meaning of the word

The Beast was, in its Imperial form, and exists no longer in that shape; having received a deadly wound, and being killed in that respect (see above on xiii. 3. 12, and below on vv. 10, 11), and is about to ascend out of the abyss; that is, in this new form in which it will be described; and it goeth to destruction or perdition (ἀπώλειαν). Here again are other points of resemblance to St. Paul's prophecy concerning the son of pe dition (2 Thess. ii. 3, δ vibs της ἀπωλείας): and this parallel is further traceable in the words at the end of the verse, kal πάρεσται, and he will appear—(which is the true reading, and received by almost all recent editors, instead of that of Elz. καίπερ έστι)—he will appear, or, literally, he will be present, πάρεσται. This word is to be compared with St. Paul's word παρουσία, Advent, a word also applied by him there to describe the Advent of Christ (2 Thess. ii. 1. 8; cp. Matt. xxiv. 3. 37. 39. 1 Cor. xv. 23. 1 Thess. ii. 19; iii. 13; iv. 15), and used by the Apostle to describe the Advent or Appearing of the Man of Sin (see on 2 Thess. ii. 9), and the word  $\pi a \rho o \nu \sigma i a$  signifies that the Coming of the Beast here described will manifest itself with a display of might and magnificence, imitating that of Christ. See the prophetic parallel above, in the note on xiii. 5.

The dwellers on the earth will wonder—seeing the Beast, that it was, and is not, and will appear.

Some interpreters render  $\delta \tau \iota$ , which, as if it were the neuter of  $\delta \sigma \tau \iota s$ ; but though  $\delta \sigma \tau \iota s$ , and  $\delta \tau \iota \iota s$ , and of  $\tau \iota \iota \iota s$  are used as relative pronouns by St. John and other writers of the New Testament, yet the neuter is not so used, except when followed by av.

9. ὧδε δ νοῦς] Here is the mind or understanding that hath wisdom (cp. xiii. 18); that is, the mind that hath wisdom shows itself in the following explanation of the Mystery, which the Angel proceeds to reveal.

— ai ἐπτὰ κεφαλαί] The Seven Heads of the Beast are Seven Mountains where the Woman sitteth upon them; that is, they signify or represent those Seven Mountains; they are emblematic of them. On this sense of eloi, see above, i. 20.

Hence it is clear that the Seven Mountains are Seven real Mountains; for they are typified by something else, i. e. by the Seven Heads: and whatever is typified by something else, is not

Therefore we cannot agree with those who imagine that the City on the Seven Hills is only an ideal representation of some abstract quality, such as Worldliness or Superstition, without any special local existence. It has its seat on seven hills: and it is "the great city which reigned in St. John's age," See v. 18.

There is a great difference between the "Seven Hills" on which the Woman sitteth, and the "Many Waters" on which she sitteth, and "the Beast" on which she sitteth. The Hills are real: but the Beast and the Waters are symbolical. This is evident from the fact that the Angel interprets the meaning of the "Many Waters" (see v. 15), and of "the Beast" (see v. 8-15), on which the Woman sitteth. But "the seven Hills" are themselves the interpretation of the symbolic imagery of the seven Heads. These seven Mountains are the seven Mountains of Rome. See above, preliminary note on this chapter. In the words of Bp. Andrewes here (Bellarmin. p. 287), "Septem Montes sunt, quibus insidet urbs, orbi notissimi."

10, 11. και βασιλεῖε] and they (that is, the seven Heads) are, καὶ ὅταν ἔλθη, ὀλίγον αὐτὸν δεῖ μεῖναι 11 καὶ τὸ θηρίον, ὁ ἢν, καὶ οὐκ ἔστι, Ich. 1. 8. καὶ αὐτὸς ὄγδοός ἐστι, καὶ ἐκ τῶν ἑπτά ἐστι, καὶ εἰς ἀπώλειαν ὑπάγει.

i. e. they represent seven kings; the five are fallen; the one is, the other is not yet come: and when he is come, he must con-tinue a little while, and the Beast who was, and is not, even he is an Eighth (King-not Head), and he is from out of the seven, and goeth unto perdition, or destruction (ἀπώλειαν).

The seven Heads are explained to represent seven Kings; these Kings are represented as successive, and not as contemporaneous, like the Ten Horns:

What, then, are these Seven Kings?

Some recent Expositors (e.g. Ewald, Lücke) suppose them to be the first Seven Roman Emperors, beginning with Augustus. But this opinion is untenable.

(1) It was unknown to Christian Antiquity. Ancient Expositors must have known whether this Vision had been fulfilled in the Emperors who had then lived; but none of the early Interpreters give this interpretation of it.

(2) It is grounded on the supposition that Augustus was the first Roman Emperor, not Julius, and that the Apocalypse was written in the time of the sixth Roman Emperor from Augustus (viz.), Galba: whereas, as Christian Antiquity testifies, it was not written till the age of the last of the Cæsars, Domitian. See above, p. 156.

(3) It is also founded on a notion, imputed to St. John, that Nero was again to come to life, and persecute the Church.

This supposition contravenes the belief of the Christian Church, which receives the Apocalypse as a divinely-inspired writing,—"the Revelation of Jesus Christ" (i. 1).

St. John's prophecy is a sequel to that of Daniel (vii. 3-24), as is evident from the similarity of language, and particularly as to the Ten horns of the Beast: and it is to be interpreted from that Prophecy. The word  $\beta a \sigma(\lambda \epsilon i s, Kings, is$  used in the sense of kingdoms in this chapter (v. 12), and interchangeably with kingdoms in Daniel vii. 17. 23; cp. Isa. xxiii. 15.

The successive kingdoms typified by the Seven Heads seem to be the Kingdoms which were successively absorbed within the circle of the Roman Empire; in like manner as the Seven Hills, which are also here typified by the Seven Heads, were successively enclosed and embraced within the walls of the Roman City.

Six of these seven kingdoms are described by the Prophet Daniel, whose predictions are repeated and continued in the Apocalypse; they are, (1) the Babylonian, (2) the Medo-Persian, (3) the Macedonian or Greek, (4) the Syrian, (5) the Egyptian, (6) the Roman Heathen Imperial.

The Roman City was like a microcosmic epitome of the Roman Empire. The Royal Capital of the Mistress of the World was a Mirror of that Universal Empire, of which she was the

Hence we may recognize the propriety of the imagery of the seven Heads, as emblematic of the Seven Mountains received within the Roman City, and also of the Seven Kingdoms to be absorbed in her universal rule.

At first sight it might seem surprising, that the seven Heads should be made to serve a double purpose, and to typify two things which did not appear to have any connexion with each other (viz. the seven Mountains of Rome, and the seven Kings, or Kingdoms of Rome); but the strangeness of this twofold application is removed by the above consideration, and the imagery is seen to be as appropriate as it is beautiful. The drawing together of the seven Mountains into the circle of the Roman City is combined in like manner by Roman Poets with the drawing together of the world's Kingdoms into the domain of the Roman Empire. Thus the great national Poet, Virgil, unites the two acts of contraction and absorption; in consecutive lines;

> " Scilicet et rerum facta est pulcherrima Roma, Septemque una sibi muro circumdedit arces."

(Georg, ii, 534.)

And again he says,

"En hujus, nate, auspiciis illa inclita Roma Imperium terris, animos æquabit Olympo, Septemque una sibi muro circumdabit arces." (Æn. vi. 782.)

This exposition, as to its main principle, is to be found in the ancient commentaries of Andreas and others, Catena, p. 434, and it is well illustrated in Archdeacon Harrison's Lectures, pp. 376. 449, and it seems preferable to that view which regards the heads as emblems of the successive forms of Government of Rome itself.

This process of absorption had been predicted by Daniel in

vii. 4-19, and xi. 5-30, and both these prophecies of Daniel extend also to a description of that other power which is the subject of St. John's prophecy in the thirteenth and fourteenth chapters; and thus Daniel's prophecies had prepared the way for the Apocalypse, and are continued and completed by it.

The Angel says to St. John, "The one (King) now is, or exists;" i.e. the Roman Imperial Heathen Power, which was the Sixth, is now in existence.

This Imperial Power might well be called "the one," for it was the central principle of the whole. It was to the Roman world, what the Capitoline Hill was to the other hills of Rome.

The Angel adds, "The other" (i.e. the Seventh King or Kingdom) "is not yet come, and when he comes, he must continue (only) a little while."

The Seventh King can hardly represent, as some have supposed, the kingdom of Odoacer, A.D. 476, for this was a kingdom of Italy, and in Italy; and added nothing to the Power of Rome. Nor can it be the Gothic kingdom of Theodoric in Italy, A.D. 493 -526; nor the Eastern Christian Emperor, or his Deputy, the Exarch, at Ravenna, A.D. 566; for these were not augmentations of the Roman sovereignty, but were rather like a continuation of the Roman Imperial Power in another form.

The Seventh King represents some Power which was first extrinsic to Rome, and was afterwards added to Rome; so as to be absorbed within the precincts of her Empire, like another or Seventh Mountain enclosed within the circuit of her walls.

There was a Power which rose upon the ruins of the Italian Kingdom above mentioned, and which endured only for a short time. This was the Imperial Power of Germany.

The following historical summary (from C. W. Koch's Revolutions of Europe, Periods iii. iv. and v. pp. 29-37. 62, of the English Translation, Lond. 1839) illustrates this statement:

"In the eleventh century, Germany was the ruling Power of Europe. Its greatness gave rise to a system of polity which the Popes took care to support with all their credit and authority. According to this system, the whole of Christendom composed a single Republic, of which the Pope was the spiritual head, and the Emperors of Germany the secular. The Emperors had the election of the Pope. . . . But however vast their power seemed to be, it was far from being a solid and durable fabric . . . and in course of time a new powerful Monarchy arose on that of the German Empire; that of the Roman Pontiffs, which monopolized both spiritual and temporal dominion, and extended its influence over all the kingdoms of Christendom."

Here is a striking commentary on St. John's description of the Woman "sitting on the Many Waters" (vv. 1. 15), and on the Beast with its Ten Heads or Kingdoms, into which the Roman Empire was to be split at its dissolution, according to the Prophecy of Daniel, vii. 7. 20. 24; cp. Dan. ii. 41, 42.

"This supremacy, whose mechanism is an object of astonishment to the most subtle politicians, was the work of Gregory VII. (Hildebrand, A.D. 1073-1085) . . . . who had scarcely obtained the Imperial confirmation of his election, when he put in execution the project he had so long been concerting and preparing, viz. the creation of a spiritual despotism, extending to Priests as well as Kings, making the Supreme Pontiff the Arbiter in all affairs, both civil and ecclesiastical."

"At that time, the City of Rome, and the whole ecclesiastical States, as well as the greater part of Italy, were subject to the Kings of Germany, who nominated or confirmed the Popes the Popes had used to date their acts from the years of the Emperor's reign, and to stamp their coin with his name."

The writer proceeds to show how the Imperial power was supplanted by the Papal. The Popes forbade sovereigns, under pain of Excommunication, to exercise the right of Investiture; and the Papal Power was aggrandized by the enforcement of Celibacy on the clergy, and by the forgery of the false Decretals, received into the Canon Law, and supplanting the Civil Law and the Common Law; and by imposing Oaths of allegiance on all Ecclesiastics; and by means of the Pallium, which all Archbishops were required to sue for and obtain from Rome.

"The custom of dating their acts from the years of the Emperor's reign, and coining their money with the name of the Emperor, disappeared after the time of Pope Gregory VII.

"The Empire thus fell into gradual decay, while the Pontifical Power, rising on its ruins, gained new accessions of strength; particularly under Pope Innocent III. (A.D. 1198-1216), by the multiplication of religious orders for the aggrandizement of the Papacy" (cp. note above, xiii. 11. 13); and by the Crusades, which were turned eventually even against Christians, such as the Greeks and the Waldenses, on the plea that they were schismatics

"God," said Pope Innocent, "made two great Lights, the Sun and the Moon (Gen. i. 16); that is, the Pontifical and the Royal Power; and the Pontifical is as much greater than the Royal, as the Sun is greater than the Moon; and as the Moon derives her power from the Sun, so does the Imperial Power from the Pope" (in Decret. Greg. I. Tit. 33, cap. 6).

"The efforts made by the Emperors Frederick I. and II. to establish the tottering Throne of the Empire ended in nothing; the House of Hohenstaufen was deprived of all its crowns, and persecuted to the scaffold."

At the end of the thirteenth century "the Pontifical Power was in its zenith, and the Popes assumed the title of Masters of Boniface VIII. went even further than his predecessors had done, and declared that God had given two swords, spiritual and temporal, to the successors of St. Peter (see on Luke xxii. 32, 38), the former to be exercised by the Church alone, the other by the Secular Powers, in submission to the Pope; all temporal power was made to depend on the spiritual, which is judged by no man (1 Cor. ii. 15): and 'we affirm,' said Boniface VIII., 'that it is absolutely necessary to salvation to every human creature to be subject to the Pope of Rome.'" (Pope Boniface VIII., A.D. 1294, Extrav. Com. lib. i. tit. 3, cap. 1.)
With these statements the reader may compare the masterly summary of Guicciardini (lib. iv.), expunged by the Roman Censors from many editions of his history, but reprinted in Heidegger's Historia Papatûs, p. 585, Amst. 1684.

11. και το θηρίον] And the Beast—even he is an Eighth (King); he is ὄγδοος, not ὀγδόη (κεφαλή). It is not said that the Beast is an eighth head, as some have interpreted the words; but that he is an eighth, and that he is out of the seven, that is,

he rises after, and from out of the seven.

This is descriptive of the Roman power as it rose to supremacy under the Papacy, and carried the Harlot as on a Throne. It was an eighth kingdom, it rose after the Seven and from them. It rose after the Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Greek, Syrian, Egyptian, Roman Imperial, German Imperial, and, as represented in this chapter, it was diffused through the whole body of the 6ηρίον, and animated the whole.

It was like the Little Horn which grew out of the Beast of Daniel, and absorbed the Power of the Beast, so that it became the Beast. See above on xiii. v. 4.

The Beast as here displayed to St. John is called an eighth King, or Kingdom; and in Holy Scripture the number eight is the number of Resurrection (see on Luke xxiv. 1). Rome is the Western Babylon; and the Western Babylonian Power is, as it were, the octave of the Eastern. The Eastern Babylonian Power is the first in the Prophecies of Daniel. The Western Baby-Ionian Power is the eighth in those of St. John.

And, if we may venture to use the expression, it is, as it were, like a Parody of the Power of Christ.

Observe the antithesis between Christ's power and this Antichristian power. Christ has His παρουσία or Advent. This Power has its Advent also. See on v. 8, and on 2 Thess. ii. 8, compared with 2 Thess. ii. 9, where the two mapovolas, or Advents, of the two adverse Powers are contrasted.

Christ died on the Sixth day; so the Beast was killed in its Sixth Head. See above, xiii. 3.

The Lamb ('Aprlor) received a deadly wound, and was slain

The Lamb was, and is not, and will appear again. He was hidden for a "little while" on the seventh day, when He was in the grave; and then reappeared on the eighth Day, the day of Vol. II.-Part IV.

(ἐσφαγμένον, see above, v. 6); the Beast (θηρίον) received a deadly wound, and was slain (ἐσφαγμένον, also xiii. 3).

His Resurrection (see John xvi. 16-24). So the Antichristian Power was; and then he was not for a time; and then he reappeared-in more than his former power and glory-in the Eighth Kingdom-that of the Papacy.

But now observe the end.

Christ has two Advents. He died, and rose again, and ascended into heaven to live for evermore. "I am He that liveth, and was dead, and lo! I am alive for evermore" (i. 18; ii. 8). And His second Advent will destroy him "whose Advent is with all power and signs and lying wonders" (2 Thess. ii. 9, 10).

The Lamb died, and liveth for evermore to give salvation unto all His faithful followers; but the Beast died and lives again, and goeth on to destruction (ἀπώλεια): cp. 2 Thess. ii. 3. 8. 10. 12. και τὰ δέκα κέρατα] and the Ten Horns which thou sawest are Ten Kings, which have not yet received a Kingdom; but receive authority as kings one hour with the Beast.

They are Kings or Kingdoms growing out of the Roman Empire at its dismemberment. See Irenaus, v. 26. S. Hippolytus (pp. 14-18. 153, ed. Lagarde), and above on xiii. 1.

By saying that the Horns will receive power as kings, St. John intimates (says Andreas, Caten. p. 435; cp. Irenæus, p. 787, Stieren; p. 440, Grabe) the precariousness of their power, and by saying that they receive it one hour, he marks the shortness of its duration in a state of coalition and union with one another and with the Beast. Especially it marks the shortness of its duration, compared with the power of its contrast, the LAME, which is not for an hour,—but for ever. On this use of ωρα, cp. 1 Thess. ii. 17. 2 Cor. vii. 8. Gal. ii. 5. Philem. 15.

13. οδτοι μίαν γνωμην έχουσι] These have one mind, or purpose, and give their power and their authority to the Beast: these will make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb will conquer them (for He is Lord of lords and King of kings): and they with Him who are called and elect,—will conquer them.

15. τὰ ὕδατα] The Waters which thou sawest, where the Harlot sitteth, are Peoples, and Multitudes, and Nations, and Tongues. An expressive picture of the vast spiritual dominion of Papal Rome. See above, preliminary note to this chapter; and here is another resemblance to Babylon. Cp. Jer. li. 13.

16. και τὰ δέκα κέρατα ἃ είδες και τὸ θηρίον] and the ten Horns which thou sawest and the Beast, they (οὖτοι, masculine, i. e. the Kings, v. 12) will hate the harlot, and will make her desolate and naked, and will devour her flesh. Etz. has ἐπὶ τὸ θηρίον, i. e. the ten horns which thou sawest upon the Beast. And so the majority of Cursive MSS., and some early MSS. of the Vulgate. But καl, and, is found in A, B, and in twelve Cursive MSS. cited by Scrivener, p. 553; and the best MSS. of the Vulgate, and in the Syriac Version, and Arabic and Æthiopic, and in Hippolytus, p. 18, ed. Lagarde; and Irenaus seems to have so read the passage (v. 26), and this reading is received by Griesb., Scholz, Bengel, and Winer, p. 123, Lach., Tisch., Tregelles, and there seems little doubt that this is the true reading.

Here is another proof that the Harlot cannot be Heathen Rome; for it is certain that the Heathen City of Rome was not destroyed by any powers that grew out of the Empire of Rome.

The Harlot sitting on the Beast is the City of Rome. This is allowed by all. See the preliminary note to this chapter. The Beast has been represented by St. John, in the successive stages of his existence, first as the heathen Roman Empire; and next, as subordinate to the Papacy, and doing its pleasure, and, as it were, incorporated in it, and animated by it. And now this prophetic sentence reveals the wonderful result, that the Horns of the Beast, that is, some Powers that have grown out of the Roman Empire, will one day be alienated from the l'apacy, and will hate the Harlot and devour her flesh. As Tertullian says (de Resur. carnis, § 25), "The Harlot City is to receive its deserved retribution from the Ten Kings, which will grow out of the dismemberment of the Roman Empire,—'abcessione Romani statûs.'"

They will devour her flesh (σάρκας). The flesh is the carnal element of her power, as distinguished from the spiritual. It represents the temporal power of the Papacy; that temporal power which has been acquired by carnal means, and for carnal ends. This Prophecy therefore reveals, that some Powers which have grown out of the Empire of Rome, and have been vassals of the Papacy, will rise against Rome, and spoil her of her temporal power. It predicts that this spoliation of the Papacy will proceed from Roman Catholic Nations,-children and pacy will proceed from Roman Cathoric Nations,—children and subjects of Papal Rome; from such Nations as France and Italy herself, perhaps from the people of Rome. This has been fulfilled in our own days by the setting up of "the Kingdom of Italy" in antagonism to the Papacy.

Her former lovers will hate her, and strip her of her rich ornaments; and they whom she made to drink of the cup of her fornication will make her desolate. See on Daniel v. 4.

It is here revealed, that the Horns and the Beast will do this under the sovereign control of the mysterious and inscrutable purpose of Almighty God, employing some former vassals of the Papacy to execute His Almighty will in punishing it for its sins; and that the ruin of Papal Rome will not be effected by Protestant Nations, but by Papal Princes and People rising against her; and that they will suppose that they are following their own devices, and working out their own purpose; but they will be executing the decree, and accomplishing the purpose, of God. And therefore, with a repetition of words, making this truth more striking and emphatic, it is said, "God hath put it into their hearts to perform His mind, and perform one mind;" though differing in other respects, they will be united in this; and "give their kingdom to the Beast until the words of God shall have been fulfilled."

Here is another parallel to the history of the literal Babylon. She fell by the arms of some who had been lately subject to her. God gave a commission against her to Elam (Isa. xxi. 2), in which Susa was (Dan. viii. 2), and which was subject to Babylon; and He "raised up the spirit of the Kings of the Medes, for His device was against Babylon to destroy it" (Jer. li. 11); and thus He executed His purpose upon her. So will it one day be with the mystical Babylon—Rome. See above on Daniel v. 4, and below on xviii. 9. This has been partly fulfilled (A.D. 1870) in the scizure of Papal Rome—after a plebiscite of the people of Italy and Rome—by a king of that house of Savoy which was once one of the most devoted vassals of the Papacy.

CH. XVIII.] Fuller description of the future FALL of the MYSTICAL BABYLON.

It is to be carefully observed, that though Babylon falls, the Beast still remains. Therefore the fall of Papal Rome will not

1. μετὰ ταῦτα εἶδον] After this I saw. The language of this chapter, concerning the Fall of Papal Rome, is derived from that of Hebrew Prophecy, describing the Fall of Babylon. It is here from that that Papar will be saw with the Papar will be saw the head of the Papar will be saw with the papar will be saw will be saw with the papar will be saw will be saw with the papar will be saw will be saw with the papar will be saw foretold, that Rome will become, what Babylon is, utterly reduced to a state of desolation.

Here then is another proof that these Apocalyptic prophecies do not concern ancient heathen Rome; and that they were not fulfilled when Rome was captured by the Goths. That event took place 1450 years ago; and even if Rome had then been made desolate, which was not the case, it could not be said that her capture at that time was the fulfilment of these prophecies; for the desolation which these prophecies describe is final and for ever (see vv. 2. 8. 20-23; xix. 3). They therefore concern Rome as she is now, and their fulfilment is still future. See above, preliminary note to chap. xvii.

This chapter is quoted by S. Hippolytus, de Christo et Antichristo, § 40, p. 18, Lagarde.

3. στρήνουs] riotous luxury. The idea contained in this word τρηνος is further expressed in v. 7, by ἐστρηνίασε, and v. 10. The radical meaning of the word is seen in the words στρηνής, streng (Germ.), strong, strenuus, strain, struggle, conveying an idea of power showing itself in strong emotions, like the neighings of an untamed steed, exulting in its strength; or like the heavings of an Earthquake, or the burstings forth of a Volcano. Hence it is applied to describe insolence and voluptuousness breaking out into boastful vauntings of pride, and dissolute riot and revelry; like those of Babylon on the eve of her fall. Cp. Lobeck, ad Phrynich, p. 381, and the use of the word by the LXX in 2 Kings xix. 28, where God says of Sennacherib, τὸ στρηνός σου ἀνέβη  $\delta \nu \tau \sigma i \delta \omega \sigma i \mu \sigma v$ , "thy rage and thy tumult is come up into mine ears—therefore will I put My hook in thy nose, and My bridle in thy lips, and will turn thee back."

Cp. 2 Cor. vi. 17. Elz. has  $\xi\xi\dot{\epsilon}\lambda\theta\epsilon\tau\dot{\epsilon}$  here; A has  $\xi\xi\dot{\epsilon}\lambda\theta\alpha\tau\dot{\epsilon}$ , and so Tisch.; Lach. has έξελθε, which is in B, C.

This passage supplies an answer to the allegations of those who say, that the identification of the Apocalyptic Babylon with Papal Rome involves the supposition that the promise of Christ's presence with His Church had failed (Matt. xvi. 18; xxviii. 20), and that the Church of Christ had ceased to be visible, and had become utterly apostate. Such a supposition as that must, indeed, be disclaimed and reprobated; and the interpretation in question gives no countenance to it. The Babylon of the Apocalypse is Papal Rome; but the Church of Papal Rome never was the whole Catholic Church; there were Greek Churches, and African Churches, and Asiatic Churches, which never accepted the main errors and corruptions of Papal Rome, enforcing the doctrine of the Pope's Supremacy and Infallibility,-which are the essential characteristics of Popery as distinguished from, and opposed to, Christianity. Those Churches did not accept her dogma of the indispensable necessity of Obedience to his decrees, on pain of cternal condemnation; nor do they accept it to this day. Besides, many there were in the Communion of Rome, who did not drink all the ingredients of her cup. Nor did she enforce her novel doctrines on the faith of her Members, until the Council of Trent in the sixteenth century; and at that time, Churches in the West, such as the Churches of England and Ireland, wearied with her usurpations, and illumined by God's Holy Word lighted up anew with fresh radiance by the gracious influences of the Holy Spirit, reformed themselves. And even now, at this present time,—as this prophecy reveals,—when the cup of false doctrine in the hand of the mystical Babylon seems to have received its final infusion, by the addition of that last new article to her creed, the doctrine of the Immaculate Conception, and when that inv. 6), and also to be making God's cup of indignation to overflow upon her (cp. Ps. lxxv. 8; and above, xvi. 19); yet still, even now, the Holy Spirit, who reads the heart, and who wrote the Apocalypse, sees some People of God in Rome. Now, on the Apocarypse, sees some recipie of God in Rome. Now, on the eve of her fall, He cries aloud by the voice of this heavenly Angel, "Come out of her, My People!"

Pindar, Olymp. v. 29, where the metaphor is applied to describe a continued series of buildings, joined on to one another.

There seems to be a reference to the building up of the tower of Babel, with slime for mortar, that its top might reach to heaven. Gen. xi. 3, 4.

The sense is this: Rome was designed by God to be a holy Church, rearing up the spiritual fabric of sound doctrine and discipline; and building up her people into a living temple, holy and acceptable to the Lord. But instead of this, she has built up a spiritual Babel; she has built up a tower of pride. Her sins, like planks of wood, have been attached, and soldered, and stuck fast together to each other in succession, as it were by glue, or pitch, or some other tenacious cement, till at length they have reached to heaven. Cp. Jer. li. 9, concerning Babylon, ηγγικεν εἰς οὐρανὸν τὸ κρῖμα αὐτῆς, ἐξῆρεν ἔως τῶν ἄστρων, and the confession of Ezra, ix. 6, " our iniquities are increased over our heads, and our trespass is grown up unto the heavens," and Baruch i. 20, ἐκολλήθη εἰς ἡμᾶς τὰ κακὰ, and Ps. lxiii. 8, ἐκολλήθη ἡ ψυχή μου οπίσω σου.

The Babel-tower of sin is a tower which man builds in pride, and when its top reaches to heaven, then it is suddenly thrown down (v. 19).

6.  $\frac{\lambda}{n}\delta\delta\sigma\tau\in$  Render ye. Cp. Ps. cxxxvii. 8. Jer. l. 15. 29.

7, 8.  $\frac{\lambda}{n}\delta\eta\mu\alpha$  Basilinsal I sit a Queen, and shall never see sorrow. See Isa. xivii. 7—9, concerning Babylon. It is remarkable, that the Church of Rome lays claim to those very qualities and attributes, which are assigned in the Apocalypse to the Harlot. This appears as follows:—

1. The Church of Rome arrogates Indefectibility. And the Harlot says here, that she is a Queen for ever. 2. The Church of Rome boasts of Universality.

And the Harlot is seated on many waters, which are Nations, and Peoples, and Tongues, xvii. 15.

3. The Church of Rome vaunts temporal felicity, and claims supremacy over all.

And the Harlot has kings at her feet.

4. The Church of Rome points to the Unity of all her members in one creed, and to their subjection under one supremo visible Head.

And the Harlot requires all to drink of her cup, v. 3. Hence it appears that Rome's "notes of the Church" are marks of the Harlot: her trophies of triumph are stigmas of shame; the claims which she makes to be Sion, confirm the proof that she is Babylon.

Therefore, let no one be confounded by the wide extent, the temporal prosperity, the alleged Unity and Universality, and the long impunity, of Rome. It was prophesied by St. John that the mystical Babylon would have a wide and enduring sway, that God, in His long-suffering to her, would give her time to repent, if haply she would repent; that he would heal her, if she would be healed; but that she would not repent, and that her sins would at length cleave to heaven, and that she would come in remembrance before God. And when that hour arrives, then, woe will betide the Preachers of the Gospel, if they have not taken up the warning of St. John, and sounded the trumpet of alarm, the warning of St. John, and sounded the trumpet of airm, "Come out of her, My people, and be not partakers of her sins, lest ye receive also of her plaques" (v. 4). See Ezek.iii. 18—20. 9. of  $\beta \alpha vik e vik e$ her; and in a mysterious transport of indignation and wild ecstasy of revenge, they will tear her flesh (see above on xvii. 16, 17); and yet when they have done the deed, they will weep over her.

The reason of this seems to be that the Fall of Rome may perhaps be followed by a triumph of Anarchy and an outbreak of Infidelity. It will be followed by those disastrous consequences, unless the Rulers of the world, especially in States formerly subject to the Papacy, endeavour to restore and maintain true Religion, which is the only safeguard of Thrones. Unless they do this, her fall will be followed by theirs.

11—14. καl οἱ ἔμποροι τῆς γῆς] the Merchants of the Earth weep. The mystical Babylon is here compared to her great Assyrian prototype, the Merchant City of the Chaldees. The Church of Rome, "the general Mart of Christendom," has endeavoured to extend her spiritual traffic into all parts of the World. She affirms that her own Communion is a spiritual harbour of peace, and a haven of salvation to all; and that no one can be saved, who does not ply his vessel in the waters of her mystical Euphrates, and have commerce with her, and bring his

The reservation of these words for the close of this long catalogue of articles of commerce, appears to be designed to remind the reader that it is a spiritual commerce which is here described: a commerce in bodies and souls of men; a spiritual Slave Trade. Such is the commerce of Rome.

The Apostles declare that we are bought with the blood of Christ, that we have been redeemed from bondage into freedom by that inestimable price (1 Cor. vi. 20. 1 Pet. i. 18, 19), and that we must stand fast in that liberty with which Christ has made us free, and not be entangled with the yoke of bondage (Gal. v. 1), and not become the servants of men (1 Cor. vii. 23), and know no other Master but Christ, and no other service but that of God, which is perfect freedom.

But the Church of Rome has encroached on this Christian liberty. As Bp. Sanderson says (iii. p. 282), "the usurpations of the Bishops of Rome upon the consciences of men, show them to be the true successors of the Scribes and Pharisees, in laying heavy burdens upon men's shoulders, which they ought not (Matt. xxiii. 4. Mark vii. 9), and in rejecting the Word of God to establish their own traditions, rather than to be the successors of St. Peter, who forbiddeth dominatum in cleris." See above

But it is not said here, that Apostles and Prophets were martyred by this Apocalyptic City,—though even this might be said in a certain sense; see xi. 7, 8,—but that they were wronged by her, and that God will avenge those wrongs. Papal Rome has done grievous wrong to Apostles and Prophets in many ways, especially by placing her own unwritten Traditions, and the Apocryphal Books, on a par with their divinely-inspired writings (see her own words in the IVth Session of the Council of Trent, April 8th, 1546), and by withholding the Holy Scriptures from the people (see above on xi. 9); thus doing much to hinder and frustrate their work, and to make "the Word of God of none effect." Cp. below, xix. 4.

On this use of  $\epsilon ls$  see above, viii. 13. They who say that the Apocalyptic Babylon fell, when Rome was taken by the Goths, contradict this voice of the Angel; and the stones of the Roman City, still standing in stately magnificence, cry out against that exposition. But those stones will one day be east down for ever. Cp. Jer. li. 63, 64, where Jeremiah's roll, with a stone tied to it, is made to sink into the Euphrates, as an emblem of the fall of the literal Babylon. The fall of the mystical Babylon is here represented as equally 22. φωνή μύλου] the sound of the millstone. Cp. Jer. xxv. 10, in the original Hebrew, which St. John here follows. Some MSS. of the LXX do not mention the sound of the millstone.

RETROSPECT of the Foregoing Chapters XI.—XVIII.

The awful words of the divine prophecy contained in this and the foregoing chapters, demand some practical application.

λύχνου οὐ μὴ φανῆ ἐν σοὶ ἔτι, καὶ φωνὴ νυμφίου καὶ νύμφης οὐ μὴ ἀκουσθῆ ἐν σοὶ ἔτι· ὅτι οἱ ἔμποροί σου ἦσαν οἱ μεγιστᾶνες τῆς γῆς· ὅτι ἐν τῆ φαρμακεία σου ἐπλανήθησαν πάντα τὰ ἔθνη· <sup>21 u</sup> καὶ ἐν αὐτῆ αἴματα προφητῶν καὶ ἁγίων u ch. 17. ε. εὑρέθη, καὶ πάντων τῶν ἐσφαγμένων ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς.

The delivery of the LITTLE ROLL to St. John, by the Mighty Angel, Christ Himself, in the Tenth Chapter, was accompanied with a commission to prophesy "upon many Peoples, and Nations, and Languages, and Kings" (x. 11).

That commission has been executed in the foregoing chapters, from the eleventh to the seventeenth inclusive; and we have now seen the vision of the future downfall of the Great City, the capital seat of the Power which is the subject of these chapters.

The Book of Revelation delivers a warning from Almighty God to the World. It proclaims the peril and unhappiness of those who are enthralled by Rome. And its prophetic and comminatory uses ought to be pointed out by Christian Ministers, and to be acknowledged by Christian Congregations. We may forfeit a great blessing and incur great danger, if we neglect these divinely-appointed uses of the Apocalypse, particularly in the present age, when the Church of Rome is busily employed in spreading her snares around us, to make us victims of her deceits, prisoners of her power, slaves of her will, and partners of her doom.

Many excellent works have been composed by English Divines, in Vindication of the Church of England from the charge of Schism, preferred against her by Romish Controversialists, for her conduct at the Reformation in the sixteenth century; when she cleared herself from Romish errors, novelties, and corruptions.

It has been shown in those Vindications, that it is the duty of all Churches to shun schisms and strifes, and to seek peace, and ensue it (Ps. xxxiv. 14. 1 Pet. iii. 11). But it has also been shown, that Unity in error is not true Unity, but is rather to be called a Conspiracy against the God of Unity and Truth.

Doubtless there is Unity, when every thing in Nature is wrapped in the gloom of Night, and bound with the chains of Sleep. There is Unity, when the Earth is congealed by frost, and mantled in snow. There is Unity, when the human voice is still, the hand motionless, the breath suspended, and the frame locked in the grasp of Death. And doubtless there is Unity, when men surrender their Reason, and sacrifice their Liberty, and still their Conscience, and seal up Scripture, and deliver themselves captives to the Church of Rome. But this is not the Unity of vigilance and light; it is the Unity of sleep and darkness. It is not the Unity of warmth and life; it is the Unity of cold and death. It is not true Unity, for it is not UNITY in the TRUTH.

Therefore, since it has been proved by Appeals to Reason, Scripture, and Antiquity, that the Church of Rome has built hay and stubble on the one foundation laid by Christ (1 Cor. iii. 12): that she has added to the Catholic Faith many errors and corruptions which mar and vitiate it; and since, as the Holy Spirit teaches us in the Apocalypse, it is the duty of every Church, which has fallen into error, to repent (Rev. iii. 3); and since Jesus Christ Himself, our Great High Priest, walks in the midst of the Golden Candlesticks and says, that when a Church has left her first love, He will remove her Candlestick out of its place, except she repent (Rev. ii. 5), and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die (Rev. iii. 2); and since the corruptions of one Church afford no palliation or excuse for those of another, for, as the Prophet says, though Israel play the Harlot, let not Judah sin (Hos. iv. 15); and, as Christ Himself teaches, though the Church of Sardis be dead (Rev. iii. 1), and Laodicea be neither hot nor cold (Rev. iii. 15), yet their sister Ephesus must remember whence she has fallen, and do her first works (Rev. ii. 5), and Pergamos must repent, or He will come quickly, and fight against her with the sword of his mouth (Rev. ii. 16), therefore, it was justly concluded by the best English Divines, that no desire of Unity on our part, nor reluctance on the part of Rome to cast off her errors, could exempt England from the duty of Reformation; and if Rome, instead of removing her corruptions, refused to communicate with England, unless England consented to communicate with Rome in those corruptions, then no love of Unity could justify England in complying with this requisition of Rome; for Unity in error is not Christian Unity; but, by imposing the necessity of erring as a term of Union, Rome became guilty of a breach of Unity, and the sin of Schism lies at her door.

This has been clearly demonstrated by our best English Divines; especially by Richard Hooker, Bishop Andrewes, and Archbishop Bramhall; and a careful study of that proof is requisite for all those whose duty it is to teach others.

But there are many persons who have not the opportunity of perusing their works; and they who have, will not forget that those works are the works of men.

Therefore, God be thanked that there is another work on this subject; a Work not dictated by man, but by the Holy Spirit of God; a Work, accessible to all,—the Arocalypse.

The Holy Spirit, Who foresees all things, and is the Ever-blessed Teacher, Guide, and Comforter of the Church, was graciously pleased to provide a heavenly antidote for dangerous, wide-spread, and long-enduring evils, by dictating the Aroca-LYPSE to St. John nearly 1800 years ago. He foresaw that the Church of Rome would fall away from the truth, and would adulterate it by many "gross and grievous abominations" (to use the words of Hooker), and that she would anathematize all who would not communicate with her, and denounce them as cut off from the body of Christ, and from hope of everlasting salvation. The Holy Spirit foresaw, that she would exercise a wide and dominant sway for many generations, by boldly iterated assertions of Unity, Antiquity, Sanctity, and Universality. He foresaw also, that these pretensions would be supported by the civil sword of many Governments, among which the Roman Empire would be divided at its dissolution; and that Rome would thus be enabled to display herself to the world in an august attitude of Imperial power, and with the dazzling splendour of temporal felicity. He foresaw also, that the Church of Rome would captivate the Imaginations of men by the fascinations of Art allied with Religion; and would ravish their senses, and rivet their admiration, by gaudy colours, and stately pomp, and prodigal magnificence. He foresaw, that she would beguile Trances and Ecstasies, and would appeal to such evidence in support of her strange doctrines. He foresaw, likewise, that she would enslave men, and much more women, by practising on their affections, and by accommodating herself, with dexterous pliancy, to their weaknesses, relieving them from the burden of thought, and from the perplexity of doubt, by proffering to them the aid of Infallibility; soothing the sorrows of the mourner by dispensing pardon and promising peace to the departed; removing the load of guilt from the oppressed conscience by the ministries of the Confessional, and by nicely-poised compensations for sin; and that she would flourish for many centuries in proud and prosperous impunity, before her sins would cleave to heaven, and come in remembrance before God (Rev. xvi. 19; xviii. 5). He foresaw, that many generations of men would thus be tempted to fall from the faith, and become victims of error; and that they who clung to the truth would be exposed to cozening flatteries, and fierce assaults, and savage tortures from her.

He foresaw these things, and wrote the Apocalypse. In this Divine Book, the Spirit of God has pourtrayed the Church of Rome, such as none but He could have foreseen she would become, and such as, alas! she has become. He has thus broken her magic spell; He has taken the wand of enchantment from her hand; He has lifted the mask from her face; and with His Divine Hand He has written her true character in large letters, and has planted her title on her forehead, to be seen and read by all,—"Mystery, Babylon the Great, the Mother of the Abominations of the Earth." (Rev. xvii. 5.)

Thus the Almighty and All-wise God Himself has vouchsafed to be the Arbiter between Babylon and Sion, between the Harlot and the Bride, between Rome and the Church. And therefore, with the Apocalypse in our hands, we need not fear the anathemas which Rome hurls against us. The Thunders of the Roman Pontiff are not so powerful and dreadful as the Thunders of St John, the Divine Boanerges of Patmos, which are winged by the Spirit of God.

We see also in the Apocalypse a strong appeal to Charity. Christian Love longs, above all things, for the salvation of souls. It prays and labours that they who are now enthralled by Babylon may escape God's judgments, and may be saved from the fearful woes which are denounced by God upon her (xiv. 10, 11; xix. 20). Greatly, therefore, is it to be desired, that these prophecies of the divine Apocalypse were duly pondered by all members of the Church of Rome. May God in His infinite mercy grant that the words of St. John, who was miraculously rescued from the fiery furnace at Rome (Tertullian, de Præscr. Hærct. c. 36), to behold and describe these Visions, may have power, by God's grace, to pluck them as brands from the fire (Zech. iii. 2).

Especially too, as years pass on, and as the judgments reserved for Rome draw nearer and nearer, and as, it may be, in the events of our own days we feel the tremblings of the earthquake which will engulf her, and behold the flashings forth of the fire which will consume her, Christian Love will put on Angels' wings, and hasten with a Seraph's step; and, like the heavenly Messengers despatched by God to Lot in Sodom, will lay hold on the hands of those who linger, and will urge them forth from the door, and will chide their delay, and will exclaim,—" Arise! what dost thou here? Take all that thou hast, lest thou be consumed in the iniquity of this city" (Gen. xix. 12-16).

Some there are who formerly joined with us in the same prayers; knelt before the same altars, and walked with us side by side in the courts of our own Jerusalem; who have been carried away captive—alas! willingly captive—to Babylon.

What shall we say of them? It may be that we might have prevented their fall, if we had exhorted them to hear what the Spirit saith by the mouth of St. John. Therefore, let us implore them to listen—not to us, but—to our Everlasting Saviour, King, and Judge, speaking in the Apocalypse. Let us point to the cup of wrath in God's right hand, ready to be poured out upon Babylon. Let us say, in the words of the Prophet,—
"Arise ye and depart, for this is not your rest; because it is polluted, it shall destroy you, even with a sore destruction" (Micah ii. 10).

The Marriage Feast of the Lamb and of the Bride.
 Τάμος is the Marriage Feast. See John ii. 1—3.
 The destruction of the faithless Harlot having been described, now follows the Vision of the bliss and glory of the faithful Woman, the Church, that had been persecuted by the Dragon, who gave his power to the Beast on which the Harlot sat (xii. 1—17; xiii. 2. 4; xvii. 3). The faithful Woman is now revealed as the BRIDE.

8. καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῆ] And it was given to her. Justification is a free gift. Cp. Rom. v. 20, 21.

— τὸ γὰρ βύσσινον] for the fine linen is the righteousness of the Saints. The word δικαίωμα declares the state of men made righteous and declared righteous by God (see on Rom. v. 18); and this condition is due to their baptismal incorporation in Christ, Who is "Jehovah Justitia nostra," the Lord our Righteousness (see on 1 Cor. i. 30. Rom. iii. 24. 26; v. 21), and to the sanctifying influences of the Holy Ghost, received by those who abide as living and healthful members in His body, and as fruitful hemothesis His Who is the true View (Letwer). branches in Him Who is the true Vine (John xv. 1-4).

The plural δικαιώματα intimates the large freeness of the righteousness bestowed by the infinite merits of Christ's obedience and sufferings, for man's justification; and the copious abundance of the outpouring of the graces of the Holy Spirit procured thereby for men.

This use of the plural, the "pluralis excellentiæ et majestatis" adopted from the Hebrew (cp. Isa. Ixiv. 6. Ezek. xxxiii. 13. Dan. ix. 18, and Schroeder, Inst. Hebr. Reg. 100), is frequent in the Apocalypse. Cp. σάρκας, xvii. 16; xix. 18. 21; aiῶνες, i. 6. 18, and in nine other places. In xviii. 24 B has αἴματα.

9. καὶ λέγει μοι, Γράψον] and he saith to me, Write, blessed are they that have been called to the Marriage Feast of the Lamb. Compare the declaration above, xiv. 13, Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord. The state of blessedness here described is consequent on that other state of blessedness which had been announced there. That was the bliss of Paradise; this is the bliss of Heaven.

The action of paying homage to superiors is not condemned here; but only such an action of homage as might be interpreted to be one of worship paid to them independently of God, or in opposition to God, under circumstances when worship ought to be directed to God.

It is said here, that he fell down before the feet of the Angel in order to worship him; and it is said, in xxii. 8, that he "fell down in order to worship before the feet of the Angel." Observe the difference of those two acts; but both are condemned. We are not to imagine that the Apostle and Evangelist, St. John, designed to pay to the Angel such honour as he must have known to be due to God alone; but yet he is reproved by the Angel. "See thou do it not." Therefore these two passages of Scripture, and that in Acts x. 25, 26, contain a warning, not only against all such acts of worship as are directed by the worshipper himself to any Being beside God, but also against such acts of adoration as might be construed by others into acts paid to some other Being besides Him.

Here is a refutation of those who seek to exculpate the Imageworship of the Church of Rome, on the plea that she does not teach that Images are to be worshipped with the same adoration as is due to God. What her doctrine may be on this matter, is of little consequence. Her practice leads away her people from the worship of God, the only true Object of adoration, to the worship of the creature.

This warning is aptly introduced here, inasmuch as Creatureworship is one of the sins which causes the Fall of Babylon just of Jesus is the spirit of Prophecy. Do not worship me, for I am a fellow-servant with thee and with those who hold fast the witness of Jesus, the Son of God, Whom all the Angels worship (Heb. i. 6). Worship thou God. Let thy worship be paid to the Son Co-equal with the Father, and to the Father in Him, as the worship in heaven is paid, as thou hast seen (see above, v. 13); for the witness of Jesus is the spirit of Prophecy. This saying is to be understood both subjectively and objectively. The witness which God gives of Jesus, and the witness which Angels and men must give of Him, is the spirit of Prophecy; it animates the whole; to Him give all the Prophets witness (Acts x. 43); to Him the Holy Spirit bears witness, Who speaks in them (2 Pet. i. 21. 1 John v. 6). The Spirit also, Who speaks in the Prophets, is the Spirit of Jesus Christ: see on 1 Pet. i. 11. He is the Divine Logos, the Author of all Prophecy. The Apocalypse is from Him; see above, i. 1; and xxii. 16. This saying, it will be seen, aptly illustrates the next Vision.

The ARMY of CHRIST, riding, as KING of KINGS, on the

And He hath on His vesture and on His thigh a Name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS.

Christ, the Rider on the White Horse, who had been revealed in the First Seal, at the beginning of the Christian era, going forth conquering and to conquer (see above, vi. 2, and Ps. xlv. 3-7), is now seen at the end. He is the Alpha and Omega of the Apocalypse (i. 8; xxi. 6; xxii. 13). The witness of Jesus is the spirit of Prophecy, v. 10.

This passage, vv. 11—16, is quoted by S. Irenæus (iv. 20.
11, p. 632, Stieren; p. 336, Grabe), who refers to this book, as written by "John, the Disciple of the Lord." See above, Introduction, p. 159.

It is also cited in part (vv. 11—13) by the Scholar of Irenæus, S. Hippolytus, in Noët. § 15, p. 53, ed. Lagarde.

The old Latin Version of Irenaus (the original Greek is not preserved there) has on v. 13 aspersum for βεβαμμένον, and S. Hippolytus has ἐββαντισμένον, sprinkled, and he explains it as referring to Christ's own blood, by which the Incarnate Word cleansed the world.

12. διαδήματα πολλά] many diadems; or, royal crowns. In the First Seal Christ had been revealed as wearing a crown of Victory (στέφανος), for, He is ever conquering. Here He has many diadems of royalty (cp. xii. 3), for He is King of Kings (xvii. 14; xix. 16); and the kingdom of the World will become the Kingdom of Christ (xi. 15). Both the attributes of Christ as the Everlasting Conqueror, and Universal King, are combined in the prophecy of David, Ps. xlv. 3-7, "The people shall be subdued unto Thee. Thy seat, O God, endureth for ever; the sceptre of Thy Kingdom is a right sceptre."

15. πατεῖ τὴν ληνόν] He is treading the winepress of the wine is treating the write of God. When He comes forth as the Rider on the White Horse, He is doing a work of God's retributive justice. When riding forth in His Majesty, and trampling His enemies beneath the feet of His War-horse and of those who follow Him, He is treading the winepress of the wine of the fury of the wrath of God. Hence we may explain the combination of the two metaphors in xiv. 19, 20, where it is said that the "winepress (of the wrath of God) was trodden without the city; and the blood of the winepress came up to the bridles of the Horses:" see note there. Christ is He Who is here designated as God. See Dr. Waterland, Moyer Lectures, vi. vol. ii. p. 129, who, adopting the reading, "of the great God," says, "If it be considered that our blessed Saviour is styled King of kings, and Lord of lords (v. 16), a very little before the mention of the supper of the great God, and that the Apostle goes on speaking of Christ described as sitting to the House (v. 16): cp. 11) and as slaving those whose these on the Horse (v. 19; cp. 11), and as slaying those whose flesh on the Horse (v. 19; cp. 11), and as staging those whose jiesh was to be given to the fowls (v. 21), that is, as providing that very supper which is called (v. 17) the supper of the great God, because the great God provides or makes it: if we lay these things together, we shall be inclined to think that this Text of the Revelation is another evidence of the Son's being styled 'the great God: and so helps to confirm our interpretation of the text in Titus ii. 13."

The supper here described is that of a feast after a sacrifice. God is glorified in, and over, His enemies, who rebel against Him. See Rom. ix. 17. Religious Kings and Nations which offer themselves a willing sacrifice to God for His honour and service, are blessed, for they are called to the Marriage Supper of the Lamb (v. 9). But, if Kings and Nations do not honour Christ, if they do not obey Christ, but rebel against Him, then they will be like slain carcases, on which the fowls of the air will feast, as in a battle-field. They will be slain as sacrifices to His wrath and indignation.

Every one must be a sacrifice, either willingly or unwillingly. Every one must offer himself in worship and service to God's glory, or he will be immolated, a victim to God's righteous retribution. Cp. on Mark ix. 49.

This imagery is derived from Hebrew Prophecy. See Isa. xxxiv. 6, "The Lord hath a sacrifice in Bozrah;" and Jer. xlvi. xxxiv. 0, "The Lord hath a sacrifice in the north-country, by the river Euphrales;" and Ezek. xxxix. 17, 18, "Speak unto every feathered fowl... Gather yourselves unto My sacrifice... that ye may eat flesh and drink blood; ye shall eat the flesh of the mighty, and drink the blood of the Princes of the earth." Zeph. i. 7, "The Lord hath prepared a sacrifice, He hath bidden His guests." Cp. Rom ix. 17, and 2 Cor. ii. 14-16.

18. σάρκαs] flesh. Observe the word repeated five times and in the plural, to denote the completeness and universality of God's retribution, and the destruction of His foes. See above, v. 8.

him; so B and other authorities, and Tisch.) that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the Beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into the lake of fire that burneth with brimstone. And the remnant were slain with the sword of him that sitteth upon the horse, which (sword) went forth out of his mouth: and all the fowls were filled with their

Here is an ampler description of the Battle pre-announced in the Sixth Vial (xvi. 13–16), when preparations were made for it. Cp. xvii. 13, 14. The Battle itself does not take place till now. Hence the article  $\tau \delta \nu \ \pi \delta \delta \epsilon \mu o \nu$ , the battle of Armageddon, there mentioned by anticipation. See xvi. 16.

Thus we are now brought again to the eve of the end.

Observe the sequence of events.

The Mystical Babylon is now fallen (xviii. 2; xix. 2).

After her fall, the Beast and False Prophet still survive, and they muster their forces against Christ, and rise up against Him in a great rebellion, called the conflict of Armageddon, or Har-MAGEDON. See xvi. 16. They are there routed by Christ, and His army; and the Beast and False Prophet are seized and cast into the Lake of Fire (xix. 20).

And now there remains one great Enemy, the Dragon, the old Serpent, who is the Devil and Satan, who had formerly used the Beast as his agent (xiii. 2), but now, being deprived of his instrumentality, will break forth in a spirit of reckless desperation, and rage with open fury and bold blasphemy against Christ and the Church.

This will be the final struggle; which is now to be described. But, before this description, the Prophecy re-ascends once more to the first age of Christianity, by a process of recapitula-tion characteristic of the Apocalypse, and indeed of all sacred Prophecy, especially of the prophecies of Daniel and Zechariah, which are the groundwork of those of the Apocalypse; and St. John now proceeds to give a summary view of what had been done by Christ for His people ever since the Incarnation.

Thus the gracious purposes of His FIRST ADVENT are harmoniously and beautifully connected and blended together with the glorious triumphs of His Second Advent, and with the everlasting joys of the Heavenly Jerusalem.

CH. XX.] Summary and Final RECAPITULATION.
Prophetic view of Christ's dealings with His faithful servants from His First Advent, even to the last age of the World.

1—7. kal elbor] And I saw an Angel coming down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit (or abyss) and a great chain upon his hand. And He laid hold on the Dragon, that old Serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and He bound him a thousand years, and He cast him into the bottomless pit (or abyss) and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, in order that he might not deceive the nations any more, till the thousand years shall have been fulfilled; after that he must be loosed a little season.

And I saw thrones, and some sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and the souls of them that had been beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the Word of God, and of them who worshipped not the Beast, nor his image, nor received his mark upon their forehead, and upon their hand; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.

But the rest of the dead lived not until the thousand years should have been finished.

This is the First Resurrection.

Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the First Resurrection: over these the Second Death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and they will reign with him a thousand years.

In order to understand the scope of this Vision, some previous considerations are requisite;

In the first Seal, St. John had seen a Vision of Christ coming forth at His First Advent, conquering, and in order that he might conquer (vi. 2).

But in the following Seals, it had been revealed that Christ would have many powerful enemies to encounter; and that the servants of Christ would have many severe sufferings to endure, even to the end of the World (vii. 14).

The Vision also of the Trumpets has displayed the working of many worldly Powers rebelling against Christ, and persecuting IIis servants (viii. 7; ix. 21).

Further, the Little Roll introduced a prophecy concerning a spiritual form of Antichristianism, corrupting the true Faith, and waging war with the saints of God, chaps. x .- xvii.

It might therefore be objected, that Christ had not conquered; that on the contrary He had been overcome by the Evil

One, and had been unable to defend His Church.

In order to remove this objection, and to justify God's ways to man, St. John re-ascends in the present Vision to the first age of the Gospel. He reverts to the Incarnation and Passion of Christ, and reveals what He did at His First Advent, and would ever continue to do.

He beholds an Angel coming down from out of heaven, who holds the key of the bottomless pit, or abyss. This Angel is Christ. He, and He alone, holds the key of the abyss. That key may be sometimes given to others (see ix. 1), but Christ alone holds it as His own (see i. 18). The Angel binds Satan : Christ, and He only, can bind the strong man, and cast him into the abyss.

On such grounds as these, almost all the ancient Expositors of the Apocalypse were agreed, that this Vision is a Recepitulation, and is not a continuation of the Visions which had preceded in the nineteenth chapter.

The Angel here is Christ. This is generally allowed. But Christ in the preceding chapter was revealed as the Word of God, riding on the White Horse, at the head of the Armies of Heaven (xix. 11-21). The scene has been changed. Christ is here called an Angel. He comes as a Messenger from Heaven. He comes down on a gracious embassy. He is displayed in a new character, binding Satan. Therefore this Vision in the twentieth chapter is not a continuation of that in the nineteenth.

Christ bound Satan, at His First Advent from heaven. Christ was the Woman's promised Seed, who bruised the Serpent's head (Gen. iii. 15). He is the Stronger One, as He Himself says, who entered into the strong man's house and bound him (Matt. xii. 29). He overcame Satan by dying on the Cross, and by raising Himself, and took from him his armour wherein he trusted, and spoiled his goods (Luke xi. 22). He was manifested at His Incarnation for this purpose, "that He might destroy the works of the Devil" (1 John iii. 18). He gave authority over Devils to His Apostles and His Disciples (Matt. x. 7. Mark iii. 15). He said, "Behold, I give you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the Enemy" (Luke x. 19).

Therefore the Apostles declare to all Christians, that He will "bruise Satan under their feet shortly" (Rom. xvi. 20), and that even the weakest among them is by Christ's power stronger than Satan, and can "quench all the fiery darts of the Evil One" (Eph. vi. 16). "Resist the Devil," they say, "and he will flee from you" (James iv. 7).

Such was Christ's act and deed at His First Advent.

Having such testimonies of Holy Scripture to that effect, we cannot admit, with some, that the Devil has not now been bound, VOL. II.-PART IV.

although we see that many persons are taken captive by him.

Cp. 2 Tim. ii. 26. 1 Pet. v. 8.

Holy Scripture represents Satan as vanquished and bound by Christ. Christ has done this work for the benefit of all Christians. Nothing can harm those who are followers of that which is good (1 Pet. iii. 13). The Evil One toucheth them not (1 John v. 18). No one can pluck them out of Christ's hand (John x. 28). Satan is vanquished and is bound, for all persons who do not recklessly loose him by their sins, and arm him against themselves.

The present prevalence of evil, and the exercise of Satan's power in this world, affords therefore no objection to this inter-pretation of this passage. This Interpretation was adopted by ancient Expositors, after careful examination of the meaning of this chapter; and it was received by the universal consent of the Christian Church, both Eastern and Western, from the fifth to the fifteenth century.

Therefore we may safely conclude, that the binding of Satan, here mentioned by St. John, has been already effected by Christ; that it was effected by Him at His First Advent, by His Death, Resurrection, Ascension, and sending of the Holy Ghost from heaven, and by the Preaching of the Gospel of His Kingdom, and of the gracious tidings of Salvation to the World.

The commencement of the Thousand Years here mentioned, whatever that period may signify,-is, therefore, to be dated from the First Coming of Christ.

St. John himself authorizes this interpretation by another similar phrase in the Apocalypse. He has said in the first Scal. that Christ went forth at His first Advent, "conquering, and in order that He might conquer" ("να νικήση), vi. 2. And he says here, that Christ "bound Satan, in order that he might not any more deceive the Nations" (ἴνα μὴ πλανήση). Both phrases are alike. Both declare Christ's will and deed: though, alas! in too many cases His gracious purposes are frustrated by man's sin. It cannot rightly be alleged, that Christ has not bound Satan, because some unloose him against themselves. It might as well be argued, that Christ has not gone forth on the White Horse, in order to conquer Satan, because some allow themselves to be conquered by him.

Man's sin is not to be alleged in contravention to Christ's power and love. Christ has done His part. St. Paul says, that God by His mercy "saved us" (Titus iii. 5; cp. Rom. viii. 24. 30); and yet many destroy themselves. God does His part to save us, but He does not take away our free-will. We may still choose evil, and reject good. We may choose death, and reject life. We may choose the shame and misery of being slaves to Satan, and reject the perfect freedom of serving God.

2. ἔδησεν αὐτόν] He bound him a thousand years.

How (it has been objected) can this act of binding be past. A thousand years have now elapsed from the first Advent of Christ, and Satan was not loosed at their expiration. .

To this it may be replied, that the numbers in the Apocalypse are to be understood figuratively. See note above on chap, xi.

There is no instance in the Apocalypse where the number a thousand is to be understood literally.

This number—the cube of ten—represents a quality. It has a prophetical value and spiritual significance. It is generally combined with expressions significant of completeness. Thus the total number of the sealed are 144 thousand; 12 thousand from each of the 12 tribes (see above, vii. 4-9). The men slain by the earthquake in the sixth Trumpet are 7 thousand (xi. 13). The breadth of the heavenly city is 12 thousand furlongs (xxi. 16).

What, then, is the meaning of the term a Thousand Years ? Among the Jews the term three years and a half was a chronological expression significant of a time of suffering (see above on chap. xi. at the end). And the term a Thousand Years was a chronological expression which designated the Day of the Messiah, or the time of the dispensation of Christ. See the Rabbinical authorities in Wetstein, ii. p. 836. "Dies Messiæ Mille Anni." The former of these chronological symbols—three years and a half-has been adopted in the Apocalypse, so also has the latter.

To Christianize Jewish language and ideas was one of the main purposés of the Apocalypse (see above, Introduction); and this phrase, "a thousand years," may have been employed to teach the Jews that their long-expected Messiah, the Prince, was now come: that "the Day" had now dawned which their ancient Prophets and Kings had desired to see. Luke x. 24. John

S. Augustine has examined this question with great diligence in his treatise de Civitate Dei, xx. 7-9, and his opinion is of more value, because he himself had been once inclined to adopt millenarian opinions, but afterwards saw cause to reject them

He, and all the ancient Expositors of the Apocalypse after his age, were unanimously of opinion, that the thousand years during which Satan is bound by Christ, represent the whole time of the Gospel Dispensation from the First Advent of Christ until the time of the last Persecution, when Satan will be loosed, and will rage with impious fury against God and His Saints.

This opinion, which assigns a figurative meaning to the thousand years, is more entitled to respect, because it was held by Expositors who lived before the expiration of a literal period of a thousand years from the first coming of Christ; and therefore it cannot be said that this exposition was devised in order to meet any supposed difficulties arising from their exposition, which assigns the binding of Satan by Christ to the time of His first Advent.

3. έβαλεν αὐτόν] He cast him into the abyss. The abyss is not the lake of fire, into which Satan will not be cast till the end of the world (see on Matt. viii. 29; xxv. 41; and below, v. 10); but it is the present abode of evil spirits. It is the place into which they were sent by Christ after His Incarnation and Passion. See note above on Luke viii. 31, and Eph. ii. 2; and

- ἐσφράγισεν] He set a seal upon him, in order that he might no more deceive the nations. Els. has  $\pi \lambda a \nu \eta \sigma \eta$  here, and this reading is retained in the text, it being authorized by  $\Lambda$ , and many Cursive MSS., and so Lachmann. But it is observable that B, and very many Cursive MSS. (see Scrivener, p. 557, and the present Editor's Collection of Collations of MSS. of the Apocalypse) have Γνα μη πλανά, in order that he may not deceive; and this latter reading has been received by Tischendorf, Tregelles, and Bloomf., and it confirms the interpretation now given of this Text. The Angel, who is Christ, bound Satan in order that he may not deceive the Nations at this present time—even when the Apocalypse was written. Whichever reading is adopted, this verse refutes the theory of Millenarians, who suppose that St. John is here describing a personal reign of Christ and His Saints upon earth for a thousand years in perfect holiness and bliss.

It cannot be imagined, that after such a blessed state of things, there would be a multitude of godless Nations, such as are the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, in countless multitudes, like the sand of the sea." See v. 8.

Observe the striking contrast. Christ has done to Satan, for the whole time of the Gospel, what Satan did to Christ for three days. Satan, by the hands of his own agents, arrested Jesus, bound Him, cast Him into "the lowest pit" (Ps. lxxxviii. 5), set a seal upon His sepulchre, and set a watch over Him, in order that "the deceiver," as they called Him (Matt. xxvii. 63), might no more trouble them.

But Christ by His Death "overcame him that had the power of death, even the Devil" (Heb. ii. 14). He entered "the house of the strong man" (Matt. xii. 29), and bound him, and cast him into the abyss, and set a seal upon him, in order that he might no more deceive the Nations; and when He had raised Himself from the dead, He gave command to His Disciples to go into all the world, and baptize all Nations. Matt. xxviii. 19.

Observe also the contrast which follows;

4. είδον θρόνους] I saw thrones, and some sat (literally, took their seats) upon them, and judgment was given to them, and I saw the souls of them who had been beheaded (observe this remarkable word beheaded, πεπελεκισμένων) for the witness of Jesus, and for the Word of God, and of those who did not worship the Beast . . . and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.

"I saw the souls"—he does not say that he saw the bodies. Here also, therefore, is another refutation of the millenarian interpretation, which assumes that the first Resurrection is future, and will be a Resurrection of the bodies of the Saints only. See

St. John is here speaking of the first age of Christianity. We are brought back to that first age of the Gospel by the remarkable word πεπελεκισμένων, those who had been beheaded with an axe. The πέλεκυs, securis, or axe,—the fasces,—was the badge of Roman power. See Virgil, Æn. vi. 820. This word takes the reader back to the time of those who suffered as Martyrs by the hands of the Beast in its imperial form in heathen Rome, who executed judicial punishment by the πέλεκυς, or securis, which, as Wetstein justly observes, was a "supplicium Romanum." And from that time the reader is carried forward to those other Martyrs who suffered under the power of the Beast in its Papal form.

The Pagan and Papal Persecutors of these Martyrs had been seated on thrones executing judgment, and condemned them to

But let no one be deceived by such a spectacle as that. The Martyrs, whom they condemned and beheaded, are now glorified.

I saw thrones (says St. John), and they took their seats upon them, and judgment was given to them; that is, judicial authority and dignity was bestowed upon them; and I saw the souls of them that had been beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.

"In the sight of the unwise they had seemed to die: but their hope was full of immortality" (Wisd. iii. 4). As to their bodies they did indeed die; but St. John says, "I saw their souls," I was enabled to see what man could not see—their souls; I saw the state of their souls after death. I, who had seen those souls under the altar (see vi. 9), on which their blood had been poured out as a sacrifice, saw them again now; I saw that they lived. The deathday of the Martyrs was their birthday. Life on earth was to them like death, compared to that life which they now live, and which alone deserves to be called Life. For their Lord had said, He that findeth his life (ψυχήν) shall lose it, and he that loseth his life (ψυχήν) for My sake shall find it (Matt. x. 39), he shall generate it alive, ζωογονήσει (Luke xvii. 33), he shall preserve it unto eternal life, ζωήν (John xii. 25. See above, xii. 11).

Their Persecutors therefore, who sate on thrones and executed judgment in this world, and condemned the Martyrs to death, did, in fact, send them forth from death into life: and they sent them upward to sit on thrones with Christ, and to pronounce judgment on the World which condemned them; see note on 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3. And therefore it is said of the saints, "they shall judge the Nations, and have dominion over the people, and their Lord shall reign for ever" (Wisd. iii. 8).

One of the noble army of Martyrs, a disciple of St. John, S. Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, longing for the death to which he had been condemned, thus speaks to the Christians of Rome, where he was about to suffer martyrdom, "My birthday is now at hand; suffer me to live, do not desire me to die, permit me to be an imitator of the passion of my God. Suffer me to see the pure light of day:" Ignatius ad Rom. c. 6 (see above on John xvi. 21. Acts ii. 24). And St. Paul said, "I long to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better:" see on Phil. i. 23. And, S. Augustine says (Serm. 299), "Was not the mother of the Mac-S. Augustine says (cerin. 239), "Was not the mother of the Maccabees a true mother, when she persuaded her sons to die as Martyrs (2 Macc. vii.)?"—"Plane filiis meis vitam persuadeo, ad mortem cohortando," "I persuade them to live when I exhort them to die," for the Martyr's death is the gate of endless life.

This Vision therefore was designed to justify God's ways to man, and to afford a cheering assurance to Christians under all the persecutions which might rage against them, from the age of St. John to the end of time, that in every age of the Gospel Christ had kept, and would keep, Satan bound; that He had preserved, and would preserve, His own; that He had conquered, and would continue to conquer: and that He would enable all His faithful to be more than conquerors (Rom. viii. 37), even as He had conquered; and to live by dying, and to reign by suffering. To them all the promise is, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life" (Rev. ii. 10).

This Scripture reveals the happiness of the disembodied soul | in the interval between Death and Resurrection. On this subject more has been said above, in the notes on the parable of Dives and Lazarus (Luke xvi. 22); and on Christ's promise to the penitent thief (Luke xxiii. 43), and on St. Paul's rapture into Paradise (2 Cor. xii. 4).

The lines of Prudentius (of the fourth century) afford an interesting commentary here:

Sed dum resolubile corpus Revocas, Deus, atque reformas, Quânam regione jubebis Animam requiescere puram? Gremio senis addita sancii (i. e. of Abraham) Recubabit, ut est Eleazar (Lazarus), Quem floribus undique septum (in Paradise) Dives procul aspicit ardens; Sequimur tua dicta, Redemptor, Quibus atrâ morte triumphans Tua per vestigia mandas Socium crucis ire latronem (the penitent thief); Patet ecce! fidelibus ampli Via lucida jam Paradisi.—Prudentius (Cath. x. 153).

This true Scriptural and Catholic doctrine has been happily embodied by the Church of England in her Office for the Burial of the Dead. "Almighty God, with whom do live the spirits of those that depart hence in the Lord, and with whom the souls of the righteous, after they are delivered from the burden of the flesh, are in joy and felicity," &c.

- εζησαν - χίλια ετη] They lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. The souls of the Martyrs lived after their death, before the resurrection of their bodies. Indeed, they attained new life by death. The souls of holy men are not separated from communion with the Church, after their dissolution from the body. The faithful are members of Christ's mystical body after their death. They are born by death: therefore we read, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, even from that time, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours" (Rev. xiv. 13). Therefore even now they reign with Christ, and are "made to sit in heavenly places with Him," Eph. i. 20;

St. John here mentions the souls of the Martyrs only, because they especially reign when they die, in that they fought for the truth even unto death. S. Augustine (de Civ. Dei, xx. 9). But, as the ancient Expositors observe, this Scripture is consolatory to all. "I am the Resurrection and the Life (saith Christ); he that believeth in Me, though he die (κὰν ἀποθάνη), yet shall he live; and he that liveth and believeth on Me shall never die" (John xi. 25, 26). "If a Man keep my saying he shall never taste of death (John viii. 51), he has passed from death unto life" (John v. 24. Cp. John iii. 16; vi. 40. 47); and every faithful Christian is a Martyr, or Witness, of

In the Sacrament of Baptism we, who before were dead in sin, became dead to sin (Eph. ii. 1. Rom. vi. 2); and we renounced the Devil, and began our Martyrdom to Christ by professing our belief in Him; and we died to the old Adam, and were born into Christ, and were made sons of God by adoption in Him. Therefore Baptism is called in Scripture a Resurrection. "Buried with Him in Baptism, wherein ye are risen with Him through faith in the operation of God" (Col. ii. 12. Rom. vi. 4). "Reckon ye yourselves to be dead unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord," Rom. vi. 11. Cp. Gal. ii. 19. 1 Thess. v. 10. See further below, v. 6. "This is the first Resurrection."

5. οί λοιποί νων νεκρών] The rest of the dead lived not—that .s, they remained dead, they did not receive life, till the thousand years should have been finished. On this use of the word  $\zeta \hat{\eta} \nu$ , to receive life, see the parallel passage, John v. 25, οἱ ἀκούσαντες ζήσονται; and on the sense of  $\tau \epsilon \lambda \epsilon \sigma \theta \hat{\eta}$ , see Winer, § 41, p. 266.

Elz. has δè after of here, but this is not in the best MSS. and Editions. On this prophecy see above on Dan. xii. 1—3.

After the crisis of the last struggle, they will revive "to shame and contempt" (Dan. xii. 2) at the General Resurrection. See Andreas here, in Catena, p. 472. Elz. has ανέζησαν άχρι, and so Griesb., Scholz; but A, B, and many Cursives and Versions, have ἔζησαν, and so Lachm., Tisch.

The transition here from the Spiritual Resurrection of the soul, which is the first Resurrection, to that of the General Resurrection of the body, which is the second Resurrection, is precisely similar to that in our Blessed Lord's Discourse, John v. 24-29, which affords the best commentary on this text. See the note — αὕτη ἡ ἀνάστασις ἡ πρώτη] This is the first Resurrection. He is speaking of the soul (see v. 4). Every soul which is united to Christ, Who is the Resurrection and the Life, rises from death and lives.

This first Resurrection is begun in Baptism, and it is continued through life, by the operation of the Holy Ghost, and by the daily exercise of Repentance, by which the soul rises more and more "from the death of sin unto the life of righteousness" (Office for the Burial of the Dead). Thus, while "the outer man perisheth, the inner man is renewed day by day" (2 Cor. iv. 16).

It is well called the first Resurrection, because it is prior and preparatory to the second Resurrection—that of the body, from the grave to glory. The first Resurrection is the Resurrection of the soul from death, into a life of grace on Earth, and of bliss in Paradise.

The second Resurrection is the Resurrection of the Body, and its reunion with the soul. Both Resurrections are called παλιγγενεσίαι, Matt. xix. 28. Titus iii. 5.

6. μακάριος] Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first Resurrection.

Observe the combination here of Blessedness with Holiness. Blessed and holy is he who hath part in holy Baptism-that is, who duly estimates, and rightly uses, the spiritual graces therein bestowed-he is blessed. Blessed is he, because he is holy. Blessed is he, because he has been made a member of Him Who is the Holy One of God. Blessed is he, because he has risen from the death of sin: he is risen with Christ, and seeks those things which are above (Col. iii. 1). "He that hath this hope in Christ, purifieth himself even as He is pure" (I John iii. 3). For He says to all His Members, "Be ye holy, for I am holy" (I Pet. i. 16). Therefore blessed and holy is he who hath part in the first Resurrection; but he who is unholy and accursed hath his part in the second death. Cp. v. 14.

Wisely therefore has the Church connected the beatitudes of the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. v. 1) as a Gospel, with a declaration of the felicity of the Saints in the Epistle (from Rev. vii. 2) on the festival of All Saints. None can attain to the glory of the one, without the graces of the other.

- έπl τούτων] over these the second death hath no power. See the remarks of Bp. Andrewes (on John xx. 23, Serm. iv. p. 83). "The Scripture maketh mention of a first and second death, and, from those, of a first and second Resur-rection. Both expressly set down in one verse; 'Happy is he that hath his part in the first resurrection, for over such the second death hath no power' (Rev. xx. 6). Christ truly is the Saviour of the whole man, both soul and body, from the first and second death; but beginning first with the first, that is with sin, the death of the soul, and the rising from it. So is the method of Divinity prescribed by Himself (Matt. xxiii. 26); first, to cleanse that which is within—the soul; then that which is without—the body. 'He that hath his part in the first resurrection' shall not fail of it 'in the second.'

"The 'first resurrection' then from sin is it which our Saviour Christ goeth about (in John xx. 23), whereto there is no less power required than a Divine power. For look, what power is necessary to raise the dead body out of the dust, the very same every way is requisite to raise the dead soul out of sin. For which cause the Remission of sins is an article of faith, no less than the Resurrection of the body. For in very deed, a Resurrection it is, and so it is termed no less than that" (Bp. Andrewes).
"We are passed from death unto life," says St. John (1 John

iii. 14), speaking of those who are born again; and this new birth is the same that he calls the first Resurrection (Rev. xx. 6. Abp.

Leighton on 1 Pet. ii. 1, 2).

We here read, that over these the second death hath no power. It has power therefore on the others, concerning whom he had just said that they live not till the thousand years shall be finished: inasmuch as in all that interval of time, which is thus designated, whatsoever life any of these may have in the body, he never lived in the soul, being dead in sin; and so never had any part in the first resurrection, and therefore he will have a part in the second death. S. Augustine (de Civ. Dei, xx. 9).

έσονται ίερεις του Θεου και του Χριστου, και βασιλεύσουσι μετ' αὐτου χίλια

- ἔσονται ίερεις] They will be priests of God and Christ. This is not said only of Bishops and Presbyters, who are properly called Priests in the Church (says Augustine), but as we are all called Christians, on account of the mystical unction (chrisma) that we have from Christ, the Anointed of God, so, in a certain sense, all are Priests, because we are all members of the One Great High Priest. Wherefore the Apostle says, "Ye are a holy people, a royal priesthood" (1 Pet. ii. 9). And thus St. John briefly intimates that Christ is God: for he says that they are priests of God and of Christ, that is, of the Father and of the Son. S. Augustine (de Civ. Dei, xx. 10).

A just observation certainly; for no one can be a priest to a man; and the Apostle would not have thus joined Christ with God, if Christ were not God.

— βασιλεύσουσιν] they will reign with Christ a thousand years. The Alexandrine MS. has the present tense here, βασιλεύουσιν, they are reigning: this is observable, and confirms the opinion that St. John is speaking of a period which had commenced when he was writing.

Dr. Lightfoot, Harmony on Rev. xx. and Sermons, vol. ii. p. 1055, and p. 117, and p. 1233, says (on Rev. xx.), "This Twentieth Chapter containeth a brief view of all the times from the rising of the Gospel to the end of the world."

On the doctrine of a MILLENNIUM.

The foregoing verses of this chapter have been understood by some to intimate, that Christ will come from heaven, at His next appearance, in order to raise the Saints from their graves, and in order to reign with them upon earth for a Thousand

This is commonly called the doctrine of a MILLENNIUM; and they who hold it are called Chiliasts, from the χίλια έτη here

mentioned, or Millenarians.

But this doctrine of a personal appearance of Christ, for a reign with His Saints upon earth, for a period of a thousand years, is inconsistent with the language of the Apocalypse in particular, and with the general doctrine of HOLY SCRIPTURE, and with the teaching of the Catholic Church.

(1) The Millenarians suppose, that the Saints will be raised with their bodies to reign with Christ upon earth, and they ground that notion on this passage of the Apocalypse.

But the Resurrection, of which the Apocalypse here speaks, is not a Resurrection of bodies, but of souls (see v. 4, "I saw the

(2) The Millenarians suppose that the Saints,—and only the Saints, -will be raised in a bodily Resurrection to live and reign with Christ on earth for a thousand years; and that Christ's kingdom will be established in a state of great glory and felicity upon earth for that time.

But the Apocalypse reveals a state of great impiety on earth, at the end of the millennial period; and it displays a general insurrection and open rebellion against Christ in the four quarters of the world at that time (v. 8). Such a state of things would be unaccountable, if Christ's dominion had been established upon earth for a thousand years; and if the Saints-and the Saints only-had been living and reigning upon earth for that time.

(3) The Millenarians suppose the absence of pain and sorrow during the millennial period; but the Apocalypse declares the continuance of pain and sorrow even to the end (see xxi. 4).

(4) The Millenarians suppose that Christ will come down from heaven to raise the bodies of His Saints, in order that He may reign here with them where they are; but the Apocalypse declares that the souls of His Saints are raised, that they may reign with Him where He is. The Millenarians bring down Christ to men: the Apocalypse raises men to Christ.

Their opinion is also at variance with the doctrine taught in other parts of Holy Scripture.

(5) The Millenarians suppose that the bodies of Saints will be raised a thousand years before the Last Day.

But Christ Himself affirms in HOLY SCRIPTURE that they who believe in Him will be raised at the LAST DAY (John vi. 39).

(6) The Millenarians suppose that when Christ next appears, He will not come for the purpose of judging the world, but of reigning upon earth.

But Christ Himself has declared in Holy Scripture, that when He next comes, it will be in order to raise all men, and to judge them all; "and that the Saints will be caught up in the clouds into the air, to meet the Lord, and so be ever with the Lord." See John v. 28, 29. Matt. xvi. 27. Cp. 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17. 2 Thess. i. 7. 2 Tim. iv. 1. And the Apocalypse declares, that when Christ cometh with the clouds, "every eye shall see Him" (i. 7).

(7) The Millenarians suppose that a thousand years will pass away after Christ's next appearing; and that Satan will be loosed after those thousand years, and that after a general wicked rebellion against Christ, then the Wicked will rise from the grave, and the Universal Judgment will take place.

But, if the Righteous had been already raised visibly in their bodies, and had already reigned with Christ in person for a thousand years upon earth, the Day of Resurrection and of Judgment would be of little concern to them; their condition would have been already declared; and the future Resurrection and Judgment would have lost in great measure the character of Universality ascribed to it in Holy Writ. And if the Wicked are not to live till after the loosing of Satan, and the impious insurrection of godless multitudes against Christ (v. 8), we must suppose that many of the risen Saints of Christ, who have reigned with Him during the Millennium, will rise up in rebellion against

(8) The Millenarians presume that the Day of Judgment cannot come till after a thousand years from the binding of Satan, which they suppose to be still future; and that it will come in a short time after the expiration of those thousand years. But Christ Himself declares in the Apocalypse that He comes quickly, as a thief (Rev. iii. 11; xvi. 15), and the whole tenour of Holy Scripture teaches that the Day of Judgment will be sudden and unexpected, and that it is our duty to be ever watching, for "we know not the day nor the hour when our Lord will come" (Matt. xxiv. 42. Cp. Acts i. 7).

(9) The Millenarians disparage the blessed work which Christ has already performed in His Death, Passion, Resurrection, and sending the Holy Ghost; and they depreciate the efficacy of Christ's Mission at His first Advent, by which He bound Satan, and has enabled every faithful Christian to overcome him; see above, on v. 1, p. 265.

(10) Lastly, the Millenarians suppose that Christ will leave His heavenly Throne of Glory, in order to come and reign for a thousand years with men upon this low and little Earth.

But, after the sublime Visions of the Apocalypse, where Christ is revealed as adored by Myriads of Angels in heaven, such a notion as this seems to be inconsistent with the revelations of this sublime book, and to be derogatory to the dignity of Christ, as displayed therein, and in other parts of Holy Scripture. Christ has ascended into heaven, and He there sitteth in glory till He makes all His foes His footstool (see Ps. cx. 1. Matt. xxii. 44. I Cor. xv. 25), and He has declared, that when He next appears, it will not be for the sake of reigning a thousand years upon earth, but for the sake of executing judgment on all His enemies, especially upon Satan, and of raising all men from their graves, and of rewarding His faithful servants with heavenly

On such grounds as these we feel constrained to reject the doctrine of a Millennium, or of a personal reign of Christ upon earth with His Saints for a thousand years.

The interpretation given of these verses (1-6) in the foregoing notes is that which has been adopted by the best Expositors of the Western and Eastern Churches from the days of S. Auquestine to those of Bp. Andrewes. See S. Augustine, de Civ. Dei xx. 7—9. Andreas, in Bibl. P. Max. v. p. 626. Cassiodorus in Apocalyp. p. 239. Primasius, B. P. M. x. 329. Haymo, ad loc. Ambrosius Ansbertus, B. P. M. p. 620. Bede, p. 429. Bp. Andrewes c. Bellarmine, c. 10, and Sermons; see vol. ii. pp. 199. 237. 402, and vol. iii. 48, on John xx. 17, and vol. v. 83, on John xx. 23, and vol. v. 298. Bp. Hall, on the Revelation, p. 921. Abp. Leighton, on 1 Pet. ii. 2.

It is observable that this Exposition was adopted after a careful scrutiny of the opinions of some who supposed that this chapter describes a personal reign of Christ on earth with the Saints for a thousand years before the general Resurrection.

That opinion undoubtedly was entertained by some pious and learned men in ancient times. It was held by Papias (see Euseb. iii. 39. Hieron. Scr. Eccl. c. 18), Irenœus (v. 33, 34), Tertullian (c. Marcion. iii. 24), Justin Martyr (c. Tryphon. c. 80), and some few more.

But it was afterwards sifted by others, especially by Origen (de Princip. ii. 11. 2, and 6, and Prolog. in Cantica), Dionysius of Alexandria (Euseb. vii. 24, 25), S. Ephraim (iii. p. 449), S. Gregory Nazianzen (Orat. li. and hi.), S. Jerome (in Esaiam, xxx, and liv. lxv, and in Ezek, xxxviii, Epist, 150), and S. Augustine (de Civ. Dei xx. 7).

The language of Andreas, Bishop of Cappadocia, in the sixth century, stating the opinion of the Millenarians, and declaratory of the coctrine of the Church, in this respect, is very clear and explicit. Bibl. Patrum Max. tom. v. p. 627. Primam ex mortuis Resurrectionem solis sanctis propriam futuram dixerunt (Millenarii); quo nimirum in hâc crassâ et caliginosă terrâ, in quâ illustria fortitudinis et patientiæ specimina ediderant, Mille annis gloriâ et honore potiantur; post hoc autem tempus elapsum universalem omnium, hoc est non justorum tantum, verum etiam peccatorum, Resurrectionem fore. Sed Ecclesia neutrum horum recipit: ὅτι οὐδὲν τούτων ἡ Ἦκλησία δέδεκται, περιττόν ἐστι καὶ λέγειν, says Arethos, p. 816. Cp. Catena, ed. Cramer, pp. 469—472. 566—569.

The result of the examination of the opinion of the Millenarians was, that after the fifth century hardly any writer of credit can be cited as holding the notion of a personal reign of Christ on earth for a thousand years, or as supposing that such an opinion could be deduced from the Apocalypse.

The opinion of the Millenarians, or Chiliasts, as they were called, was censured in ancient times as erroneous. See S. Augustine de Hæres. c. 8. Philastr. de Hæres. 59, who says, "Hæresis est Chilionetitarum, id est Millenariorum, quæ docet ita, cum venerit Christus de cœlo, mille anni erunt iterum nobis ad carnaliter vivendum," &c. It is condemned by the Church in the Athanasian Creed, where it is said, that at "Christ's Coming all men will rise with their bodies." The evidence on this subject may be seen in Tillemont, art. Millénaires, ii. p. 140. Hist. Eccles. liv. iii. c. 15. "Ecclesiæ sensus" (says Cornelius à La-pide ad Apoc. xx.) "Millenariorum sententiam reprobat; unde jam evanuisse videtur." Cf. Baron. Annal. ad An. 303, n. 127.
"Je ne scay point" (says Tillemont, Hist. Eccl. art. Papias, ii. p. 140) "qu'on trouve qu'il y ait eu des Millénaires depuis S. Jerome et S. Augustin, de sorte que si quelques uns en ont conservé les sentiments, cela n'a fait aucun éclat considérable." And Dr. Isaac Barrow (Sermon xxviii. vol. v. p. 27, ed. Oxf. 1818) classes the doctrine of the Millennium among "notions not certain or not true, in which they who entertain them followed some conceits once passable among divers, but not built on any sure foundation, and which were anciently in great vogue, but are now discarded." See also Dr. Hammond ad Rev. xx. 7: "Though some were otherwise minded, yet was this doctrine of the Chiliasts condemned by the Church, and since that time all were accounted hereticks who maintained it."

The opinion of the Millenarians was also condemned both by the Lutherans and Calvinists of the sixteenth century. See the Augsburgh Confession (A.D. 1530), pars i. art. xvii. p. 14, ed. Hase. Lips. 1837. The original words are, "damnant alios, qui nune spargunt Judaicas opiniones, quòd ante resurrectionem mortuorum pii regnum mundi occupaturi sint." Melanchthon (de furoribus et deliriis Anabaptistarum), tom. i. "Anabaptistæ affirmant oportere ante novissimum diem in terris regnum Christi tale existere in quo pii dominentur."

The two most learned Lutherans, Martin Chemnitzius and John Gerhard, speak in similar terms of Millenarianism. See Chemnitz. de Lect. Patrura, Loc. Com. ed. 1690, p. 2, where he calls "opinio Chiliastica" an "error in fundamento." The words of Gerhard may be seen in his Loci Theolog. ix. p. 322. Chiliasm was also confuted by Osiander contra Puccium, Tubing. 1593, and by Cramer de Regno Christi, p. ii. c. 4. Calvin (Inst. iii. xxv. 5, p. 177, ed. Tholuck, 1835) says, "Chiliastarum commentum puerilius est, quam ut refutatione vel indigeat vel dignum sit. Nec illis suffragatur Apocalypsis (xx. 1), ex qua errori suo colorem induxisse certum est."

Millenarianism was also condemned in one of the Articles of the Church of England, A.D. 1552. See Dr. Cardwell, Synod. i. p. 17. The Church of England also rejects this opinion in the IVth of her XXXIX Articles, where she says that "Christ ascended into heaven and there sitteth until Hereturn," not, for a personal reign during a Millennium on earth, but in order "to judge all men, at the Last Day." Similarly in her Collect for Advent she teaches her people to pray, "that at the Last Day, when Christ shall come again in His glorious Majesty to judge the quick and dead, we may rise to the life immortal." And, in the Order for the Burial of the Dead, she prays that Christ would "shortly accomplish the number of His elect, and hasten His kingdom; that we, with all those that are departed in the true faith of God's holy name, may have our perfect consummation and bliss in body and soul in His eternal and everlasting glory." The judgment of the Church of England in this matter is also further pronounced in the words of the Creed inserted in her Baptismal Office, as follows: "He (Christ) ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty, and from thence shall come again, at the end of the world, to judge the quick and the dead."

These expressions are irreconcileable with the opinion of the Millenarians, that the purpose of Christ's next appearance from Heaven will not be to raise the dead from their graves, and to judge the quick and dead, but to reign in person upon earth with His Saints for a thousand years before the General Resurrection and the Day of Judgment.

The history of Millenarian opinions has been written by Corodi, Geschichte des Chiliasmus, Zurich, 1781, 3 vols. See also Gieseler, Church History, §§ 52. 63. 66, and the Bampton Lectures of the Rt. Rev. S. Waldegrave, D.D., Bishop of Carlisle. Lond. 1855.

7-10. και σταν τελεσθή] And when the thousand years shall have been finished, Satan will be loosed out of his prison; and shall go forth to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to the battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea.

And they went upon the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them. And the Devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where both the Beast and the Fulse Prophet are, and they will be tormented day and night for ever and ever.

This Vision pre-announces that before the close of the Christian dispensation, under which we now live, a great and final struggle between good and evil will ensue. Our Lord Himself had predicted this, by comparing the Days before His Coming to the Days of Noah (Matt. xxiv. 37), and of Lot (Luke xvii. 28), and to the Days before the destruction of Jerusalem (Matt. xxiv. 3-35); and by asking this question, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find the faith on earth?" (Luke xviii. 8.)

S. Augustine inquires whether it is to be supposed that the Saints will cease to reign when the Devil is loosed (de Civ. Dei, xx. 13). To which question he replies in the negative. It is indeed said that Satan will be bound for a thousand years, and it is added that he will afterwards be bound for a little while. And it is also said that the Saints will reign a thousand years, but it is not said that they will cease to reign, when the thousand years are past. The fact that they reign with Christ is a pledge of the endurance of their reign; for His "Kingdom is that which will never be destroyed" (Dan. ii. 44). Indeed, as Christ's promise to them that he would be with them until the end of the world (Matt. xxviii. 20), and that some who stood there would not taste of death until they saw the Son of Man coming in His Kingdom, did not imply that He would ever desert His Disciples, or that they who stood by Him would ever taste of death, but the reverse (see on Matt. xvi. 28); so the promise of a reign with Christ for a thousand years does not imply any cessation of that reign on the expiration of that period, but rather an increase of glory after it. And it is probable (as Augustine observes) that the final struggle will be as brief as it is fierce; and that it will suddenly be terminated by the appearance of Christ coming to Judgment. On those modes of expression, compare note above on

v. 8. The words  $\tau \acute{e}\sigma\sigma\alpha\rho\sigma\iota$   $\gamma\omega\nu \acute{l}ass$   $\tau \acute{\eta}s$   $\gamma \acute{\eta}s$ , literally, four corners of the earth, are rightly rendered "four quarters of the earth" in the English Authorized Version. This is the sense of the word  $\gamma\omega\nu \acute{\iota}a$  in 1 Sam. xiv. 33; it signifies all within the four corners (cp. above, vii. 1), and corresponds to  $\pi\lambda\acute{a}\tau\sigma s$ , breadth, in v. 9. See Hengstenberg here. This phrase pre-announces a great gathering and general Insurrection against Christ, as indeed is declared by the additional assertion that their number will be as the sand of the sea.

The Nations called Gog and Magog are representatives of the enemies of God. Magog was the second son of Japheth (Gen. x. 2), the father of the Gentiles, as distinguished from the race of Shem: and Gog is called in Ezekiel the chief Prince of Meshech and Tubal, who are also of the race of Japheth (Gen. x. 2). In the prophecy of Ezekiel (xxxviii. xxxix.), which is continued and consummated in this Vision of the Apocalypse, other Nations are represented as allied with Gog against Israel (xxxviii. 5—23; xxxix. 1—5); and with Magog (xxxix. 6). The battle is then described, and the defeat and burial of Gog and his multitude (xxxix. 11—16), and the sacrifice of God's enemies (vv. 17, 18), and the full and final triumph of His cause, and the sanctification and glorification of His people. See above, on Ezekiel xxxviii. xxxix.

It appears from that prophecy, that the names Gog and Magoy are used here to signify generally the earthly powers leagued together under the banner of Satan, and opposed to God and the Christian Israel, and the heavenly Jerusalem. This is clear from the fact that they are described as existing in the four quarters of the earth, and as going over the breadth of the earth, and as being as the sand of the sea (vv. 8, 9).

The defeat and burial of Gog and his hosts in the Vision of Ezekiel, is explained by this Vision of the Apocalypse to be prophetical of the overthrow of Satan and all his confederates. See

Here then is a prophecy of the final Persecution, which will precede Christ's coming to Judgment. Then will be a general struggle between the City of God and the City of the Evil One.

10. δ Διάβολος] The Devil who deceiveth them was cast into the Lake of fire. Satan rises in rebellion against God, in order to fall to a lower depth, after each successive insurrection. rose against God in heaven, and was cast down from heaven into earth (xii. 9). He rose against God in earth, and has been cast into the abyss (xx. 1-3). He will hereafter be loosed from the abyss (xx. 7; cp. Isa. li. 10), and will rise and excite many to a desperate rebellion against God. He will then be consigned to a lower gulf, even to the lake of fire, from which there will be no egress. The more fiercely Satan rages against Christ, the more fearful will be his ruin.

In reviewing the preceding portion of this chapter, we see a brief summary of what has been done by Christ for His Church, from His Incarnation to the End of Time. We see that Christ came from heaven to bind Satan; that He did bind him; and gave men power to overcome him; that He made them partners of His triumph and inheritors of His glory.

Here we see an answer to the objection that might otherwise have been raised, from a consideration of the afflictions of the Church, revealed in the Apocalypse. Her sufferings were her path to glory. The Death of the faithful was their gate to Life. Nothing can harm them; they are enthroned with Christ.

We here recognize also the important truth, that the punishment of the wicked is not due to any want of love in Christ, but to their own sins, which loose Satan against them.

This is the moral to be derived from the first part of this Having taught us this lesson, St. John takes a step which he has not taken before. He passes from Time into Eternity. He sees the Throne of JUDGMENT set, and the Books opened, and the Dead raised and judged. He reveals the Heavenly City. Thus he displays the immensity of God's love to man, and the greatness of His power; and the severity of His justice; and awakens the fears, and excites the courage, and stimulates the faith, and quickens the hope of Christians in every age.

The GENERAL RESURRECTION and LAST JUDGMENT.

11-15. Kal elbov] And I saw a great white throne, and Him that sat upon it, from whose face the earth and the heaven field away; and no place was found for them.

And I saw the dead, the great and the small, stand before the throne; and books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the Dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.

And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and Death and Hades delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works.

And Death and Hades were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death, the lake of fire.

And whosever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire. See above on Dan. vii. 9, 10.
In v. 12 the article τουs has been restored by the recent editors; and μεγάλους has been placed before μικρούς. No one is so great or so small as to escape the Judgment to come.

Elz. has Θεοῦ, of God; but θρόνου has been rightly adopted by the most recent Editors from A, B, and most ancient Versions. The Son of Man is the Judge (John v. 22). It is before His Throne that all must appear (2 Cor. v. 10). In vv. 13 and 14 the English Version has hell for #87s. See above, i. 18; vi. 8;

CH. XXI.] The heavenly bliss and GLORY of the RIGHTEOUS; The MISERY of the WICKED.

1-8. kal elbor] And I saw a new heaven and a new earth for the first heaven and the first earth passed away: and the sea is no more.

And He that sitteth upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. And He saith, Write: for these sayings are faithful and true. And He said unto me, They are done. I am the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end. I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life

Observe the aorist here  $(\tilde{\alpha}\pi\tilde{\eta}\lambda\theta\nu)$ , and in v. 4; it describes the suddenness with which all the pomp and power, all the grandeur and glory, and all the pain and sorrow, of this lower world, will disappear and glide away, like a dream when one awaketh. (Ps. lxxiii. 19.) Cp. note on James i. 11.

See also the remarkable parallel in 2 Cor. v. 17, et tis èv Χριστώ, καινη κτίσις, τὰ ἀρχαῖα παρηλθεν (observe the aorist, as here), ίδου γέγονε καινὰ τὰ πάντα. —  $\dot{\eta} \; \theta \dot{\alpha} \lambda \alpha \sigma \sigma \alpha$ ] The sea exists no more; the restless, troubled element of worldly pride and tumultuous rebellion, and confusion, and anarchy, has no longer any being.

On this meaning of the word sea in the Apocalypse, see above, viii. 8, 9; xiii. 1; cp. Ps. lxv. 7, "the noise of the waves, and the madness of the people;" and Isa. lvii. 20, "The wicked are like the troubled sea:" and Luke xxi. 25, "on the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring."
"He designates by the name of sea," says Bede, "the troublous life of this world, which will then be over."

2. Ίερουσαλημ καινήν] new Jerusalem. Observe the Hebrew form of the name Jerusalem, a form never used by St. John in the narrative of his Gospel, where he always uses the Greek form 'Ιεροσόλυμα, indicating that the literal City had been, as it were, then made like a Gentile City by its sins, especially by its rejection of Christ and His Apostles.

In a similar spirit he uses the word of 'Iovoacot, " the Jews," in his Gospel, as opponents of Christ. See above, Introduction to the Gospel of St. John, p. 268.

But in his Apocalypse he never uses the Greek form Ίεροσόλυμα, but always the Hebrew form Ἱερουσαλημ, and by it he describes the Church glorified. His design is to Christianize Hebrew names and ideas, and to show that they have their consummation in the Gospel and Church of Christ.

On the same principle, he never applies the word Jew, in the Apocalypse, to designate the literal Israel, but he employs it to characterize the true worshippers of Jesus Christ. See ii. 9; iii. 9.

Thus the figurative style of St. John's Apocalypse is exhibited in striking contrast to the historical diction of his Gospel.

Thus also he ministers comfort to the true Israelites, by declaring to them, that though the literal Jerusalem is now trodden under foot by the Gentiles, yet they themselves have a Heavenly city; and that more than all the glories of the ancient Sion are perpetuated in the new Jerusalem. See above, Introduction, pp. 144, 145.

The most learned among the ancient Jews had some presentiments of this Apocalyptic Vision. They were familiar with the name "heavenly Jerusalem," and believed it to be the archetype of what they saw in the literal Sion, its Temple, and its Ritual. They regarded them as the "shadow of heavenly things" (Heb. viii. 5). This opinion had been authorized by the Hebrew Scriptures. God said to Moses, "See thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the Mount." The sayings of the Hebrew doctors on this subject may be seen in the treatise of Schoettgen, de Hierosolyma Cœlesti, pp. 1205-1248, of his Horæ Hebraicæ, 1733.

καταβαίνουσαν] coming down. The new Jerusalem descends from out of heaven; all her graces are from above. She is described here as a Bride adorned for her own husband, and is thus contrasted with Babylon, the Harlot Church, adorned for another, not her husband, and which is seated on the Beast which rises out of the troubled element (v. 1), the sea. See xiii. 1.

3. ἰδοὺ, ἡ σκηνή] Behold the Tabernacle of God is with men. The types of the itincrant Tabernacle in the Wilderness, the figurative ritual and festal joys of the Feast of Tabernacles, celebrated in the Literal Jerusalem, will be consummated in the heavenly Jerusalem. This realization began, when the Son of God came down from heaven and tabernacled  $(\epsilon\sigma\kappa\eta\nu\omega\sigma\epsilon\nu)$  in our flesh (John i. 14). They will be consummated in the new Jerusalem, as had been pre-announced in the Sixth Seal: the language of which supplies the best exposition of the present Vision. See vii. 15-17, and the notes there.

4. τὰ πρῶτα ἀπῆλθεν] the former things passed away. They all vanished at once; suddenly, like a vapour, or "like a tale that is told." Ps. xc. 9. See above, v. 1.

8. τοις δειλοις] the fearful and unbelieving; joined together, because he, who does not believe in God's promises, fears to encounter the battle for God, and therefore the fearful are contrasted with those who overcome.

- καλ άμαρτωλοιs] and sinners: not in Elz., but in B and in more than thirty Cursive MSS., and in the Syriac and Arabic Versions, and in Andreas and Catena. The word was not likely to be inserted by a Copyist; and it seems to have a special meaning, as intimating the important truth, that not only  $\pi\alpha\rho\dot{a}$ βασις, or transgression of written law, but αμαρτία also, or sin against any law—whether natural and unwritten law, or positive and written law—will be a subject for cognizance and condemnation at the Great Day. See Rom. ii. 14-16.

- ¿βδελυγμένοις] abominable. Those who give themselves up to the idolatrous βδελύγματα, abominations, mentioned in xvii. 4. Cp. below, v. 27.

 πόρνοιs] fornicators. The deadliness of the sin of fornition among Christians may be inferred from its juxtaposition r. with murder, sorcery, and idolatry; against which the denunciations are uttered in the Apocalypse. NN

9-27.] And one of the seven angels which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues came and talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will show thee the Bride, the Lamb's wife.

And he carried me away in the Spirit to an owntain great and high, and showed me the Holy City, Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, like a jasper stone, clear as crystal; and having a wall great and high, and having twelve gates, and at the gates twelve Angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve Tribes of the children of Israel. On the east three gates; on the north three gates; on the south three gates; and on the west three gates. And the wall of the city hath twelve foundations, and in them the names of the Twelve Apostles of the Lamb.

And he that talked with me had a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof. And the city lieth foursquare, and the length as large as the breadth; and he measured the city with the reed, to twelve thousand furlongs; the length and the breadth and the height of it are equal. And he measured the wall thereof, an hundred forty-four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of an angel.

And the building of the wall of it is jasper: and the city pure gold, like unto clear glass.

And the foundations of the wall of the city are garnished with every precious stone. The first foundation, jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, chalcedony; the fourth, emerald; the fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolite; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, topaz; the tenth, chrysoprasus; the eleventh, jacinth; the twelfth, amethyst.

And the twelve gates are twelve pearls; every several gate of one pearl: and the street of the city pure gold, as it were transparent glass.

And temple saw I none in her; for the Lord God Almighty is her temple, and the Lamb (is her temple). And the city hath no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten her, and the Lamb is her lamp.

And the Gentiles shalt walk through her light; and the

And the Gentiles shall walk through her light: and the kings of the earth bring their glory and honour unto her. And her gates shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there. And they shall bring the glory and honour of the Gentiles into her. And there shall in no wise enter into her any thing that defleth, and he that worketh abomination, or a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life.

the one with the other.

Here is the  $N \dot{\nu} \mu \phi \eta$ , or Bride, contrasted with the  $\Pi \delta \rho \nu \eta$ , or Harlot.

Here is the Holy City, contrasted with the Great City.

Here is Jerusalem, contrasted with Babylon.

Here is the great and lofty Mountain, on which the one sits in security for ever, contrasted with the dreary Wilderness and the tumultuous Waters (vv. 1 and 15), on which the other is enthroned.

Here is the Bride espoused to the Lamb, contrasted with the Harlot seated on the Beast.

The one is a Church; the other is a Church also. The one faithful to Christ her Lord; the other unfaithful to Him. The one is the true Catholic Church; the other is that Church which usurps the name.

Both these Visions are displayed by one of the Angels who had the Seven Vials, full of the seven last plagues. The Angels who had the Vials were executioners of divine Judgments on the empire of the faithless Church (see xvi. 1—19); but their work is completed in a Vision of divine Love, the Vision of the faithful Church in glory.

10. την πόλιν την άγίαν] the holy City: so the best MSS. and Editions. Elz. has μεγάλην, the yreat City; but that phrase is restricted in the Apocalypse to the mystical Babylon.

See xi. 8; xviii. 10. 16.

11.  $\phi \omega \sigma \tau \dot{\eta} \rho$ ] her light; like to a most precious stone, to a jasper like crystal; as God Himself was described above, iv. 3. This is the Light of which he here speaks, see v. 23, where the LAMB is called its  $\lambda \dot{\psi} \chi \nu \sigma s$ , or Lamp; and compare Isa, lx. 19, "The Lord will be to it for an eternal light;" and Ezek. xhii. 2—6. On the word  $\phi \omega \sigma \tau \dot{\eta} \sigma_s$ , see above. Phil. ii. 15.

2-6. On the word φωστηρ, see above, Phil. ii. 15.

13. ἀπὸ ἀνατολῶν] On the east, three gates: the city has three gates on each of its four sides. The heavenly City turns an equal face to each of the four quarters of heaven, showing the equality of God's favour to all, and the Universality of the Church. Many will enter the Holy City from all the four quarters of the world. "Many will come from the East and the West, from the North and the South, and sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of God" (Luke xiii. 29).

There are three gates on each side, as in the vision of Ezekiel (xlviii. 30-34). These three gates may signify (as some

There are three gates on each side, as in the vision of Ezekiel (xlviii. 30-34). These three gates may signify (as some ancient Interpreters suggest) that the Entrance into the Church is by Faith, publicly professed in Baptism into the Name of the Three Persons, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost

(Matt. xxviii. 19).

The number Three bespeaks the number of Divine Persons in the Ever-Blessed Trinity; the number Four represents all space lying within the Four corners of the Earth (see note at end of chap. xi.); and the number Twelve, being the product of Three multiplied into Four, represents the Twelve Apostles and their lawful successors in an Apostolic Ministry, who were sent by Christ with a commission to "go and teach all Nations" in the four quarters of the Earth, baptizing them in the Name of the Triune God. "These are the labourers (says Aug. in Ps. lxix.) who were to be sent on a Mission to the four corners of the Earth, to bring them into the one Faith of the Ever-Blessed Trinity." See above, on Matt, x. 1.

Therefore the Twelve Apostles are mentioned as the Twelve foundations of the Universal Church glorified in heaven.

14. θεμελίους δώδεκα] twelve foundations; or foundationstones (so that there would be three on each side of the City; cp. vv. 19, 20), and in them twelve names of the twelve Apostles of the Lamb. 19 Καὶ οἱ θεμέλιοι τοῦ τείχους τῆς πόλεως παντὶ λίθω τιμίω κεκοσμημένοι: ὁ θεμέλιος ὁ πρῶτος ἴασπις, ὁ δεύτερος σάπφειρος, ὁ τρίτος χαλκηδὼν, ὁ τέταρτος which hath the foundations-that for which the Patriarchs looked-whose Builder and Maker is God (Heb. xi. 10).

Here is a proof that no one Apostle is the foundation-stone of the Church; much less can be be the foundation itself, which is Christ; see above, on 1 Cor. iii. 2. 12, and Eph. ii. 20, and on Matt. x. 2, and xvi. 18. See also above, the description of the Church, displayed as wearing a crown of Twelve stars, xii. 1.

The names of the Twelve Apostles of the Lamb, engraven on the foundations of the new Jerusalem, show that the Twelve Apostles are the Patriarchs of the Tribes of the true Israel, and that the glory of Sion has passed into the Christian Church.

This truth is also exhibited by the quality of these Twelve Foundation-stones. They are Twelve precious stones; and they are mainly the same precious stones as those which adorned the sacred Breastplate of the High Priest, and on which the names of the Twelve Tribes of Israel were engraved, Exod. xxviii. 15-21. The breastplate of the Hebrew High Priest, garnished with its oracular gems, was like a beautiful garment which might be put off; but these Apostolic precious stones of the Twelve Tribes of the Israel of God are immoveably set as the very foundation-stones of the heavenly Jerusalem, and are inscribed with the names of the Apostles, who are the progenitors and Fathers of the Spiritual Israel; because by preaching the Word, and by the life-giving Sacraments of the Gospel, they execute the ministry of Regeneration, by which Christ Himself is formed and born in all Nations of the world. See above, on xii. 5. Matt. xxviii. 19.

The Heavenly City is built on these Twelve Foundationstones. Therefore whosoever is not built on the foundation of Apostolic Faith and Discipline is not a lively stone in the heavenly Jerusalem.

16. ἐπὶ σταδίων δώδεκα χιλιάδων] unto stadia of twelve thousands: that is, extending to (Winer, § 49, p. 363) stadia of 12,000, the genitive of the quality (Winer, § 34, p. 212). This amount expresses the dimensions of the City in every direction, height, breadth, and length. See Andreas, Bengel, Hengsten-

The number twelve thousand has already been used to signify the Apostolic company of those sealed from each of the twelve tribes (see vii. 5-8); and this solid cubical form of the City (as distinct from the walls) denotes the perfection of that

In those three dimensions some ancient Interpreters supposed a symbolical reference to the spiritual graces and qualities of the Christian Church. Here (say Primasius, Bede, and Haymo) the solidity of Truth is represented, on which the Church is firmly built, in the length of Faith, the breadth of Charity, and the height of Hope, so as not to be moved by any winds of doctrine; and where any one of these dimensions is lacking, the perfect stability of the Church does not exist. Cp. Eph. iii. 18.

17. ἐμέτρησε τὸ τεῖχος αὐτῆς] He measured her wall: he had just been speaking of the measuring of the City; that is, of the whole glorious assemblage of buildings and suburbs of the heavenly Jerusalem, like pure gold (v. 18), illuminated by the glory of God.

But, as the literal Jerusalem had an inner wall or fortification  $(\tau \epsilon \hat{i} \chi \sigma s)$ , the city of David, so has the heavenly Sion. He had spoken (in vv. 12. 15) of the Gates and Foundations of this wall. He then proceeded to describe the dimensions of the City; and he now specifies the height of the Wall, which is 144 cubits.

— μέτρον ἀνθρώπου] measure of a man, which is also measure of an Angel. In the heavenly City men will be equal to the Angels (Luke xx. 36). They themselves will be like unto Angels in measure and stature, and in all the qualities and graces of soul and body; and they will reckon and measure all things, not, Vol. II.—Part IV. as now, by any carnal and earthly calculations, but by a spiritual and divine Arithmetic, and by a heavenly and angelic Mensuration. They will measure all things with the Golden Reed of Divine Knowledge, like that in the hands of the Angel measuring the heavenly City.

18. ή ἐνδόμησις] The superstructure of the Wall is jasper. The word ἐνδόμησις occurs in Josephus (Ant. xv. 9. 6), who applies it to the superstructure of a mole of a harbour. It is that part of the walls which is built on the foundations. On the jasper, see iv. 3, and here v. 19.

19. οἱ θεμέλιοι] The foundations of the wall of the City are adorned with every precious stone; according to the typical adornment of the literal Temple of Jerusalem (1 Kings x. 2. 10, 11), and to the prophecy of Isaiah, liv. 11, 12. Cp. Tobit xiii. 16—13.
 — δ θεμέλιος δ πρῶτος] The first foundation-stone of jasper, the second sapphire.

These Twelve Foundations appear to be the same as those mentioned above, as engraven with the names of the Twelve Apostles of the Lamb. See v. 14, and note.

St. John has already said, in v. 19, that the Foundation was garnished with every precious stone, and then he specified twelve precious stones, indicating that the Twelve Apostolic Foundations represent every spiritual grace bestowed by God upon His faithful servants, who are His Jewels (Mal. iii. 17). In the variety and beauty of the precious stones is symbolized the πολυποίκιλος σοφία of God (Eph. iii. 10), and His multiform love in supplying all the χαρίσματα, gifts and graces (Rom. xii. 6. 1 Cor. xii. 4—9. 28. 30), vouchsafed by Him to the several Apostles, and shining in brilliant lustre in their several places, like Jewels set in beautiful symmetry and harmony, for the adorning of the heavenly Jerusalem, and laid in strength and stedfastness for its solid construction, and everlasting endurance.

A description of these precious Stones is given by S. Epipha.

See also the xxxviith book of Pliny's Natural History; and the Treatise of Faustino Corsi, Pietre Antiche, Roma, 1828, p. 137 seqq., and the authorities quoted here by Wetstein, N. T. ii.

The Jasper has been specified above in the description of the glorious appearance of God; and also the Sardine Stone, iv. 3.

The Sapphire (celestial blue, lapis-lazzuli, i.e. l'azzurro, or azure) is mentioned in the description of the pavement under the feet of God in Exod. xxiv. 10, and in the description of His Throne, Ezek. i. 26. Plin. xxxvii. 39, "in sapphiris aurum punctis collucet cæruleis."

The Emerald, σμάραγδος, has been described above, iv. 3. The Sardonyx is mentioned Exod. xxxix. 13. Ezek. xxviii. 13, of a flesh colour, tinged with hues of white. Plin. xxxvii. 23.

The Sardius has been described above, iv. 3.

The Chrysolite is mentioned in Ezek. xxviii. 20; it is described by Pliny, l. c. c. 42, as "brilliant, like the lustre of gold."

The Beryl: see Exod. xxviii. 20. Ezck. xxviii. 13; it is rendered by the LXX in Gen. ii. 12 by λίθος πράσινος, and is described by Pliny (1. c. c. 20) as like sea-green.

The Topaz, Exod. xxviii. 17. Ezek. xxviii. 13. Job xxviii. 19, described by Strabo and others in Wetst. p. 845, as like gold; and by others as having a bright green tinge like glass.

The Chrysoprasus is compared by Pliny (xxxvii. 20) to the beryl, but more pale; and yet has a tint of the purple Amethyst.

The Jacinth has been described above, ix. 17.

The Amethyst, Exod, xxviii. 19, of a purple or violet colour. As was already observed on v. 14, the Twelve precious Stones here specified, appear to be the same, or nearly so, as those on the Breastplate of the High Priest, Exod. xxviii. 17-20.

Three are mentioned there, which seem to be designated here under other names, viz. the ἄνθραξ (carbunculus), λιγύριον (λυγκούριον), and αχάτης. Many ancient Writers were of opinion that the Chalcedony mentioned here is a species of Carbunculus; and that the Jacinth of the Apocalypse is the same as the λιγύριον, and the chrysoprasus is similar to the ἀχάτης, on which see Plin. xxxvii. 54; and cp. the authorities in Cornelius à Lapide here.

Some other ancient Expositors have said, that the precious stones of the Aaronic Breastplate are mainly the same as those of the Heavenly Jerusalem; but that there are some differences between the two; and that thus the substantial identity of the Law and the Gospel is represented with some circumstantial variety. See Andreas here in Catena, p. 485.

All the glories of the Gospel shine, blended together in a heavenly splendour, on the Breastplate of our Great High Priest, Christ Jesus; all the Graces of Christians are like spangles and scintillations, effulgences and emanations, from His ineffable brightness; and their names are engraven upon His heart (Cant. viii. 6); and here they are set for ever in the foundations of the City of God.

Some ancient Expositors have proceeded to distinguish the symbolical meaning of these several jewels as follows: jasper, an emblem of the brightness of faith; sapphire, of hope; chalcedony,

Some have endeavoured to discover a symbolical representation of the special gifts of the several Apostles in those precious stones; but this seems to be an attempt of vain curiosity.

Their meaning may be more fully revealed hereafter in the Heavenly City itself. It is now enough to know that the City is adorned with every precious stone; that nothing is wanting in the Church for her growth in grace here, and for her everlasting glory hereafter.

22. ναὸν οὐκ εἶδον] Temple saw I none in her, for God is all in all, 1 Cor. xv. 28. God Himself is her Temple, and the Lamb:

a proof of Christ's Divinity.

24. καὶ περιπατήσουσι] and the Gentiles shall walk through her light. "The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light, upon them bath the light shined" (Isa. ix. 2). The people who were covered with gross darkness, on them hath the light shined. "The Gentiles have come to Thy Light, and Kings to the brightness of Thy rising" (Isa. lx. 3); and they "shall walk through the light;" it shall be their element and atmosphere; they will be bathed in a pure ocean of cloudless light.

Some Versions render διλ, by means of: but this seems too weak a translation; διλ is used here as in 2 Cor, viii, 18, διλ πασῶν τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν, Acts xiii. 49. Cp. Winer, § 47, p. 338; and Andreas here explains the words by ἐν τῷ φωτί.

The sense may be well explained from Isa. lx. 15. 19,

"Whereas thou hast been forsaken, and hated, so that no man went through thee, I will make thee an eternal excellency,-the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy Gon thy ylory.'

The Prophecy, contained in the sixtieth chapter of Isaiah, which began to be fulfilled at the Epiphany of Christ, when the Gentiles walked by the light of the Star, and came by its leading to the Light of the World, and brought their gifts to Him, the first-fruits of the Gentiles, will have its perfect accomplishment in the heavenly Jerusalem; they will no longer walk by the light of some heavenly constellation external to themselves, and above their own path, but their path itself will be light. They will live and move in light. They will dwell in Him Who is the Light. This Vision and that Prophecy afford mutually the best exposition, the one of the other. Compare here particularly Isa. lx.

— oi βασιλείς τῆς γῆς] and the Kings of the Earth bring their glory and honour into her. Here is a happy announcement; it declares that some "Kings of the Earth" will remain Christian unto the end, and that they will not join in the rebellion of the "Kings of the Earth" against Christ (xvi. 14; xviii.

non of the "Kings of the Earth" against Christ (xvi. 14; xviii. 9; xix. 19). Kings and Nations (xx. 8) are before mentioned as rising up against Christ, but here they are tributary to Him. 25. of  $\pi v \lambda \hat{\omega} v \epsilon s$  average? Her gates shall not be shut by day: for there shall be no night there. The  $\gamma \hat{\alpha} p$ , for, explains the reason why he had not mentioned night as well as day. "Her gates shall not be shut by day;" and he does not add, "or by night,"—for, "night shall not be there."

The Church of Christ shall have no longer any enemies to fear; her people will be secure for ever from the assaults of Sin and Satan. Cp. Isa. lx. 11. Zech. xiv. 7. What the ancient Poets sang of, as a Vision of the Golden Age, with its "apertis otia portis," will then be fully realized.

Observe that the Gates of the heavenly City are not called by the word usually employed to describe the gates of a City (πύλαι), which never occurs in the Apocalypse, but by  $\pi \nu \lambda \hat{\omega} \nu \epsilon s$ , which occurs eleven times, and which commonly, and always in the other books of the New Testament, signifies the gate of a house. See Matt. xxvi. 71. Luke xvi. 20. Acts x. 17; xii. 13, 14; xiv. 13. The City of the Heavenly Jerusalem, although it is described here as of immense size (see v. 17), is but one House. dwell together as brothren, as children of the same Heavenly Father, in one Everlasting Home. of the Great City, where the dead bodies of the Two Witnesses lay (xi. 8).

Here the types of Paradise, as depicted in the Old Testament (see Gen. ii. 9, 10; iii. 22), are fulfilled. Here is the Tree of Life, and the River flowing out of Eden. Here, therefore, is a testimony to the truth and divine origin of the History of Here also is an evidence of the harmonious symmetry and perfect unity of Holy Scripture, from the beginning of Genesis, the first book of the Old Testament, to the end of the Apocalypse, the last book of the New.

The Two Witnesses agree in their testimony.

The Book of Genesis reveals Almighty God, the Creator of all things very good; Adam, formed from the earth; Eve, taken from his side; the Serpent in Paradise; Man tempted, and a curse pronounced on him for disobedience in cating the fruit of the forbidden tree; and driven from Eden; and the way of the Tree of Life guarded by a flaming sword; and the promise made in mercy, that the seed of the Woman should bruise the Serpent's

Pass now from the first chapters of Genesis to the last of the Apocalypse. The same God is revealed, seated on His throne: Heaven and Earth adore Him: Man also is there; Adam is there in Christ, the Second Adam: Eve also is there, in the Bride of the Second Adam, the Church: Paradise also is there, not lost, but regained: and the Tree of Life, no longer fenced with a flaming brand, but open to all, for the healing of the nations. And there "is no more curse."

We have also seen the discomfiture of the Old Serpent

According to the first prophecy of Scripture, Christ has bruised the Serpent's head, and has chained him, and has cast him into the lake of fire and brimstone, there to remain for ever (xx. 10).

Here is clear evidence of oneness in the design and texture of the Sacred Volume; and when we consider, that a period of more than five thousand years separates the events of the Book of Genesis from those of the Apocalypse, we may here recognize a proof, that the History and the Prophecy are from the same Divine Hand, and that the events which they describe are under the control of Him with Whom "a thousand Years are as one Day." (Ps. xc. 4. 2 Pet. iii. 8.)

The River of Life flows from the throne of God and the Lamb. All grace and glory given to men flows from the Father, through the Son. See above on 2 Cor. xiii. 13.

In the earthly Paradise there were four rivers issuing from one source, and flowing out of Eden.

There is but one River in the Heavenly City; and it does not flow out of the City. All drink there of the same joys as out of a river (Ps. xxxvi. 8); and no one who is outside the city can taste them; see v. 15.

The River of life flows through the broadway of the City, and the Tree of Life stands on each side of the River, and bears perennial fruitage, in never-ending succession; expressed by "every month," and "twelve fruits:" and this supply is ac-"every month," and "twelve fruits:" and this supply is accessible to all, to satisfy the hunger and thirst of all for life everlasting. "Blessed are they that do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." (Matt. v. 6.)

— τὰ ψύλλα τοῦ ξύλου] the leaves of the Tree are for the healing of the Nations. The Tree of Life in the midst of the heavenly Jerusalem, is like a pattern of the Cross of Christ, on the Earthly Calvary, which was outside the literal Jerusalem. For the virtue of the Cross is not limited to the Jews, but it extends to all Nations of the Earth, who are within the Christian Sion. Here is "gloria sancte crucis," says Bede, through the ministry of the Apostles. In the preaching of the Gospel, the Tree of the Cross is ever bearing leaves for the healing of the Nations. Cp. Aug.?

The Cross of Christ was outside the literal Jerusalem, because Christ died for all who, in the day of grace, would believe in Him. (1 Tim. iv. 10.)

But the Tree of Life is in the inside of the heavenly Jerusalem; for it is accessible only to those who, in the time of their earthly probation, have accepted God's offers in Christ.

The Tree of Life in the book of Genesis, and the Cross of Christ, are both described by the same word, ξύλον. Cp. Gen. ii. 9, LXX, and Gal. iii. 13, where see note. 1 Pet. ii. 24.

By cating of the fruit of the forbidden Tree, the first Adam was excluded from Paradise, and from access to the Tree of Life. But the Obedience of the Second Adam more than compensated for the Disobedience of the First Adam. Christ, by His Agony in the Garden of Gethsemane, and by hanging on the Tree in Calvary, and by His glorious Resurrection from the Grave in the Garden, has restored us to Paradise and raised us to Heaven. The Tree of His Death has become to us the Tree of Life. It grows on both sides of the river, because it is efficacious for the Salvation of all men in every age and country. The Cross of Christ is like the Cities of Refuge on both sides of the River Jordan (Deut. xix. Josh. xx.). It bears fruits for Eternity; its leaves are for the healing of the Nations, who before were the product of the sides of the "without Christ, aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, strangers from the covenants of promise" (Eph. ii. 12), like the traveller on his journey from Jerusalem to Jericho, lying half dead by the wayside (see Luke x. 30); but now they are made nigh by the blood of Christ, and are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints (Eph. ii. 13. 19), and have "come unto Mount Sion, unto the City of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of Angels, to the general assembly and Church of the first-born, which are written in heaven" (Heb. xii. 22, 23); in the "Jerusalem which is above, which is the Mother of us all" (Gal. iv. 26).

3. καl πῶν κατάθεμα οὐκ ἔσται ἔτι] And there shall no more be any curse. In Paradise, Almighty God pronounced a curse on the first Adam after the Fall. "Cursed is the ground for thy sake: in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life" (Gen. iii. 17). That curse was pronounced on him for his disobedience, in eating of the forbidden Tree. But the Second Adam, Who died on the Tree, has taken away, by His obedience, the curse pronounced on the first Adam and his race for disobedience. It was indeed said, "Cursed is he that continueth not in all that is written in the Law," and "Cursed is he that hangeth on a tree" (Deut. xxvii. 26; xxi. 23). But by "being made a curse for us," Christ has taken away the curse, that all may be blessed in Him, and live for evermore (see on Gal. iii. 13, 14).

4. και ὄψονται το πρόσωπον αυτοῦ] and they shall see His face, the face of God; which the wicked will never see. Then faith will be swallowed up in sight; in the beatific Vision of God. And His Name shall be upon their foreheads-an eternal trophy of their Victory and glorious reward in heaven for their constancy and courage in boldly confessing Him before men. Cp. note above on xiii. 16.

 σύνδουλός σου εἰμί] I am the fellow-scrvant of thee, and of

The Prophets were St. John's brethren, and this spiritual brotherhood is displayed in the Apocalypse. He and they were inspired by the same Spirit, and, as is here observed by an ancient Expositor, "how many words of Isaiah, how many words of Zechariah, do we read in this book of St. John!" See above, Introduction, pp. 150-152.

Here is one of the many uses of the Apocalypse, "the Revelation of Jesus Christ" (i. 1). In it Jesus Christ Himself, the Everlasting Word of God, avouches the Divine Inspiration of the Old Testament. Here the Incarnate Word sets His seal on the Written Word. By adopting the language of the ancient Hebrew Prophets in the Apocalypse, and by using it as His own, He pro-claims it to be the language of God.

Here is a remarkable testimony to the liberty of the human will; and this testimony is coupled with emphatic declarations of the abundance and freeness of divine grace (see v. 17).

These words supply a Divine reply to the objection made by some to the Christian Dispensation, on the plea of the prevalence of evil in countries professing Christianity, and using Christianity itself as a pretext for the commission of evil.

"The objections against all this (says Bishop Butler), from the perversion of Christianity, and from the supposition of its having had but little good influence, however innocently they may be proposed, yet cannot be insisted upon as conclusive, upon any principles but such as lead to downright Atheism, because the manifestation of the law of nature by reason, which upon all principles of Theism, must have been from God, has been perverted and rendered ineffectual in the same manner. It may, indeed, I think, truly be said, that the good effects of Christianity have not been small; nor its supposed ill effects, any effects at all of it, properly speaking. Perhaps too, the things themselves done have been exaggerated, and if not, Christianity hath been often only a pretence; and the same evils, in the main, would have been done upon some other pretence. However, great and shocking as the corruptions and abuses of it have really been, they cannot be insisted upon as arguments against it, upon principles of Theism. For one cannot proceed one step in reasoning upon Natural Religion, any more than upon Christianity, without laying it down as a first principle, that the Dispensations of Providence are not to be judged of by their perversions, but by their genuine tendencies; not by what they do actually seem to effect, but by what they would effect, if Mankind did their part: that part, which is justly put and lest upon them. It is altogether as much the language of one as the other: 'he that is unjust, let him be unjust still, and he that is holy, let him be holy still' (Rev. xxii. 11). The Light of Reason does not, any more than that of Revelation, force men to submit to its authority: both admonish them of what they ought to do and avoid, together with the consequences of each, and after this they leave them at full liberty to act just as they please, till the appointed time of Judgment. Every moment's experience shows, that this is God's general rule of Government" (Bishop Butler, Analog. part ii. ch. i.).

12. δ μισθός μου μετ' ἐμοῦ] My reward is with Me. See Isa. xl. 10; liii. 11, and Clemens Romanus, § 34.

14. μακάριοι] Blessed are they that do His commandments, that their authority (ἡ ἐξουσία αὐτῶν) may be upon (ἐπὶ) the Tree of Life (i. e. may extend to it, and may be exercised upon it, so that they may take and eat of its fruit), and that they may enter by the gates into the City.

The reading of this text is somewhat doubtful. Elz. has οί ποιοῦντες τὰς ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ, they that do His commandments; and this reading is authorized by B and many cursive MSS., and by the Coptic, Syriac, and Arabic Versions, and by Tertullian, Cyprian, and Andreas. It seems also to be confirmed by the consideration, that by breaking God's command-ment, Man lost his access to the tree of life, and that he cannot hope to regain an approach to it except by keeping His commandments. As our Lord Himself says, "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments" (Matt. xix. 17).

But the Alexandrine MS. and N have of πλύνοντες τας στολας αὐτῶν, they who wash their robes; and so some few Cursives (one in Scrivener, p. 560, has πλύναντες), and the Vulgate, Armenian, and Æthiopic Versions: and this reading has been adopted by Lachmann, Tischendorf, and Tregelles.

The other reading seems to be preferable. likely that a copyist would have been perplexed by the latter reading, which is clearly explained by another passage in the Apocalypse (vii. 14), where there is no such variety in the MSS. But some transcribers might perhaps have been embarrassed by the other reading, as seeming, in their opinion, to give some countenance to Pelagian tenets; and might therefore have altered it to the reading in A and N.

The doctrine of the text, as compared with other passages of Holy Scripture, clearly is, that though it is by the Death of Christ alone, that men have access to the Tree of life; yet none can derive any benefit from that only access, unless they walk in the way of Obedience to God's Commandments. The Gate is opened to all; but it is open in vain to those who do not go along the Road which leads up to the Gate, and passes through it.

15. ἔξω οἱ κὖνες] without are dogs. See Phil. iii. 2. Matt vii. 6; xiii. 48. This is quoted by S. Hippolytus, de Christo, § 66, p. 35, ed. Lagarde. The words may perhaps be rendered Away, ye dogs! as ἐκὰς, ἐκάς ἐστε, βέβηλοι, "Procul, o procul este profani." Cp. the comment above, ix. 14; xvi. 12; and Ps. vi. 8; cxix. 115, and the inscription on the doors of Belgian Churches, "Hunden uyt Godt's Tempel," and Düsterdieck here, "Hinaus die Hunde."

16. εγώ είμι] I am the root and the offspring of David: being both God and Man. See above, v. 5, and our Lord's question, Matt. xxii. 41-45.

- δ ἀστήρ] the bright and Morning Star. Which rose from the darkness of the Grave, and by that Resurrection on the Morning of the first Lord's Day brought Life and Immortality to Light. See above, ii. 28.

17. καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα] And the Spirit and the Bride say, Come . . Amen, Come, Lord Jesus ! (v. 20,) words appropriate to all who wait patiently and long earnestly for His coming, and specially suitable in the mouth of the beloved Disciple and Evangelist, St. John, whose life was prolonged, amid trials and sufferings, far beyond that of any other Apostle, and who had heard the Lord's saying concerning himself, "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" See above, on John xxi.

18. ἐάν τις ἐπιθῆ ἐπ' αὐτά] if any one adds to them, God will add to him the plagues that are written in this book. Here is a prophetic protest against the spurious Revelations forged by false Teachers in the name of Apostles; of which some account may be seen in Fabricius, Codex Apocr. N. T. pt. ii. p. 935. Jones on the Canon, i. pp. 26-33. Lücke, Commentar, pp. 45-50.

Here also is a Prophetic Protest against all additions to the words of HOLY SCRIFTURE; whether those additions be made by unwritten traditions, or by Apocryphal books, as of equal authority with Holy Scripture. See above, on 2 Pet. iii. 15, 16, p. 95.

19. ἀπό τοῦ ξύλου] from the tree of life. So A, N, B, and many Cursives and Versions, and so Scholz, Lach., Tregelles, Tisch. Elz. has ἀπὸ βίβλου, and omits τῶ, which is in Λ, Ν, before βιβλίφ.

 - τῶν γεγραμμένων] of those that are written in this book.
 Elz. has καl before τῶν, but καl is not in A, B, and is rejected by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch. The reading of the text is important as declaring that the Holy City belongs to those who are written in this Book.

ance for St. John, who tarried till Christ came for him; see on John xxi. 22, 23.

21. $\hat{\eta} \chi d\rho \text{is}$] The Grace of the Lord Jesus Christ be with all the Saints. Χριστοῦ is not in A or N; but it is in B. The words τῶν ἀγίων are not in A, and are omitted by Lich. and Tisch.; but they are in &, B, and in many Cursives, and in some MSS. of the Vulgate, and in the Slavonic, Coptic, Syriac, and Armenian Versions. The word 'Aμην, which is omitted by A, and by Lach. and Tisch., is found in & and B, and most Cursives and Versions.

The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. Here is the Apostolic Benediction, which concludes all the Epistles of St. Paul, and was the token of his Epistles, and therefore was not used by any other Apostle, as far as we know, in any Epistle written during St. Paul's lifetime (see above, on I Thess. v. 28), but was reserved for St. Paul's use, as the badge of his Epistles, to assure the Church of their genuineness.

That Benediction ends the Apocalypse, written long after St. Paul's death. It closes the Canon of Holy Scripture, and is, as it were, the Seal of the Bible. It is thus commended to the reverent use of the Church Universal, which, having received this Benediction from the Holy Ghost writing by St. Paul and St. John, has ever used it in her Liturgies. Thus she proclaims to all, that her strength is derived from the free grace of God in Christ; and she prays for an outpouring of that grace on all, and she ministers the appointed means of grace to all, in order that all, thankfully receiving God's grace, may attain to His everlasting glory, in the Holy City, the Heavenly Jerusalem; to which may He bring us all, who read this Book, in His infinite 20. έρχου, Κύριε Ίησοῦ] Come, Lord Jesus ! a very fit utter- love and mercy, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.
